Then sayd the Uicar: canst thou serue God wyth heresie? But William answered, I would that you and I were euen now fast tied to a stake, to prooue whether that you or I would stand strongest to our faith. But the Uicare aunswered: it shal not so be tried. No quoth William, I thinke so: for if I might, I thinke I knowe who woulde soonest recant, for I durst sette my foote against yours euen to the death. That we shall see, quoth the Uicar, and so they departed, the Uicar threatning William much, how that hee would complaine of him: with other much communication which they had together.

Immediately after, this Uicare of Weilde tolde maister Browne of the cōmunication which William Hunter and he had together. Which when M. Browne vnderstoode,* immediatly he sent for Williams father and the Constable, one Robert Salmon. For immediatly after William Hūter and the Uicar had reasoned together, he tooke hys leaue of his father and fled, because Woode the Uicare threatened him. Now when the Constable and Williams father were come, and were before M. Browne, he asked where Williā Hunter was. His father answered, saying:* if it please you Syr, I knowe not where he is become. No, quoth maister Browne? I will make thee tel where he is, and fetch hym foorth also ere I haue done with thee. Sir saide Williams father, I know not where he is become, nor where to seke for hym.

Then sayde M. Browne, why diddest thou not bryng him whē thou haddest him? I promise thee if thou wilt not fetch him, I will send thee to prison till I shal gette hym. Wherefore see that thou promise me to fetch him, or els it is not best to looke me in the face any more, nor yet to rest in Burntwood. Wel, quoth M. Browne to Williams father, see that thou seeke him foorth, and bring him to me.

Williams father aunswered: Syr, would you haue me seeke out my sonne to be burned? If thou bring him to me, quoth M. Browne, I will deale wel enough for that matter: thou shalt not neede to care for the matter. Fetch hym, and thou shalt see what I will doe for him.

Moreouer, if thou lackest money, quoth he, thou shalte haue some, & bad the Constable M. Salmon to geue him a crowne, but Williams father tooke none of him. Howbeit M. Browne would neuer rest, till Williams father hadde promised him to seeke out his sonne. And thus M. Brown sent the Constable home againe, and Wi•liams father, cōmaunding hym to seeke out William Hunter, and then to come againe and bring him to him.

After that olde father Hunter had ridden a two or three dayes iourneyes to satisfie maister Brownes expectation, it happened that William mette with his father in the high way as he trauailed, and first he seeing his father, came to hym, and spake to hym, and told him how that he thought Page 1537 that hee sought for hym: and then hys father confessing it, wept sore and sayde, that maister Browne charged him to seeke him, and bring him to him: howbeit, sayde he, I will returne home agayne, and saye I can not finde you. But William saide: * father, I will go home with you & saue you harmeles, what soeuer commeth of it.

And thus they came home together: but William as soone as he was come home, was taken by the sayde Constable, and laid in the stockes till the day. Maister Browne hearing that William Hunter was come home, sente for him to the Constable, who broughte him immediately to maister Browne.

Now when William was come, maister Browne said to him, ah syrha, are yee come? and then by and by he commaunded the Bible to be brought, * and opened it, and then began to reason wyth William on this maner, saying: I heare say you are a Scripture manne, you: and can reason much of the sixt of Iohn, and expound as pleaseth you, and turned the Bible to the sixt of S. Iohn, and then he laid to his charge, what an exposition hee made, when the Uicare and he talked together. And William sayde, he vrged me to say so much as I did.

Wel, quoth M. Browne, because you can expound that place so well, how say you to an other place, turning to the xxij. of S. Luke? * and maister Browne sayde, looke heere (quoth he) for Christ sayth, that the bread is his body.

To the which William aunswered, the text sayth, howe Christ tooke bread, but not that he changed it, into an other substaunce, but gaue that which hee tooke, and brake that which he gaue, which was bread, as is euident by the text. For els he should haue had two bodies, which to affirm I see no reason, sayd William.

At the which answeare M. Browne was very angry, & tooke vp the Bible and turned the leaues, and then flong it downe againe in such a fury, * that William could not wel finde the place againe wherof they reasoned.

Then M. Browne saide, thou naughty boye, wilt thou not take thyngs as they are, but expounde them as thou wilt? doth not Christ call the bread his body plainly, and thou wilt not beleeeue that the breade is hys body after the consecration? thou goest about to make Christ a liar.

But William Hunter aunswered: I meane not so sir, but rather more earnestly to searche what the minde of Christ is in that holy Institution, * wherein he commendeth vnto vs the remembraunce of his death, passion, resurrection and comming againe, saying: This d•e in the remembraunce of mee. And also though Christe call the breade hys body, as he doeth also say, that hee is a vine, a doore. &c. yet is not his body turned into breade, no more then he is turned into a doore, or vine. Wherefore Christ called the breade his body by a figure.

At that worde M. Browne sayde, thou art a villaine in dede. Wilt thou make Christ a lier yet stil? and was in such a furie with William, and so raged, that William could not speake a woorde,* but hee crossed him, and scoffed at euerye woorde. Wherefore William seeing him in suche furie, desired hym that he woulde either heare him quietly, and suffer hym to aunsweare for himselfe,* or else send him away. To the which maister Browne aunsweared: in deede I will sende thee to morrowe to my Lorde of London, and hee shall haue thee vnder examination, and thus lefte of the talke, and made a letter immediately, and sente William Hunter with the Constable to Boner Bishop of London, who receiued William.

After that hee had read the letter, and the Constable returned home againe, the Bishoppe caused William to bee brought into a chamber, where he begā to reason with him in this maner: I vnderstād William Hunter (quoth he) by M. Brownes letter, how that you haue had certaine communication with the vicare of Wielde,* about the blessed sacramēt of the aultar, & how that ye could not agree, wherupon M. Browne sent for thee to bring thee to the Catholicke faith, from the which he sayth, that thou art gon. Howbeit, if thou wilt be ruled by me, thou shalt haue no harme, for any thing that thou hast said or done in this matter.

William aunsweared, saying: I am not fallen from the Catholicke faith of Christ, I am sure, but do beleue it, and confesse it with all my heart.*

Why, quoth the Byshop, how sayest thou to the blessed Sacrament of the aultar? wilt thou not recant thy saying, which thou confessedst before maister Browne, howe that Christes bodye is not in the Sacrament of the aultare, the same that was borne of the virgine Marie?

To the which William answered, saying? my Lorde I vnderstande, y^t M. Browne hath certified you of the talke, which he and I had together, and thereby ye knowe what I saide to him, the which I wil not recant by Gods helpe. Then said the Bishop, I thinke thou art ashamed to beare a fagot and recant openly, but if thou wilt recante thy say'inges, I will promise thee,* that thou shalt not be putte to open shame: but speake the worde here nowe betwene me and thee, and I will promise thee, it shal go no further, and thou shalt goe home againe without any hurt.

William answeared and sayd, my Lord: if you wil lette me alone and leaue me to my conscience, I will goe to my father and dwell with him, or els with my maister againe,* and so if no body will disquiet nor trouble my conscience, I will keepe my conscience to my selfe.

Then sayd the Byshop, I am content, so that thou wilt goe to the Church and receiue and be shriuen, and so continue a good Catholicke Christian. No, quoth William, I▪ will not do so for all the good in the world.

Then, quoth the Byshop, if you will not do so, I will make you sure enough, I warrant you. Wel, quoth William, you can doe no more then God will permitte you.* Wel quoth the bishop, wilt thou not recant in deede by no meanes? No, quoth Williā, neuer while I liue, God willing.

Then the Bishop (this talke ended) commaunded hys men to put William in the stockes in his gatehouse,* where he sate two daies and nights, onely with a crust of browne bread and a cuppe of water.

At the two daies end the bishop came to him, and finding the cup of water and the crust of bread stil by him vpon the stocks, sayd to his men: take hym oute of the stockes, and let him breake his fast with you. Then they lette hym forth of the stockes, but would not suffer hym to eate wyth them, but called him hereticke. And he said he was as lothe to be in their companie, as they were, to be in his.

After breakefaste the Bishop sent for William, and demaunded whether he woulde recante or no. But William made him aunswere, howe that he woulde neuer recante that which he had confessed before men, as concerning hys faith in Christ.

Then the B. sayd that he wys no Christian, but denied the faith in which he was Baptised. But W. aunswared: I was baptised in the faith of the holy Trinitie, the which I will not goe from, God assisting me with his grace.

Then the Bishop sent hym to the conuicte prisone,* and commaunded the keeper to lay yrons on him as manye as he coulde beare, and moreouer asked him, how old he was: and William sayd, that he was 19. yeare olde.

Well sayd the Bishop, you wilbe burned ere you be 20. yere old, if you will not yeld your selfe better then you haue done yet. William aunswared, God strengthen me in his truth: and then he parted,* the Bishop allowing him a halfpennie a day to liue on in bread, or drinke.

Thus he continued in prison 3. quarters of a yeare. In the which time he had beene before the bishop 5. times, besides the time when he was condemned in the Consistorie in Paules, the 9. day of Februarie: at the which time I hys brother Robert Hunter was present,* when and where I heard the bishop condemne him, and fiue other more.

And then the Bishop calling William, asked him if hee would not recant, and so red to hym his examination and confession, as is aboue rehearsed, and then rehearsed howe that William confessed that he did beleue that he receaued Christes body spiritually, when he did receiue the communion. Doest thou meane, quoth the Byshop, that the bread is Christes body spiritually?

William answered: I meane not so, but rather when I receiue the holy Communion rightly and woorthely, I do feede vppon Christ spiritually throughe faith in my soule, and made partaker of all the benefites which Christ hathe brought vnto all faithfull beleeuers through hys precious death, passion, and resurrection,* and not that the breade is his body, either spiritually or corporally.

Then said the Bish. to William, doest thou not thinke (holding vp his cap) that for example heere of my cap, thou mayest see the squarenes and colour of it, and yet not to be the substance, which thou iudget by the accidences.

William answered: if you can separate the accidents from the substance, and shewe me the substance without the accidents, I could beleue. Then said the Bishop: thou wilt not beleue that God can do any thing about mannes capacite. Yes, said William, I must needs beleue that: for daily experience teacheth all men that thing plainly: but our question is not what God can doe, but what hee will haue vs to learne in his holy Supper.

Then the Bishop saide, I alwaies haue founde thee at this poynt, & I see no hope in thee to reclaim thee vnto the Catholicke faith, but thou wilt continue a corrupt member, & then pronounced sentence vpon him, how that he should goe from that place to newgate for a time, & so from thence to Burntwood, where, sayd he, thou shalt be burned.

Then the Byshop called for an other, and so when hee had condemned them al, he called for William Hunter, and Page 1538 perswaded with him,* saying: if thou wilt yet recant, I wil make thee a free man in the Citie, & geue thee 40. pound in good money to sette vp thine occupation withall: or I will make thee Steward of my house and set thee in office, for I like thee well,* thou hast witte inough, and I will preferre thee, if thou recant.

But William answered, I thanke you for your great offers: notwithstanding, my Lorde, sayd he, if you can not perswade my conscience with Scriptures, I can not finde in my hart to turne from God for the loue of the worlde:* for I count all things worldly, but losse and donge, in respect of the loue of Christ.

Then sayd the Byshop, if thou diest in this minde, thou art condemned for euer. William answered: God iudgeth righteously, and iustifieth them whom man condemneth vniustly.

Thus William and the Byshoppe departed, William and the rest to Newgate, where they remained aboute a moneth,* which afterwarde were sent downe, William to Burntwoode, and the others into diuers places of y^e countrey. Now, when Williā was come downe to Burntwood which was the Saterdaye before the Annunciation of the virgin Mary that folowed on the Monday after, William remained till the Tuesday after, because they would not put him to death, then for the holinesse of the day.

In the meane time Williams father and mother came to him,* and desired hartly of God that he might continue to the ende in that good way which God had begon, and hys mother sayd to him, that she was glad that euer she was so happy to beare such a childe, which could finde in his heart to •oo•e his life for Christes names sake.

Then William sayde to his mother: for my little paine whych I shall suffer, whych is but a shorte brayde, Christe hath promised me,* mother sayd he, a crown of ioy: may you not be glad of that mother? With that, hys mother kneeled downe on her knees, saying: I pray God strengthen thee my sonne, to the ende. Yea, I thinke thee as wel bestowed as any childe that euer I bare.

At the which woordes maister Higbed tooke her in hys armes, saying: I reioyce (and so sayd the others) to see you in thys minde, and you haue a good cause to reioyce. And his father and mother both said, that they were neuer of other minde, but praied for him, that as he had begon to confesse Christ before men, he likewise might so continue to the ende. Williams father saide: I was afraide of nothing, but that my sonne should haue ben killed in the prison for hunger and cold, the Bishop was so hard to him. But William confessed,* after a moneth that his father was charged wyth his boorde, that he lacked nothing, but had meat & clothing inough, yea euē out of y^e court, both money, meat, cloathes, woode and coales, and all things necessary.

Thus they continued in their Inne, beinge the Swan in Burntwoode, in a Parlor, whether resorted many people of the countrey to see those good men which were there: and many of Williams acquaintaunce came to hym, and reasoned with hym, and hee with them, exhorting them to come away from the abhomination of Popish superstition and idolatrie.

Thus passing away saterday, Sondag, and Monday, on monday at night it hapned that William had a dreame about 2. of the clocke in the morning,* which was this: how y^t he was at the place where the stake was pight, where he shuld be burned, which (as he thought in his dreame) was at the townes ende where the buts stode: which was so in deede. And also he dreamed that he met with his father as he went to the stake, and also that there was a priest at the stake, which went about to haue him recant.

To whom he sayd (as he thought in his dreame) howe that he bad him away false prophet, and how that he exhorted the people to beware of him, and such as he was: which things came to passe in deede. It happened that William made a noise to hym selfe in his dreame, which caused M. Higbed and the others to awake hym out of his sleepe, to knowe what he lacked. When he awaked, he told them his dreame in order, as is sayd.

Nowe when it was day, the shiriffe M. Brocket called on to set forward to the burning of William Hūter. Then came the Sheriffes sonne to William Hunter,* and embraced him in his right arme, saying: William, be not afraid of these men which are here present with bowes, bils, & weapons ready prepared to bring you to the place where you shall be burned. To whom William aunswered: I thanke God I am not afraide, for I haue cast my coumpt what it wil cost me already. Then the sheriffes sonne could speake no more to him for weeping.

Then William Hunter plucked vp his gowne, & stepped ouer the Parlour grounsele, and went forward chearefully, the sheriffes seruauent taking him by the arme, and I his brother by an other, and thus going in the way, met w^t his father according to his dreame, & he spake to his sonne,* weeping and saying, God be with thee sonne William, and William sayd, God be with you father, & be of a good comfort, for I hope we shall meete againe when we shalbe mery. His father said, I hope so William and so departed.* So W. went to the place where the stake stode, euen according to hys dreame, whereas all thinges were very vnready. Then William tooke a wet broome fagot, & kneeled downe thereon, and red the 51. Psalme, till he came to these words, the sacrifice of God is a contrite spirite, a contrite and a broken heart, O God, thou wilt not despise.

Then sayd M. Tirrel of the Beaches, called W. Tirel, thou lvest (sayd he) thou readest false,* for the wordes are an humble spirit. But W. said, the translation sayth a contrite heart. Yea, quoth M. Tirel, the translation is fals, ye translate bokes as ye list your selues, like hereticks. Wel, quoth William, there is no great difference in those words. Then sayd the sheriffe, heere is a letter from the Queene. If thou wilt recant thou shalt liue, if not thou shalt be burned. No,* quoth W. I will not recante, God willing. Then W. roase and went to the stake, and stooode vpright to it. Then came one Richard Ponde a Bailiffe, and made fast the chaine about William.

The burning of William Hunter Martyr.

Then sayde M. Browne, here is not woode enough to burne a legge of him. Then said William: good people pray for me: and make speede and dispatch quickly: and pray for me while ye see me aliue, good people, and I praye for you likewise.

Now quoth M. Browne, pray for thee?* I will pray no more for thee, then I wil pray for a dogge. To whom William aunswared M. Browne: now you haue that whych you sought for, & I pray God it be not laid to your charge in the last day: howbeit I forgeue you. Then sayde maister Browne, I aske no forgeuenes of thee. Wel sayd William, if God forgeue you not, I shall require my bloude at your handes.

Then sayd William: Sonne of God shine vppon mee, and immediately the sunne in the element shone oute of a darke cloude, so full in his face, that he was constrayned to looke an other way: whereat the people mused, because it was so darke a little time afore.* Then William tooke vppe a fagot of broome, and embraced it in his armes.

Then this Priest which William dreamed of, came to his brother Robert with a popish booke to carye to William, that he might recant, which booke his brother woulde not meddle withall.

Then William seeing the priest, and perceiuing how he woulde haue shewed hym the booke, sayd: away,* thou false prophet. Beware of them good people, & come away from their abominatiōs, lest y^t you be partakers of their plagues. Then, quoth the Priest, looke howe thou burnest heere, so shalt thou burne in hel. William answered, thou liest, thou false prophet: away thou false prophet, away.

Page 1539 Then was there a Gentleman whiche sayde, I praye God haue mercy vpon his soule. The people sayd: Amen, Amen, Immediatly fire was made.

Then William cast his Psalter right into his brothers hande,* who sayde: William thinke on the holy Passion of Christ, and be not afraid of death.

And William aunswared: I am not afraid. Then lifte he vp his handes to heauen, and sayd, Lorde, Lorde, Lord, receiue my spirit, and casting downe hys head againe into the smothering smoke, he yeelded vp his life for the truthe, sealing it with hys bloud, to the praise of God.

Nowe, by and by after, M. Browne commaunded one old Hunt to take his brother Robert Hunter, & lay him in the stockes till he returned from the burning of Higbed at Hornden on the hill,* the same day. Which thing olde Hunt did. Then maister Browne (when Robert Hunter came before him) asked if he would doe as his brother had done. But Robert Hunter answered: if I do as my brother hath done, I shall haue as he hath had. Mary (quoth M. Browne) thou mayest be sure of it.

Then M. Browne sayde, I maruell, that thy brother stode so to hys tackling: and moreouer, asked Robert if Williams Maister of London were not at hys burnynge.* But Roberte sayde that hee was not there: but Mayster Browne bare hym in hande that his master was there, and howe that he did see him there, but Robert denied it. Then master Browne commaunded the Constable and Robert Hunter to goe theyr wayes home, and so had no further talke wyth them.

Here followeth the hystorie of master Higbed, and master Causton, two worthy Gentlemen of Essex, which for the syncere confession of theyr faith vnder Boner B. of London, were Martyred and burned in Essex. An. 1555. Marche 26.

ALTHOUGH the cōdemnation of maister Higbed, and master Causton followed after the condemning of those other Martyrs,* which were condemned with Tomkyns and Hunter aboue mentioned, yet because the time of their execution was before the burning of the foresaid four martyrs, for so much as they suffered the same day that William Hunter did, which was the 26. of Marche, I thoughte therefore next after the storie of the sayde William Hunter, folowing the order of time, here to place the same.

This maister Higbed, and maister Causton, two worshipfull Gentlemen in the Countie of Essex, the one at Hornden of the hill, the other of the parishe of Thunderst, being zealous and religious in the true seruice of God, as they could not dissemble with the Lord their God, nor flatter with the world, so in time of blind superstition & wretched idolatrie, they could not long lie hidde and obscure in such a number of malignant aduersaries, accusers, and seruants of thys worlde, but at length they were perceaued and detected to the foresayde Edmund Boner Bishoppe of London,* peradventure not without the same organ which sent vp William Hunter, as is aboue declared. By reason whereof, by commaundement they were committed to the officers of Colchester to be safely kept, and with them also a seruant of Thomas Causton, who in this praise of Christian godlines, was nothing inferior to his maister.

Boner the forsayd Byshop, perceiuing these 2. Gentlemen to be of worshipful estate, & of great estimation in that countrey, least any tumult shoulde thereby arise, came thether himselfe, accompanied with M. Fecknam and certaine other,* thinking to reclaim them to his faction and fashion: so that great labour & diligence was taken therein, as wel by terrors and threatnings, as by large promises and flatteringe, and all faire meanes, to reduce them againe to the vnitie (as they termed it) of the mother church.

In fine, when nothing coulde preuaile to make them assent to theyr doings, at length they came to thys poynte, that they required certaine respite to consulte with themselues what were best to doe. Whych time of deliberation being expired, and they remaining still constant and vnmooueable in their professed doctrine, and setting oute also their confession in wryting, the bishop seeing no good to be done in tarying any longer there,* departed thence & caried them bothe with hym to London, and wyth them certaine other prisonners also, which about the same time in those quarters were apprehended.

It was not long after thys, but these prisonners being at London committed to strait prison, and there attempted sundrye wise by the Bishop and his Chapleines to reuoke their opiniōs: at length, when no persuasions wold serue, they were brought forth to open examination at the Consistorie in Paules,* the 17. daye of Februarie. An. 1555. Where they were demaunded aswell by the said bishop, as also by the Bishop of Bathe & others, whether they would recant their errors & peruerse doctrine (as they termed it,) and so come to y^e vnitie of the Popish Church. Which when they refused to doe, the Byshop assigned them likewise the next day to appeare againe, being the 18. of Februarie.

On the whych daye, among many other thinges there sayd and passed,* he read vnto them seuerally certaine Articles, and gaue them respite vntill the next day, to aunswer vnto the same, & so committed them againe to prisone. The copie of which Articles here vnder foloweth.

Item,* that thou hast commended and praised all the sayd persons, so erring and beleuing (or at the least wise some of them) secretely, and also openly, taking and beleueing them to be faithfull and Catholicke people, and their sayde opinions to be good and true, and the same to the best & vttermost of thy power thou hast allowed, maintained, and defended at sundrie times.

Item, that thou, hauing hearde, knowen, and vnderstanded all the premisses, thus to be as is aforesayde, haste not regarded al o•Page 1540 any part thereof, but contrary to the same and euery part thereof, hast attempted and done, condemning, transgressing, and breaking that promise, faith, religion, order, and custome aforesayd: and hast becommen, and art an hereticke and misbeleueer in the premisses, denying the veritie of Christes body and bloud in the Sacrament of the aultar, and obstinately affirming, that the substance of materiall bread and wine are there remaining, and that the substance of Christes body and bloud taken of the virginé Mary, are not there in the sayd Sacrament, really and truely being.

Item, that all the premisses be true, notorious, famous, and manifest, and that vpon all the same, there haue and be amongst the sad and good people of the Citie of London, and Dioces of the same in great multitude, commonly and publickely, a common and publicke fame and opinion, and also in all places where thou hast bene, within the sayd Dioces of London.

☞ These Articles being geuen to them in writing by the Byshop, the next day folowing was assigned to them to geue vp and to exhibite their aunsweres vnto the same.

The third dayes Session vpon the examination of M. Causton and M. Higbed.

Upon the which day being the first day of March, the said Thomas Causton,* and Thomas Higbed Gentlemen being brought before the Byshop in the Consistory, there exhibited their aunsweres to the Articles aforesayd: the tenour of which aunsweres here followeth.

¶The aunsweres of Thomas Causton and Thomas Higbed, seuerally made to the foresaid Articles obiected, as before.

TO the first, they aunswere and confesse the same to be true.

*To the second, they answere and beleeeue the same to be true.

To the third, they aunswere and beleeeue the same to be true.

To the fourth, they aunswere and thinke the same to be true.

To the fift, vnto this clause (and so was it in very deede) they aunswere and beleeeue the same to be true. And vnto that clause (and so was it in very deede) they aunswere negatiuely, and beleeeue that it was not in very deede.

To the sixt, seuenth, and eyght, they aunswere and beleeeue the same to be true.

To the ninth they aunswere and say, that they thinke they haue a iust and lawfull cause and ground to swarue and go from the sayd fayth and Religion, because they haue now read more of Scripture, then either themselues, or their Parents and kinsfolke, Godfathers or Godmothers haue read or seene heeretofore in that behalfe.

To the tenth, they aunswere, say, and beleeeue, that the sayd persons articulate, haue bene named, taken, and counted for heretickes, and so condemned for heretickes: yet about three yeares past, they were taken for good Christian persons. And for somuch as these Respondents did neuer heare them preach cōcerning the Sacrament of the aultar, they say that they preached well, in that they sayd and preached that Christ is not present really and truly in the sayd Sacrament,* but that there is remayning the substance of bread and wine.

To the eleuenth, they aunswere and say, that howsoever other folkes do repute and take the sayde persons articulate, yet these Respondents them selues did neuer, nor yet do so accompt and take them. And further they say, that in case the sayd persons articulate named in this article haue preached that in the Sacrament of the altar is very materiall wine, and not the substance of Christes body and bloud, vnder the formes of bread and wyne, then they preached well and truly, and these respondents themselues do so beleeeue.

To the twelfth they aunswere and say, that where other folke haue disprayed the sayd persons articulate, and disallowed theyr opinions, these Respondents (for ought that they at any tyme haue heard) did like and allow the sayd persons, and theyr sayings.

To the thirteenth they aunswere and say, that they haue not broken or condemned any promise made by their Godfathers, and Godmothers for them at their baptisme, and that they are no heretickes nor misbeleueers, in that they beleue that there remayneth only bread and wine in the sacrament of the aultar, and that Christes naturall body is not there, but in heauen, for they say that the scriptures so teach them.

To the foureteenth they answere and beleue that the premisses before by them confessed be true, notorious and manifest.

After these answeres exhibited and perused, then the B. speaking vnto thē after this sort, beginneth first (as he did euer before) with Thomas Causton. Because ye shall not be sodenly trapped,*and that men shall not say that I go about to seke snares to put you away, I haue hitherto respited you, that you should way & cōsider with your self, your state and cōdition, and that you should, while ye haue time and space, acknowledge the truth, and returne to the vnity of the catholicke church. Then the bishop reading theyr former articles and aunsweres to the same, asked them if they would recant, which when they denyed, they were againe dismissed and commaunded to appeare the wensday next after, at two of the clocke at after noone, there to receaue their definitiue sentence agaynst them: Which thinge (as it seemeth) was yet differred.

¶An other examination of M. Causton and Maister Higbed.

The next Friday, being the eight day of March,* the sayd Thomas Caustō was first called to examinatiō before the bishop, Fecknam and D. Stempe, in his Pallace, and there had read vnto hym his foresayd articles with hys answeres therunto, & after certain exhortations to recant his former profession, & to be conformable to the vnitie of their church, they promised him (so doing) willingly to receaue him agayn therunto. To whō he answered, you goe about to catch vs in snares & ginnes: But marke by what measure ye measure vs, looke you to be measured with the same agayne at Gods hands. The bishop still perswaded with him to recant: To whom he answered no, I wil not abiure. Ye sayd that the bishops that were lately burned, be Heretickes: But I pray God make me suche an Hereticke as they were.

The bishop then leauing M. Causton, calleth forth M. Higbed: vsing with hym the like perswasīōs, that they did with the other: But he answered, I wil not abiure.* For I haue bene of this minde and opinion that I am now, these 16. yeares, and doe what ye can, ye shall doe no more then God will permitte you to doe, and with what measure ye measure vs looke for the same agayne at Gods hands.

Then Fecknam asked him his opinion in the sacramēt of the altar. To whom he answered:* I do not beleue that Christ is in the sacrament as ye will haue him, which is of mans making.

Both their answeres thus seuerally made, they were again commanded to depart for that time, & to appeare the next day in the consistory at Paules, betweene the houres of one and three of the clocke at after noone.

The last appearaunce of M. Causton, and M. Higbed before Boner.

AT which day and houre, being the ninth day of march, they were both brought thether: ^{*} Where the Bishoppe caused M. Thomas Caustons articles and answeres first to be read openly, and after perswaded with him to recant and abiure his heretical opinions, and to come home now at the last to their mother the catholicke Church, and saue hymselfe.

But M. Thomas Causton answered agayn and said: No, I wil not abiure. For I came not hither for that purpose: ^{*} and therewithall did exhibite in writing vnto the Bishop (as well in his owne name, as also in Thom. Higbeds name) a confession of theyr fayth, to the whiche they would stand: and required leaue to read the same, whiche (after great suite) was obtained, and so he read it openlye in the hearing of the people, as followeth.

☞ The confession and fayth of Thomas Causton and Thomas Hygbed, which they deliuered to the Bishop of London, before the Mayor and Sheriffes, and in the presence of all the people their assembled. Anno. 1555. the 9. of March, & were condemned for the same in the sayde Consistory in Paules Church, the yeare and day abouesayd.

1 First, we beleue and professe in Baptisme, to forsake the Deuill and his workes and pompes, ^{*} and the vanities of the wicked world, with all the sinfull lustes of the fleshe.

2. We beleue all the articles of our Christian fayth.

3. We beleue that wee are bound to keepe Gods holye will and commaundementes, ^{*} and to walke in the same all the dayes of our lyfe.

4. We beleue that there is contayned in the Lords praier all thinges necessary both for bodye and soule, and that we are taught thereby to pray to our heauenly father, and to none other saint or angell.

5. We beleue that there is a catholicke Church, euen the Communion of Saintes, Built vppon the foundation of the Prophets and Apostles (as S. Paule sayth) Christ being the head corner stone For the which Church Christ gaue himselfe, to make it to himselfe a glorious congregation, without faulte in his sight.

6. We beleue, that this churche, of her selfe, and by her Page 1541 owne merites is sinfull, ^{} and must needes say: Father, forgeue vs our sinnes: but through Christe and his merites, shee is freely forgeuen: For he in his owne person (sayth saint Paule) hath purged her sinnes, and made her faultles in hys sight. ^{} Besides whome, there is no Saueour (sayeth the Prophete) neyther is there saluation (sayth Saint Peter) in any other name.

7 We beleue, as he is our onely Sauour, so is he our onely Mediatour. ^{*} For the holy Apostle S. Paule sayeth: There is one God, one Mediatour betweene God and man, euen the man Iesus Christ. Wherefore seeing none hath this name, God and man, but Iesus Christ, therefore there is no mediator, but Iesus Christ.

8 We beleue that this Church of Christ is and hath bene persecuted by the wordes of Christe, saying: As they haue persecuted me,*so shall they persecute you: For the disciple is not aboue his maister. For it is not onely geuen vnto you to beleue in Christ (sayeth Saint Paule) but also to suffer for his sake. For all that will liue godly in Christ Iesus, must suffer persecution.

9 Wee beleue that the Church of Christe teacheth the worde of God truely and sincerely, putting nothing to, nor taking any thing fro: and also doth minister the Sacraments according to the Primitiue Church.

10 We beleue that this Church of Christ suffereth all men to reade the Scriptures, according to Christes commaundement, saying: Search the Scriptures: for they testifie of me. We reade also out of the Actes, that when Saint Paule preached, the audience dayly searched the Scriptures,*whether he preached truely or no. Also the Prophet Dauid teacheth all men to pray with vnderstanding: For how shall the vnlearned (saith S. Paule) say, Amen, at the geuing of thanks, when they vnderstand not what is sayde? And what is more allowed, then true faith, which S. Paule saith, commeth by hearing of the word of God▪

11 Wee beleue, that the Church of Christe teacheth that God ought to be worshipped according to his word,*and not after the doctrine of men: For in vayne (sayth Christ) ye worship me, teaching nothing but the doctrine of men.

Also we are commaunded of God by hys Prophet, saying:*Walke not in the traditions and preceptes of your Elders: but walke (sayth he) in my precepts: do that I commaund you: put nothing thereunto, neyther take any thing from it. Likewise (saith Christ) you shall forsake father and mother, and folow me Whereby we learne, that if our Elders teach otherwise then God commaunded, in that point we must forsake them.

*12 We beleue that the Supper of the Lord ought not to be altered and chaunged, for as much as Christ himselfe being the wisdom of the father, did institute it. For it is written: Cursed is he that chaungeth my ordinaunces, and departeth from my Commaundements, or taketh any thing from them.

Now, we finde by the scriptures, that this holy supper is sore abused.*

First, in that it is geuen in one kind, where Christ gaue it in both.

Secondly, in that it is made a priuate Masse, where Christ made it a Communion: for he gaue it not to one alone, but to all the Apostles, in the name of the whole Church.

*Thirdly, in that it is made a sacrifice for the quicke and the dead, wheras Christ ordeined it for a remembraunce of the euerlasting sacrifice, which was his owne body offered vpon the aultar of the Crosse once for all, as the holy Apostle sayth: Euen the full and perfect price of our redemption: and where there is remission of sinne (saith he) there is no more sacrifice for sinne.

*Fourthly, in that it is worshipped contrary to the commaundement, saying: Thou shalt worship nothing that is made with hands.

*Fiftly, in that it is geuen in an vnknowne tongue, whereby the people are ignoraunt of the right vse thereof, how Christ died for our sinnes, and rose againe for our iustification, by whome we be set at peace with God, and receaued to his fauour and mercy by his promise, whereof this sacrament is a sure seale and witnes.

*Besides this, it is hanged vp and shut in a boxe: yea many times so long, that wormes breedeth in it, and so it putrifyeth: whereby the rude people haue an occasion to speake vnreuerently thereof, whiche otherwise woulde speake reuerently.

Thereof they that thus abuse it, bring vp the sclaunder and not we, whiche pray dayly to God to restore it to the right vse, according to Christes institution.

Nowe, concerning Christes wordes: Thys is my body, we deny thē not, but we say, that y^e mind of Christ in them must be searched out by other open scriptures, wherby we may come to the spirituall vnderstanding of them,* whiche shall be most to the glory of God. For as the holy Apostle sayth: There is no scripture that hath any priuate interpretation. Besides this, the Scriptures are full of the like figuratiue speeches: as for example, Christ sayeth: This cup is the new Testament in my blood. The rocke is Christ (sayeth Saint Paule.) Who soeuer receyueth a child in my name (sayth our saueour Iesus Christ) receyueth me.

Which sentences must not be vnderstand after the letter, lest we do erre, as the Capernautes did, which thought that Christes body should haue ben eaten with their teeth, when he spake of the eating thereof. Unto whome Christe sayd: Such a fleshly eating of my body profiteth nothing: it is the spirit (sayeth our Saueour Iesus Christ) that quickeneth: the fleshe profyteth nothyng: for my woordes are spirite and lyfe.

Thus wee see that Christes woordes must be vnderstanded spiritually, and not literally.* Therefore he yⁱ commeth to this worthy supper of the Lord, must not prepare his lawe, but his hart: neyther tooth nor belly: but Beleeue (sayth S. Augustine) and thou hast eaten it: so that we must bring with vs a spiritual hunger. And as the Apostle saith: Trie and examine our selues, whether our conscience doo testifie vnto vs, that we do truly beleeue in Christ, according to the Scriptures: whereof if we be truly certified, being new borne from our old conuersation in hart, minde, will, and deede, then may we boldly with this mariage garment of faith come to the feast.

In consideration whereof, we haue inuincible Scriptures, as of Christ himselfe: This do in the remembraunce of me. And S. Paule: As often (saith he) as ye eate of this bread, and drinke of this cup, ye shall remember the Lords death vntill he come. Heere is no chaunge, but bread still.* And Saint Luke affirmeth the same. Also Christ hath made a iust promise saying: Me you shall not haue alwayes with you. I leaue the world, and go to my father: for if I should not depart, the comforter which I will send, can not come vnto you. So according to his promise he is ascended: as the Euangelistes testifie. Also Saint Peter sayth: That heauen shall keepe him vntill the last day also.

Now, as touching his omnipotent power, we confesse and say with S. Augustine, that Christ is both God and man. In that he is God, he is euery where: * but in that he is man, he is in heauen, and can occupy but one place: whereunto the Scriptures doth agree. For his body was not in all places at once, when he was heere: for it was not in the graue when the women sought it, as the Angell saith: neither was it at Bethania where Lazarus died, by Christes owne words, saying: I am glad I was not there. And thus we conclude with the Scriptures, that Christ is in his holy Supper sacramentally and spiritually in all them that worthily receiue it, and corporally in heauen, both God and man.

And further, we make heere our protestation before God (whome we call to record in this matter) that this whiche we haue sayd, is neither of stubbornnes, nor wilfull mind) as some iudge of vs: but euen of very conscience, * truely (we trust) grounded in Gods holy word. For before wee tooke this matter in hand, we besought God from the bottome of our hartes, that we might do nothing contrary to his holy and blessed word. And in that he hath thus shewed his power in our weakenes, we can not woorthely prayse him: vnto whome we geue harty thanks, through Iesus Christ our Lord, Amen.

When he had thus deliuered and read their confession, the Bishop stil persisting sometime in faire promises, sometime threatening to pronounce iudgemēt, asked them whether they would stand to this their confession and other answeares? To whome Causton said, Yea, * we will stande to our answeares written with our hands, and to our beliefe therein contained. After which answeare, the Byshop began to pronounce sentence against him.

Then he said, that it was much rashnes, and without all loue and mercy, to geue iudgement without answering to their confession by the truth of Gods word, whereunto they submitted themselues most willingly. And therefore I, * quoth Causton (because I can not haue iustice at your hand, but that ye will thus rashly condemne me) doo appeale from you to my Lord Cardinall.

Then D. Smith sayde, that he woulde answeare theyr confession. But the Bishop (not suffering him to speake) willed Harpsfield to say his minde, for the stay of the people: Who taking their confession in his hand, neither touched nor answered one sentence thereof.

Whiche done, the Bishop pronounced sentence, first against the said Thomas Causton, and then calling Thomas Higbed, caused his articles and answeres likewise to Page 1542 be read. In the reading whereof Higbed sayd: Ye speake blasphemie against Christes passion,  and ye goe aboute to trap vs with your subtilties and snares. And though my father and mother, and other my kinsfolke, did beleue as you say,  yet they were deceiued in so beleeuing.

And further, where you say, that my Lord, named Cranmer (late Archbishop of Canterbury) and other specified in the said articles be heretikes: I do wishe that I were such an hereticke as they were and be. Then the Byshop asked him againe, whether he would turne from his errour, and come to the vnitie of their Church? To whome he sayde, No, I would ye should recant, for I am in the truth, and you in errour.

Well, quoth the Byshop, if ye will returne, I will gladly receiue you.

No, sayd Higbed, I will not returne as you wyll haue me, to beleue in the sacrament of the altar your God.

*Whereupon the Byshop proceeded, and gaue iudgement vpon him, as he had done before vpon Tho. Causton. When all this was thus ended, they were both deliuered to the Sheriffes, and so by them sent to Newgate, where they remained by the space of xiiij. dayes, prayes be God, not so much in afflictions, as in consolations.

For the encrease whereof, they earnestly desired all their good brethren and sisterne in Christ to pray, that God for his sonnes sake would go forth with that great mercy, which already he had begon in them, so that they might perseuere vnto the ende, to the prayse of the eternall God, and comfort of all their brethren.

These xiiij. dayes (after their condemnation) once expired,* they were the xxij. day of this moneth of March, fetched from Newgate at foure of the clocke in the morning, and so led through the Citie vnto Algate, where they were deliuered vnto the Sheriffe of Essex, and there beeing fast bound in a cart, were shortly after brought to their seuerall appointed places of burning: that is to saye, Thomas Higbed to Horneden on the hill,* and Thomas Causton to Rayly (both in the Countrey of Essex) where they did most constantly,* the xxvj. day of the same moneth, seale this their faith with shedding of their bloud by most cruell fire, to the glory of God, and great reioysing of the godly.

At the burning of whiche, Mayster Higbed, Iustice Browne was also present, as is aboue specified, and diuers Gentlemen in the shiere were commaunded to be present, for feare belike, least they should be taken from them. And thus much touching the apprehension, examination, confession, condemnation, and burnyng of these two godly and constant Martyrs of God.

William Pigot, Steuen Knight, and Iohn Laurance, with their exanation and constant martirdome.

IN the Story before of Thomas Tomkins and his fellowes,* mention was made of sixe, whiche were examined, and condemned together, by bishop Boner, the ninth day of February.* Of the which sixe condemned persons, two, which were Tomkins, and William Hunter, (as ye heard) were executed, the one vppon the 26. of February, and the other vppon the 26. day of March. Other three, to witte, William Pigot and Steuen Knight suffered vpon the eight and twenty day, and Iohn Laurence the nine and twenty of the sayd month of march.

Touching the which three Martyrs, now something to say of their examinations, it was first demaunded of them, what their opiniō was of the sacrament of the Aultar. Whereunto they seuerally answered, and also subscribed, that in the sacrament of the aultar, vnder formes of bread and wine there is not the very substaunce of the body and bloud of our sauour Iesus Christ, but a special partaking of the body and bloud of Christ: the very body and bloud of Christ being onely in heauen, and no where els. This answeere thus made, the bishop caused certayne articles to be read vnto them, tending to the same effect as did the articles before of Tomkins and of M. Causton. The tenour whereof here followeth.

Articles or interrogatories objected by the bishop of London, to Willam Pigot, Steuen Kight, and Iohn Laurence, the 8. of February. 1555.

Whether do you thinke and steadfastly beleue that it is a catholicke,* faithfull, christian, and true doctrine, to teach, preach and say, that in the sacramentes of the aultar, vnder y^e formes of bread & wine, there is w^tout any sub^tstance of bread & wine there remayning, by y^e omnipotent power of almightye God, & his holy worde, really, truely, and in very deede the true and natural body and bloud of our Sauour Iesus Christ, the selfe same in substaunce (though not in outward forme and appearaunce) whiche was borne of the Uirgine Mary, and suffered vppon the crosse, yea, or nay?

Whether doe you thinke,* and steadfastly beleue that your Parentes, kinsfolke, frendes, and acquaintance, here in this realm of England, before your birth a great while and also after your Birth, professing and beleuing the said doctrine and fayth, concerning the sayd sacrament of the aultar, had a true christian fayth, and were faythfull and true christen people, or no?

Whether do you think and steadfastly beleue that your Godfathers and Godmother,* professing and beleuing the said Doctrine and faith, concerning the sayde Sacrament of the aultar, had a true christen fayth, and were faythfull and true christen people or no?

Whether do you think and steadfastly beleue that your own self in times past, being of the age of 14. yeares,* and aboue, did thinke and beleue concerning the sayd sacrament of the aultar in all poyntes, as your sayde parentes: kinsfolke, friendes, acquaintance, godfathers, and godmother did then thinke and beleue them, or no?

Whether doe you thinke, and steadfastly beleue that oure Soueraignes the king, and the Queene of thys Realme of England, and all the Nobilitie, Clergie, and Laitie of this Realm, professing and beleuing the said doctrine and fayth, as other christian Realmes doe, concerning the sayd sacrament of the altar, haue a true christian fayth, and beleue as the Catholicke and true Church of Christ hath alwayes beleued, preached, and taught or no?

Whether do ye thinke and steadfastly beleue that our sauour Christ and his holy spirite hath bene, is,* and shalbe with his Catholicke church, euen to the worldes end, gouerning and ruling the same in all thinges, especially in the necessary poyntes of Christian Religion, not suffering the same to erre or to be deceiued therein?

Whether it is true that you, being suspected, or infamed to be culpable,* and faultie in speaking agaynst the sacrament of the Aultare, and agaynst the very true presence of Christes naturall body, and the substaunce thereof in y^e sayd sacrament, and thereupon called before mee vppon complaynt made to me agaynst you, haue not bene a good space in my house, hauing freely meate and drinke, and also diuers times instructed and informed,* as well by one being our Ordinary, as also by my chaplaines and dyuers other learned men, some wherof were bishops, some Deanes, and some Archdeacons, and euery one of them learned in diuinitie, and minding well vnto you, and desiring the safegard of your soule, and that you should folow and beleue the doctrine of the Catholicke church as afore, concerning the sayd sacrament of the aultar, and whether you did not at al times since your sayd comming to me, vtterly refuse to follow and beleue the sayd doctrine, concerning the sayd sacrament?

Whether can you nowe finde in your hart and conscience to conforme your selfe in all poyntes to the said fayth and catholicke church concerning the sayde Sacrament of the aaltar, faythfully, truely, and playnely, without anye dissimulation, beleeuing therein as our sayd soueraignes, with the Nobilitie, Clergie, and Laytie, of this Realme, and other Christian realmes: and other persons aforesaid, and also the sayd Catholicke Church haue, and do beleue in that behalfe?

In case you so cānot, what ground haue you to mayntaine your opinion, and who is of the same opinion wyth you, and what conference haue you had therein with any, what comfort and what reliefe haue you had therein by any of them, and what are their names and surnames, and their dwelling place?

Their aunsweres to these articles were not much discrepant from Tomkins, and other like Martirs aboue mentioned, as here followeth to be seene.

¶The aunswere of Steuen Knight, and William Pigot, to the aforesayd Articles.

TO the first article, they beleue that the contentes of this article, is not agreable to scripture.*

To the second, they answere and beleue, that their parentes and other expressed in the sayd article, so beleuyng, as is contayned in the same, were deceiued.

To the thyrd, they aunswere, that they so beleued: but they were deceiued therein, as they now beleue.

Page 1543To the fourth, they say, that they haue heretofore beleued as is conteined in the said article, but now they do not so beleue.

To the fift, they say, that if they so beleue, they are deceiued.

To the sixt, they beleue the same to be true.

To the seuenth, they answere and beleue the contents of the same to be true.

To the eight, they aunswere, that they can no whyt confourme themselues to the fayth and doctrine contayned and specified in this article, vntill it be proued by Scripture.

To the ninth, they say, that they haue no grounde to mainteine their sayd opinions, but y^e truth, which (as they say) hath bene perswaded by learned men, as D. Taylour of Hadley, and such other.

These aunsweres being made and exhibited, they were commaunded to appeare agayne the next daye, at eight of the clocke in the morning, and in the meane while to bethinke themselues what they would do.

An other appearaunce of the sayd prisoners before Boner.

*The next daye in the morning, being the 9. daye of February, before their open appearaunce, the Bishop sent for William Pigot, and Stephen Knight, into his great chamber in his Pallace, where he perswaded with them to recant: and deny their former profession.

Who answered, that they were not perswaded in their consciences to returne and abiure theyr opinions, whereunto they had subscribed. Within a while after, they were all three) with Thomas Tomkins, and William Hunter afore named) brought openly into the Consistorye, the ix. day of February aforesayd, and there had the same articles propounded vnto them, which were before propounded vnto the foresayde Thomas Tomkins (as appeareth in the discourse of his historye) and therto also subscribed these wordes: I do so beleue.

*The Bishop also vsed certayne talke vnto Iohn Laurence onely. Whereunto he aunswered in this manner: That hee was a Priest, and was consecrated and made a Priest about eightene yeares past, and that he was sometime a Blacke Fryer professed: that also hee was assured vnto a mayd, whome he intended to haue maryed.

And being agayne demaunded his opinion vppon the Sacrament, he said, that it was a remembraunce of Chrystes body, and that many haue bene deceiued in the beleeuing the true body of Christ to be in the Sacrament of the Aultar, and that all such as doe not beleue as he doth, doe erre. After this talke and other fayre wordes and threatninges, they were all of thē commaunded to appeare again at after noone.

The third and last appearaunce.

AT the which houre they came thyther agayne, & there <◇> the accustomed manner,* were exhorted to recant and reuoke their doctrine, and receiue the fayth. To the whiche they constantly aunswered, they woulde not, but would sticke to that fayth that they had declared and subscribed vnto, for that they did beleue y^t it was no errour whiche they beleued: but that the contrary therof was very heresy.

When the Bishop sawe that neither his fayre flatteringes,* nor yet his cruell threatnings would preuayle, he gaue them seuerally their iudgementes. And because Ioh. Laurence had bene one of theyr annoynted priestes, hee was by the bishop there (according to their order) solemnly disgraded, the maner whereof you may see in the history of Maister Hooper afore passed, pag. 1435.

Their sentence of condemnation, & this degradation once ended, they were committed vnto the custodie of the Sheriffes of London, who sent thē vnto Newgate, where they remayned with ioy together, vntill they were caryed downe into Essex, and there the 28. daye of March, the sayd William Pigot was burned at Brayntree: and Stephen Knight at Mauldon, who at the stake kneeling vpon the ground, sayd this prayer which here followeth.

The Prayer that Stephen Knight sayd at hys death vpon his knees, being at the stake, at Mauldon.

O Lord Iesu Christe, for whose loue I leaue willingly this life, and desire rather the bitter death of his Crosse with the losse of all earthly thinges,* then to abide the blasphemye of thy moste holy name, or to obey men in breaking thy holye Commaundement: thou seest O Lorde, that where I might liue in worldlye wealth to worship a false God, and honour thine enemy, I chose rather the torment of the body, and the losse of this my lyfe, and haue counted all thinges but vile, duste, and dounge, that I might winne thee: whiche death is dearer vnto me, then thousandes of gold and siluer. Such loue, O Lord, hast thou layd vp in my breast, that I hunger for thee,* as the Deere that is wounded desireth the soyle. Send thy holy comforter O Lord, to ayd, comfort, and strengthen this weake peece of earth, whiche is emptye of all strength of it selfe: Thou remembrest O Lorde, that I am but dust, and able to do nothing that is good. Therefore, O Lord, as of thine accustomed goodnes and loue, thou hast bidden mee to this banket, and accompted mee worthy to drinke of thyne owne cup amongst thine elect: euen so geue me strength O Lord against this thine element: which as to my sight is most irkesome and terrible: so to my minde it may at thy commaundement (as on obedient seruaunt) be sweete and pleasaunt, that through the strength of thy holy spirite, I may passe through the rage of thys fire into thy bosome, according to thy promise: and for thys mortall, receiue an immortal, and for this corruptible, put on incorruption: Accept this burnt sacrifice and offeryng, O Lorde, not for the sacrifice, but for thy deare sonnes sake, my sauour, for whose testimonye I offer this free will offering with all my hart,* and with all my soule. O heauenly father forgeue me my sinnes, as I forgeue all the worlde. O sweete sonne of God my Sauoure, spread thy winges ouer me. O blessed and holy Ghost, through whose mercifull inspiration I am come hither, conduct mee into euerlasting life. Lorde into thy handes I commend my spirite. Amen.

The death and martyrdome of Iohn Laurence Priest.

THE next day being the 29. day of this moneth, the sayd Iohn Laurence was brought to Colchester,* and there being not able to go, (for that as wel his legges were sore worne with heauie irons in the prison, as also hys bodye weakened with euill keeping) was borne to the fire in a chayre, and so sitting, was in hys constant faith consumed with fire.

The cruell burning of Iohn Laurence Martir.

At the burning of this Laurence, hee sitting in the fire the young children came about the fire, and cryed,* (as wel as young children could speake) saying: Lorde strengthen thy seruaunt, and keepe thy promise, Lord strengthen thy seruaunt, and keepe thy promise:: which thing, as it is rare so it is no small manifestation of the glory of God, whiche wrought thys in the harts of these little ones: nor yet a litle commendation to their parentes, whiche from theyr youth brought them vp in the knowledge of God and his trueth.

The history of Doctor Robert Farrar, Bishop of S. Dauids in Wales, who most constantly gaue his life for the testimonye of the truth. March. 30. an. 1555.

THE next day after, whiche was the xxx. day of the sayde moneth of march,* followed the worthy & constāt martirdome of the bishop of S. Dauids in Wales, called Robert Farrar, who was the next bishop in this Catalogue of Christian Martirs, that suffered after mayster Hooper. This foresayd Farrar, by the fauour and good will of the Lord protectour, was first called and promoted to that dignitie. This man I may well call twise a martyr, not onely for the cruell death of the fire, which he suffered most constantly in the dayes of Queene Mary, vnto the shedding of his bloud:* but also for diuers other iniuries & molestations in king Edwardes time, which he no lesse firmly, then vnworthily sustained at the hands of his enemies after the fall of the Duke of Somerset. Of these his vexatiōs and troubles, with the wrangling articles and informations layd against him, to the number of fifty and sixe, & of the malice conceiued agaynst him by certayn couetous Canons of the Church of Carmarthen, & what were the proceedinges of both partes, as well of the innocent, as of the crafty aduersaries, & what were their names in theyr articles agaynst him, in order here followeth.

The principall articles agaynst Bishop Farrar.

GEorge Constantine, Dauid Walter his seruant, Thomas [1] Young chanter of the Cathedrall Church, who was afterward Archbishop of Yorke, Rowland Merick, doct. of law, who was afterward Bish. of Bangor, Thomas Lee, and Hugh Rawlins. &c.

THrough the procurement and instance of these his aduersaries, ioyning and confederating together, one Hugh Rawlins priest, and Thomas Lee brother in lawe to the sayd George Constantine, did exhibite to the kinges most honourable counsell certaine articles and informations, conceiued and deuised by the persons before named, to the intent to blemish the bishops credit, and vtterly (as they thought and made their boast) to pull him from hys bishopricke, and to bring him in a premunire. The cōpye of whiche articles, we thought here good to expresse, and so after them to set his answeres to the same.

Articles and informations to the kings honorable counsell, put vp and exhibited by Hugh Raulins, and Tho. Lee, agaynst the blessed man of God, Mayster Farrar, byshop of saint Dauids.

¶ Abuse of the authoritie to him committed.

IN primis when the sayde bishop first came to his dyocesse, [2] he appoynted his chauncellour by his letters of commission, omitting the kings maiesties stile and authoritie, and grounded his sayd commission vpon forrein vsurped lawes and authoritie: by force of whiche authoritie his sayd Chauncellour did visite certayne deanryes of hys sayd diocesse, and monished the Chauntor and chaptre of the cathedrall Church of S. Dauids aforesayd, agaynst a certaine day and place, for like intent and purpose, contrary to the kinges highnes lawes and statutes, and in derogation of his highnes supremacy.

Item, that the sayde Chauntour and chaptre, perceyuing the faultes of the sayd commission, tooke the same frō the Registre into their custodie, refusing to appeare by vertue thereof, and by secrete and charitable wayes and meanes did admonishe the sayde Byshop of the vnlawfulnesse and faultes of the sayde commission and of the daunger that he had incurred for graunting and executyng the same: opening also vnto hym the effecte of the statute made in the xxviii. yeare of oure late Soueraigne Lorde Henry the eight: Whiche monitions notwithstanding, the sayd Bishop neglecting the same, and continuing in hys malicious doyng or inexcusable ignoraunce, about the xx. daye of Auguste in the fourthe yeare of the reigne of our Soueraigne Lorde that nowe is dyd conferre vnto one Iohn Euans the Uicarage of Pembrin, instituting him by authoritie of the old forreigne vsurped lawe, making no mention of the kinges highnes authoritie, in contempt and derogation of the same.

Item, wheras the Chauncellour and Uicar generall [3] to the sayde Byshop, did vppon a lawfull title, and by the kinges highnes supreme authoritie admit and institute one Iohn Gough into the rectory of Haskard with thappurtenaunces, and gaue out in y^e kings name vnder his highnes seale ecclesiasticall appoynted for that office with the (teste) of the said bishop and subscription of the said chauncellour, a mādate to inducte accordingly: by vertue wherof the said Iohn Gough was inducted by the official there into reall possession of the same rectory, with the rightes and appurtenaunces to the same belonging: whereupon the register of the sayd dioces, at the request of the foresayd chauncellour did signifie the premisses, with all the circumstances, before diuers persons to the forenamed Byshop, Who notwithstanding, did institute and cause to be inducted one Harry Goddart vnto the same personage. making no mention of the kinges maiesties authority nor supremacie: in contempt and derogation of the same hys highnes crowne and dignitie, and in extolling the forreine vsurped aucthoritye, contrary to the fourme of the statute &c.

Item, the sayde Bishop immediately after the vnlawfull institution and induction of Goddart aforesayde, [4] molested the sayd I. Gough lawfully instituted inducted as before, citing him frō place to place, obiecting no matter vnto him of long season, till at the length hee articulated. Emong which Articles was contayned. Item Interrogatur quo titulo tenet rectoriam de Haskard. So taking vppon him the cognition of the title of the hole fruites and patronage, in contempte of the kinges highnesse regall crowne and dignitie, and in derogation of the lawes and statutes of this Realme.

Item, hee hath commonly made his collations, and institutions, as hee did his first commission in hys owne [5] name and authoritie, without expressing the kinges supremacie.

Item, hee hath made vnder his seale one collation, two institutions, and three mandates, inducte in one [6] vocation of one benefice, to three seuerall persons, wythout order of law, or reuocation of anye of them, geuing to euery one like authoritye, title and right. Whereby, except good foresight aswell of Iustices of the peace, as of the frendes had not bene, there had ensued much inconuenience amonges the partakers of the intituled incumbentes in that behalfe.

Item, the sayde Bishop decreeing Caueates to be made in benefices, thereby knowing the titles litigious, [7] instituted, and causeth to be inducted without tryall of anye title or due order of lawe.

Item, hee directeth hys mandates of induction vnto priuate men, and not to Tharchdeacons nor theyr Officialles: [8] contrary to the lawe and custome vsed in that behalfe. Notwithstanding he hath bene counsayled to the contrary, of men that be learned.

Item, hauing no maner of knowledge nor practise in the lawe, he sitteth euery day, in haruest and other times, [9] vpon causes without assistaunce of learned in the law, hauing with him onely an vnlearned boy, which is no Notary, to his scribe, neither obseruing the law, nor yet reasonable order. And therefore doth no good, but tryfeleth the time, as may appeare by his actes, if he haue them to be shewed.

Item, hee and his officers, by his knowledge, vseth to dispense with mariages, to be solemnized without banes, [10] contrarye to the lawes and ordinaunces in that behalfe.

Item, where as one Thomas Pricharde a Chapleine of his, solempnized matrimony in a priuate house wythout [11] banes, & that betwixt a priest, and a sister of hers, that was appointed to be maryed with the said priest that day: hee also being a parson, and leauing his cure vnserued that day being sondaye: notwithstanding, that one of the kinges counsell in the marches of Wales: enformed the sayd bishop of the same misdemeanours, requiring due reformation therof, he hath done nothing therein, but put the same Chapleine in office, and made him his Commissary generall since that tyme, bearyng a speciall fauour to the rest of the offendours.

Item, whereas one Meredith ap Thomas, his housholde seruaunt, was accused of one Sage Hugh, for to [12] haue bene father of her chylde, the sayde Byshop wythout purgation of his seruaunt, caused hym to sue the parentes of the sayde Sage of infamie, first in hys principall consistory, and from thence before a commissary of hys, being his housholde Chaplaine, and at the last tooke the matter before hymselfe, so rayling agaynst all his officers, because they proceeded not after hys parciall affection, and agaynst the lawe, that honest men of Carmarththē, where Page 1545 he then satte vppon the cause, iudged him to be, or at the least to haue bene distracte of his witte: and by his partial handling, the cause remayneth vnfinished, and the childe without father.

Item, wheras one Ienkin Ph. accused William Chābers [13] a seruaunt of the Bishoppes, that founde this William in adulterouse maner with his wife, by reason wherof the Byshop expelled the wife out of his house, and the said infamie not purged, the parties haue bene both agayn in the Bishops house, and seruice, since that time, to the euill example of other.

Item, by his vnlawfull sequestration of the frutes of [14] the benefices of Langattocke, and Lamychangell, by the vndiscreete handling of the same, there were raysed the number of foure hundred people or more, which bickered sondry times together, to the great daunger of thinhabitauntes thereabout, had it not bene pacified by the discreete meanes of syr Roger Vaughan Knight.

Item, by his like vnlawfull collation of the Prebend [15] of Lambister, to one Stephen Grene a Chaplayne of his by couenaunt and promise to mayntayne the sute, by whose crafty and vndiscreete handling of the same, there was raysed in the countie of Radner the 19. day of August last yast, about three or foure hundreth men to like daunger, but that the matter was stayed by Iohn Bradshaw, Rice ap Glin, and Stephen ap Rice, Iustices of the same countie. Who with great daunger to them selues and theirs, pacified the matter, committing an hundred of the offendours to warde.

Item, such as he oweth displeasure vnto, he citeth from [16] place to place, and daye to daye, onely for their vexation, laying no matter agaynst them: and being diuers tymes required the copie of his proceedinges agaynst them, to thintent they might aunswere accordingly, and be at their lawfull defence: he denyeth to all such persons, the copies of his proceedinges.

Item, he and his officers winke at the manifest and open [17] crimes of his fautours and adherentes, to the euil example of the whole Dioces, and abuseth the censures of excommunication and suspension, making it an instrument of reuenging agaynst such, as they do not fauour.

Item, hauing receiued payment of the kinges maiesties [18] subsidie, due in October, the fourth yeare of his graces reigne, of the foresayde Chaunter of the Cathedrall Church of Saint Davids, and Rowland Meyrike, two of the Residentaries there, before Christmas last, he vniustly of a prepensed minde and purpose, afterward certified them for recusantes, to their vndoing, if they had not bene admonished of his cruell purpose, and prouided lawfull defence for the same.

Item, the sayd Bishop celebrating matrimony in his owne person, dispensed contrarye to the booke of ordynaunce, [19] with the parties maryed, for not receauing the holy communion: the parties both bring young, and lusty persones, hauing no reasonable cause wherefore they should abstayne. At whiche celebration, the Byshoppe communicated not himselfe. And further, the communion was celebrated by a Chapleyne of hys, with superstitious blowynges, kneelynges, and knockinges, both of the Chaplayne that ministred, & of all the company, onely one other Priest communicating for the maner.

Mayntenaunce of superstition contrary to the kinges ordinaunce and Iniunctions.

Item, where the Officiall of Tharchedeacon of Carmarthen, [20] in his visitation within Carmarthen, founde contrary vnto the sayde ordinaunce, an Aultar set vppe in the bodye of the Church, for celebration of the communion, and caused the sayd Aultar to be taken away, and a table to be set in the middle of the Church: the Byshop after the same, commaunded the Uicar of Carmarthen, to set the table without the chauncell agayne for the ministration of the communion.

Item, he being often in Carmarthen, and other places [21] in the chauncell at y^e time of holy communion, not onely caryed there hym selfe, neyther cōmunicating nor ministring bareheaded and vncoyffid, reuerently kneelyng, but also permitteth the people there to continue the chauncell and quire full, kneeling and knockyng their breastes. Whiche manner is yet vsed in all the dyocesse without any reformation or gaynesay of hym or any of his officers.

Item, whereas superstitious praying vppon beades [22] is not onely vngodly, but reprooued in the Kynges Maiesties iniunctions: the sayde Byshoppe meeting many with beades in their handes, neuer rebuked anye of them.

Item, the sayde Byshoppe beyng in the Pulpyt, and seeyng corses there within the Church, wyth a [23] great number of lightes vppon them, neuer spake against any of them.

Item, where as thordinaunce will, that no children be baptised but vppon the Sondaye, or holy day (onely [24] cause of necessitie excepted) he hauyng two children himselfe borne wythout daunger, caused one of them to be baptised vppon the worke day. And by hys example, wythout anye contradiction or motion of reformation, it is vsed as it hath bene accustomed, in all the dyocesse commonly, contrary vnto the booke of ordinaunce in that behalfe.

¶ Couetousnes.

Item, from his first comming into the dyocesse, hee hath hadde and yet hathe hys onelye studye, laboure, [25] and practise, to suruey landes, and to looke for mines &c. neglecting his owne bounden duety to applye his booke and preaching.

Item, he keepeth no maner hospitalitie, but hath hys seruaunts table in one parlour with him, least any stranger [26] shoulde approche, hys seruauntes being at theyr meate.

Item, he is commonly talking, not of any godlynes but of worldlye matters, as baking brewing, enclosing, [27] plowing, mining of milstones, discharging of tenaunts, and suche like, not onely at his table, but also most commonly at other places.

Item, he hath warned diuers tenauntes out of theyr landes, whiche they and theyr elders haue enioyed for [28] their rentes, these hundred yeares, and more: and occupied with tillage, whiche he sayth he will enclose, and beyng sued to, of poore men, because of quietnes, he answered: the crowes shall eate the corne, rather then ye shal haue any profite thereof.

Item, when the Uicars Chorall of S. Dauids for reliefe of their hospitalitie, had an lland of hys, called the bishops [29] Isle, for xl. s. rent: he hath set it to a chapleyn of his for v.li. by yeare. And wher at the sute of the sayd Uicars, it was graunted by the bishop in the whole chapiter, that the Uicares should haue it for yeares at xl. s. rent, and pay xx.li. entrie: he now couetously and agaynst his promyse openly made, denyeth the same, except the Uicars would geue l.li.

Item, he caused the Curate of S. Dauids, to warne their tenauntes out of theyr sayde landes in the pulpit, to [30] the great offence of the people, which were wont to haue Gods word preached there: and so they sayd to the Curate at that tyme.

Item, to the plowing of a pasture not aboue x. dayes worke, in Lent. An. 1549. he had 32. ploughes in one day, [31] and those ploughes the priest bad in the Church, contrary to the statute of Gomortha in that behalfe prouided, and to the euill example of gentlemen in that country.

Item, where the kinges maiesties of godly remembraunce, [32] Henry theight, appointed at Brekenock a scholemaister, vssher, Reader of diuinitie, a Minister, & certain scholers, and for the mayntenaunce thereof, appoynted lx. and xij.li. of the pensions and reuenues of Brekenocke: the Bishop finding it so furnished, hath neither Reader nor Minister there, couetously conuerting their stipends to his owne vse.

Item, the Bish. was twise in one day presented in the great court holden in the towne of Carmarthen, for enclosing [33] and couetous encroching of the kinges hye way.

Item, he couetously occupyeth purchasing of landes, bying of cattell, marchaundise, and other thinges beyng [34] indetted a notable summe to the kinges Maiestie, as may by his accomptes in the courte of tenthes, and first frutes appeare.

Item, wheras one Lewis Iohn Thomas boole, putting from hym hys lawfull wedded wife, vppon Christmas [35] euen last past, without banes had mariage solemnizate with a concubine of hys in a Churche within 3. myles of the Byshoppes abode at that time: The Bishop since knowing the premisses hath not onely of a couetous mind entred familiaritye with the sayde Lewis, and bought a peece of land of him, but also euer since hath (for to haue hys landes good chepe) left both the parties and priest vnpunished, vsing hym to familiarly, that whereas a Somner cited the parties to appeare among other criminals for the same facte: the Byshoppe commaunded the sayde Page 1546 Somner to lette hym alone, and so they all remaine vnpunished.

Item, where as the whole Chapter of Saint Davids (as it was thought) was in assured amitie wyth the Byshoppe, they all being his Officers or Chaplaines, he procured them to be unpleaded wyth Wryt of Quo warranto in the kings Bench, keeping the Wryt with hym secretly, at the least three monethes, not deliuering it, but onely tenne dayes before the day of their apparance, the parties beyng seuen dayes iourney distant from London.

Item, he is a wilfull wrong doer, and troubler of men in theyr rightes, entring vppon their lawfull possessions, stirring thereby much contention, and so notably knowen, to the offence of the country.

Wilfull negligence.

Item, whereas the Byshop aforesayde, was appoynted [38] in August. An. 1547. and consecrated in September following, hee neuer came into the Diocesse himselfe, nor sent or appoynted any Officer there before the moneth of April. An. 1548. to the great disorder of the kings Maiesties subiects, lacke of reformation, and ministration of iustice.

[39] Item, during his visitation, the sayde Bishop did not endeuer himselfe to see reformation, but roade surueying of landes, appoynting vaine enclosures, and suche other things. Which are no parte of the office to him committed, nor yet conuenient, namely, at that time.

[40] Item, the visitation finished, he neither appoynted his Officers to examine the cleargie of the places of Scripture to them appoynted to be studied in the same visitation, nor hath hitherto effectually gone about any godly reformation, according to the ordinaunces of this realme.

[41] Item, the Byshoppe since his comming to the diocesse, neuer ministred the Communion, sauing onely at two times, that he ordred certaine Deacons: but in euery thing (but that he other whiles preacheth excepted) ordreth himselfe like no minister, nor man of his vocation.

[42] Item, he hath so alienated himselfe from studie, that he preacheth vndiscretely, discrediting the office, not only vntruly reporting the Scriptures, but also preaching the ten commaundements in one place in declaration of the eight of them, for lacke of stuffe, the pithe of his matter, was matrimonie of priestes.

[43] Item, the thirteene day of September last, he ordained certaine Deacons, and making hys exhortation, he taught that a man was not bounden to forgeue, but hym that asketh forgeuenesse, and being admonished frendly by a letter to better declare the same, because that diuers were offended wyth that doctrine: hee hath hetherto deferred so to doe, to the maintenaunce of malitious hearts in these parties.

[44] Item, since the first day of August. Anno 1549. vnto the feast of Candlemasse last, he hath preached but two or three Sermons, of which one was preached at Aberguilly vpon S. Stephens day last, to a great audience that vnderstode no English, being but a mile from Carmarthen, an English towne, and the chiefe of his Diocesse.

[45] Item, since his ordinary visitation, which was finished in Iulie. An. 1548. hee hath neither preached nor caused to be preached in the townes of Tinby, Pembroke, nor Hanerforde being English townes, nor muche distante from the place of his most continuaunce.

[46] Item, the Churches appropriate to the Bishop haue no Paraphrases in English, and fewe of them Bibles.

[47] Item, the Churches of the diocesse for the moste parte, and the cleargie almost euery one lacke Paraphrases, notwithstanding there hath bene these two yeares, and yet be a great number of them to be solde in the Diocesse.

Follie.

Item, to declare his follie in riding, he vseth bridle wyth [48] white studs & snaffle, white Scottish stirrups, white spurres, a Scottish padde wyth a little staffe of three quarters long, which he hath not only vsed superstitiously these foure or fiue yeares in communication, oftentimes boasting what Countreys hee hath compassed and measured wyth the same staffe.

[49] Item, he hath made a vowe, that hee will neuer weare a cappe: for hee sayeth, it is comely wearing of a hatte, and so commeth in his long gowne and hat, bothe into the Cathedrall church, and to the best Towne of his diocesse, sitting in that sorte in the kings greate Sessions, and in hys consistorie, making himselfe a mocke to the people.

[50] Item, he sayde that he would go to the Parliament on foote. And to his frendes that dissuaded him, alleaging that it is not meete for a man in his place: he answered, I care not for that, it is no sinne.

Item, hauing a sonne, hee went before the midwife to [51] the Church, presenting the childe to the Priest, and geuyng hys name Samuel, wyth a solemne interpretation of the name, appoynting also two Godfathers and two Godmothers, contrary to the ordinaunce, making hys sonne a monster, and hymselfe a laughing stocke throughout al the country.

Item, he daily vseth whisteling of hys childe, and sayththat hee vnderstoode his whistle, when hee was but three dayes olde. And being aduertised of hys frendes, that men laughed at his follie:

he answered: they whistle their horses and dogges, and I am contented, they myghte also be contented that I whistle my childe, and so whistle hym daily, all frendly admonition neglected.

Item, in hys Ordinarie visitation among other hys [53] surueys, hee surueyed Milforde hauen, where hee espyed a Seale fish tombling. And he crept down to the water side, and continued there, whistling by the space of an houre, perswading the companie that laughed fast at him, that by his whistling he made the fish to tarie there.

Item, speaking of scarcitie of herrings, hee layeth the [54] fault to the couetousnesse of fishers, who in time of plentie, tooke so many, that they destroyed the breeders.

Item, speaking of the alteration of the coyn, he wished [55] that what metall so euer it were of, the penie shoulde be in weight worthe a penie of the same metall.

For a conclusion, the sayde Byshoppe in all his doings [56] since he came to his Diocesse, hath behaued hymselfe moste vnmeete for a man of hys vocation, being for a minister of Iustice, an abuser of the authoritie to him committed, for a teacher of the truthe, and reformer of superstition, a maintainer of superstition wythoute any doctrine of reformation, for a liberal, and hospital, an vnsatiable couetous man: for a diligent ouerseer, wilfull and negligent: for an example of godly wisdom, geuen wholly to follie: for a mercifull, a cruell reuenger. And further, for a peace maker, a sower of discorde. And so in all his behauour a discreditor and slaunderer of hys vocation, and a deceiuer of all men▪ that had hope that he should do any reformatiō. For he yet hath neither brought into his diocesse, nor hath belonging vnto hym any learned preacher. But such lerned preachers as he founde in the diocesse at his entrie, hee so vexeth and disquieteth, that they cannot attende to applye theyr preaching, for the defence of their liuings, againste hys quarellous inuentions and vniust certificates.

After these wrangling Articles and informations were geuen vppe, then was the Byshop called for to aunswere,* the hearing whereof was committed vnto D. Wotton, and Sir Iohn Mason knight, who likewise receiued the Byshops aunswares to the foresayde articles, the copie and effect of which aunswares hereafter followe.

The answere of Robert, Bishop of S. Dauids, to the Articles ministred vnto hym.

TO the first Article he sayeth, that after lawful monition in the kings Maiesties name & autoritie, from the sayd B. (being then at London) geuen to the Chanter & chapter of S. Dauids, for visitation at a certaine daye there to be entred: the sayd Byshop himselfe, for such purpose comming into the Diocesse, knowing also that the Chaunter, and one of the Canons of that Church, & late before commissaries in that Diocesse, had not onely by their owne euill example and winking at the faultes of other, or neglecting to correct the same, left there among priestes and others, much detestable whoredome: but hadde also spoyled the Cathedrall church of Crosses, Chalices and Censers, wyth other plate, iewels, and ornaments of the Church to the value of 5. C. markes or more, for their owne priuate lucre, (the Church remaining euen yet very vile & in great decay:) and hadde also made further vnder theyr Chapter seale many blankes to the number of twelue or moe, Sede vacante, wythout the kings licence or knowledge: Therefore he brought wyth him one Edmunde Farlee, Bachelor of lawe, by D. Tong and D. Neuinson, to hym commended as a man sufficient in faithfull truthe, and learning, to be hys Chauncellour. To whome hee graunted and Sealed a Commission for that purpose, geuing credite to hym in hys facultie, concerning the draught and fourme therof. But the kinges Maiesties stile of Supremacie was •ullye sette foorth in the same commission. Whether there were anye defaulte of formall woordes in setting foorth of the kings authoritie therein, hee is not certaine. For hee committed the doing thereof to hys Chauncelloure, who was commended to hym for a learned manne. And the Byshop Page 1547 sayeth, that he did neuer grounde the Commission vppon any forraine vsurped lawes or authoritie. Neither did hys sayde Chauncellour by force of suche authoritie, visite anye Deanrie of the sayde Diocesse, nor gaue anye monition to the Chauntour and Chapter there, by force of that Commission, for any like intent or purpose, but onely offered in y^e kings Maiesties name, and authoritie (to the said Bysh. committed) for to enter visitation of the Chaunter and Chapter of the Cathedrall Church, at an other daye to be executed by the Byshoppe himselfe, for reformation of the Chapter Church, and Ministers there, accordinge to the kings gracious ordinaunces and Iniunctions in that behalfe. But the aforesayd Chanter and Canon of the church, before the sight of any Commission, stubbornely answered the sayde Chauncellour, that they woulde not receyue him, nor any other to visit them, except he were one of their Chapter. And further desiring to see his Commission, de••uered the same into their handes, and would not deliuer it him again. And so it may appeare that he did nothing by force of that Commission.

To the seconde Article hee sayeth, that they opened not [2] vnto hym the danger of any statute to hys knowledge and remembraunce. Neuerthelesse, hee not knowing anye defaulte in the sayde Commission, and certainly minedynge wyth all diligence the faithfull execution of hys Office of preaching, and visitinge the whole Diocesse in hys owne persone, by the kings Maiesties authoritie, for the conseruation of Gods peace, and the kings, in that daungerous time of rebellion, then beginning to arise in other places, did neglect and lay apart the stubborne behaiour and vngodly doings of the sayde Chaunter and Canon, and agreed wyth them, omitting all contemptes and reproches towards him and his sayde Chauncellor, and all manner of contention by them done, fearing els that through theyr vnquietnesse, some tumult mighte haue risen amonges the people there, and did also make the sayd Chanter his Chācellour, and Canon hys Commissarie, according to theyr ambitious desires, to appease their malice in that daungerous time. And further, he sayeth that he made a Collation to syr Ioh. Euans of the Uicarage of Pembrin, what day or time he remembreth not, not by any olde forraine vsurped authoritie, but by the kinges authoritie onely, making full mention of the kinges stile and authoritie in the same Collation.

To the thirde and fourth hee sayeth, that whereas hee [3. & 4.] hadde graunted to George Constantine the office of a Register, who brought vnto hym a Commission for the Chācellourshippe to be sealed, and deliuered to the foresayde Chaunter of Saint Davids, desiring the sayde Byshoppe to Seale it, hee vtterlye refused so to doe, because the sayde George hadde put therein a clause of admitting Clearkes into benefices: the which authority the said Bishop would not in any wise graunte, reseruing the examination and admission of Clearkes, onely to hymselfe, for the auoiding of wicked briberie and parcialitie. Whereuppon the sayde George and the Chaunter promised the said Byshoppe by their faith and trouthe, afore three or foure honest witnesses, not to execute that clause of Institution into benefices, but onely to those Clearkes whome the Bishop did firste examine and admitte, and send vnto them for to be instituted and inducted, vppon whych promise the Byshop sealed the sayde Commission. And after that time, the parsonage of Haskarde being voyde, and by the reason of laps deuolued to the Byshoppes gifte for that time, hee conferred it to one Sir Henrie Godherd wyth a Collation or Institution by the kings authoritie, not extolling any forreine vsurped authoritie. In the which collation or institution is fully mentioned the renuntiation of the Byshop of Rome, and all forreine powers and authoritie, wyth the full stile of hys Maiesties supremacie. And this collation of the Church of Haskarde he gaue, before he vnderstoode or knewe that hys Chauncellour had geuen oute the lyke, and hee surely thinketh, his Collation was the firste. That notwithstanding the sayde George Constantine, and the sayde Chaunter hauing a vowson determined by reason of laps, admitted and instituted one Iohn Gough, to the sayde personnage of Haskarde by vertue of their expired vowson and sealed hys institution wyth a wronge Seale, because they hadde not the right seale of office to that purpose) contrary to theyr former earnest promesse, and the Bishoppes ryghte, and wythout any manner of warning or foreknowledge thereof to hym geuen, whych thyng by them vntruely done, the sayd George Constantine neuerthelesse came to the Byshoppes house, and there did wryte wyth hys owne hand the letters of Induction for the said Sir Henrye Godherd Prieste, comprising in the same the whole summe of the Institution or Collation, whyche the sayde Byshoppe hadde made, and the same George did seale the sayde letters of induction wyth his owne hande, finiding no maner of fault therein, nor making any worde or mention of hys and the Chauntours former wrong doings, but so departed for that time. And afterward he came againe, and shewed the Byshoppe, what they hadde done before, concerning the Parsonage aforesayde. And further, the sayde Defendant sayeth, that he did not molest the sayd Iohn Gough, but lawfully did call him in the kings Maiesties name, not for any title of Patronage, but to knowe, whether he were Parson of Haskarde, and howe hee was thereto admitted and instituted, and inducted, and by what authoritie he presumed to preach there, wythout the kings Maiesties licence, wyth other like lawfull demaundes, whereunto he sturdely refused to geue answere: and sayeth that the Article contained in hys accusation, sayinge thus. Item interrogetur quo titulo tenet rectoriam de Haskarde, was not ministred vnto the partie in that sorte, so farre as hee knoweth, but in these woordes or lyke. Quomodo intrauit in Rectoriam. &c.

To the fifth he sayth, that all be it George Constantine Register, did wilfully wythdrawe hys bounden seruice, [5] due to the Kings highnesse, and to the sayde defendaunt in the Kings name, refusing to attende either by hymselfe, or hys sufficient Deputie for wryting of Recordes and other Instruments, yet the sayd Defendant made his Collatiōs and Institutions in hys owne name, not by his owne authoritie, nor by any others, saue onely the Kings authoritie, according as hee hath declared in hys aunswere to the first Article, expressing in them the kings supremacie, with the Byshops owne name and seale of office, as hee oughte to doe, according to the prouision of the kinges Statute in suche a case.

To the sixth he sayeth, that the Uicarie of Pembrin being [6] voyde, he as righte patrone thereof to his knowledge, conferred it to Iohn Euans Clarke, wyth letters of institution and induction: and after when the kings presentation came to him for one Daud Ieinkin clarke, he desired fourtene daies respite at that time, either to shew auncient recorde for hys right, and then the matter to stande to the determination of the lawe, or elles if hee shewed not, bothe he and hys clarke, to geue place to the kings Clarke. Whych condition was by Syr Thomas Ioanes Knight, Doctour M. and the sayde Daud Ieinkin receyued, and an Institution, wyth an Induction was made conditionally to be putte into the handes of Sir Thomas Ioanes Knighte, for safe custodie for the kings Clearkes behoofe, after the fourtene dayes to be executed at the hands of the sayde Defendaunt, if he failed to shewe. Wythin whyche time the sayde Defendaunt did shewe an olde auncient recorde, declaring the full righte of Patronage, on the sayde Defendautes behalfe, and so that Institution and Induction was neuer by the sayde Defendaunt putte in execution. Neuerthelesse, the sayde Dauid Ieinkin (contrary to hys promesse and othe, geuing thereuppon his righte hande to the sayde Syr Thomas Ioanes Knight) tooke aduauntage by the sayde wryting, wythout knowledge of the sayde Defendaunt. After whych time the Lord Chauncellour by hys letters wrytten to the sayde Defendaunt, aduertised hym, to admitte one Iohn Appowell clearke, presented by vertue of a vowson which the L. Chancellor iudged to be good, and so to be admitted, notwythstanding his former presentation, whereby he would not abarre the other mannes right. And so thys Defendaunt made one Collation, two Institutions and three Mandates, doying no wrong thereby to hys knowledge. And further he sayeth, that there was no businesse nor vnquietnesse aboute the possession of the sayde Uicarage, but this Defendaunt geuing place, was content to loose hys right for that time.

To the seuenth he sayth, that as he nowe remembreth, [7] hee neuer decreed anye Caueates to be made in benefices, neither did institute nor cause to be inducted, any into benefices, being knowne to hym litigious. [8]

To the eight he sayeth, that because the Archdeacons be absent from theyr Offices, and haue not had faithfull diligent Officials, he hathe directed his Mandates to them or their Officials, or to other lawfull persons in that behalfe, so farre as he knoweth. [9. & 10.]

To the ninthe and tenthe Articles, he denieth as verye vntrue. [11]

To the xi. he sayth, that whereas Syr Thomas Ioans Knyghte aduertised hym, that Thomas Pricharde had celebrated Matrimonie in a priuate house, betwixte a certaine Priest, and a woman whose sister hadde refused the same, the sayde Pricharde leauing his owne cure vnserued on that Sunday, this defendant did put the same Thomas Prychard to penance for so doing, marying them without Page 1548 banes. And wheras he made the said Thomas Aprichard, who is a Bachelor of law, his Commissary: it was for the respect of learning in the law, thereby faythfully to execute his office according to Iustice. And the sayde Defendaunt dyd neuer fauour nor beare with any man wittinglye in his wrong doinges. He confesseth that the Matrimonye was solemnized in a priuate church, and that the cure was that day vnserued.

[12] To the 12. he sayth, that it is slaunderous and vtterlye vntrue. And that one syr Iohn Hughs Priest, made Sage Hughs (daughter to his Steppemother) an harlot at 11. yeares of age, and after maryed openly to an other man, being Minister thereof himselfe. After whiche doying, he tooke her away from her Husband agayne, and kept her, alledging a former contract. And when the sayde Iohn Hughs was lawfully conuicted before the sayde Byshop, in open Court at Carmarthen of that his abhominable adultery, clayming the kinges pardon thereof, yet the sayde Sage confessed, that he had to do with her the night before that day of appearaunce. Whiche latter crime he denyed. Neuerthelesse, she proued with childe, affirming both before the byrth and after, the childe to be his, the Midwife and other being witnesses thereof. Yet notwithstandinge George Constantine as a wicked Bolsterer of the sayde Priest in hys naughtye doinges, with the helpe of the aforesayd Chaunter, fyrst vttered that Meredith Thomas was Father of the sayd childe, which matter was ordered in the Ecclesiasticall Court, according to Iustice without any parcial affection of the sayd Bishop, or of any other to his knowledge.

[13] To the 13. hee sayth, it is vtterly false so farre as he knoweth.

[14] To the 14. he sayth, that by lawfull sequestration in the Kinges Maiesties name, he committed the custody of the fruites of Langatnok, and Lanuihangell to two houost men, for the behoufe of the Kynges first fruites and tenthes, and of the next incumbent, and further he did not meddle nor minister any cause of vnquietnesse in that behalfe.

To the 15. he sayth, that he made a collation, lawfull [15] as he supposeth, of the prebend of Lanbister, to Stephen Greene his Chapleine without any couenaunt or colour, and further he did not meddle in that behalfe.

[17] To the 17. he sayth, it is all vntrue for his owne part, & for his officers, as farre as he knoweth.

[18] To the 18. he sayth, it is vntrue as farre as he knoweth, and that he did certify the recusants iustly, as he thinketh, because they refused wilfully to paye the Kynges whole Subsidye, of theyr whole diuidenesse, as it standeth in the Kinges booke, perteyning to the Canons resident.

[19] To the 19. he sayth, that after trauayle of fourtene Miles, beyng not able fastyng to Celebrate Communion, in a Chappell within the house of Syr Thomas Ioanes Knyght, one of the Kinges Maiesties honourable Counsayle of the Marches of Wales: this Defendaunte celebrated Matrimony without the receyuing the Communion for the causes abouesayd, betwixt Mayster Griffith Ryce, and the Daughter of the sayde Syr Thomas Ioanes, accordyng to the kinges ordinaunces. And Thomas Upricharde Prieste administred the holy Communion there, without any superstition, to this defendauntes knowledge, and the maryed persons not disposed to receiue the holy Communion, he coule not compell them agaynst theyr consciences, and sayeth that hee didde not dispense with them as it is contayned in the article.

¶To the slaunderous and vntrue title of mayntenance of superstition. &c. he sayeth, that he did not maynteyne any superstition, contrary to the kinges ordinaunces and iniunctions, but abhorring in his hart all superstition, hath trauelled and doth trauell to abolish the same by true doctrine and doying, as much as he can, with the kinges peace amongst his people there.

[20] TO the 20. he sayth, that George Constantine in the third yeare of the kinges Maiestyes reigne, not regarding the daungerous time of rebellion in other places, rashly caused to be pulled downe without any authoritey knowne to this defendaunt, the communion altar in Carmarthen Church, by his owne presumptuous mynde appointing the vse thereof in another place of the church, not without grudge of the people. Wherefore the Bishop fearing tumult, cōmaunded the vicar to set vp the communiō table (for the time) nere to the place where it was before.

To the 21. he sayth that he hath bene diuers tymes in [21] the quere of Carmarthen, and hath taried there in the communion time not communicating himselfe, and that in euery Church where he commeth on the holy day to preach, or to pray, he kneeleth in the quere bareheaded, as well at Matines before the Communion, as at Euensong after without any superstition: he thinketh it not necessary for the Communions sake to leaue kneeling to Christ. But he hath diligently taught the people not to kneele nor knocke to the visible shew, or externall shewe of the Sacrament. And the queres of Carmarthen and other places there, are not close at the sides, so that the people may come in and forth at theyr pleasure. Moreouer the Kinges ordinaunces doth not authorise him to rebuke the people for knocking on theyr breasts in token of repentaunce of theyr sinnes nor for kneeling in token of submission to God for mercye in Christ.

To the 22. he sayth, that in time of rebellion in Deuon. [22] and Cornewall, threatening to come into Wales, he teaching the people the true fourme of prayer, accordinge to Gods holy word, and declaring the prayer vpon beades to be vayne and superstitious, yet durste not for feare of tumulte, forceably take from any man his beades without authority. And touching the not reproouing of suche as hee shoulde meete, wearing beades, hee remembreth not that he hath so done, vnlesse it were in the rebellion tyme, at whiche time he durste not rebuke suche Offenders.

To the 23. he sayth, that he beyng in the Pulpitte, hys [23] face towardes the people, did not see the lightes, if anye were set vp about the corpes behinde his backe, till after that he came downe from the Pulpitte. But he with George Constantine and the aforesayde Chauntour, sitting in the Church in Carmarthen, to heare causes, and seeing the Uicare with other Priestes, with song and lights bringyng a corpes vppe to the Church, called forthwyth the Uicare and Priestes, and rebuked them in open court as cormorantes and Rauens flying about the dead carcase for lucre sake.

To the 24. he sayeth, that he caused the one childe beyng [24] borne with great perill of death to the Mother, and it selfe lying for dead a certayne space after, to be christened on the workyng day: the other childe was Christened on the working day, because both Father and Mother, and al other people there, were in perill of death, by reason of the sodayne sweat, which all men feared at that time. And touching the rest of the accusatiō which is, that by that example, it is vsed after the olde accustomed fashion, he knoweth no such thing.

And to the 25. Article he vtterly denyeth.

To the 26. he sayth, that his Hall at Aberguilly being [25] ruinous, he vseth for his Hall a greate Chamber adioyning, [26] for his selfe and his seruantes, and all manner of straungers, and besides twenty persons in house daylye. What other hospitality he keepeth, honest neighbours can testify.

To the 27. he sayth, that his talke is accordyng to his [27] hearers, that is to say reuerently and truly of fayth, loue, and honest lyfe, according to the Scriptures to like Auditours, and to other vnreuerent and rash Turmoylers of Scriptures and holye doctrine he doeth talke of honest worldly thinges with Godly intent: and that he doeth not moste commonlye talke of suche thinges as are expressed in this Article, but when hee hath honest occation so to doe.

The 28. he sayth is vntrue, and that hee hath warned [28] no manne out of theyr landes: but where he is destitute of necessary prouision, and woulde haue part of his owne demayne from certayne free holdes, hauing it onelye from yeare to yeare, of pleasure, hee cannot obteyne it without brawlyng. Wherefore he suffereth them to keepe it euen yet still, agaynst right reason. And touching the rest, that he had rather the Crowes should eat it. &c. he neuer spake any such word.

To the 29. he sayth that whereas hys Predecessour [29] Byshop Barloe did let to farme the Isle of Ramsay, to one William Browne, after whose handes this Defendaunt receiued it into his owne possession, the Uicars of Saynt Dauids being dispossessed of it long before, he letted it ouer to Stephen Greene for 40. shillings the groūd, as it was before, and three poundes more for seales, connies and foules there: & he knoweth of no right y^e Uicars Chorall had therein, who did refuse when this defendant Page 1549 did diligently vpon reasonable conditions offer the same vnto them: and this defendant made no promise vnto thē, as is contened in the Article.

To the 30. he sayth he knoweth not, but that he aduertised [30] his Bayliffe to warne the freeholdes and other hauing his demayne to rent during pleasure, to leaue it at a lawfull day, to this Defendantes necessary vse, and dyd not cause the Curate to do as is contened in the Article to his remembraunce.

To the 31. he sayth, that he knoweth not what y^e priest [31] bad in the Churche, nor howe many plowes there came, vndesired of this Defendaunt. But he knoweth certainly, that he desired no mans labour but for his mony.

To the 32. he sayth, that he knoweth not any such appoyntment [32] of Schooles and reuenewes there but he foūd there (after the departyng of Byshop Barloe) a Schoolemayster, an Ussher being a Priest, and 20. Scholers, which he hath hitherto mayntained better then he founde it, to his knowledge: he did neuer conuert anye pennye therof to his owne vse, albeit he might lawfully haue done the same.

[33] The 33. he sayeth is all vntrue, so farre as hee knoweth.

To the 34. Article he sayth, he neuer purchased more [34] then three percels, whereof one was 2. shillinges 8. pence by yeare, the second, three shillinges foure pence, and the third 26. shillinges 8. pence or there about by yeare: the rest he denyeth.

To the 35. he sayeth, that he neuer bought of Lewes [35] Iohn Thomas his land good cheape, but after forty yeres purchase, not knowing at that time any suche thinge as is contayned in the article, agaynst the sayd Lewes Iohn. Neither badde he the Somner to lette him alone, but as soone as he hearde any thing of it, commaunded the Somner to cyte him, and so he was cyted in this Defendantes house, occasionyng him to breake his bargayne, to the which Lewes this Defendaunt sayde these wordes. If you would geue me your land with an house full of golde, I cannot, nor will not suffer you to keepe a Lemman. Then the sayde Lewes affirming the latter woman to bee his wife, and the firste vnknowne to this Defendaunt, hee caused the sayde Lewes to bee called to the consistorye for tryall, where it hangeth yet: And also by lawfull processe excommunicated the firste Woman, for that shee would not by any meanes appeare in the Court to claime or to confesse marryage with the sayde Lewes and so she standeth this day, at the poynt of significait.

To the 56. he sayth, that whereas the Chauntour and [36] R. M. with other Chanons there, would not obey the Kynges Godlye Iniunctions, concerning the fyndyng a Schoole for poore mennes Chyl dren, a Lectur of Diuinitie, Sermons on the Sondayes, repayring of their Church and Mansion houses, decent order and ministration there, but stubbornely counted themselues (with the Chauntour) to be a bodye politicke, without regarde of the Byshoppe and his lawefull monitions, beyng hymselfe named in theyr Shyre Statutes, Decanus, & quasi Decanus, hauing also theyr Deanes stall in the quere, wyth a Prebende thereunto annexed, and the chiefe place in the Chapter house with a key of theyr Chapter Seale, beyng also by the Kynges Maiestyes Commission appoynted theyr Ordinary: yet woulde they not in anye wise deliuer vnto him a Booke of theyr Statutes, for the better knowledge of his and theyr dueties, nor shewe vnto him their Recordes and Monumentes, for declaration of the kings right and his. For which cause, this Defendaunt by writ of quo warranto, lawefully called them to aunswere, which yet lyeth a sleepe, to the losse of the Kinges Maiestyes right. The time of deliury of the sayd writte, he remembreth not.

The 37. he sayeth is all false, as farre as hee knoweth.

¶To the title of wilfull negligence: he sayeth that hee hath vsed, to his power willing diligence.

[38] TO the 38. he sayth, that he being attendant (according to his bounden duetye) to serue the Kinges highnesse during the time of the parliament, from the first, vnto the last day, and then immediately after repayred into his Dioces, and he might not trust R. M. the Chauntour, and George Constantine to execute faythfully the iurisdiction, because they had before (through theyr slaundrous life and not punishing misdoers) left the country in great enormity of filthy whoredome. And sayth farther, that one cause why he appoynted not an Officer. &c. was for that he lacked his letters of authority of Iurisdiction.

To the 41. he sayth, that how often he did minister the Communion he doth not remember, but in all other thinges so farre as he knoweth, he hath studied to order hymselfe according to his vocation, as farre as he beleueth, hee goeth like a Minister.

To the 42. he sayeth, that hee hath not alienated hymselfe from studye, neyther preached vndiscreetly, nor reported [42] the Scriptures vntuely to his knowledge: (but he hath bene very much hindered both from study & preaching, by the malicious, crafty, and couetous behauiour of the forenamed persons.) And that he did set forth the doctrine of honest maryage, as well of all other menne, as of Priestes, euen as the Scripture then rehearsed did minister occasion.

To the 43. he sayth, that reciting the wordes of Luke, [43] if thy brother haue offended agaynst thee, blame him, and if he repent, forgeue hym, and if he haue offended agaynst thee seuen tymes in one day, and seuen times in the daye be conuerted vnto thee, saying: I am sory, forgeue him: He sayd farther these wordes in effect: it appeareth by this place of scripture, that we are not bound (except he repent) to forgeue him, but we are bound to pray to God to forgeue him, and to geue him grace to repent, that wee may forgeue him.

To the 44. he sayth, that he hath preached right often [44] at Carmarthen, as well as at other places, and hee sayeth that a great number at Aberguilly do vnderstand english very well.

To the 45. he sayth, that after he had preached fyrste at [45] Brecknocke, Carmarthen, Swanzy Laugharne, Tinby, Pembroke, Hereforde, Saynt Davids, Cardigan, with other notable Townes, he hath since that time preached to a greate manye other poore Churches, but not in Tinby nor Pembroke: but for Hereforde he standeth in doubt. And whereas he brought with him at the first, a learned Preacher, of Godly life, the vngodly stubborne behaiour of the persons before named, weryed him away. And wheras he had waged an other learned man, to come into his Dioces to preache, George Constantine by hys discouragement aduertised him from this Defendaunt.

To the 46. he sayth, that in all his Churches appropriated, there is both Bible and Paraphrases so farre as [46] he knoweth: and if the Priestes there woulde not shewe him the lacke thereof, yet should the Officialles declare it vnto him, that it might be amended (by his will) without delay.

To the 47. he sayth, that George Constantine couetously [47] ingrossed into his handes a great number of Paraphrases, & wher as this Defendaunt hath admonished the Clergy to buy, euery one, for his discharge: and if the sayd George being Officiall of two Archdeaconries, and other Officials in theyr Office woulde declare vnto him, what Churches do lack Bibles or Paraphrases, he would cause it to be amended as much as in him lyeth.

¶To the title of Folly, he sayth that his desire is in true simple maner of his wordes, deedes, and other honest behaiour through Gods grace to shew Godly wisdom.

TO the 48. he sayth, that he thinketh no folly in the decent [48] colour or fashion with honest vse of Saddle, Bridle, Stirrops, Staffe, and other like necessary or conuenient things, and sayth that he vseth a Saddle made after the Scottish fashion, with stirrops of iron vnuarnished & like spurs: and blacke bridle without studdes, the bit and snaffle white as other mens be.

To the 49. he sayth, that whē he goeth abroad in winter, [49] he weareth a hat to beare of rayne and snow, & in sommer, to shadow him from the Sunne, without any vowe of superstition or offence of the people.

To the 50. he sayth, that all is one to him, to ride or go, [50] as cause requireth, and whether he sayd as is conteyned in the article or not, he remembreth not. Howbeit he doth vse to go a foote.

To the 51. he sayth, that after lawfull prayer, it pleased [51] God to geue him a sonne begottē and borne in honest mariage: whome he therefore caused to be named Samuell, presenting him to the minister to be receiued into Christes Church as a poore member of Christ: by the holy Sacrament of baptisme was this done openly in the Cathedrall Church, with earnest grauity, and without offending any man: and also 2. wiues being before at variaunce, desired both to be Godmothers, whiche were both receiued to make vnity betweene them, not knowing any lawe to the contrary, nor none offence therby conceiued of the people.

To the 52. he sayth, that he doth vse with grauity, all honest louing enterテインement of his Chylde, to encourage [52] him hereafter, willinglye at hys Fathers mouth, to receiue Page 1549 <1 page duplicate> Page 1550 wholesome doctrine of the true feare & loue of God, and sayeth that he hath whistled to hys Chylde, but sayde not, that the Chylde vnderstoode it, and that he aunswered to one that founde fault with it, as is conteyned in the article.

To the 53. he sayeth, that hee was neuer Surueyor, but went to see Milforde Hauen for honest purpose, and not to suruey it: and for that hee at the sighte of a Seale whistled in his fist, such as meant folly, might turne it to theyr purpose. And it is not true that he stode whistlynge an hower to the Seale, nor that anye faulte was founde with it, nor any such aunswere made by him to his knowledge.

To the 54. he sayth, that if he did say, the destroying of the Frie, letteth plenty of Fish, he thinketh the same not agaynst reason: but he remembreth not to haue sayd, as is conteined in the article.

To the 55. he saith, that he remembreth not that euer he sayd as they alledge.

To the slaunderous, vntrue, and vngodly conclusion, he saith that George Constantine with other his aduersaries before named, and theyr adherents, not regarding the feare of God, and theyr bounden duety, of louing obediēce towards God and the king, and his true Ministers, haue to much slaunderously with false tongues, contumelious wordes, and spitefull deedes, labored by all meanes to discredite and deface the kinges gracious authority, to hym committed. Who euer sithe he came to the Dioces, hath endeouored himselfe to shew his faythfull ministerye, by his true honest doinges, and to vse his authority according to his vocation, to Gods glory, and the kinges honour. And that he hath bene diligent in teaching of trueth, reforming of superstition, free of hospitality, diligent in ouerseeing with Godly wisdom, peace and mercifulnesse, as he trusteth in God, may be truely approoued. And he is able iustly to charge his aduersaries with all the faultes herein by them most vniustlye and slaunderously agaynst hym obiected. And he doth maruell greatly, that George Constantine with other his adherentes are not ashamed, maliciously to object for the intent to sclaunder hym, with molesting of preachers founden there. For trueth it is that he hath molested none, but hath iustly brought vnder significauit one Morice a Preacher, liuing lewdly for his stubborne behaiour and malicious contemptes, euen yet continuing in his wilfull contempt and irregularity. And he hath (to his knowledge) iustlye certified Hugh Raulyns Parson of Tynby, for his wilfull recusancy of two other Personages, shamefully deceiuing the Kynges maiestye by coulour of Commission, as appeareth by the same. And as for the rayling, contemptuous preaching of R. M. and the vnlearned arrogant preaching of the Chauntoure he referreth to discreete Hearers, whiche were offended thereat, as they shewed this Defendaunt. And this Deponent brought into his Dioces, both learned Preachers, and learned men in the lawe, to his verye great charges, which men George Cōstantine with his adherentes hath weried away.

¶After these aunsweres thus exhibited by the vertuous and Godly Byshop agaynst the quarrelling and friuolous articles of his foresayd aduersaryes, to wit Hugh Raulins, and Thomas Lee, then came in for witnes vpon the sayd articles and informations, George Constantine, and the Chauntour of S. Dauids, agaynst whom the Byshop layde first exceptions, then also exhibited matter iustificatory, the tenor and processe whereof here foloweth in order to be sene, first concerning the exceptions, and after the matter iustificatory.

Exceptions generall, layd and purposed on the behalfe of Robert, Byshop of S. Dauids, agaynst all and singuler the pretended Witnesses produced on the behalfe of Hugh Raulins Clerke, and Thomas Lee vpon theyr vntrue surmised Articles, by them exhibited vnto and before the kinges most honorable Counsel, by the deuise and procurement of the Chaunter, and George Constantine, with R. M. Clerke, agaynst the sayd Byshop.

First the sayd Byshop sayth and alledgeth that by law, there ought no fayth or credence to beeu vnto the depositions and sayings of the sayde witnesses, nor anye part thereof, because they are infamous, false, periured, and in some part of theyr depositions discording, parciall, conducted, subornate, instructed, and for fauour of the informers, & theyr bolsterers, haue deposed of malice, more then the articles wherupon they were produced doth cōteine, and beside, and without the compasse of the same articles, and in diuers other partes of theyr depositions, they depose vnum & eundem praemeditatum sermonem, as by theyr sayd depositions doth appeare, vnto the which the sayd Bishop referreth himselfe as much as it shalbe expedient for him, and none otherwise. And further, for other causes particularly and specially, as is declared in y^e booke of exceptions.

¶Exceptions agaynst the vnlawfull proceedinges of Hugh Raulins Clerke, and Thomas Lee, Promoters of the foresayd vntrue Articles, in executng of theyr commission, for prooffe of the same.

Item, the sayd Thomas Lee for himselfe and the other Promotour dyd, contrary to iustice at the execution of theyr Commission, examine certayne of the Wytnesses himselfe, in the house of his Brother in law George Constantine and the sayde Lee: and Dauid Walter the Byshoppes mortall enemy, and seruaunt to the sayd George Constantine, did write these Depositions vpon the Articles at theyr owne pleasures, and also after the deuise of the sayd George Constantine and the Chauntour and R. M. the Byshoppes mortall enemies, and the very Deuisers and Procurers of the informations and bolsterers and bearers of the Promotours in the suite thereof. These are the names of the Wytnesses so examined, whyche are already knowne. Dauid ap Syr Richarde of Gertus a periured and an adoulterous person•, standinge in the number for two Wytnesses, written in two places of the booke. Item, ap Ruddz of Kemarthe, Griffeth ap Howell, Guyne of Kennarthe, Lewes Dauid Clerke, Dauid ap Haruye Clerke, Syr Goghe alias Morgon. &c.

Item, one Iohn Draper of Carmarthen and adherent of the foresayd aduersaryes, and enemies to the sayd Bishoppe, did also contrary to the tenour of theyr Commission, examine certayne Wytnesses, and hadde to hys Clerke one William Dauids, seruaunt in Liury vnto the foresayd Griffith Donne, the Bishoppes vtter enemy, by whiche shamefull parciality, they haue written more matter, moe wordes, other termes and sentences, then some of the Deponentes hath deposed or coulde depose. Humphery Toye the fift Deponent, Rice Goughe the 14. Deponent, William ap Ienkins the 5. Deponent, Iohn Beng•y the lxviij. Deponent, Richard Parson. 39. which are already knowne, what maner of men the Promoters are.

Item, the sayd Hugh Raulins was not present at the Bishops sermon, whereof his information maketh mention, neither yet at there cutting of the Commission for prooffe therof: for the foresayd aduersaries did deuise y^e same & gaue it vnto the sayd Raulins to promote, choosing him for the same purpose, knowing him to be a man willing (& setting his whole delight) to worke mischiefe, both wyth word and deede, who abuseth his tounge most shamefully, with most vnsetting wordes, euer rayling vpon the sayde Bishop, to euery man that will heare him without eyther respect, or reuerence of the kinges Maiesties authoritie to the sayd Bishop committed. And the said Raulins hath 4. or 5. Benefices aboute the vallure of 200. Markes a yeare, and is resident vppon none of them, but spendeth his liuing to the hinderaunce of other men, going aboute here and there, wandring to and fro, without either man or boye wayting on him, more like a light person, then a man of such liuelode and of his vocatiō, being a preacher. And in deede he is taken for a lewd fellow of all that know his behauiour, in so muche that when a certayne man objected vnto the aduersaries that it was ill done to putte so lewd a fellow as Raulins to promote theyr cause, they answered and reported his honesty with these wordes: wee know Raulins to be a very knaue, and so meet for no purpose as he is to set forward such a matter: of which reporte there is sufficient witnesse. And it is thought that he hath done much ill with his spitefull tounge: for he speaketh as boldly in this surmised matter to al the Couंसel, as though it were true, and much for the kinges profit.

Item, the other Promoter Thomas Lee is a Marchaunt, who hath sold his ware and spent his money, and now for want of other businesse, is become a Promoter of the foresayd articles, hauing his costes and charges borne by the sayd principall aduersaries, as it is alledged in the Bishops exceptions, which shalbe proued if commission might be awarded for the purpose.

Certayne Articles ministred by Robert Byshop of S Dauids, agaynst a surmised information exhibited by Thomas Lee, to the Kinges Maiestie his most honorable Counsell, agaynst the sayd Byshop.

IN primis. viz: That there ought none aduauntage to be taken agaynst the sayde Byshoppe, of the contentes of the sayd pretended information, for the causes particularly folowing. And first, where as it is objected agaynst the sayde Byshoppe, in the Fyrste, Seconde, and Fyft articles of the same information, and that hee contrarie to the Kynges Highnesse Lawes and Statutes, and in the derogation of hys Hyghnesse Supremacy, passed a certayne Commission, Institutions, and Collacions to benefices, in his owne name, making no mention of the Kynges Highnesse authority, where as of trueth the sayd Byshop if he had passed out the Commission, Institutions, and Collacions in his owne name, and without the Kynges Maiestie hys Style, as is surmised (as hee did not) yet had he not offended neither Lawes nor Statutes of this Realme therein,* as doth and may appeare euidently by the same statutes and Lawes to the which he referreth himselfe.

Item, whereas it is deduced in the Thyrd Article of the sayd pretended information, that the Chauncellour of the sayde Byshop dyd admitte and institute Iohn Gough into the Rectorye of Haskarde, and gaue a Mandate for the induction of the sayd Iohn vnder the Kynges Maiesties

Seale Ecclesiasticall, for the Diocesse of Sayncte Dauids with the Teste of the sayd Byshoppe, and Subscription of the sayd Chauncellour, which thing so deduced, if it be true, yet the sayd Byshoppe cannot be worthely blamed therof. But the Chauntour, then his Chauncellour vnworthy, shewed himselfe therein verye ignoraunt of the Kynges Statutes of Parliament,* wherein it is expressly prouided, that in suche cases the Ordinarye ought to passe all suche Institutions and Inductions in his owne name, and vnder his owne Seale, and not in the Kynges Maiestyes name, nor vnder his Seale. And further of very trueth the sayd Chauncellour in admitting and instituting the sayd Clerke to the sayd benefice, without the knowledge and consent of the sayd Byshop, dyd exceed his Commission, forasmuch as the sayd Byshop at the graunting of his Commission of his Chauncellourshyppe vnto the sayd Chauntour, had restrayned him expressly from the admitting and instituting of any Clerke to any Benefice within the sayde Diocesse, except the same Clerke were first examined, found worthy, and admitted by the sayd Byshop himselfe to the same benefice.

Itē, wheras in the 4. Article of the sayd information it is contened, that the sayd Bishop, after the admitting and instituting of the sayd Iohn Gough, as is aforesayd, obiected articles agaynst him, amongst the which it was contened in effect.

*Item, interrogetur quo titulo tenet rectoriam de Haskarde: True it is that the sayde Byshop, without molestation of the sayd Gough, otherwise then Law did permitte, and without takyng vppon hym the cognition of tittle of the sayd fruites and patronage of the sayd benefice, in contēpt of the Kinges Maiesties regall Crowne and dignity, and without any derogation of the Kinges Maiesties lawes and statutes of this realme, did interrogate the sayd Iohn Gough, how he held the sayd Benefice, being admitted and instituted to the same, without his knowledge or consent, as he might lawfully do, and as it is meet euery Ordinary should know how Pastours are admitted to anye cure within theyr Dioces.

Item, touching the contentes of the Sixt article of the sayd information, the sayd Byshop aleadgeth that the vicaredge of Pembrin, in the Dioces of Saynt Dauids being voyde, he as Patrone thereof to hys knowledge conferred it to Iohn Euans Clarke, wyth Letters of institution and induction, and after when the Kynges presentation came to him for one Dauid Ienken Clerke, he desired xiiij. dayes respite at that day, eyther to shewe auncient recorde for his right, and then the matter to stand to the determination of the Lawe, or els if hee shewed not, both he and his Clerke to geue place to the Kynges clerk: which condition was by Syr Thomas Ioanes Knyght, Doctour Merike, and the sayd Dauid Ienkin receyued, and an institution with an induction was made conditionally, to be put into the handes of Syr Thomas Ioanes Knyght, for safe custodye for the Kinges Clerke his behoue, after the xiiij. dayes to be executed at the handes of the sayd Byshoppe if he fayled to shewe, within whyche tyme the sayde Byshoppe did shewe an olde auncient recorde, declaring the full right of Patronage on the sayde Byshoppes behalfe, and so that institution and induction was neuer put in execution by the sayde Byshop. Neuerthesse the sayd Dauid Ienkin (contrarye to his promise and othe, geuyng thereupon his right hand to Syr Thomas Ioanes Knyght) tooke aduauntage by the said writing without knowledge of the sayde Byshoppe, after whiche time the Lorde Chauncellour by hys Letters written to the sayde Byshoppe, aduertised hym to admit one Iohn ap Howell Clerke, pretended by vertue of a vowson whiche the Lorde Chauncelloure iudged to bee good, and so to be admitted, notwithstanding his former presentation whereby hee woulde not abarre the other mannes right: And so the sayd Byshoppe made one collation, two institutions and three Mandates, doing no wrong thereby to hys knowledge. And further there was no businesse nor vnquietnesse about the possession of the sayd Uicarage. But the sayd bishop geuing place, was cōtent to lose his right for that time.

Item, whereas Syr Thomas Ioanes aduertised the sayd Byshop that Thomas Pricharde Clarke, had celebrated Matrimony in a priuate house, betwixt a certayne Prieste and a Woman whose Syster had refused the same (as it is deduced in the xi. Article of the surmised Articles layd in agaynst the sayd Byshop) the sayde Prichard leauing his owne cure vnserued, that Sondag, he did putte the sayd Thomas Prichard to penance for suche his misdoinges, and the sayde Pricharde did suche penance as was enioyned him to doe. And whereas the sayd Byshop made the same Thomas Prichard (who is Bachelour of law) his commissary, it was for the respect of his learning in the law, therby faythfully to execute his office according to iustice, and none otherwise.

Item, in the xiiij. Article of the sayde surmised Information it is vntruely declared that through the vnlawfull sequestration of the fruites of the Benefices of Langatok and Lanuihangell Cundy, and the vndiscreete handlyng of the sayd Byshoppe, there were raysed a great number of people, to the great daunger of the Inhabitanes therabouts. Trueth it is that the sayd Byshoppe vpon good and Lawefull considerations, and specially for that the Kynges Maiestye should be truely aunswered of his first fruites, and Tenthes of the sayd Benefices, he did lawfully (and as he was bounde to doe) sequester the sayde fruites in the Kinges Maiestyes name, and by his authority, and committed the custodie thereof for a time vnto two honest men, to the effect aforesaid, and none otherwise without any occasion of tumult or gathering of the people through his default or folly.

Item, whereas it is alleadged in the xix. article of the information, that the Byshop did celebrate Matrimonye in his owne person, without receiuing or Ministryng the Communion to the persons maryed, it is true, for that the sayd Byshop had trauayled xiiij. long wealche myles, and not able to celebrate the holye Communion fasting, and for other reasonable and lawefull causes him mouing, did in a Chappell within the house of Syr Thomas Ioanes Knighte (one of the Kinges honourable Counsell of the Marches of Wales) solemnise Matrimony betwixt Mayster Griffith Ryce, and the Daughter of the sayd Syr Thomas Ioanes, without either receiuing the holy Communion hymselfe or Ministring the same to the persons married, being as then not disposed so to do it, lawfully and godly without any such superstitious knockinges or blessinges or other vncomely gestures as is deduced in that article.

Item, touching the contentes of the residue of all the sayd articles, conteined in the sayde information, the sayde Bishop, partly for the auoyding of tediousnes, and partly for that some of them be vntrue and mere false, some other generall, obscure, friuolous, wayne, and of none effect, but of malice and euill will, contrary to truth conceaued, leaueth them particularly vnaunswered vnto.

Item, the sayd Bishop alledgeth that he hath not by al the time that he hath bene Byshop vsed any superstitions or Papisry as it is vntruely surmised agaynst him, but hath and doth to the vttermost of his power, witte, and cunning, set forth, maynteine, preach, and teache the true doctrine of the Gospell, and such laudable doctrine as hee ought to do by the kinges Lawes, Iniunctions and proceedinges, and for such a teacher he hath bene and is commonly knowne, named, reputed, taken, and accepted notoriously.

And where the sayde Chauntour and George perceyued theyr depositions to be insufficient, they required, and hadde Commission into the Countrey to examine further Witnesses, which they executed very parcially, and vnlawfully, as is alleadged in the Byshops exceptions, aboue mentioned. And whereas to the sayd Raulins & Lee were awarded two seuerall Commissions, they by fauour Page 1552 of the officers, and for sparing of costes, conioyned both in one, had iij. months to make returne, as appeareth by the copy of their commission, which hereafter followeth.

Teste me ipso apud Westmon. 9. die Martij. Anno regni nostri sexto.

Marten.

DUryng all this tyme of the examination of the witnesses, the sayd Bishop was stayed at London, vpon the allegation of the sayd aduersaries, which was: that if the sayd B. should depart into his dioces, he would let them of their prooues.

And at the returne of their commission, it was signified vnto the Counsaile what a great number of witnesses they had examined, viz. sixe score and vij. which sounded very hamons in the counsailes eares.

And about three weekes after, Publication of theyr witnesses was graunted, and after that, it was a fortnight or the B. could get a copy written of their depositions, because the booke therof is so huge and monstrous.

Then the Bishop desired tyme: First, to enquire of what condition the persones were that had witnessed agaynst hym, and to make exceptions, and matters to iustifie direct contrary, and to haue a commission for the prooffe thereof, which was then graunted. And now it is obiected that the Bishop was appoynted so to trauell with the expedition of hys matter, that he should haue sued out his Commission, and haue made returne therof at Alhallowtide last past, but there was no such decree put in writyng. And it was not possible for the Bishop to doe it in so short a time, these causes considered which he would not auoid, as followeth.

First, it was the latter end of Iuly, ere he came home to S. Davids, where he began his visitation, which before was appointed.

Secondly, he was by force of law constrained to aunswer at the barre daily, during all the tyme the great Sessions at Carmarthen, in defence of hys iust cause agaynst the pretended matter of premunire, which his aduersaries of meere malice hath procured agaynst hym.

Thirdly, the said aduersaries to molest hym further, did priuily packe a quest of ignorant persons of no reputation, and indited hym vpon the words of Raulins information, as appeareth by a copy of the inditement, entending thereby to make the matter sound more hainous, notwithstanding y^t the same cause dependeth before the kings high counsaile vndetermined.

Fourthly, hee was appointed by the Commissioners before his departure from London, to pay two hundreth pound (which was arrerages) into the court of first fruits and tenths, at Bartlemew day then next folowing, which payment he made accordingly, notwithstanding, that hys aduersaries wrought meanes to haue made hym breake hys day: namely, one Edward Harbard Gentleman, who hath a personage of his to Farme, kept backe his rent to the very last day, because that money should not helpe to serue his turne: and so by crafty cauillation deteyneth it still in his hand with a yeres rent and a halfe more: for the sayd Edward Harbert is an adherent of the sayd Bishops aduersaries.

Fiftly, the booke of their depositions is so great, that it asketh a long tyme to peruse. And also the greatest part of their witnesses were vtterly vnknownen of the bishop and all his. And also dwellyng in so many sondry places of the Dioces among the mountaines and els where, scarcely within the circuit of two hundred miles.

Item, another great Sessions holden at Carmarthen in the moneth of October last, during which tyme he was attendant there as is aforesayd. All which causes considered, beyng also in the tyme of his ordinary visitatiō, which he did execute himselfe, he could not make redy his exceptions in shorter tyme.

The sayd Bishop dispatched his man towards London, the 23. day of October, who euer sithens hath bene and is attendaunt in the same sute, for the obtainyng of the Commission, for prooffe of his matter agaynst hys aduersaries.

¶A copy of a certaine letter written by the Bish. of S. Davids.

MOst humbly sheweth vnto your honour, your poore Orator Robert Bishop of Saint Dauies, that where as one Thomas Lee (by the procurement of T. Y. and R. M. beyng both Canons of Saint Dauies, & George Constantine Register to the sayd Bishop) hath exhibited vnto your honour agaynst him certayne articles, in the which are mentioned many triflyng things, vnworthy to be declared in your honourable audience, and also theyr pretended weighty articles (as they haue alledged there) are vtterly vntrue: for prooffe whereof the sayd Thomas Lee hath had Commissions into the countrey: Therefore it may please your honour of your fauourable goodnes, to graunt vnto your sayd Oratour a lyke Commission for the examination of witnesse, in defence of his truth and honesty against the sayd Thomas Lee, George Constantine and the aforenamed Rowland Merike, and all other persons with theyr iniust articles, attestations, and sayings, which hath deposed against hym. And in tender consideration that your sayd Orator standeth bounden, and sureties with hym, in the summe of a thousand markes, to appeare before the Kings Iustice, in the Sessions at Carmarthen, in Iuly next commyng, to aunswer to a forged matter of premunire, by the procurement and counsaile of his forenamed aduersaries, maliciously surmised agaynst hym to his vtter vndoing. And furthermore, your Orator beyng in debt to the Kings Maiesty, by reason of the malicious vexation of his foresayd aduersaries, cannot (if hee remayne here) satisfie the same: for where as there be rerages to a great summe (as well of the Kings money as of his owne rentes) he can receiue none thereof, hys aduersaries hath made such ill report to his discredite, bearyng the people in hand, that he shall come no more thether. By reason of which brute, neither his owne tenants will pay theyr rentes and rerages, nor the priests their rerages due to the Kyngs Maiesty, as well for anno secundo, and tertio, as for quarto and quinto. In consideration of all which thyngs, it may ylease your honourable goodnes to licence your sayd Orator to depart into the Diocesse, for these affayres and other. And hee is ready at all tymes at your honourable commaundement, and pleasure, to repayre agayne, and euer to pray to the Lorde Iesu for the perpetuall conseruation of your honour, to his glory.

¶Another letter written by the Bishop of S. Dauies.

Right honourable, and my very especiall good Lorde, with humble seruice and harty thanks to God: and to you for your godly fauour towards me at all tymes, as right playnly appeareth by your fatherly letters, most louingly admonishing me to encline vnto that which is very necessary, as charitable concorde and vnitie: This is furtherly to besiche your Lordship for the Lordes sake not to be grieved, but benignly to heare, and grauely to ponder that weighty matter, which appearing (to other) but a light grieffe to me, is in very deede a right grievous offence to God, with no little hinderaunce of his holy word, and disturbance of the Kings godly proceedyngs, & may be a great occasion of much inobedience, and disorder of good lyfe. Wherefore I am straightly bounden for the true zeale that I (ought to) beare vnto Gods worde of lyfe, Christian religion, the Kings Maiesties honour, and the godly quiet state of hys people, not faintly to let fall the burthen of diligent redresse to bee sought at his Maiesties handes by the godly wisdom of hys most honourable and vpright Counsaile, but with harty affection to beare it vp against those high mynded, arrogant, stubburne, ambitious, couetous canons, trusting in their biting tonges, with crafty preuention, and vtterly vntrue surmises, to Page 1553 stoppe the light that their vngodly misdoings in darknes shal either not be seene, or at the lest may seeme to appeare in colourable appearance of right. In so much that I doe not a little maruell at these qualities in M. Chaunter, the Canon, and the Deane of Worcester, whose vngentle and vntrue behauiour I haue not only knowen, but expertly prooued, and sensibly feelled in two of the first to my great losses whereof I make no complaynt. But I woonder in my mynd and lament in my heart the straunge alteration and wilfull goyng backward of myne old faithfull brother George Constantine, the whiche (knowing them all three to haue bene in tymes past eyther obstinate enemies to the true bearers of the Crosse of Christ, or at the least priuie lurkers vnder pretence of fauour towardes the Gospell, to sting the poore followers thereof, seekyng but their owne lucre and pleasure in all their doinges) would so earnestly cleaue vnto them in their wrōg deeds, as to betray me with his tong, become vntrue of his promise, and a bearer of filthy sinne for lucre sake, euen yet stifly persisting in the same (namely) in thyngs manifestly known vnto many, although he would deny it, and that I might not be credited. And as for their premunire, both George and they at my first commyng, vngētly deteining from M. Ferlee hys commission for the Chauncellorship, would haue faced mee downe with premunire, because it was written in my owne name accordyng to the statute: yet was I fayne for the zeale of vnitie, not to see their vncurteous deedes, departing with M. Farlee for the auoydyng of their malice and enuy, and gaue that office for the a••tie of George, vnto M. Chaunter his sonne in lawe, and to D. Merike the office of Cardigan. But seyng afterward their couetous respect to their own glory and lucre, not regarding the reformation of sinne and specially of shameles whoredome, I was compelled to remooue thē, sore agaynst their wyls: and where as I desired many and sondry tymes charitable redresse of their wrong doyngs in the vacation time, I obtained many faire words, and nothyng in deede. Also desiring to haue sight of the booke of Statutes of the church, for the knowledge of my duety and theirs, I could not obtayne. Desiring to haue a key of y^e Chapter seale, as my L. of Bathe had, they would not deliuer it but vpon conditions: yet was I content to be bridleed, receiuyng it, as pleased them to geue it. And further requiring the sight of necessary euidences, for the declaration of diuers thyngs in trauers of my right, they would in no wyse graunt it. And thereupon consideryng their vngentlenes, I mooued the quo warranto, knowyng right well that if they should shew any substantiall grant vnder the kings seale for their corporation, it must therein appeare the Bish. to be the hed, and euer hath bene vnder the kyng: for other they neuer haue, nor had, except they would returne to Rome againe, as I trust they will not. And yet perceiuyng afterward that they had no speciall graunt to shew, or els such as they would not shew. I my selfe for the respect of vnitie, wrote my letters to the kings Attorney, by reason whereof the quo warranto was stayed, and so yet remaineth. But touching the certificate, y^e kings subsidie beyng due at Michaelmas last, and forborne tyll after Christmas, and lawfully demaunded afore, they dyd vtterly refuse to pay, both to my Uice collector and to my selfe, except I would take it of thē in portions, not knowing where to aske the rest, and it is committed vnto me in the Kings roll, a whole summe in grosse to be receyued of the Canons Residentiaries for their diuidēt, who because they cannot agree in deuiding, would haue the kings maiestie to tary for hys money till they can agree to make diuision. And I cannot demaund it of any perticular person nor at any perticular place. Wherefore I most humbly beseech your fatherly goodnes for the Lordes sake, to persist and continue my good Lord and friend, vnto such tyme as ye fynd me eyther desiring to be defended in my wrong, or not willyng to put the iudgement of my right cause into your hands. And because that the residue of matters touchyng them and their vngentle, vntrue, and vngodly doyngs is too long, and I haue molested you too much with this my tedious letter, I shall now surcease: humbly beseeching your good Lordship to accept in good part this my boldnesse, proceedyng of necessitie, and to pardon it for the loue of our Lorde Iesu, who saue and keepe you in health, comfort, and honor, long to endure for thaduancement of his glory.

Written at Aburguily this ix. of March.

Your Lordships to command during lyfe. R. F.

And thus you haue heard the first trouble of this blessed Martyr of the Lord, in King Edwards dayes, wyth the whole discourse thereof. Which we thought the rather here to expresse, to geue other good bishops warning to be more circumspect, whom they should trust and haue about them. Briefly, in few wordes to conclude this processe, B. Farrer, partly vpon the importunate sute of his aduersaries, partly vpon the sinister and infortunate fall of the good Duke of Somerset, by whom he had bene before promoted and mayntained, hauyng but small fauour shewed, was deteined in prison, till the death of king Edward, and the commying in of Queene Mary and popish religion, whereby a new trouble rose vpon hym being now accused and examined for his fayth and doctrine. The processe of which his trouble here likewyse followeth.

After that the foresayd M. Farrer Bishop of S. Dauids had bene long deteined in custody vnder sureties, in the raigne of king Edward, not for any iust cause of hys part deserued, but by reason that he had bene promoted by the D. of Somerset, and now after his fall he found fewer friends to support him agaynst such as hunted after his Bishoprike, at length after the decease of king Edward, by the commying in of Queene Mary, the state of religion began to be chaunged and altered.* Whereby a new trouble rose vpon hym, beyng now accused and examined, not for any matter of Premunire, but for his fayth and doctrine. Whereupon he was called before the Bish. of Winchester, with M. Hooper, M. Rogers, M. Bradford, M. Saunders and others aforesayde, the 4. of February. On the which day hee should also with them haue bene condemned: but because laisure or list did not so well then serue the Bish. his condemnation was deferred, and he sent to prison agayne, where he continued tyll the 14. day of the sayd moneth of February. What his examinations & aunswers were before the said B. of Winchester, so much as remayned and came to our handes, I haue here annexed in maner as followeth.

¶The answer of Rob. Farrer B. of S. Dauids, before Winchester and others.

AT his first commying and kneelyng before my Lorde Chauncellour, the Bishop of Duresme,* and the Bish. of Worcester, who sate at the table, and Maister Rochester Maister Southwell, Maister Bourne and other standing at the tables end, the Lord Chauncellor said vnto hym on this sort.

Winchester.

Now sir, you haue heard how the world goeth here.

Farrer.

If it like your honor I know not.

Winch.

What say you? Doe not you know things abroad, notwithstanding you are a prisoner?

Farrer.

No my L. I know not.

Winchest.

Lo, what a froward fellow is this?

Farrer.

If it please your Lordship, how should I know any thyng abroad, beyng a prisoner?

Winch.

Haue ye not heard of the commyng in of the Lord Cardinal?

Farrer.

I know not my L. Cardinall, but I heard that a Cardinall was come in, but I did not beleue it, and I beleue it not yet.

Worcest.

I pray your Lordship (said the B. of Worcester) tell hym your selfe, that he may know what is done.

Winch.

The Queenes Maiesty and the Parliament,* hath restored religion into the same state it was in at the beginnyng of the raigne of K. Henry the 8. Ye are in y^e Queens debt, and her maiesty will be good vnto you, if you will returne to the catholike church.

Farrer.

In what state I am concernyng my debtes to the Queenes Maiestie in the Court of Exchequer, my Lorde Treasurer knoweth: and the last tyme that I was before your honor, & the first tyme also, I shewed you, that I had made an othe neuer to consent nor agree,* that the Bish. of Rome should haue any power or iurisdiction within this Realme: and further, I need not to reherse to your Lordship, you know it well enough.*

Bourne.

You wer once abiured for heresie (said M. Bourn) in Oxford.

Farrer.

That was I not.

Bourne.

You were.

Farrer.

I was neuer, it is not true.

Bourne.

You went from S. Dauids to Scotland.

Farrer.

That did I not.

Bourne.

You did.

Farrer.

That did I neuer, but I went from Yorke into Scotland.

Bourne.

Ah so said I: you went with Barlow.

Farrer.

That is true, but neuer from S. Dauids.

Bourne.

You caried bookes out of Oxford, to the Archb. of Yorke, L. Lee▪

Farrer.

That did I not.

Bourne.

You did.

Farrer.

I did not, but I caried old bookes from s. Oswalds to the B. of Yorke.*

Bourne.

You supplanted your maister.

Farrer.

That did I neuer in my lyfe.

Bourne.

By my faith you did.

Farrer.

Forsooth I did not, neuer in my life, but I did shield and saue my Maister from danger, and that I obtained of King Henry the eight, for my true seruice, I thanke God therefore.

Bourne.

My L. (said M. Bourne to my L. Chauncellor) he hath an ill name in Wales, as euer had any.

Farrer.

That is not so. Whosoeuer sayth so, they shall neuer be able to prooue it.

Bourne.

He hath deceyued the Queene in diuers summes or money.

Farrer.

That is vtterly vntrue. I neuer deceiued king nor Queene, of one peny in my life, and you shall neuer be able to prooue that you say.

Winchest.

Thou art a false knaue.

Farrer.

Then Farrer stood vp vnbidden (for all that whyle he kneeled) and sayd: No my Lord, I am a true man, I thanke God for it. I was borne vnder King Henry the seuenth,* I serued King Henry the eight, and K. Edward the sixt truely, and haue serued the Queenes Maiestie that now is, truely with my poore heart and word: more I could not do, and I was neuer false, nor shall be by the grace of God.

Winch.

How sayest thou, wilt thou be reformable?

Farrer.

*My L. if it like your honor, I haue made an othe to God and to K. Henry the 8. and also to K. Edward, and in that to the Queenes Maiestie, the which I can neuer breake while I liue, to dye for it.

Duresme.

You haue made another oth before.

Farrer.

No my Lord, I neuer made another oth before.

Duresme.

You made a vow.

Farrer.

That did I not.

Winch

You made a profession to lyue without a wyfe.

Farrer.

*No, my Lorde, if it lyke your honour, that did I neuer, I made a profession to lyue chaste, not without a wyfe.

Worcest.

You were sworne to him that was M. of your house.

Farrer.

That was I neuer.

Winchest.

Well, you are a froward knaue: we wil haue no more to do with you, seing that you will not come, we wil be short with you, & that you shall know within this seuennight.

Farrer.

*I am as it pleaseth your honour to call me, but I cannot breake my othe which your Lordship your selfe made before me, and gaue in example: the which confirmed my conscience. Then I can neuer breake that othe whilest I lyue to dye for it.

Duresme.

Well, sayeth he, he standeth vpon his othe: call an other.

My L. Chauncellor then did ring a little bell, and M. Farrer said: I pray God saue the King & Queenes maiesties, long to cōtinue in honor to gods glory, & their comfortes, and the comfort of the whole Realme, and I pray God saue all your honors, and so he departed.

After these examinations thus ended, B. Farrer so remayned in prison vncondemned, till the xiiij. day (as is aforesaid) of February, & then was sent down into Wales, there to receiue sentence of condemnation. Who then vpō the 26. of February, in the Church of Carmarthen, beyng brought by Griffith Leyson Esquire, shirife of the Countie of Carmarthen, was there personally presented before Henry Bish. of S. Dauids, * and Constantine the publike Notarie: which Henry, there and then discharged the said Shiriffe, and receyued hym into his owne custodie, further committing hym to the keping of Owen Iones, and thereupon declared vnto the sayd M. Farrer, the great mercy and clemency that the King and Queenes highnes pleasure was to be offered vnto him, which he there dyd offer vnto the sayd M. Farrer: that is to say, that if hee would submit himselfe to the lawes of this Realme, and conforme hymselfe to the vnitie of the vniuersall catholike church, he should be receiued and pardoned: and after that seeying the sayd M. Farrer to geue no aunswer to the premisses, the sayd B. ministred vnto hym these Articles followyng.

¶Articles deuised against B. Farrer.

1 First, whether he beleeueth the mariage of priests to be lawfull by the lawes of God & holy church, or no?

2 Item, whether he beleeueth, * that in the blessed Sacrament of the aaltar, after the wordes of consecration duely pronounced by the priest, the very body & bloud of Christ is really and substantially contained, without the substāce of bread and wyne.

Unto the which articles the said B. required the sayd M. Farrer to answer vpon his allegiance. *

To which he said, he would aunswer when he sawe a lawfull commission, and would make no further answer at that tyme. Whereupon the sayd B. taking no aduauntage vpon the same aunswer, committed him to the sayde keeper, to be kept in prison vntill a new monition, and in the meane tyme to deliberate with himselfe for his further answer to the premisses.

¶Another examination of the Bish of S. Dauids, before Henry Morgan the pretended Bishop of S. Dauids, George Constantine his Register, and others, the last of February. Ann. 1555.

THis day and place, Morgan the pretended Byshop of S. Dauids, sittynge as Iudge,* ministred vnto Bishop Farrer there personally present before hym certaine Articles and Interrogatories in writing, which beyng openly read and ministred vnto hym, the sayd B. Farrer refused to aunswere, vntill he might see his lawfull Commission and authoritie. Whereupon the foresayd pretended Bishop of S. Dauids, did pronounce him as Contumax, and for the punishment of this his contumacie, to be counted Pro confesso, and so did pronounce him in writyng: which beyng done, he committed the sayd Bish. to the custody of Owen Ihones, vntill Monday next, beyng the 4. day of March, then to be brought agayne into the same place, betweene one and two.

Another appearance of the said B. Farrer, before Morgan the pretended Bishop of S. Dauids.

ITem, the day and place appointed,* the said Bish. appearing agayne before the pretended B. humbly submittyng hymselfe as ready to aunswer to the articles and positions aboue mentioned, gently required the copy of the articles, and a competent terme to be assigned vnto hym to answer for hymselfe: which beyng graunted vnto hym, & Thursday next beyng assigned vnto hym betweene one and thre, to answer precisely and fully, so he was committed againe to custody, as aboue.

Another appearance of the said Bishop.

ON Thursday as was appointed,* which was the 7. of March, the said B. personally again appeared, where he exhibited a certaine bill in writing, conteinyng in it his answer vnto certaine articles objected and ministred vnto him before. Then after Henry the pretended B. of S. Dauids offred him agayne the sayd articles as before: the tenor wherof tended to this effect.

First, that he willed him beyng a priest,* to abrenounce matrimony.

Secondly, to graunt the naturall presence of Christ in the sacrament, vnder the formes of bread and wyne.

Thirdly, that the Masse is a propitiatory sacrifice for the quicke and the dead.

Fourthly, that general Councels lawfully congregated, neuer did, nor can erre.

Fiftly, that men are not iustified before God by fayth only, but that hope and charity is also necessarily required to iustification.

Sixtly, that the catholike church which onely hath authority to expound scriptures, and to define controuersies of religion, and to ordeine things appertaining to publike discipline, is visible, and like vnto a citie set vpon a mountayne for all men to vnderstand.

To these articles thus objected to hym,* hee refused to subscribe, affirming that they were inuented and excogitated by man, and pertaine nothing to the Catholike fayth. After this the Bish. abouenamed, deliuered vnto him the copy of the articles, assigning him Monday next followyng, to aunswer and subscribe to the same, either affirmatiuely, or negatiuely.

Another appearance of Bish. Farrer.

Vpon the which Monday, being the xj. day of March,* he appearing agayne before the Bish. and the foresayd Page 1555 Notary George Constantine, exhibited in a written paper, his mynd & answer to the foresayd Articles, which the Bishop had twice now objected agaynst hym before. To the which Articles and aunsweres, he dyd so subscribe, addyng these wordes, as tenens se de aequitate & iustitia esse Episcopum Meneuensem, that the Bishop assigned the next Wednesday in the fore noone, to heare his finall and definitiue sentence.

¶The last appearance of Bishop Farrar.

The which day and place the said B. and true seruaunt of God M. Farrer,* personally there appearyng, was demanded of Henry the pretensed B. of S. Davids, whether he would renounce and recant his heresies, schismes, and errorrs (as hee called them) which hitherto hee had maintained, and if he would subscribe to the catholike articles, otherwise then he had done before.

After this the sayd godly M. Farrer did exhibite a certayne schedule written in English, and remayning in the Actes, appealyng withall by expresse word of mouth from the Bishop,* as from an incompetent Iudge, to Cardinall Poole, &c.

All which notwithstanding, the sayd B. proceeding in hys rage, pronounced the definitiue sentence agaynst him, conteyned in writyng, and there left in the Actes: by the which sentence he pronounced hym as an heretike excommunicate, & to be geuen vp forthwith to the secular power, namely to the Shiriffe of the towne of Carmarthen, M. Leyson. The tenour of which sentence, as well of hys condemnation, as of his degradation here followeth.

¶Here followeth the copy of his degradation.

Thus this godly bishop being condemned and disgraded, was committed to the secular power: * who not long after, was brought to the place of executiō in the towne of Carmarthen, where he in the market place in the Southside * of the market crosse, the xxx. day of March, beyng Saturday next before Passion sonday, most constantly susteyned the torments and passion of the fire.

Touchyng the which constancie of this blessed Martyr, this is moreouer to be added and noted: * that one named Richard Iones, a Knights sonne, comming to maister Farrar a little before his death, seemed to lament the paynefulnesse of the death he had to suffer. Unto whome the Bishop aunswered agayne to this effect, saying: that if he saw hym once to stirre in the paynes of his burnyng, he should then geue no credite to his doctrine. And as hee sayd, so he right well performed the same, for so paciently he stode, that he neuer mooued, but euen as he stode holdyng vp his stumpes, so still he continued, till one Rich. Grauell with a staffe dashed hym vpon the head, and so stroke hym downe.

¶Letters.

As touching the letters of M. Farrer, we do not finde many that he did write. And peraduenture in Queene Maries tyme his imprisonment was so strait, that at no time it was permitted to hym to write. Albeit in his other troubles in kyng Edwards tyme, certayne letters he wrote to the Archbishop of Canterbury Thomas Cranmer, and to the Erle of Warwike, which letters although they might be well referred to the first edition of this story, yet because in the sayd letters is conteyned briefly and in few lynes, the whole discourse of hys vniust vexation at that tyme wrought by his aduersaries, I thought good not to passe them ouer, but to communicate them vnto the Reader, for the better vnderstanding both of the innocencie of y^r blessed B. and of the crafty iniquitie of his conspired enemies: as in the sayd letters here folowing to the indifferent reader may easily appeare.

¶The copy of a certaine letter of the Bishop of S. Davids, written belike to the L. Chancellor Doct. Goodricke Bishop of Ely.

MOst humbly sheweth vnto your honor, your poore orator Rob. Bish. of S. Davids, that where as one Tho. Lee (by the procurement of Tho. Yong, Rowland Mericke beyng both Canons of S. Davids, and George Constantine Register to the sayd bishop) hath exhibited vnto your honor agaynst him certaine articles, in the which are mentioned many triflyng thyngs vnworthy to be declared in your honourable audience, and also theyr pretensed weighty articles, (as they haue alledged there) are vtterly vntrue, for prooffe whereof, the sayd Thomas Lee hath had Page 1556 Commissions into the countrey: therfore it may please your honour of your fauourable goodnesse, to graunt vnto your said Oratour a like Commission for the examination of witnesses in defence of his truth and honesty, against the aforementioned Thomas Lee, George Constantine, Tho. Yong, Rowland Mericke, and all other persons with their vniust articles, attestations, and sayings deposed agaynst hym. And in tender consideration that your said Orator standeth bounden and sureties with hym, in the summe of a thousand markes,* to appeare before the kyngs Iustice in the Sessions at Carmarthen, in Iuly next commyng, to aunswer to a forged matter of Premunire, by the procurement and counsaile of his forenamed aduersaries malitiously surmised agaynst hym, to his vtter vndoing: and furthermore, that your Orator beyng in debt to the kyngs maiesty, by reason of the malitious vexation of his foresayd aduersaries, cannot (if he remaine here) satisfie the same (for where as there be rerages to a great summe as well of the kyngs money, as of hys owne rentes, he can receyue none thereof, his aduersaries haue made such ill report, to his discredite, bearyng the people in hand that he shall come no more thither, by reason of which bruite, neyther hys owne tenaunts will pay their rentes and rerages, nor the priests their rerages due to the Kings Maiestie, as well for anno secundo and tertio, as for quarto and quinto.) In consideration of all these thyngs, it may please your honourable goodnes to licence your sayd Oratour to depart into the Dioces for these affaires and other: & he shall be ready at all tymes at your honourable commaundement and pleasure to repaire againe, and euer to pray to the Lord Iesu for the perpetuall conseruation of your honor to his glory.

Besides this letter he wrote another likewise to y^e said Lord (who was, as seemeth, D. Goodricke L. Chancellor afore mentioned) wherein he declareth the whole cause of his trouble, how it rose against him by his aduersaries, as here followeth.

¶Another letter written by the B. of S. Davids, to the L. Chancellor aforesayd.

Right honourable, and my very especiall good Lorde, with humble seruice and hearty thanks to God,* and to you for your godly fauour towards me at all times, as right plainly appeareth by your fatherly letters, most louingly admonishing me to incline vnto that which is very necessary, as charitable concord and vnity. This is further to beseeche your Lordship for the Lordes sake, not to be grieued, but benignly to heare and grauely to ponder that weighty matter, which appearing to other but a light griefe, to me is in very deede a right grievous offence to Godward, with no little hinderaunce of his holy worde, and disturbaunce of the Kings godly proceedyngs, and may be great occasion of much inobedience, and disorder of good lyfe.

Wherefore I am straitly bounden for the true zeale that I ought to beare vnto the word of lyfe, Christian religion the kings maiesties honor, and the godly quiet state of his people, not faintly to let fall the burthen of diligent redres to be sought at his maiesties hands by the godly wisdom of his most honourable and vpriht Counsayle, but with hearty affection to beare it vp agaynst those high mynded, arrogant, stubborne, ambitious, couetous Canons, trusting in their biting tongues, with crafty preuention and vtterly vntrue surmises, to stop the lyght, that theyr vngodly misdoyns in darkenesse shal eyther not be seene, or at the least may haue a coulourable appearaunce of right. In so much that I do not a little meruayle at these qualities in Maister Chaunter, the Canon and the Deane of Worcester, whose vngentle and vntrue behauiour I haue not onely knowen, but expertly prooued, and sensibly felte in two of the first, to my great losses, whereof I make no complaint.

*But I wonder in my mynde and lament in my heart, the strange alteration & wilfull goyng backward of myne old faithful brother George Constātine, the which knowyng them all three to haue bene in tymes past, either obstinate enemies to the true bearers of the crosse of Christ, or (at the least) priuy lurkers vnder pretence of fauour towards the Gospell, to sting the poore followers therof, seking but their own lucre and pleasure in all their doings) would so earnestly cleaue vnto them in their wrong deeds as to betray me with his tong, become vntrue of his promise, and a bearer of filthy sinne for lucre sake, euen yet stifly persisting in the same, namely, in thyngs manifestly knowen vnto many, although he would deny it, and that I might not be credited.

And as for their Premunire, both George & they, at my first commyng,* vngently deteinyng from M. Ferlee hys commission of the Chauncellorship, would haue faced me down with the Premunire, because it was written in myne owne name according to the statute: yet was I faine for the zeale of vnity, not to see their vncurteous deedes, departing with M. Ferlee, for the auoyding of theyr malice and enuy, and gaue that office for the amitie of George, vnto M. Chaunter his sonne in lawe,* and to D. Mericke the office of Cardigan. But seeyng afterward theyr couetous respect to their owne glory and lucre, not regardyng the reformatiō of sinne, and especially of shameles whoredome, I was compelled to remooue them,* sore agaynst their wylls: and whereas I desired many and sundry tymes charitable redresse of their wrong doings in the vacation tyme, I obteyned many fayre wordes, and nothing in deede.

And desiring to haue sight of the booke of Statutes of the Church, for the knowledge of my duetie and theirs,* I could not obteine. Desiring to haue a key of the Chapter house seale, as my L. of Bath had, they would not deliuer it, but vpon conditions: yet was I contented to be brideled, receiuyng it as it pleased them to geue it. And further, requiring the sight of necessary euidences for the declaration of diuers thyngs, in trauers of my right, they would in no wyse graunt it. And thereupon consideryng theyr vngentlenesse, I mooued the Quo warranto, knowyng right well that if they should shew any substantiall graunt vnder the kings seale for their corporation, it must therin appeare, the B. to be the head, and euer hath bene vnder the king: for other they neyther haue, nor had, except they would returne to Rome againe, as I trust they will not. And yet perceiuyng afterward, that they had no speciall graunt to shew, or els such as they would not shew, I my self for the respect of vnitie, wrote my letters to the Kyngs Attorney, by reason wherof the Quo warranto was stayed, and so yet remayneth.

But as touching the certificate, the kings subsidie beyng due at Michaelmas last, and forborne til after Christmas, and lawfully demanded afore, they did vtterly refuse to pay, both to my Uice collector and to my selfe, except I would take it of them in portions, not knowyng where to aske the rest, and it is committed vnto me in the kings roll a whole summe in grosse, to be receyued of the Canons residentaries for their Diuident: who because they cannot agree in diuiding, would haue the kings maiesty to tary for his money, till they can agree to make diuision: and I cannot demand it of any perticular person, nor at any perticular place.

Wherefore I most humbly beseech your fatherly goodnes for the Lordes sake, to persist and continue my good Lord and friend, vnto such time as ye finde me either desiring to be defended in my wrōg, or not willyng to put the iudgemēt of my right cause into your hands. And because that the residue of matters touching them and their vngētle, vntrue, and vngodly doyns is too long, and I haue molested you too much with this my tedious letter, I shal now surcease: humbly beseeching your good Lordship to accept in good part this my boldnes proceding of necessity, and to pardon it for the loue of our Lord Iesu: who saue and keep you in helth, comfort, and honor, long to endure, for the aduauncement of his glory.

Written at Agurguily this ix. of March.

¶The history of one Rawlins White, burned at Cardiffe in Wales, about the moneth of March, for the testimony of Christes Gospell, reported by Iohn Dane beyng yet alyue, who was almost continually with hym duryng his trouble, vnto hys death.

FOr so much as we haue here passed the history of Maister Farrer,* burned at the town of Carmardē in Wales I thought to adioyne and accompany with the same, the history also of one Rawlins White, a Fisherman, whiche both in the like cause, and in the same countrey of Wales, & also about the same moneth of March, and yere aforesayd, gaue his life like a valiāt souldior of Iesus Christ, to martyrdom, and was burned at Cardiffe: the proces of whose story here followeth expressed more at large.

This Rawlins was by his calling or occupation a Fisherman, liuing & continuing in the said trade by the space of xx. yeres at the least, in the town of Cardiffe, beyng (as a man of his vocation might be) one of a very good name, & well accompted amongst hys neighbours. As touchyng his religion at the first, it can not otherwyse be knownen, but that he was a great partaker of the superstitiō and Idolatry that then was vsed, I meane in the raigne of K. Henry the 8. But after that God of his mercy had raysed Page 1557 vp the light of his Gospell, thorough the blessed gouernment of K. Edward the vj. here in this Realme of England, this Rawlins began partly to mislike that which before hee had embraced, and to haue some good opinion of that which before by the iniquitie of the tyme had ben concealed from him: and the rather to bring this good purpose and intent of his to passe, he began to be a diligēt hearer, and a great searcher out of the truth.

But because the good man was altogether vnlearned, and withall very simple, he knew no ready way how hee might satisfie his great desire: At length it came in hys mynde to take a speciall remedy to supply hys necessite, which was this: He had a little boy which was his own sonne, which childe he set to schoole to learne to read English. Now after the little boy could read indifferently wel, his father euery night after supper, sommer and winter, would haue the boy to read a piece of the holy scripture, & now and then of some other good booke. In which kind of vertuous exercise, the olde man had such a delight & pleasure, that as it semed, he rather practised himself in the study of Scripture, then in the trade or science which before tyme he had vsed: so that Rawlins within few yeares in the said tyme of K. Edward,* through the help of his little sonne, as a special minister appointed by god (no dout) for that purpose, & through much conscience besides, profited & went forward in such sort, that he was able not onely to resolute himselfe touching his owne former blindnes & ignorāce, but was also able to admonish and instruct other: and therefore when occasion serued, he would go from one place to an other,* visiting such as he had best hope in. By which his doying, he became in that countrey both a notable and open professor of the truth, beyng at all tymes and in all such places, not without y^e company of his litle boy, whom (as I haue said) he vsed as an assistance to this hys good purpose. And to this his great industry and indeuor in holy scripture, God did also adde in him a singular gyft of memory, so that by the benefite therof he would & could do that in vouching and rehersing of the text,* which men of riper and more profound knowlege, by their notes and other helps of memory, could very hardly accomplish. In so much that he vpon the alledging of scripture, very often would cite the booke, the leafe, yea and the very sentence: such was the wonderfull working of God in this simple and vnlearned father.

Nowe when he had thus continued in his profession the space of fiue yeares, K. Edward died, vpon whose decease Queene Mary succeeded, and with her all kynde of superstition and Papistrie crepte in. Which thing beyng one perceyued, Rawlins did not altogether vse open instruction and admonition (as before he was woont) and therefore oftētimes in some priuate place or other, he would call his trusty friends together, & with earnest prayer and great lamentation passe away the time, so that by his vertuous instructions, being without any blemish of error, he conuerted a great number, which number (no doubt) had greatly encreased, had not the cruel storme of persecution bene.

The extremitie and force whereof, at the last so pursued this good father Rawlins, that hee looked euery houre to goe to prison: whereupon many of those which had receyued comfort by his instructions, did resort vnto hym, and by all meanes possible began to perswade him to shift for hymselfe, and to dispose hys goods by some reasonable order to the vse of his wyfe and children,* & by that meanes he should escape that daunger which was imminent ouer his head.

But Rawlins nothyng abashed for hys owne part, through the iniquity of the tyme, & at all nothyng mooued with these their fleshly perswasions, thanked them most hartily for their good will, and told them plainely, that hee had learned one good lesson touching the confessing & denial of Christ,* aduertising them, that if he vpon their perswasions should presume to deny his maister Christ, Christ in the last day would deny and vtterly condemne hym: and therfore (quoth he) I will by hys fauourable grace confes and beare witnes of him before men, that I may find him in euerlastyng lyfe.

Notwithstandyng which aunswer, his friends were very importunate with hym. Howbeit, father Rawlins continued still in his good purpose, so long till at the last he was taken by the Officers of the towne, as a man suspected of heresie: vpon which apprehension he was conuented before the B. of Landaffe that then was,* the sayd B. lying then at hys house besides Chepstow: by whome, after diuers combates and conflicts with him and his chaplains, this good father Rawlins was committed to prison in Chepstow. But this hys kepyng, whether it were by the Bishops meanes, because he would rid hys handes of hym, or through the fauour of hys keeper,* was not so seuer and extreme, but that (if he had so listed) hee myght haue escaped oftentimes.

But that notwithstandyng, hee continued still, in so much, that at the last he by the aforementioned Bishop was remooued from Chepstow to the castle of Cardiffe, where he continued by the space of one whole yeare. Duryng which tyme, this reporter resorted to him very often, with money and other reliefe from this reporters mother (who was a great fauourer of those that were in affliction in those dayes) and other of hys friends: which he receyued not without great thanks and prayses geuen to the name of God. And albeit that he was thus troubled and imprisoned, as ye haue heard, to hys owne vndoyng in this world, and to the vtter decay of his poore wyfe & children: yet was hys heart so set to the instruction and furtherance of other in the way of saluation, that he was neuer in quiet, but when he was perswading or exhorting such of hys familiar frends as commonly came vnto him.* In so much that on the Sondayes and other tymes of laisure, when his friends came to visite hym, hee would passe away the tyme in prayer and exhortations, admonishyng them alwayes to beware of false Prophets which come in sheeps clothyng.

Now when hee had continued in Cardiffe Castle by the space of one whole yeare (as I haue sayde) the tyme of hys further triall was at hand. Whereupon,* the aforementioned Bishop of Landaffe caused him to be broughte agayne from the castle of Cardiffe vnto his owne house besides Chepstow, & whilest he continued there, y^e Bishoppe assayed many wayes howe to reduce him to some conformitie. But when all meanes eyther by theyr threatning wordes or flattering promises were to no purpose: the Byshoppe willed him to aduise and be at a full poynte with hymselfe, eyther to recant hys opinions, or els to abide the rigor of the lawe, and thereupon gaue him a day of determination.

Which day beyng come, the Bishop with hys Chaplaynes went into his chappell,* not without a great number of other by dwellers, that came to behold the manner of their doyngs. When the Bishop with his retinue were placed in order, poore Rawlins was brought before them. The Bishop after great deliberation in addressyng hymselfe (as it seemed) and silence forewarned to the rest that were there present, vsed a long kynd of talke to him, declaring the cause of hys sendyng for, which was, for that hee was a man well knowen to hold hereticall opinions, and that through his instruction many were led into blynd error. In the end he exhorted hym to consider hys owne estate wherein he stood: for (said the B.) Rawlins, you haue bene oftentimes since your first trouble, both here in my house,* and els where bene trauailed withal touching your opinions, and that notwithstanding ye seeme altogether obstinate and wilfull.

Now hereupon we thought good to sende for you, to see if there were any conformity in you: so that the matter is come to this poynt, that if you shall shew your selfe repentant for that which you haue done both agaynst God and the princes law, we are ready to vse fauour towards you: but if by no meanes we can perswade with you touching your reformation, we are minded at this time to minister the law vnto you, and therefore aduise your self what you will do.

When the B. had made an ende of his long tale, this good father Rawlins spake very boldly to him, and sayd:* My Lord. I thanke God I am a christian mā, and I hold no opinions contrary to the word of God, & if I do, I desire to be reformed out of the worde of God, as a christian mā ought to be: many mo words in like sort wer betwene the B. & Raulins, which this reporter doth not wel remēber. But in the end when Rawlins would in no wyse recant his opinions, the B. told him plainly, y^t he must proceed against him by y^e law, & condemn him as an heretike.

Proceed in your law a Gods name said Rawlins, but for an heretike you shal neuer condemn me while y^e world standeth.* But (said the B. to his company) before we proceed any further with hym, let vs pray vnto God that he would send some sparke of grace vppon him, (meanynge Rawlins) & it may so chance that God through our prayer will here turne and conuert his heart. When Rawlins heard the B. say so, Ah my Lord, quoth he, now you deale well and like a godly Bish. and I thanke you most hartily for your great charity and gentlenes. Christ saith: where as two or three be gathered in my name, I will be in the midst of them, and there be moe then two or three of you. Now if it be so that your request be godly and lawfull, and that that you pray as ye should pray, without doubt God will heare you. And therefore my Lord goe to, doe you praye Page 1558 to your God,* and I wil pray to my God, I know that my God will both heare my prayer, and performe my desire.

By and by the B. with his company fell to praier. And Rawlins turning himselfe to a pew that stood somewhat neare him,* fell downe vpon his knees couering hys face with his handes: and when they had praied a while, the B. with his company arose from prayer. And then also arose Rawlins, and came before the Bishop.

Then said the B. Now Rawlins▪ how is it with thee? wilt thou reuoke thy opinions, or no? Surely (said Rawlins) my Lorde, Rawlins you lefte me, and Rawlins you finde me, and by Gods grace Rawlins I will continue.* Certainly if your petitions had bene iust and lawefull, God woulde haue hearde them: but you honor a false God and pray not as ye should pray, and therfore hath not God graunted your desire: But I am one poore simple man as you see, and God hath heard my complaint, and I trust he will strengthen me in his owne cause.

The Bishop when he perceiued that this hipocrisie of theirs tooke none effect, then with hot wordes he reprovved him, and forthwith was ready to read tht sentence. Howbeit vppon some aduise geuen to him by his Chapleynes that were there present, hee thought best firste to haue a masse, thinking that in deed by so doing, some wonderfull worke should be wrought in Rawlins, and thereuppon a priest began Masse.

In the meane tyme poore Rawlins betooke himselfe to prayer in a secret place therby, vntill such time as the priest came to the Sacring (as they terme it) whiche is a principall poynt of theyr Idolatry. When Rawlins hearde the Sacring bell ring (as the vse was) he rose out of hys place and came to the Qu•ere doore, and there standing a while, turned himselfe to the people, speaking these wordes: good people,* if there be any Brethren amongst you, or at the least if there be but one Brother amongst you, the same one beare witnesse at the daye of iudgement, that I bowe not to this Idoll, meaning the Host that the Priest held ouer his head.

The Masse being ended, Rawlins eftsoones was called for agayne.* To whom the Bishop vsed many perswasions: but the blessed man continued stedfast in his former profession, that the Bishops talke was altogether in vayne, and to no purpose. Wherupon the Bishop caused the definitiue sentēce to be read. Which being ended, Rawlins was dismissed, and from thence he was by the bishops commaundement caried agayn to Cardiffe, there to be put into the prison of y^e towne, called Cockmarell, a very darck lothsome, and most vile prison.

Rawlins in the meane while passed away the time in prayer, and chiefly in singing of Psalmes: which kynde of godly exercises he alwayes vsed, both at Cardiffe Castle & in all other places.

*Nowe, after hee hadde thus continued as Prisoner in Cockmarell Prison at Cardiffe (as is aforesayde) a good space, about three weekes before the daye wherein hee suffered, the head Officers of the Towne that had the charge of his execution, were determined to burne hym, because they woulde be sooner ryd of hym: hauing not in deede a writ of executiō awarded, as by the law they should haue.

Whereuppon one Henrye Lewes the Recorder of the Towne that then was, seeyng that they wente aboute to burne hym without any warrant by writ, came to them, and told them, that if they did burne hym before they had the writte De haereticis comburendis, the Wyfe of the sayde Rawlins would vpon iust cause by law, call theyr doings into question.

Immediately vppon this aduertisement, they sent to London for the writ aboue named: vpon the receipt wherof they made some speede to the execution of the sayd Raulins.* Nowe when the daye was come, wherein the good father should performe and accomplish the last Act of thys his worthy conflict, he was the night before wylled to prepare himselfe.

Now, when he perceiued his time no lesse neare then it was reported vnto hym, he sent forthwith to hys Wyfe, and willed her by the messēger that in any wise she should make readye,* and send vnto him his wedding Garment, meaning a Shyrt, whiche afterwarde hee was burned in. Which request or rather commaundement of his, his wife with great sorow and grieve of hart did performe, and early in the morninge did send it him, whiche he receiued moste gladly and ioyfully.

Nowe whē the houre of his execution was come, this good and constant father Raulins was brought out of prison, hauing on his body the long Shyrt, Whiche (as you heard before) he called his wedding garment, and an olde Russet coate whiche he was wont to weare. Besides this, he had vpon his legges an olde payre of leather Buskins which he had vsed long afore. And thus being brought out of the prison (as I haue sayd) he was accompanied or rather garded with a great company of Billes and gleaues: * which sight when he behelde: Alas (quoth he) what meaneth all this? All this needed not. By Gods grace I wyll not start away: but I with all my hart & minde geue vnto God most harty thanks that he hath made me worthy to abide all this for his holy names sake.

So he came to a place in his waye where as his poore wife and children stode weeping and makynge greate lamentation: the suddain sight of whom so pierced his hart, that the very teares trickled downe his face. * But he soone after, as though he had misliked this infirmity of his flesh, began to be as it were altogether angry with himselfe: In so muche that in striking his brest with his hand▪ he vsed these wordes: Ah flesh, stayest thou me so? wouldest thou fayne preuayle? Well, I tell thee doe what thou canst, thou shalt not, by Gods grace, haue the victory. * By this tyme this poore innocent came to y^e very altar of his sacrifice (I meane the place appoynted for his death) and there found a stake ready set vp, with some wood toward the making of the fire. Which when he behelde, he sette for7ard hymselfe very boldly: but in going toward y^e stake he fell down vpon his knees and kissed the ground, & in rising agayn, the earth a litle sticking on his nose, he said these wordes: Earth vnto earth, and dust vnto dust, thou art my mother, and vnto thee I shall returne. Then went he chearfully & very ioyfully, and set his backe close vnto the stake, & when he had stood there a while, he cast his eye vpon this Reporter, * & called him vnto him, and sayd: I feele a great fighting betwene the flesh and the spirit, & the flesh would very fayne haue his swinge, and therefore I pray you when you see me any thing tempted, hold your finger vp to me, and I trust I shall remember my selfe.

As he was thus standing with his back close vnto the stake, a Smith came with a great chayne of yron: whom when he saw, he cast vp his hand with a loude voice, and gaue God great thanks. Then the Smith cast the chayne about him, and as he was making it fast on the other syde, * Rawlins sayde vnto him, I pray you good frend knocke in the chayne fast, for it may be that the fleshe would striue mightely: but God of thy great mercy geue me strength & pacience to abide the extremity.

Nowe when the Smyth had made hym sure to the stake, the officers beganne to lay on more woode, with a litle strawe and Reede: wherein the good old man was no lesse occupied then the best: * for as far as he could reach his handes, he would plucke the strawe and Reede, and lay it about hym in places moste conuenient for his speedy dispatche. Which thing he did with suche a chearefull countenance and familiar gesture, that al men there present were in a maner astonyed.

Thus when all thynges were readye, so that there lacked nothyng but the putting to of the fire, directly ouer against the stake in the face of Rawlins, there was a standing erected, * whereon stept vp a Priest addressing hym selfe to speake to the people, which were many in number, because it was market day. Whē Rawlins perceiued him, and considered the cause of his comming, he reached a litle straw vnto him, and made two litle stayes, & set them vnder his elbowes. Then went the priest forward in his sermon, wherin he spake of many thinges touching y^e authoritie of the church of Rome. In the meane time Rawlins gaue such good care and intention, that he seemed nothing at all moued or disquieted. At the last the priest came to the sacrament of the altar, and there he began to inuey against Rawlins opinions: in which his inuection he cited the common place of Scripture, and therupon made a Clerklye interpretation.

Now when Rawlins perceyued that he went aboute not onely to preach and teach the people false doctrine, but also to confirme it by Scripture, he suddenly starte vp, and beckened his hands to the people, saying twise: Come hither good people, & heare not a false prophet preaching: and then sayd vnto the preacher: Ah thou naughty hypocrite, doest thou presume to proue thy false doctrine by Scripture? Looke in the text what foloweth: dyd not Christ say: Doo this in the remembraunce of me▪^{*} After which wordes the Priest being rather amazed then interrupted, forthwith held his peace.

Then some that stood by cryed out, Put fire, set to fire: which being set to, the strawe and Reede by and by caste vp both a great and suddaine flame. In the which flame this good & blessed man bathed his handes so long, vntill such time as the sinewes shronke, and the fatte dropped away, sauing that once he did, as it were, wipe his face with one of them. Al this while, which was somewhat long, he cryed with a loude voyce: O Lorde receiue my soule: O Page 1559

^{*}¶The burning of Raulins, Martyr.

^{} Lord receiue my spirit, vntill he could not opē his mouth. At the laste the extremitye of the fire was so vehement agaynst his legges,^{} that they were consumed almost before the rest of his body was burned: whiche made the whole body fall ouer the chayne into the fire sooner then it would haue done. During which tyme of his burning it can not be sayd, that he suffered or felt any great paine, considering that not without his perfect memory he aboad both quietly and paciently, euen vnto the departing of his life. Thus died this godly and old man Rawlins for the testimony of Gods truth, being now rewarded, no doubt, w^t the crown of euerlasting life.

It is recorded furthermore of the sayd good father Raulins by this Reporter, that as he was going to his death, and standing at the stake,^{*} he seemed in a maner to be altered in nature. For wheras before he was wont to go stooping, or rather crooked, through the infirmity of age, hauing a sad countenance and a very feeble complexion, and withall very soft in speech and gesture.

Now he went and stretched vppe himselfe, not onelye bolt vpight, but also bare withall a most pleasant and cōfortable countenaunce, not without great courage and audacity both in speache and behaiour. He had (of whiche thing I shoulde haue spoken before) about his head a kerchiefe. The heares of his head (somewhat appearing beneath his kerchiefe) and also of his beard were more inclined to white then to gray: whiche gaue such a shewe and countenaunce to his whole person, that he semed to be altogether angelicall.

^{*}It is also sayd by this Reporter, that a litle before the fire flashed vp to his body (as ye haue heard) many of his frendes came to him, and tooke him by the hand, amongst whome, the Reporter of this story held him so long by the hand, till the flame of the fire rose, and forced them to sunder. In the meane time the priest of whome I spake afore, cryed out, and sayd, that it was not lawfull for any man to take him by the hand, because he was an hereticke, and cōdemned by the Church. The chiefe cause of his trouble, was his opinion touching the sacrament of the altar. He was at the time of his death, of the age of threescore yeares or thereaboutes.

The summe of the wordes spoken by Queene Mary to certayne of her Counsellers. March. 28. an. 1555. touching the restitution of Abbey landes.

BEfore I passe ouer this moneth of Marche, I can not but leaue a litle memorandum of the wordes or consultation of Queene Mary, vsed to certayne of the Counsel, the eight and twenty day of the sayd month of March, touching the restoring agayne of the Abbey landes. Who after she had called vnto her presence foure of her priuie Counsell, the day and Moneth aforesayd: the names of whiche Counsellers were these:

- 1 William Lord Marques of Winchester high treasurer of England.*
- 2 Syr Robert Rochester knight, the queenes Controller.
- 3 Syr William Peter knight, Secretary.
- 4 Syr Fraunces Inglefielde knight, Mayster of Wardes.

The sayde Queene Mary inferred these wordes: the principall effecte and summe whereof here foloweth.* You are here of our Counsell, and we haue willed you to be called vnto vs, to the entent ye might heare of me my conscience, and the resolution of my mind, cōcerning the lands & possessions as well of Monasteries, as other Churches whatsoever being now presently in my possession.

Firste, I doe consider, that the sayd landes were taken awaye from the Churches aforesayde, in time of schisme, and that by vnlawfull meanes, suche as are contrary both to the law of God and of the Church.* For the which cause my conscience doeth not suffer mee to deteyne them: and therefore I here expressly refuse eyther to clayme or to retayne the sayde landes for mine, but with all my hart, freely, and willingly without all paction or condition, here and before God I doe surrender and relinquishe the sayde landes and possessions or inheritaunces what so euer,* and doe renounce the same with this minde and purpose, that order and disposition thereof may be taken, as shall seeme best liking to our most holy Lord the Pope, or els his Legate the Lord Cardinall, to the honour of God and wealth of this our Realme.

And albeit you may obiect to me agayne, that considering the state of my kingdome, the dignity thereof, and my Crowne Imperiall can not be honorably mainteined and furnished without the possessions aforesayde: yet notwithstanding I set more by the saluation of my soule, then by x. kingdomes, and therefore the sayd possessions I vtterly refuse here to hold after that sort and title, and geue most hartly thanks to almighty God, which hath geuen me an husband likewise minded, with no lesse good affection in thys behalfe, then I am my selfe,

Wherefore I charge and commaund, that my Chauncellour (with whom I haue conferred my minde in thys matter before) and you foure,* to morow together do resort to the most reuerend Lord Legate, and doe signify to him the premises in my name, and geue your attendaunce vpon him for the more full declaration of the state of my kingdome, and of the foresayd possessions accordinglye, as you your selues do vnderstand the matter, and can inform him in the same.

This Intimation being geuen by the Queene, firste vnto the Counsellours, and then comming to the Cardinals hand, he drawing out a copy therof in Latine, sēt the same to the Pope: which copy drawne into Latine, & comming afterwarde to my hand, I haue thus translated into English, as ye haue heard.

Furthermore here by the way is to be vnderstand, that in the moneth before, which was February, and in the xix. day of the sayd moneth, the Bishop of Ely,* with the Lorde Mountacute, and seuen score horse, were sent as ambassadours from the king and Queene vnto Rome. For what cause, in story it is not expressed, but by coniecture it maye be wel supposed to be for the same cause of Abbey lands, as by the sequele therof may probably appeare.

For it was not long after, but the Pope did sette foorth in Print a Bull of Excommunication for all maner suche persons, without exception, as kept any of the Church or Abbey landes: by vertue of which Bull,* the Pope excommunicated as well all such as had any of the Church or Abbey lands, as also all such Princes, Bishops, & noble men. Iustices of peace, and other in office, who had not, or did not forthwith put the same Bull in execution. Albeit this execution (God be thanked) yet to this day was neuer put in practise.

Wherein agayne is to be obserued an other Catholick fetch, not vnwoorthy perchaunce of marking. For where this kinde of Catholickes by rigour and force may ouermayster, they spare for no coste, but laye on loades enough. This well appeared,* & still doeth appeare in burnyng the poore pacient christiās, whō because they see to be destitute of power and strength to resiste them, and contente wyth patience to receiue what so euer is put vnto them, there they play the Lions, and make no end of burning and persecutinge. But where they spye themselues to bee ouermatched, or feare to receiue a foyle in presuming too farre, there they keepe in, and can stay the executiō of their lawes and Bulles, be they neuer so Apostolicall, tyll they spye their time cōuenient for theyr purpose, as in this case is euident Page 1560 for all the world to see.*

For notwithstanding that the Popes Bull commyng downe with full authority for restitution of Abbey landes, did so thunder out most terrible excōmunication, not only agaynst them which deteined any such landes,* but also agaynste all other that did not see the Popes commaundement to be executed, yet neyther Winchester nor any of all the Popes Clergye woulde greatlye styrrer in that matter, perceiuing the Nobility to be too strong for them to match withall, and therefore were contented to let the case fall, or at least to staye for a time, while time might better serue them.

Yea, and moreouer vnder a crafty pretense, that the nobility and men of landes at the first commyng out of the Bull,* should not be exasperate too much against them, they subtly abused the Pulpites, and dissembled with the people, affirming that the sayde Popes late Bull sette forth in Print for restitution of Abbey landes, was not meant for England, but for other forreigne countries where in very deed the meaning of that Bull was onely for England, & no country els, as both by this intimatiō of Queene Mary here mentioned, and by many other coniectures, and also by Maister Fecknams Ballet of Caueat emptor, may appeare.* Whereby it is easie for all men to vnderstand what the purpose of those men was to doe, if tyme, which they obserued, might haue serued theyr deuotiō. But to let this matter passe of the Popes Bull, the time nowe serueth to entreat of Pope Iulius death, for so much as he made hys end about the latter end of this foresayd moneth of March. *Concerning the deedes and acts of which Pope, to make a full declaratīō, it were not so much tedious to the reader, as horrible to all good eares. *Under this Iulius florished the Archb. of Beneuentanus, a Florentine, named Iohannes a Casa, Deane of the Popes Chamber, & chiefe Legate to the Uenetians: who well declaring the fruit of that fylthy See, so farre forgat both honesty and nature, that hee shamed not onely to play the filthie Sodomite himselfe, & to boast openly of the same: but also tooke vpon hym most impudently in Italian metre, to al mens eares, to set forth the prayse & commendation of that beastly iniquity, saying that he himselfe neuer vsed other: & this booke was prynted at Uenice, by one Troianus Nauus: & yet the Pope could suffer this so great iniquity and shameles beastlines, euen vnder his nose in his owne chāber, which could not abide the true doctrine of Christ in Christian bookes.

Amonges other pranks and deedes of this foresayde Pope, in his Iubilee, and in the Sinode of Trent, and in cōfirming of the Idole of Lauretane, this is also reported of him in his life, that he delighted greatly in Porkefleshe and Peacockes. Upon a tyme when he was admonished of his Phisition to abstayne from all Swynes fleshe, for that it was noysome for his Goute, and yet would not folow his counsell: the Phisition afterward gaue warnyng to his steward or orderer of his diet, that he shoulde set no more Porkeflesh before hym.

Wherupon when the Pope perceyued the sayd Porke flesh to be lacking in his accustomed seruice: where (sayde he) is my Porke? * And when his Steward had aunswered that his Phisition had forbidden anye Porke to be serued: thē the Pope bursting out in great rage, said in these wordes: Bring me, sayd he, my Porkefleshe Al dispetto di Dio• That is to to say in English, *In the despyght of Cod.

At an other time, he sitting at dinner, poynting to a Peacocke vpon his table, which he had not touched, keepe sayd he, this colde Peacocke for me agaynst supper, and let me sup in the gardē, for I shall haue gwestes. So whē supper came, and amongst other hot Peacockes, he sawe not his colde Peacocke brought to his table: y^e Pope after hys wonted maner, most horribly blaspheming God, fell into an extreme rage. * &c. Whereupon one of his Cardinals sitting by, desired him saying: Let not your holinesse, I pray you, be so moued with a matter of so small weight. Then this Iulius the Pope answering agayne: What, sayd he, if God was so angrie for one apple, that he cast our first parents out of Paradise for the same, * why may not I beyng his vicar, be angry thē for a Peacocke, sithens a Peacocke is a greater matter then an apple? Beholde here good reader, by this Pope, the holines of that blasphemous See: and yet thou shalt see here, what affectiō was borne vnto this Pope here in England, by the Diriges, Hearses, and Funerals cōmaunded to be had and celebrated in all churches by the Queene and her Counsell, as may appeare by the copy of theyr letters here folowing.

¶A Letter from the Byshop of Winchester (being Lord Chauncellour) vnto Boner Byshop of London, touching the celebrating of the Popes Funeralls.

AFTER my harty commendations to your good Lordship: * The king and Queenes Maiesties hauing certayne knowledge of the death of the Popes holinesse, thought good there should be as well solemne Obsequies sayd for him throughout the Realme, as also these prayers (whiche I sende you herein enclosed) vsed at Masse tymes in all places at this tyme of vacation, and therefore willed me to signifye theyr pleasures vnto you in this behalfe: that thereupon ye might proceede to the full accomplismente thereof by putting the same in due execution within your owne Diocesse, and sending worde to the rest of the Byshoys to do the like in theyrs.

Thus doubting not but that your Lordship will vse such diligence in this matter at this time, as shall be necessary, I bid your Lordship hartily well to fare.

From my house at Assher, the tenth of Aprill. 1555.

Your assured frend and brother, Stephanus Winton. Chancel.

¶Prayers commaunded to be vsed in the funerall Masses for the Pope, Apostolica sede vacante.

SVpplici te domine humilitate deposcimus,* vt tua immensa pietas sacrosanctae Romanae ecclesiae concedat pontificem illum, qui & pro in nos studio semper tibi gratus, & tuo populo pro salubri regimine sit assidue ad gloriam tui nominis veneradus, per dominum nostrum.

Secreta.

TVae nobis domine pietatis abundantia indulgeat, vt gratum maiestati tuae pontificem sanctae maris Ecclesiae regimini praeesse gaudeamus per dominum nostrum.

Post Communionem.

PReciosi corporis & sanguinis tui domine sacramēto refectos, mirifica tuae maiestatis gratia de illius summi pontificis assūptione laetificet, qui & plebem tuam virtutibus instruat,*& fidelium mentes, spiritualium aromatum odore perfundat, per dominum nostrum.

Upon this commaundement, on wednesday in Easter weeke there were Hearses set vp, & Diriges song for the sayd Iulius in diuers places. At which time it chaunced a woman to come into S. Magnus church at the bridgefoot in Londō, & there seing an Hearse & other preparation,* asked what it meant: and other that stood by, said, that it was for the Pope, and that shee must pray for him. Nay (quoth shee) that will I not, for he needeth not my prayer: and seing he coulde forgeue vs all our sinnes, I am sure hee is cleane himselfe: therefore I neede not to pray for him. She was heard speake these wordes of certayne that stode by: which by & by caried her vnto the Cage at Londō bridge. and bade her coole her selfe there.

¶A spectacle for all Christians to beholde and to take heed of the Popes blasphemous Doctrine.

BY many and sundry wayes almighty God hath admonished men of all nations in these our latter yeares to embrace,* and not violently to repugne agaynst the light of his Gospell, as first by preaching of his word, secondly, by the bloud of the Martyrs, and thirdly, by terrible examples shewed from time to time vpon his Aduersaries. In the number of whom commeth here to be remembred the notable workyng of Goddes hand vpon a certayne Priest in Kent named Nightingall, Parson of Crondall besides Caunterbury: who vpon Shrouesonday, whych was about the third day of the sayde Moneth of Marche, and yeare of our Lord aforesayd, reioycing belike not a little at this alteration of Religion, beganne to make a Sermon to his Parishioners, taking his Theame out of the wordes of S. Iohn: He that sayth, he hath no sinne, is a lyer,and the trueth is not in hym. &c. And so vpon the same verye impertinently declared to them all suche Articles as were set forth by the Popes authority, and by the commaundement of the Byshoppes of this Realme: saying moreouer vnto the people in this wise: Now Maysters and neighbors reioyce and be mery, for the prodigall sonne is come home. For I knowe that the most part of you be as I am: for I know your hartes well enough. And I shall tell you what hath happened in this weeke past. I was before my Lord Cardinall Pooles grace, & he hath made me as clean from sinne, as I was at the fontstone: & on Thursday last being before him, he hath appointed me to notify (I thank him for it) the same vnto you. And I wyll tell you what it is. And so reading the Popes Bull of pardon that was sent into Englande, he sayde, he thanked God that euer he had liued to see that day: adding moreouer that he beleueed, that by the vertue of that Bull he was as cleane from sinne, as that night that he was borne: and immediately Page 1561

The Description of a Popish Priest, who when he had taken away the glory and office of Christ, fell downe sodenly, and dyed.

* vpon the same fel sodenly down out of the Pulpit, and neuer stirred hand nor foote, and so lay he. Testified by Rob. Austen of Cartham, which both heard and saw the same, & is witnessed also by the whole country round about.

¶Iohn Awcocke.

*IN the Moneth of Aprill, and the second day of the same Moneth, dyed in prison Iohn Awcocke, who after was buried in the fieldes, as the maner of the Papistes was to deny theyr christian buriall to such as dyed out of their popish Antichristian Church.

Now forasmuch as hauing passed the month of March, we are entred into the mouth of Aprill, so set downe in order out of publicke Recordes, what happened in the sayde Moneth, here followeth to be noted: That the 1. day of Aprill Ann. 1555. A Letter was sent to the Shiriffe of kent to apprehend Thomas Wodgat and William Maynard, for preaching secretly, and to send them vp to the Counsel.

The 7. day of the sayde Moneth an other Letter to the sayd Shiriffe for the apprehension of one Harwicke who went about with a boy with him preaching from place to place.

The 15. of Aprill, a letter was directed to Syr Nicholas Hare, and Syr Thomas Cornewallis, willing them to examine M. Flower alias Braunche what he meant to weare about his neck written, Deum time, Idolum fuge, and whō els he knew to weare the like praying also to speake to Boner Byshop of London speedely to proceed agaynst him for his Religion according to the lawes: and that the Iustices of Peace of Middlesex should likewise proceed agaynst him for shedding of bloud in the Church according to the statute, so as if he continue his opinion he might be executed at the farthest by the latter end of this weeke, and that his right hand be the day before his execution, or the same day stricken off.

The 22. of Aprill there was a like letter sent to the Iustices of peace of Middlesex, with a writ for the executiō of the sayd Flower, commaunding them to see his hand striken of before his burning.

The 29. of Aprill M. Robert Hornebey seruant then to the Lady Elizabeth was conuented before the Counsell for his religion: and standing constantly to the trueth, notwithstanding theyr threatens and other perswasions, was therfore committed to the Marshalsea.

¶A declaration of the life, examination, and burning of George Marsh, who suffered most constant Martyrdome for the profession of the Gospell of Christ, at Winchester, the 24. day of Aprill. Ann. 1555.

The sayd George Marshe was borne in the Parishe of Deane,* in the Countye of Lancaster, and was well brought vp in learning and honest trade of liuing by hys Parentes, who afterwarde about the xxv. yeare of hys age, tooke to wife an honest mayden of the countrey, wyth whom he continued, earning theyr liuing vpon a Farme, hauing children betweene them lawefully begotten;* and then God takinge his wyfe out of thys Worlde, he beyng most desirous of godly studyes, (leauing his houshold and children in good order) went vnto the vniuersity of Cambridge, where he studyed, and much encreased in learning and godly vertues, & was a minister of Gods holy worde and Sacramentes,* and for a while was Curate to Laurence Saunders, as he himselfe reporteth. In whiche condition of life, he continued for a space, earnestly setting forth Gods true Religion, to the defacing of Antechristes false doctrine, by his Godly Readinges and Sermons, as well there and in the Parishe of Deane, or els where in Lanckeshyre.

Whereupon at length, by detection of certayne aduersaries he was apprehēded, & kept in close prison by George Cotes then Byshoppe of Chester,* in strayght Prison in Chester, within the precincte of the Byshoppes house, about the space of foure Monethes, being not permitted to haue reliefe and comfort of his frendes: but charge beyng geuen vnto the Porter, to marke who they were that asked for him, and to signify theyr names vnto the Byshop, as by the particular descriptiō of his story, testified and recorded with his own pen, more euidently may appeare in the processe hereunder folowing.

¶The handling, entreating, and examination of George Marsh, being sent first by the Earle of Derby to Doctor Cotes Byshop of Chester.

ON the monday before Palme Sonday, which was the xij. day of March,* it was told me at my mothers house that Rog. Wrinstone, with other of M. Bartōs seruants did make diligent search for me in Bolton, and when they perceiued that I was not there, they gaue strait charge to Roger Ward and Rob. Marsh, to finde & bring me to M. Barton the day next folowing, with others, to be brought before the honourable Earle of Darby, to be examined in matters of Religion. &c.

I knowing by this relatiō of diuers of my frends, was diuersly affected, my mother, and other my frendes aduertising me to flee and to auoid the perill, which thing I had intended afore after a weeke then nexte ensuing, if thys in the meane while had not chaunced, seeing, that if I were takē, and would not recant in matters of religion (as they thought I would not, and as God strengthening and assisting me with his holy spirit I neuer wyll) it woulde not onely haue put thē to great sorow, heauines, & losses, with costes and charges, to theyr shame & rebuke in this world, but also mine owne selfe after troubles and paynfull prisonment, vnto shamefull death.

This considered,* they aduised me & coūselled me to depart & flie y^e coutry, as I had entended to haue done, if this had not happened. To whose coūsel my weak flesh would gladly haue cōsented, but my spirit did not fully agree: thin^kking and saying thus to my selfe, that if I fled so away, it would be thought, reported, and sayd, that I did not onely flie the countrey and my nearest and dearest frendes: but much rather from Christes holy worde, according as these yeares past I had with my hart, or at least with mine ou•ward liuing professed, and with my mouth & word taught, according to the small talent geuen me of the Lord. I being thus with theyr aduise & coūsell, and the cogitations & counselles of mine owne minde drawne, as it were diuers wayes, went from my mothers house, saying, I woulde come agayne at euening.

In the meane time I ceased not by earnest prayer to aske and seeke counsell of God (who is the geuer of al good gyftes) and of other my frendes, whose godly iudgemētes and knowledge I much trusted vnto. After this, I mette with one of my sayd frends on Deane Moore, about sunne goyng downe: and after we had consulted together of my busines, not without harty prayer kneeling on our knees, we departed, I not fully determinyng what to doe, but taking my leaue with my frende sayde I doubted not but God (according as our prayer and trust was) would geue me such wisdom and counsell, as should be most to hys honor and glory, the profite of my neighbors and brethren in the worlde, and ob•eining of mine eternall saluation by Christ in heauen.

This done, I returned to my mothers house agayne, where had bene diuers of M. Bartons seruantes seekyng after me: who when they could not finde me,* straitly charged my brother and William Marsh to seek me that night, and to bring me to Smethehilles the next day: who beyng Page 1562 so charged were gone to seeke me in Adderton, or elsewhere I know not. Thus intending afore to haue bene all night with my mother, but thē cōsidering that my taryng there would disquiet her with her householde, I departed from thence,* and went beyond Deane Church, and there taried all night with an old frend of mine, taking ill rest, and consulting much with my selfe of my trouble.

So at my first awaking, one came to me from a faythfull frend of mine with letters, which I neuer read, nor yet looked on, who sayd this: My frendes aduise was that I should in no wise flie, but abide & boldly confesse the fayth of Iesus Christ. At whose wordes I was so confirmed & established in my conscience, that from thenceforth I consulted no more, whether was better to flie or to tarye, but was at a poynt with my selfe, that I woulde not flye, but go to maister Barton, who did seeke for me, and there present my selfe, and patiently beare suche crosse, as it shoulde please God to lay vpon my shoulders. Wherupō my mind and conscience afore being much vnquieted and troubled, was now mery and in quiet estate.

So betimes in the morning I arose, and after I had sayd the English Letany (as my custome was) with other prayers kneeling on my knees by my frendes beddeside, I prepared my selfe to goe towarde Smethehilles: and as I was going thitherward, I went into the houses of Harry Widdowes,* of my mother in law, of Rafe Yeton, and of the wife of Thomas Richardsonne, desiring them to pray for me, and haue me commended to all my frendes, and to comfort my mother, and be good to my litle children, for (as I supposed) they should not see my face any more, before y^e last day: & so tooke my leaue of thē not without teares shed on both parties,* and came to Smethehilles about 9. of the clocke, & presented my selfe afore M. Barton: who shewed me a letter from the Earle of Darby, wherin he was commaunded to send me with others to Latham.

Wherupon he charged my brother and William Marsh, to bring and deliuer me the next day, by x. of the clocke before the sayd Earle or his Counsell. I made earnest sute with other speciall frendes, which I had there at the same time, to M. Barton, that he woulde take some one of them or them all bound by recognisaunce or otherwise for mine appearing before the sayd Earle or his sayd Counsell, that my brother & William Marsh might be at home, because it was the chiefest time of seding, & their ploughes could not go if they wer not at home: but nothing could be obtained.

*So we went to my mothers, and there I dyned & shifted part of my clothes, and so praying, took my leaue of my mother, the wife of Richard Marsh, and both theyr householdes, they and I both weping, & so departed from them, and went toward Latham, and were al night a mile and a halfe on this side Latham. So the next daye whiche was Wednesday, we arose, prayd, & came to Latham betimes, and taryed there till foure of the clocke at afternoone.

Thē was I called by Roger Mckinson, to come to my Lord and his counsell, & so I was brought into the chamber of presence, where was present Syr William Nores, Syr Pierce Alee,* Mayster Shereburne the Parson of Grapenhall, mayster More, with others. Where when I had taryed a litle while, my Lord turned him toward me, and asked what was my name. I aunswered Marsh.

Then he asked whether I was one of those that sowed euill seed and dissention amongst the people. Which thing I denied, desiring to know mine accusers, and what could be layd agaynst me:* but that I could not know.

Then sayd he, he would with his counsell examine me themselues, & asked me whether I was a priest. I sayd no. Then he asked me, what had bene my liuing? I aunswered, I was a Minister, serued a Cure, and taught a schole. Then sayd my Lord to his Counsell, this is a wonderfull thing. Afore he sayd he was no Priest, and now he confesseth himselfe to be one. I aunswered, by the lawes now vsed in this Realme (as farre as I do know) I am none.

Then they asked me who gaue me orders, or whether I had taken any at all? I aunswered, I receiued orders of the Bishops of London and Lincolne.

Then sayd they one to an other, those be of these new heretickes, and asked me what acquayntaunce I had with them? I aunswered, I neuer sawe them, but at the tyme when I receiued orders.

They asked me how long I had bene Curate, & whether I had ministred with a good conscience? I aunswered I had bene Curate but one yere, and had ministred with a good conscience, I thanked God, and if the Lawes of the Realme, would haue suffered me, I would haue ministred still:* & if the lawes at any time hereafter woulde suffer me to minister after that sort, I would minister agayne.

Whereat they murmured: and the person of Grapnall sayd: this last Communion was the most deuilshe thing that euer was deuised. Then they asked me what my beliefe was.

I answered, I beleued in God the Father, the Sonne & the holy Ghost, according as the Scriptures of the olde and new testament do teach and according as the 4. Symboles, or Creedes, that is to wit, the Creed commonly called Apostolorum, the Creed of Nice Councell, of Athanasius and of Austen, and Ambrose do teach.

And after a few wordes, the parson of Grapnall sayd: but what is thy beliefe in the Sacrament of the altar?

I aunswered, I beleued that whosoeuer, according to Christes institution,* dyd receyue the holye Sacrament of Christes body and bloud, did eate and drinke Christes body and bloud with all the benefites of his death and resurrection to their eternall saluation? for Christ (sayd I) is euer present with his sacrament.

Then asked they me, whether the bread and wyne, by the vertue of the wordes pronounced of the Priest, were chaunged into the flesh and bloud of Christ, and that the sacrament, whether it were receiued or reserued, was the ve|ry body of Christ?

Wherunto I made aunswere,* I knew no further then I had shewed already. For my knowledge is vnperfected (sayd I:) desiring thē not to aske me, such hard & vnprofitable questions, whereby to bring my body into daūger of death, & to sucke my bloud. Whereat they were not a little offended, saying they were no bloud succours, and intēded nothing to me but to make me a good Christian man.

So after many other questions, whiche I auoyded as well as I could, remembring the saying of Paule: Foolishe and vnlearned questions auoide, knowing they do but ingender strife: my Lord commaunded me to come to the boord, and gaue me pen and incke in my hand and commaunded me to write mine aunsweres to the questions of the Sacrament aboue named: & I wrote as I had answered before.* Wherat he being much offended, cōmaunded me to write a more direct answere, saying, I should not chuse but do it.

Then I tooke the pen and wrote, that further I knew not. Whereat hee being sore greeued, after many threatnings, sayd I should be put to shamefull death like a traitor, with such other like words, and sometimes geuing me •ayre wordes, if I would turne and be conformable as other were, how glad he would be.

In conclusion, after much adoe, he commaunded me to Ward in a cold windy stone house,* where was little roome where I lay two nightes without any bed, sauing a fewe great canuasse tentclothes, and that done, I had a payre of sheetes, but no wollen clothes, & so cōtinued till Palm-sonday, occupying my selfe aswel as I could in meditatiō, prayer, & study, for no man could be suffered to come to me but my keeper twice a day when he brought me meat and drinke.

¶An other examination of G. Marsh before the Earle of Darby.

ON Palme sonday at after dinner I was sent for to my Lord and his counsell (sauing Syr William Nores, & Syr Pierce Alec were not then present in place) amongst whō was Syr Iohn Beram, & the Uicar of Prescot. So they examined me yet once agayne of the sacramēt.* And after I had communed aparte with the Uicare of Prescot a good space cōcerning that matter, he returned to my Lorde and his Counsell with me, saying: that aunswere which I had made before, and then did make (as it is aboue writtē) was sufficient for a beginner, and as one which did not professe a perfect knowledge in that matter, vntil such time as I had learned further.* Wherewith the Earle was very well pleased, saying hee doubted not, but by the meanes & help of the vicar of Prescot I would be conformable in other thinges. So after many fayre wordes he commaunded I should haue a bed, with fire, and libertye to goe amongst his seruantes, so that I would do no harme with my communication amongst them.

And so after much other communication, I departed, much more troubled in my spirit then afore, because I had not with more boldnes confessed Christ, but in such sort,* as mine aduersaries therby thought they should preuayle agaynst me: wherat I was much greued: For hytherto I went about as much as in me lay, to rid my self out of their handes, if by any meanes, without open denying of Christ and his word that could be done.

This considered, I cried more earnestly vnto God by prayer, desiring him to strengthen me with his holy spirit,* with boldnes to confesse him: and to deliuer me from their intising words, and that I were not spoyled through their Philosophy & deceitfull vanity after the traditions of men and ordinaunces of the world, and not after Christ.

Page 1563And so after a day or two I was sent for to y^e Uicar of Prescot, and the Parson of Grapnall: where our most cōmunication was concerning the masse: and he asked what offended me in the Masse. I aunswered the whole Masse did offend me,* first because it was in a straunge language, wherby the people were not edified, cōtrary to S. Paules doctrine, 1. Cor. 14. and because of the manifold and intolerable abuses & errors cōteined therin, contrary to Christs Priesthood and sacrifice.

Then they asked me in what place therof, and I named certayne places: which places they went about with gētle and farre sought interpretations to mitigate, saying those places were vnderstood farre otherwise then the wordes did purport, or then I did take them.

I answered, I did vnderstand thē as they did purport, & as theyr owne books do comment and glose vpon them.

*They sayd, Sacrificium or Oblatio did not in the Masse signify any thing els, then either a Sacrifice of prayse and thanksgeuing, or els a memoriall of a sacrifice or oblatiō. So they caused a Masse booke to be sent for, and shewed me where in some places of the Masse was written,*Sacrificium laudis. Whereto I aunswered, that it folowed not therfore that in all places it signified a sacrifice or oblation of prayse or thanksgeuing: and although it did, yet was not a sacrifice of prayse or thanksgeuing to bee offered for the sinnes of the people, for that did Christ by his owne Passion once offer on the Crosse: where the wordes of the Masse were that the Priest did offer an oblation and sacrifice for the sinnes and offences both of himselfe and of the people: for them that were dead, and for the saluatiō of the liuing: and that the commixion of the body and bloud of Christ was health both of body and soule.

The Uicare aunswered, that was to be vnderstanded of the commixion of Christes bodye and bloude with hys Church or people. So after much exhortatiō vnto me that I shoulde be conformable to the true Catholicke Churche (which as they ment, was the Romish Church) I departed, not consenting vnto them.

So within a day or twayne came to me Maister More bringing with him certayne Articles, whereunto Doctor Crome had consented and subscribed in the presence of certayne witnesses in the dayes of king Henrye the eight and willed me to read thē ouer,* & asked me whether I woulde consent and subscribe vnto those Articles: and after cōmunication had of one or two of the sayd Articles, I confessed playnly I would in no wise consent and subscribe to those Articles. for then I did against mine owne conscience: and so he departed.

So within a short space after, which was on sherethursday, the sayd Parson and Uicar sent for me agayn, saying, my lord would be at a short poynt with me: for if I would not consent and subscribe vnto 4. Articles drawne out of the articles aforesayd, I must go to prison strait wayes.

*The first was, whether the Masse nowe vsed in the church of England, was according to Christes institution, & with faith, reuerence and deuotion to be heard and sene?

The second whether the almighty by the wordes pronounced by the Priest, did chaunge the bread and wyne after the wordes of consecration, into the body and bloud of Christ, whether it were receiued or reserued?

*Thirdly, whether the laye people ought to receiue but vnder the forme of bread onely, and that the one kind was sufficient for them?

*Fourthly, whether cōfession to the Priest nowe vsed in England were godly and necessary?

These foure questions or articles they deliuered me in writing, and bad me goe to my chamber and subscribe my aunsweres with mine owne hand, and come agayne. So within one halfe houre, I came to them agayn, and deliuered them the questions with mine aunsweres.* The first I denied. The second I aunswered, as I did to my Lord afore, & as is aboue written. To the third I aunswered that the lay people by Christes institution ought to receiue vnder both kindes, & that it sufficeth not them to receiue vnder the one kinde onely. Fourthly▪ that though confession auricular were a commodious meane to instruct the rude people, yet was it not necessary nor commaunded of God.

They much exhorted me then to leaue mine opinions, saying I was much deceiued, vnderstanding the Scriptures amisse, and much counselled me to folow the Catholicke Church of Christ,* and to doe as other did. I aunswered, my fayth in Christ conceiued by his holy word I neyther could nor would deny, alter or chaūge, for any liuing creature whatsoever hee were, desiring them to speake to my Lord that during my life and imprisonment, my poore frendes might be suffred to relieue me with necessary thinges according to theyr powers, and so after much exhortation of them to do & beleue as the Catholicke Church did, we departed: I from thēceforth continuing in the Porters ward not comming forth of my chamber sauing at noone and night while I dined and supped.

Upon one of the Easter holydaies maister Shereburn and M. More sent for me perswading me muche to leaue mine opinions: * saying all the bringers vp and fauorers of that Religion had euill lucke, and were either put to death or in prison, and in daunger of life. Agayne, the fauorers of the Religion now vsed had wondrous good lucke, & prosperity in al thinges: with many other worldly reasons of mans wisdom, for as for the scriptures, Maister Shereburne confessed himselfe ignoraunt.

I aunswered that I beleued and leaned onelye to the Scriptures, * not iudging thinges by prosperity or aduersity: but they earnestly aduised me to refuse mine opinions, and not to let for any worldly shame.

I aunswered that that whiche I dyd, I did not for the auoyding of any worldly shame, saying: my soule and lyfe were dearer to me thē the auoiding of any worldly shame: neither yet did I it for any vayn prayse of the world, but in the reuerent feare of God.

Then Maister More questioned with me of receiuing the Sacrament vnder the one kinde. I sayd Christes institution was playne that all men shoulde drinke of the cup. Then he tolde me of the 24. of Luke, and the 20. of the Actes, where was but mention of breaking of bread onely: * wherof he gathered, that they receiued the Sacrament but vnder one kinde.

That I denied, saying: those places either did not speak of the celebration of the Lordes Supper, or els vnder the name of breaking bread, was signified and ment the receiuing of the Sacrament, both of the body & bloud of Christ, according to his institution. So after much communicatiō of that matter, M. Shereburne sayd it was great pity that I being a welfauored yoūg man, and one that might haue good liuing and do good, would so foolishly cast my selfe away, sticking so hard to such foolish opinions.

I aunswered as afore I had done to my Lorde and to his counsell, that my life, mother, children, brethren, sisters, and frendes, with other delightes of life, * were as deare & sweet vnto me as vnto any other man, and that I would be as loth to lose them, as an other would, if I might hold them with good conscience, and without the ignominy of Christ: and seeing I could not doe that, my trust was that God would strenthen me with his holy spirit to lose them all for his sake: for I take my selfe (sayd I) for a sheepe appaynted to be slayne, patiently to suffer what crosse so euer it shal please my merciful father to lay on me. And so after I had desired them that if I were committed to prison my frendes might be suffered to relieue me, they departed.

Mayster More afore this brought vnto me a booke of one Alphonsus a Spanish Frier, * of all heresies wherwith the church of Rome, which he called Christes true church, had bene troubled since Christes time, willing me to read and take Counsell of that booke: & appoynted me a place, where this author did write agaynst them that say, the lay people ought to receiue vnder both kindes.

This Authour I perceiued did vehementlye write agaynst Luther, Melancthon, Pellicā & other Germaines of this our time, in all pointes defēding y^e blasphemous abuses and enormities of the Romish Church, condēning as detestable heresies, whatsoever was written, taught, or beleued contrary to the same, vsing for his strōgest and surest argumentes, the consent, agreement, and determinatiō of the Romish Church. So within a fewē dayes Mayster More came to me againe, asking me how I liked the booke. I sayd the authour of the booke did in all poyntes beyng a Papist, allow the rites and abuses of the Romish church,* and shewed him further, that this author without authority, and contrary both to the Scriptures & olde Doctors, did condemn for heresy, the lay people receiuing of this sacrament vnder both kindes, where as this Authour witnesseth his owne selfe, that Christes church 900. yeares after Christ vsed the contrary.

So in conclusion he rebuketh me, saying I was vnlearned, & erred from the Catholicke fayth, stubburne, and stode altogether in mine owne conceite. I aunswered, for my learning, I knowledge my selfe to know nothing but Iesus Christ, euen him that was crucified, and that my fayth was groundēd vpon Gods holy word onely, & such as I doubted not, pleased God, and as I would stand in vntill the last day, God assisting me: and that I did not say or do any thing, either of stubburnes, selfe wilfulnes, vayn glory, or any other worldly purpose, but with good conscience, and in the feare of God: and desired him to speake to my Lord and his Counsell, that I might finde some gētlēnes and mercy at theyr handes. He made me but short answerē. Then I sayd, I commit my cause vnto God, who Page 1564 hath numbred the hayres of my head, and appoynted the dayes of my life saying: I am sure God which is a righteous Iudge, would make inquisition for my bloude, according as he hath promised. Then he tooke his booke frō me, and departed.

I continued still in Ward vntill Low sonday, and after dinner my keeper Richard Scot came to mee into my chamber,* and told me that two young men were come to cary me to Lancaster, and so deliuered me vnto them, a great company both of my Lordes seruauntes and others accompanying and bringing mee on the way, vnto Rich. Addertons and somewhat further, counselling and perswading like as is aforesayd.

To whome I made playne aunswere, that in matters of faith, I would geue place to no earthly creature. So they comforted me, and sayd y^t they wer sory for me, saying: if I knew mine opinion to be good, I did wel, and so they departed, willing my bringers to entreate me honestly.

My bringers by the way shewed me they were willed & aduised to binde me, and that they desired first to see me: and after they had looked on me, sitting at dinner, they answered they would take charge of me beyng loose, for they sayd I seemed to be an honest man.

The first night we were all night at Broughton, and the second day we came to Lācaster betimes at after noone and so they kept me all night with them of their gētlēnes, and on the morow deliuered me to y^e Iaylor, who brought me into the highest prison, where I do remaine.

*After that, the sayd George came to Lancaster Castle, & there being brought with other prisoners vnto the Sessions, was made to hold vp his hāds w^t other malefactors. The Earle of Darby had this communication with him, as here followeth.

Communication betweene George Marsh and the Earle of Darby.

*I Sayd vnto my Lord, I had not dwelled in the countrey these three or foure yeares past, and came home but lately to visite my mother, children, and other my friends, and to haue departed out of the country before Easter thē next, & to haue gone out of the realme, Wherefore I trusted, seing nothing could be layd against me, wherein I had offended agaynst the lawes of this realme, his Lordship would not with captious questions examine me to bring my body into daunger of death, to the great discomfort of my mother but suffer me to auoyd peaceably, seeing I might haue fled out of the country, and yet of mine owne will came to hys Lordship.

He sayd to his Counsell, he had heard tell of me aboue at London: and intended to make search for me, and take me either in Lancashyre or aboue at London, and asked me into what land I would haue gone.

*I aunswered, I would haue gone either into Almain or els into Denmarke. He sayd to his Counsell: in Denmarke they vsed suche heresie as they haue done in England: but as for Almayne hee sayde the Emperour had destroyed them.

So after such like woordes I sayde vnto him, my trust was that his Lordship being of the honourable Counsell of the late king Edward, consenting and agreeing to acts concerning fayth toward God and religion vnder great payne, woulde not so soone after consent to put poore men to shamefull death, as he had threatned me, for embrasing the same with so good a conscience.

He aunswered that he, with the Lord Windsor, & Lord Dacars,* with one moe, whose name I haue forgotten, did not consent to those Actes, and that the nay of them foure would be to be seene as long, as y^e Parliamēt house stode. Then my Lord did rehearse the euill luck of the Dukes of Northumberland and Suffolke with others, because they fauored not the true religion, and agayn the good hap and prosperitie of the Queenes highnes, because shee fauored the true religion, thereby gathering the one to be good and of God, and the other to be wicked and of the deuill, & said that the Duke of Northumberland confessed so playnely.

¶George Marsh to the Reader.

*FOr asmuch as not onely when I was at Latham, but also since I departed thence, I heare that there be diuers and sondry reportes, and opinions of the cause of mine imprisonment, as wel at Latham as at Lācaster (as by credible persons I am informed) some saying it was onely because I would not do open penance, and some because I could not agree with my Lord and his counsell concerning the sacrament of Christes body and bloud, and the maner of Christes presence there: some because I woulde not graunt it sufficient and according to Christes institution the lay people to receaue the sayd sacrament vnder the one kinde onely I thought it good, dearely beloued in Christe, and my bounden duetie, to certifie you by mine owne hand writing, of mine examination and handling at Latham, and to tell you the trueth as neare as I could, to quyet your minde in this behalfe, and therfore I haue here written with myne owne hand the certaynty of those thinges as neare as I could, here aboue expressed, not omitting any thing at al concerning Religion, wherof they did examine me: howbeit I perceiue in some thinges, I keepe not the same order in writing that thing which was asked by them, and answered by me afore or after, as it was in very deed in al points sauing this, telling the truth as neare as I can, desiring you to accept in good worth this my good will, and to pray for me and all them that be in bondes, that God would assist vs with hys holy spirite, that wee may with boldnes confesse his holye name: and that Christ may be magnified in our bodyes, that wee may stand full and perfect in all the will of God: to whome be all honor and glory world without end. Amen.

And thus you haue heard all the whole trouble which George Marsh susteyned both at Lathum, & also at Lancaster, testified and written with hys owne hand wherto he addeth moreouer and sayth.

While I was (sayth he) in Ward at Lathum, diuers at sundry times came vnto me. Some sayd vnto me that all my fellowes had recanted and were gone home, where as in deede that was not so, for I saw diuers of them dyuers times after. Other sayd that it was reported amongst my Lordes houshold, that I had consented and agreed in all things with my Lord and his counsell.

Furthermore, while I was at Lancaster, at this Sessiō time many came to me to talke with me, some of good will towards me, but without knowledge gaue mee such like counsel as Peter gaue Christ as he went vp to Ierusalem when he tooke hym aside and began to rebuke him: * saying maister fauour thy selfe: this thing shall not be vnto thee. But I answered with Christes sharpe answeere vnto Peter agayne: who turned about, and sayd vnto Peter, come after me Sathan, and perceiuing that they were an hinderaunce vnto mee, and that they fauoured not the thinges which are of God, but the thinges that are of men, I made them playne answeere, that I neither could ne would follow their counsell, but that by Gods grace I woulde both liue and dye with a pure conscience and according as hetherto I had beleueed and professed. For wee ought in no wise to flatter and beare with them, * though they loue vs neuer so well, which go about to pluck vs away from the obedience that wee owe vnto God and to hys worde, but after Christes example sharply to rebuke them for theyr counsell.

Some others, yea euen straungers also, came to mee far vnlike to these, who after sober communication hadde, consented with mee in all thinges, lamenting muche my troublous estate, geuing me comfortable wordes, & some money to, and resorted to me often tymes, for the space of two three or foure, dayes. There came also many Priestes to me by 2.3.4.5. or 6. at once, * whose mouthes it was a thing easy enough to stopp, for the Priests (which is much to be lamēted) be not alwayes greatest clarkes & best learned in y^e lawe of God. At theyr departing they eyther consented w^t me, or els had nothing to say agaynst me, saying they could finde no fault with my wordes. My communication with them was about the Sacrament. There came also into y^e prison to me mayster Westby, Mayster Ashton of Hyll, M. Ashton of Chatertō, & many moe both gentlemen and others to my great comfort. Unto whom I had good occasion to vtter a great parte of my conscience: for God so strengthen me with his spirite of boldnes, according to my humble request and prayer before (euerlastyng thanks be geuen him therfore) that I was nothing afraid to speake to any that came to me, no not euen to Iudges, * themselues, before whome I was thrise arraygned at the barre amongst the theeues wyth yrons on my feete, and put vp my hād as other did, but yet with boldnes I spake vnto them so long as they would suffer me.

They also sent for me the fourth tyme into their chamber, where amongst other thinges they layd it straitly to my charge, y^t I had reported that I knewe an whole messe of good gentlemen in Lancashyre of myne opinion, and straightly charged me vppon payne of allegiaunce to the Queenes grace, to shew who they were. But I denyed that I had spoken any suche thinge (as it was in deede a false forged lye of some wicked wretches.) After that, they threatned and rebuked me, for my preaching to the people out of the prison, as they called it, and for my praying and reading so loud, that the people in the streets might heare.* The truth is, I and my prison fellow Warbarton, euerye day kneeling on our knees did read morning and euening Page 1565 prayer, with the english Letany euery day twice, both before noone and after, with other praiers moe, & also read euery day certain chapters of the Bible, cōmonly towards night: and we read all these thinges with so high & loude a voyce,* y^t the people without in the streetes, might heare vs, and would often times, namely in y^e eueninges, come and sit down in our sightes vnder the windowes & heare vs read, wherwith others being offended, complayned.

All this while George Marshe was not yet brought before the bishop, whose name was Doctour Cotes, placed the same time in the Bishopricke of Chester. Of whose comming then vnto Lancaster, the sayde George Marshe reporteth himselfe as followeth.

How the Bishop came to Lancaster and of his doynge there.

The bishop being at Lancaster, there set vp and confirmed all blasphemous Idolatry, as holy water casting procession gadding, Mattins mumbling, children confirming, Masse hearyng, Idols vp setting, with such hethe•ishe rites forbidden by God: but no Gospell preachyng, which Christ Gods sonne so earnestly cōmanded. He was informed of mee, and willed to send for me & examine me. Which thinge he refused to doe, saying he woulde haue nothing to do w^t heretickes so hastily: So hasty in iudgement and calling men heretickes are our bishops in their Lordly dignities,* afore y^e heare or see, what is to be amended or condēned, contrary to the expresse commandemēt of gods word, which sayth: Condemne no man before thou hast tryed out the truth of the matter, and when thou hast made inquisition then reforme righteouslye.* Geue no sentence before thou hast heard the cause, but first let men tell out their tale, and hee that geueth sentence in a matter before he heare it, is a foole & worthy to be confounded.

And in stead of his liberalitie towardes me poore prisoner, he sēt for the Iaylor and rebuked him because he suffered mee to fare so well, willing to haue me more straitly kept and dieted: but if his Lordship were tabled but one weeke with me, I do thinke he would iudge our fare but slender enough.

*Also, he and his Chapleines and Chancellour did finde fault with the Scholemaister and others, for speaking to one as to a most heinous hereticke, and also with y^e Iaylor for suffering them. Such is the mercy that these religious fathers shewe to the friendles and comfortles in their aduersities. If we may knowe the tree by the fruites (as Christ saith, no man can iudge such for any other but for very enemies to Christ and his true religion. God laye it neuer to their charges, but forgeue them and turne their hard hartes, if it be his will.

But it is no new thing for the bishops to persecute the truth and the Prophetes of the Lorde, for their constancie in preaching of the true fayth,* for so did their Pharisaicall forefathers, if ye marke well the histories of the holye Bible. Phasher was the head Bishop of the Temple, the ringleader of false Prophetes, the chiefe hereticke taker, that is as much to saye, the outthruster of true godlinesse. After that the dignitie of Priesthood was geuen vnto hym he abused it. For he taught not neither reprooued by the word, but feared the godly with crueltie. Hee not onely strocke, but also imprisoned the holye Prophet Ieremye, though he withstoode him not, but presently looked for the helpe of God,* steadfastly preaching the truth of God.

What mischief the vngracious bishop Iasō wrought among the Iewes,* destroying all godlines and setting vp abhominable Idolatrous lawes, ye may reade in the iiij. chapter of the 2. of Machabees. How the execrable & blind Byshops Annas and Caiphas, which neuer spake y^e truth of God themselues, vnlesse it were agaynst their willes, vnwittingly to their vtter destruction, howe (I say) they pressed the truth in Christe and his Apostles, is so well knowne that I neede not to rehearse it.

And thus much hitherto concerning the prisonment of George Marsh & his examinatiōs before the Erle of Darby & his deputies aboue named. Now proceeding further in the troublesome persecution of this blessed man, let vs likewise consider the latter part of his troubles and examinations which followed vnder the bishop of that same Dioces, which was Doctor Cotes: the effect whereof being drawne out of his own writing, here briefly is to be seene as followeth.

¶The troubles and examination of G. Marshe vnder Doct. Cotes Bishop of Chester.

YE heard before how G. Marsh being first imprysoned at Lathum, and afterward translated vnto Lancaster, was troubled by the Earle. Agayne, within few dayes after, the said Marsh was remoued from Lancaster, & comming to Chester, was sent for Doct. Cotes then B. to appeare before him in his Hal, no body being presēt but they twayne: and then he asked hym certayn questions concerning y^e sacrament: who made such aunsweres as the Bish. seemed therewith to be content, sauing y^t he vtterly denyed transubstantiation, and allowed not the abuse of y^e Masse nor that the lay people shuld receiue vnder one kind onely contrary to Christes institution: in which poynt the bysh. went about to perswade him: howbeit (God be thanked) all in vayne. Much other talke he had with hym, to moue him to submit himselfe to the vniuersall church of Rome: and when he saw he could not preuayle, he sent him to prison again: and after being there, came to him diuers times one Massy, a fatherly old man, one Wrench the Schoolemaister, one Hensham the Byshops Chaplayne, and the Archdeacon, with many moe: who with all probabilitie of words, and Philosophy or worldly wisdom, and deceitfull vanity after the tradition of men and the beggarly ordinaunces and lawes of the world, but not after Christ (as it were all singing one song) went about to perswade him to submit himselfe to the church of Rome, and to acknowledge the pope to be head thereof, and to interpret y^e scriptures none otherwise then that church did: with manye such like argumentes & perswasions of fleshly wisdom.

To whom the sayd George Marsh answered, that he did acknowledge and beleue (though much euill be withall annexed) one holy catholicke and apostolicke Church,* without which there is no saluation, and that this church is but one, because it euer hath, doth, and shall confesse and beleue, one onely god, and him onely worship, and one onely Messiah, and in him onely trust for saluation: which church also is ruled and led by one spirite, one worde,* and one fayth and that this church is vniuersal and catholicke, because it euer hath bene since y^e worlds beginning, is, and shall endure to the worldes end,* and comprehending with in it all natiōs, kinreds, and languages, degrees, states, & conditions of men: and that this church is builded onelye vpon the foundation of the Prophetes and Apostles, Iesus Christ himselfe being the head corner stone, & not vpon the Romishe lawes and decrees, the Bishop of Rome being the supreme head.

And where they sayd, the Church did stand in ordinary succession of bishops,* being ruled by generall Councels holy fathers, and the lawes of holy Church, and so had continued by the space of fiftene hundreth yeares & more: he made aunswere that the holy church, which is the body of Christ, and therefore most worthy to be called holy, was before any succession of Bishoppes, generall Councils, or Romish decrees, neither yet was bound to anye time, or place, ordinary succession, generall councils, or traditions of Fathers,* eyther had any supremacy ouer Empyres and kingdomes: but y^t it was a little poore sely flock, dispersed and scattered abroad, as sheep without a shepheard in the middest of wolues, or as a flocke of Orphanes or fatherles children: and that this Church was led and ruled by the onely lawes, counsels, and word of christ, he being the supreme head of this church, and assisting, succoring, and defending her from all assaultes, errors, troubles, and persecutions wherewith she is euer compassed about,

He shewed and prooued vnto them also, by the flood of Noah, the destruction of Sodome, the Israelites departing out of Egypt, by the parables of the sower,* of y^e kings sonnes mariage, of the great supper, and by other playne sentences of scripture, that this Church was of none estimation, & little in comparison of the church of hipocrites and wicked worldlinges.

He was thrust at withall violence of craft and subtilty but yet the Lord vpheld him and deliuered him.* Euerlasting thanks be to that mercifull and faythful Lord, which suffereth vs not to be tempted aboue our might, but in the middest of our troubles strengthneth vs with hys holye spirit of comfort and patience, geueth vs a mouth & wisdom how and what to speake: where agaynst all his aduersaries were not able to resist.

An other appearaunce of George Marsh before the Byshop.

NOW,* after that the sayd bishop had taken his pleasure in punishing this his prisoner and often reuilyng him, geuing tauntes, & odious names of hereticke. &c. hee caused him to be brought forth into a Chappell in the Cathedrall church of Chester, called our Ladye Chappell before him the sayd B. at two of the clocke in the after noone, who was there placed in a Chayre for that purpose, and Fulke Dutton Maier of the sayd Cittye, Doctour Walle, Page 1566 and other priestes assisting him, placed not farre from the said Bishop, but somewhat lower, George Wenslow chācellour, and one Iohn Chetham Register, sat directly ouer agaynst the sayd Bishop.

Then they caused the sayd George Marshe to take an othe vpon a booke, to answere truely vnto suche articles as should be obiected agaynst him. Upon whiche othe taken, the Chauncellour layde vnto his charge, that hee had preach•d and openly published most heretically and blasphemously within the Parishes of Deane, Eccles, Bolton, Berry, and many other parishes within the Byshoppes Dioces, in the monthes of Ianuary, February, or some other time of y^e yeare last proceeding directly against y^e popes authoritie and Catholicke Church of Rome, the blessed Masse, the sacrament of the aultar, and many other Articles. Unto all which in summe he aunswered, that he neither heretically nor blasphemously preached or spake agaynst any of the sayd articles, but simply and truely, as occasion serued, and (as it were thereunto forced in conscience) mayntayned the truth touching the same articles, as (sayd he) all you now present did acknowledge the same in the time of the late king Edward the vi.

*Then they examined him seuerally of euery Article, & bad him aunswere directly yea or nay, without circumstance: for they were come to examine, and not to dispute at that present.

Then he aunswered them vnto euery article very modestly, according to the doctrine by publicke authoritie receiued, and taught in this Realme at the death of the sayd king Edward: whose aunsweres were euerye one noted and written by the Register, to the vttermost that coulde make against him, which cannot at this present be gotten. After this, the company for that time brake vpp, and hee was returned to his prison agayne.

¶The last and finall appearaunce of George Marsh before the Bishop.

*Within three weekes after this, or thereaboutes, in y^e sayd Chappell and in like sort as before, the said Bishop and others before named there being assembled, the sayd George Marshe was brought by the keeper and others with bils and diuers weapons, before them, where first the sayd Chauncellour by way of an Oration declared vnto the people present, the sayde Byshoppes charge and burning charitie, who euen like as a good shepheard doth see to his flocke, that none of his sheepe hath the scabbe or •ther disease for infecting other cleane sheepe, but wyll saue & cure the said scabbed sheep: so his Lordship had sent for the sayd George Marshe there present, as a scabbed sheep, and had weeded him out for corrupting others, and had done what he could in shewing his charitable disposition towards y^e sayd Marsh, to reduce him frō his naughty heresies: but all that he could do, would not help: so that he was now determined, if the sayd Marsh would not relent & abiure, to pronounce and geue sentence definitiue agaynst him. Wherefore he bad the sayd George Marshe to be now well aduised, what he would do: for it stode vpon his life: and if he would not at that present forsake his heretical opinions, it would be after the Sentence geuen, to late, though he would neuer so gladly desire it.

Then the sayd Chauncellour first asked him whether he were not one of the Bishoppes Dioces? *
To the whiche he aunswered, that he knewe not how large his Diocesse was, for his continuance was at Cambridge. But then they replied and asked, whether he had not lately bene at Deane Parish in Lancashyre, and there abode? And he answered yea.

Then the Chauncellour read all his former answeres that he made in that place at his former examination * & at euery one he asked him whether he would sticke to y^e same or no? To the which he answered agayne, yea, yea▪

How say you then to this, quoth the Chauncellor? In your last examinatioⁿ, amōgst many other dānable & schismaticall heresies, you sayd, that the Church and doctrine taught and set forth in king Edwardes time, was the true Church, & the doctrine, the doctrine of the true Church & that the Church of Rome is not y^e true & catholick church.

I so sayd in deede, quoth Marshe, and I beleeeue it to be true. Here also others tooke occasion to aske hym (for that he denyed the Byshop of Romes authoritie in England) whether Linus, Anacletus, and Clement, that were Byshops of Rome, were not good men, and he answered yes, and diuers others: but (sayd he) they claimed no more authoritie in England, then the Byshop of Caunterbury doth at Rome: and I striue not, (quoth he) with the place neyther speake I agaynst the person of the Byshop, but a'gaynst his doctrine, which in most poyntes is repugnant to the doctrine of Christ.

Thou art an arrogant fellow in deede then, sayde the Byshop. In what article is the doctrine of the Church of Rome repugnant to the doctrine of Christ?

To whome George Marshe answered & sayd: Oh my Lord: I pray you iudge not so of me: * I stand nowe vppon the point of my life and death: & a man in my case hathe no cause to be arrogant, neither am I, God is my record. And as concerning the disagreement of y^e doctrine, among many other things the Church of Rome erreth in the Sacrament. For where Christ in y^e institution therof, did as well deliuer the cup, as the bread: saying Drinke ye all of this, & Marke reporteth that they did drinke of it: in like manner S. Paul deliuered it vnto the Corinthians. And in y^e same sort also was it vsed in the primitiue church by the space of many hundreth yeares. Now the Church of Rome both taketh away one parre of the Sacrament from the Laity. Wherefore, if I coulde be perswaded in my conscience by Gods worde, that it were well done, I could gladly yeld in thys poynt.

Then sayd the Bishop. Non disputandum est cum haeretico That is, There is no disputing with an heretick. * And therfore when all his answeres were read, hee asked hym whether he would stand to the same, beyng as they were (sayd he) full of heresie, or els forsake them and come vnto the catholicke Church?

To whom he made this full aunswere, and sayde: that he held no hereticall opinion, but vtterly abhorred at kynd of heresie, * although they most vntruely so did sclaunder him. And hee desired all the people present to beare hym wiⁿesse (if hereafter anye would sclaunder him and say y^t he held any greuous heresie) that in all Articles of Religion, he he held none other opinion, then was by law most godly established and publickely taught in England at the death of king Edward the vi. and in the same pure Religion and doctrine he would (by Gods grace) stand, liue, * & dye. And here the Chauncellour spake to one Leache, which [•]tode neare vnto Marshe, and bad him stand farther from him, for hys presence did him no good.

This being done, the Bishop tooke out a writing of his bosome, & begā to read the sentence of condēnatiō: * but when the bishop had read almost halfe therof, the Chauncellour called to him and sayd: good my Lord, stay, stay, for if ye proceede any further, it will be to late to call it agayne and so the B. stayed. Then his popish Priestes and many other of the ignorant people called vpon Marsh, * with many earnest wordes to recant, and amongst other one Pulleyn a Shomaker sayd to hym: for shame man remember thy selfe and recant. They bad him kneele downe and pray and they would pray for him: So they kneeled down, and he desired them to pray for him, and he would pray for thē.

The Bishoppe then asked hym agayne, whether hee would not haue the Queenes mercy in time: * and he aunswered hee did gladly desire the same, & did loue her grace as faythfully as any of them: but yet he durst not deny his Sauour Christ, for loosing his mercy euerlasting, and so winne euerlasting death.

Then the Bishop put his spectacles agayne vpon his nose, & read forward his sentēce, about v. or vi. lyues, and there agayne the Chauncellour with a glauering and smiling countenance, called to the B. and sayde: * Yet good my Lord once agayne stay, for if that word be spoken, al is past no relentyng will then serue: and the Byshop (pulling of his spectacles) sayd: I would stay and if it would be.

How sayst thou (quoth he) wilt thou recant? Many of the Priestes and ignoraunt people bad him so do,* and call to God for grace: and pulled him by y^e sleeue and bad him recant and saue his life. To whom he answered: I would as fayne to liue as you, if in so doyng, I shoulde not deny my mayster Christ, and agayne he should denye me before his father in heauen.

So the bishop read out hys sentence vnto the end and straight after sayd vnto him.* Nowe will I no more praye for thee, then I will for a dogge. And Marshe answered, y^t notwithstanding, he would pray for his Lordship: & after this the bishop deliuered him vnto the Sheriffes of the city. Then hys late keeper bad him fare well good George, w^t weeping teares, whiche caused y^e officers to cary him to a prisō at the Northgate, where he was very straitly kept vntill the tyme he went to hys death, during which tyme he had small comfort or reliefe of any worldly creature.

For being in y^e dongeon or darke prison, none y^t would hym good, could speake w^t hym, or at least durst enterprise so to doe for feare of accusation: and some of the Cittizens which loued him in God for the gospell sake (wherof there were but a fewe) although they were neuer acquaynted with him, would sometime in the euening at a hoale vpon the wall of the City (that went into the sayd darcke prisō) Page 1567 call to him, and aske him how he did. He would answere them most chearefully, that he did well, and thanked God most highly that he woulde vouchsafe of his mercy to appoynt him to be a witnes of his truth, and to suffer for the same, wherein he did most reioyce, beseeching him that he would geue him grace not to faynt vnder the Crosse, but patiently beare the same to his glorye and comfort of hys Church:* with many other like godly sayinges at sondrye tymes, as one that most desired to be with Christ. Once or twise he had money cast him in at the same hole, about ten pence at one tyme, & 2. shillings at an other time: for which he gaue God thanks, and vsed the same to his necessitie.

When the time and day appointed came that he should suffer: the Sheriffes of y^e Cittie (whose names were Amry & Couper) with their Officers and a great nūber of poore simple Barbers, with rousty Billes & Polaxes, went to the Northgate, & there tooke out the said George Marsh, who came with them most humbly & meekly, with a lock vpon his feete. And as he came vpon the waye towardes y^e place of execution, some folkes proferd him money, & looked that he should haue gone with a litle purse in his hand (as the maner of felons was,* accustomed in that Cittie in times past, at their goyng to execution) to y^e end to gather money to geue vnto a priest to say Trentals of Masses for thē after their death, wherby they might (as they thought) be saued:* but Marsh sayd he would not as thē be troubled w^t medling with mony, but willed some good man to take the mony, if y^e people were disposed to geue any, & to geue it vnto the prisoners or poore people. So hee went all the way vnto his death, w^t his booke in his hand, looking vpō the same, & many of y^e people sayd: this mā goeth not vnto his death as a theefe, or as one that deserueth to dye.

Now when he came to the place of execution w^tout the Citie,* neare vnto Spittle boughton, one Uawdrey, being then deputie chamberleine of Chester, shewed Marshe a writyng vnder a great seale, saying, that it was a pardon for him if he would recant. Wherat Marsh answered, that he would gladly accept the same (and sayd farther, that he loued the Queene) but for asmuch as it tended to plucke him frō God, he would not receiue it vpon that condition.

After that, hee began to speake to the people shewing the cause of his death,* and woulde haue exhorted them to sticke vnto Christ. Whereupon one of the Sheriffes sayd: George Marshe, we must haue no sermoning now. To whom he sayd, Mayster, I cry you mercy: and so kneeling downe made his prayers, and then put of his clothes vnto his shirt, and then was he chayned vnto the post, hauyng o number of Fagottes vnder him, and a thing made like a firkin, with pitch and tarre in the same ouer his head: & by reason the fire was vnskilfully made, and that the winde dyd dryue the flame to and fro, he suffered great extremitie in his death, whiche notwithstanding he abode very paciently.

Wherein this in him is to be noted, that when as hee had bene a long time tormented in y^e fire without mouing hauing his fleshe so broyled and puft vp that they whiche stode before him vnneth could see the chayne wherewith he was fastened, and therfore supposed no lesse but he had bene dead, notwithstanding sodenly he spread abroad hys armes, saying: father of heauen haue mercy vpon me, & so yelded his spirite into the handes of the Lord.

Upon this, many of y^e people sayd that he was a martyr, and died maruelous patiently and godly.* Which thing caused the Bishop shortly after to make a Sermon in the Cathedrall Church, and therein affirmed, that the sayde Marshe was an hereticke, burnt like an hereticke, & was a firebrand in hell.

In recompence of this hys good and charitable sermō within short time after, the iust iudgement of God appeared vppon the sayde Byshop:* recompensing hym in suche wise, that not long after he turned vp his heeles and dyed. Upon what cause his death was gendred. I haue not here precisely to pronounce, because the rumour and voyce of y^e people is not alwayes to be followed. Notwithstanding such a report went in all mens mouthes, that he was burned of an harlot. Whereupon whether he dyed or no, I am not certayne, neyther dare leane to much vppon publicke speach. Albeit this is certayn, that whē he was afterward searched being dead, by some of hys secret frends & certain Aldermen for stoppyng the rumour of y^e people, this maydenly Priest and Byshop was foūd not to be free frō certayne appearaunce, which declared but small virginitie in him, & that the rumour was not raysed vp altogether vpō naught, amongst the people. But of this I will stay, and proceed no further, not because more cā not be said, but because I will not be so vncharitable in defacing these men, as they are cruel in condemning Gods seruants to death.

Letters of George Marshe.

This good mā wrote diuers and sondry letters out of prison besides his examinations, as before ye haue heard. Touching the which hys examinations, this letter first he sendeth to his frendes, the copy wherof here followeth.

¶A letter of George Marsh to the reader, touching the matter of his examination.

HEre haue ye dearely beloued frendes in Christ, the chiefe & principal Articles of Christian doctrine briefly touched,* whiche heretofore I haue both beleued, professed, and taught, and as yet do beleue, professe, and teach, and am surely purposed by Gods grace, to continue in the same vntill the last day. I do wāt both time and oportunitie to write out at large the probations, causes, partes, effectes, and contraries or erroures of these Articles, which who so desireth to know, let them read ouer the cōmon places of the godly learned men: Philippe Melancthon, and Erasmus Sarcerius, whose iudgement in these matters of Religion I do chiefly follow and leane vnto. The Lorde geue vs vnderstanding in all thinges, and deliuer vs from this present euill world, according to his will and pleasure, and bryng vs agayn out of this hell of affliction, into which it hath pleased the mercifull Lord to throw vs downe: and deliuer vs out of the mouth of the Lyon and from all euill doing, and keepe vs vnto his heauenly and euerlasting kingdome. Amen.

Though Sathan be suffered, as wheate to sift vs for a tyme, yet fayleth not our fayth through Christes ayde, but that we are at all tymes able and readye to confirme the fayth of our weake brethren,* and alwayes ready to geue an aunswere to euerye man that asketh vs a reason of the hope that is in vs, and that wyth meekenes and reuerence, hauing a good conscience, that when as they backbyte vs as euill doers, they may be ashamed, for asmuch as they haue falsely accused our good cōuersatiō in christ. I thought my selfe nowe of late yeares, for the cares of this lyfe well setteled with my louing and faithfull wife and children, and also well quieted in the peaceable possession of that pleasaunt Euphrates, I do confesse it: but the Lord who worketh all thyngs for the best to them that loue him, would not there leaue me, but did take my deare and beloued wife from me: whose death was a paynefull crosse to my flesh.

Also I thought my selfe nowe of late well placed vnder my most louing and most gentle mayster Laurence Saunders in the cure of Langhton.* But the Lord of his great mercy would not suffer me there long to continue (although for the small tyme I was in his vineyard, I was not all an idle workman) But he hath prouided me (I perceiue it) to taste of a farre other cuppe,* for by violence hath he yet once agayne driuen me out of that glorious Babilon, that I should not taste to much of her wanton pleasures but wyth his most dearely beloued Disciples to haue my inward reioysing in the Crosse of his sonne Iesus Christe: the glorye of whose Church I see it well, standeth not in the harmonious soūd of Bells and Organes, nor yet in the glistring of Mitors & Copes neither in the shining of gilte Images and lightes (as the blynde Page 1508 Papistes do iudge it) but in continuall labours and dayly afflictions for his names sake.

God at this present here in Englande hath his fanne in hys hand, and after hys great haruest, whereinto these yeares past he hath sent his labourers, is now sifting the corne frō the chaffe and purging his floore, and ready to gather the wheate into hys garnar and to burne the chaffe with vnquenchable fire.

Take heede and beware of the leuen of the scribes and of the Saduces, I meane the erroneous doctrine of the papistes, whiche with their gloses deprauē the Scriptures. For as the Apostle S. Peter doth teach vs: There shalbe false teachers amongst vs, whiche priuily shall bring in damnable sectes: And sayth that many shall follow theyr damnable wayes, by whom the way of trueth shall be euill spoken of: and that through couetousnes they shall with fayned wordes make marchaundise of vs. And Christ earnestly warneth vs, to beware of false Prophetes, which come to vs in sheepes clothing, but inwardly are rauening Wolues: by their fruites ye shall know them. The fruites of the Prophetes is theyr doctrine, In this place are we Christians taught that wee shuld try the preachers, & other that come vnder colour to set forth true Religion vnto vs, according to the saying of S. Paule: Try all thinges and chose that whiche is good. Also the Euangelist S. Iohn sayth: Beleue not euery spirite, but proue the spirites whether they be of God or not, for many false Prophetes (sayth he) are gone out into the world. Therefore if thou wilt knowe the true Prophetes frō the false, try theyr doctrine at the true touchstone, whiche is the worde of God: and as the godly Thessalonians did, search ye the scriptures, whether those thinges which be preached vnto you be euē so or not: for els by the outward conuersatiō of thē ye may easely be deceiued. Desūt fortassis aliqua.

GRace be vnto you, and peace be multiplied in y^e knowledge of Iesus Christ our Lord.* Amen.

I thought it my duety to write vnto you, my beloued in y^e Lord at Langhton, to stirre vp your mindes, & to call to your remēbrance the wordes which haue bene told you before, and to exhort you (as that good man & full of y^e holy Ghost Barnabas did the Antiochians) that with purpose of hart ye continually cleaue vnto the Lord, & that ye stād fast,* and be not moued away from the hope of the Gospel, wherof (God be thāked) ye haue had plenteous preaching vnto you by your late pastor M. Saunders, & other faithfull ministers of Iesus Christ, which now, when persecution ariseth because of y^e word,* do not fall away like shrinking children, and forsake the truth, being ashamed of the Gospell wherof they haue bene preachers, but are willing and ready for your sakes (which are Christes misticall body) to forsake not onely the chiefe and principall delites of this lyfe (I do meane theyr natiue cuntryes, frendes, lyuinges. &c. but also to fulfill theyr ministry vnto y^e vtmost that is to witte, with their painefull imprisonmentes and bloudsheddinges (if need shall require) to confirme & seale Christes Gospell,* wherof they haue bene Ministers: and (as S. Paul sayth) they are ready not onely to be cast into prison, but also to be killed for the name of the Lord Iesu.

Whether these, being that good salt of the earth, that is true ministers of Gods worde,* by whose doctrine (beyng receiued through fayth) men are made sauory vnto God, & which themselues lose not theyr saltnes,* now when they be prooued with the boysterous stormes of aduersity and persecutiō: or others being that vnsauery salt which hath lost his saltnes, that is to witte, those vngodly ministers, which do fall from the word of God into the dreames and traditions of Antichrist: whether of these, I say, be more to be credited and beleued, let all men iudge.

Wherefore my dearely beloued, receiue y^e word of God with meekenes, y^t is graffed in you, whiche is able to saue your soules:* And see that ye be not forgetfull hearers, deceiuing yourselues with sophistry, but doers of the word whom Christ doth liken to a wise mā,* which buildeth his house on a rocke, that when the great rayn descendeth, and the flouds come and beate vpon the house, it fel not, because it was grounded vpon a rocke: this is to witte, that when Sathan, with all his legion of deuils with all theyr subtile suggestions, and the world with all y^e mighty princes therof,* with their crafty counsels doe furiously rage against vs, we faint not, but abide constant in the truth, being grounded vpon a most sure rock which is Christ, and the doctrine of the Gospell, against which the gates of hel (that is,* the power of Sathan) cannot preuaile.

And be ye followers of Christ and the Apostles, and receaue the word in much affliction (as the godly Thessalonians did):* for the true followers of Christ and the Apostles, be they which receiue the word of God. They onely receiue the word of god, which both beleue it, & also frame their liues after it, & be ready to suffer all maner of aduersitie for the name of the Lord, as Christ & all y^e Apostles did and as all that will liue godly in Christ Iesu must doe: for there is none other way into the kingdome of heauen,* but through much tribulation. And if we suffer any thing for y^e kingdome of heauens sake, and for righteousnes sake, we haue the Prophetes, Christ, the Apostles and Martyrs for an ensample to comfort vs: for they did all enter into the kingdome of heauē at the strait gate and narrow way that leadeth vnto life, which few do find.* And vnles we will be content to deny our owne selues, and take vp the crosse of Christ and hys sayntes, it is an euident argument, that we shall neuer raigne with him.

And agayne, if we can finde in our hartes paciently to suffer persecutions and tribulations, it is a sure token of y^e righteous iudgment of God, that we are counted worthy of the kingdom of God, for which we also suffer. It is verily (sayth the Apostle) a righteous thing with God,to recompence tribulation to them that trouble vs, and rest to vs that be troubled. For after this life, y^e godly being deliuered from theyr tribulations and paynes shall haue a most quiet and ioyfull rest, where as the wicked and vngodly, contrariwyse shal be tormented for euermore with intollerable and vnspeakable paines, as Christ by the parable of the rich glutton & wretched Lazarus, doth playnly declare and teache These ought we to haue before our eyes alwayes, that in time of aduersitie and persecution (whereof al that wil be the children of God, shalbe partakers,* and wherewith it hath pleased God to put some of vs in vre all ready) we may stand steadfast in the Lord, and endure euen vnto the end, that we may be saued. For vnlesse we like good warriours of Iesus Christ,* will endeuour our selues to please him who hath chosen vs to be souldiours, and fight y^e good fight of fayth euen vnto the end, we shall not obtayne that crowne of righteousnes, which the Lorde that is a righteous iudge, shall geue to all them that loue his comming.

Let vs therefore receiue with meeknes the word that is graffed in vs, which is able to saue our soules,* and groūd our selues on the sure rocke Christ. For (as the Apostle sayth) other foundation can no man lay,*besides that whiche is layd already, which is Iesus Christ. If any man build on this foūdation, gold, siluer, precious stones, timber, haye, stubble, euerye mans worke shall appeare, for the day shal declare it, and it shalbe shewed in the fire. And the fire shall try euery mans work what it is. If any mans worke that he hath builded vpon abide, hee shall receiue a reward: if any mans work burne, he shall suffer losse, but he shalbe safe himselfe: neuerthelesse yet as it were through fire.

By fi•e here doth the Apostle vnderstand persecution & trouble,* for they which do truely preach & professe y^e word of God, which is called the word of the crosse, shalbe rayled vpon, and abhorred, hated, thrust out of the companye, persecuted and tryed in the fornace of aduersitie, as golde and siluer are tryed in the fire.

By gold, siluer, and precious stones, he vnderstandeth them y^t in the mids of persecution abide steadfast in word.* By tymber, hay, and stubble, are ment such, as in tyme of persecution do fall away from the truth. And when Christ doth purge his floore with the winde of aduersitie, these scatter away from the face of the earth like light chaffe whiche shall be burned with vnquencheable fire. If they then which do beleue,* do in time of persecution stand steadfastly in y^e truth the builder (I do meane y^e preacher of the word) shall receaue a reward, and the work shalbe preserued and saued: but if so be that they go back and swarue, when persecution ariseth, the builder shall suffer losse, that is to saye shall lose his labour and cost: but yet he shalbe saued, if hee being tryed in the fire of persecutiō, do abide fast in y^e faith.

Wherefore (my beloued) geue dilligent heed,* that ye as liuing stones be builded vpon this sure rocke, & be made a spirituall house and a holy Priesthoode for to offer vp spirituall sacrifices, acceptable vnto God by Iesus Christ. For we are the true temple of God,* and the spirite of God dwelleth in vs, if so be that we continue in the doctrine of the Gospell. We are also an holy and royall Priesthode, for to offer vp spirituall sacrifices & oblations, for the sacrifices of the new Testament are spirituall & of three maners.

The first is, the sacrifice of prayse and thankesgeuing, which S. Paule doth call the fruites of those lippes which confesse the name of God.*

The second is, mercy towards our neighbours, as y^e Prophet Osee sayth: I will haue mercy and not sacrifice. Read the xxv. chapter of Mathew.

The thyrd is, whē we make our body a quick sacrifice, holy and acceptable vnto God, that is,* whē we mortifie & kill our fleshly concupiscences & carnall lustes, & so bryng our flesh thorough the helpe of the spirite, vnder y^e obedēce of Gods holy lawe. This is a sacrifice to God most acceptable, [Page \[unnumbered\]](#) whiche the Apostle calleth Our reasonable seruing of God And let vs be sure, that vnlesse we do now at this pre'sent take better heed to our selues, and vse thankfully the grace of God offered to vs by the Gospell preaching these yeaes past, wherby we are induced & brought to y^e knowledge of y^e truth:* vnles, I say, we keep Christ and his holy word, dwelling by fayth in y^e house & temple of our harts, the same thing that christ threatneth vnto the Iewes, shal happen vnto vs:* y^t is to witte, the vncleane spirite of ignorance, superstitiō, idolatry, and infidelitie or vnbeliefe, the mother & head of all vices, which by the grace of God was cast out of vs, bringing with him 7. other spirites worse then himself,* shall to our vtter destruction, returne again into vs: and so shall we be in worse case thā euer we were before. For if we, after we haue escaped from the filthines of the world through the knowledge of the Lord and Sauour Iesus Christ, be yet tangled therin agayn and ouercome, then is the latter ende worse then the beginning: and it had bene better for vs not to haue knowne the way of righteousness, then after we haue known it, to turne frō the holy commaundement geuen vnto vs.

For it is then happened vnto vs according to the true prouerbe: the dogge is turned to his vomit agayn, and the sowe that was washed, to wallowing in the myre. And thus to continue & perseuer in infidelitie, & to kick against the manifest and knowne truth, and so to dye without repentaunce and with a dispayre of the mercy of God in Iesus Christ, is to sinne agaynst the holy Ghost, which shall not be forgeuē, neither in this world, neither the world to come.* For it is not possible (sayth s. Paule) that they which were once lighted, and haue tasted of the heauēly gift:

and hast tasted of the good word of God, and of the power of y^e world to come: if they fall away, should be renued agayne by repentaunce, for as muche as they haue (as concerning themselues) crucified the some of God agayne, making a mocking of him.* S^r Paules meaning in this place is: that they that beleue truely and vnfaignedly gods word, do cōtinue and abide steadfast in the knowne trueth.

If any therfore fall away from Christ and his word, it is a playne token, that they were but dissēbling hipocrites for all theyr fayre faces outwardly,* & neuer beleued truely: as Iudas, Symon Magus, Demas, Hymeneus, Philetus, and others were, which all fell away from the knowē veritie, and made a mocke of Christ: which S. Paule doth call here, to crucifie Christ a newe, because that they turning to their olde vomit agayne,* did most blasphemouslye tread y^e benefits of Christs death & passiō vnder their feet. They that are suche, can in no wise be renued by repentaunce: for their repentaunce is fleshly, as the repentance of Cain, Saul, & Iudas was, which being without godly comfort, breadeth desperation vnto death. These are not of y^e number of the elect: & as S. Iohn doth say: They went out from vs, but they were not of vs, for if they had bene of vs they woulde haue remayned with vs vnto the end.* Also the Apostle saith in an other place If we sinne willingly after wee haue receaued the knowledge of the truth,*there remayneth no more sacrifice for sinne, but a fearfull looking for iudgement and violent fire, which shall deuoure the aduersaries.

They sinne willingly, whiche of a set malice & purpose do withhold the truth in vnrighteousnes & lying,* kicking agaynst the manifest & opē known truth, which although they do perfectly know that in all the world there is none other sacrifice for sinne,* but onely that omnisufficient sacrifice of Christes death: yet notwithstanding, they will not commit themselues wholly vnto it: but rather despise it, allowing other sacrifices for sinne, inuented by the imagination of man (as we see by dayly experience) vnto whō if they abide still in their wickednes,* & sinne, remayneth a most horrible & dreadful iudgement. This is y^e sinne vnto death for which s. Iohn would not that a man shuld pray.*

Wherefore my dearly beloued in Christ, let vs, (on whō the endes of the world are come) taking dilligent heed vnto ourselues,* y^t now in these last and perilous times, in y^e which the deuill is come downe, and hath great wrath because he knoweth his time is but short,* & wherof the Prophetes, Christ & the Apostles haue so much spoken & geuē vs so earnest forewarning: we withhold not y^e truth in vnrighteousnes,* beleuing, doying, or speaking anye thing agaynst our knowledge & conscience, or without fayth. For if we do so,* for what soeuer cause it be, it is a wilfull & obstinate infidelitie, & a sinne vnto death: And as our Sauour Christ sayth: if ye beleue not: ye shall dye in your own sins. For vnles we hold fast the word of life,* both beleuing it & also bringing forth fruite worthy of repentaunce, we shal with the vnprofitable figge tree,* which did but cumber the ground, be cut downe, and our talent taken from vs and geuen vnto an other that shall put it to a better vse: & wee through our owne vnthankfulnes put from the mercy of God, shall euer be able to pay our debts: that is to say, we shall altogether be lost & vndone.* For the earth that drinketh in rayne that commeth o^t vppon it, & bringeth forth herbes meete for them y^t dresse it, receiueth blessing of god. But that ground that beareth thornes & brears, is reprooued and is nigh vnto cursing, whose end is to be burned.

Neuertheles deare frends,* we trust to see better of you and thinges whiche accompany saluation, and that ye being y^t good ground, watred with the moystnes of Gods word plenteously preached amongst you, will with a good hart heare the word of God & keep it,* bringing forth fruite with pacience. And be none of those forgetful and hipocritish hearers,* which although they heare the worde yet the Deuill commeth,* and catcheth away that which was sowē in the hart: either hauing no roote in themselues, endure but a season, and as soone as tribulation or persecution ariseth because of the word, by and by they are offended: eyther with the cares of this world & deceitfulnes of riches choke the word, and so are vnfruitful.* Read the parable of the sower, & among other thinges note and marke, that y^e most part of the hearers of Gods word are but hipocrites and heare the word without any fruit or profite, yea onely to theyr greater condemnation: for onely the fourth part of y^e seede doth bring forth fruite. Therefore let not vs that be Ministers, or professours, & followers of Gods worde, be discouraged, though that very few do geue credite, & follow the doctrine of the Gospell, and be saued.

Who soeuer therefore hath eares to heare, let him heare:* for whosoever hath, to him shal be geuen, and he shal haue aboundance: but who soeuer hath not frō him shalbe taken away euen that he hath: that is to say, they that haue a desire of righteousness and of the truth, shall be more & more illuminated of God, on the contrary part, they that do not couet after righteousness and truth, are more hardend and blynded, though they seeme vnto them selues most wise. For God doth here follow an example of a louing father,* which when he seeth that fatherly loue and correction doth not helpe towards his children, vseth an other way. He ceaseth to be beneficiall vnto them, & to minister vnto thē fatherly correction: he geueth them ouer vnto them selues, sufferyng them to lyue as they lust them selues.

But we trust to see better of you (my dearly beloued) and that ye lyke very Gadarenites,* for feare to lose your wordly substance or other delites of this lif, wil not banish away Christ & his gospell from amongst you:* but that ye with al diligence of mind wil receiue y^e word of god, taught you by such ministers, as now when persecution ariseth because of y^e word, are not ashamed of the testimony of our Lorde Iesus, but are content to suffer aduersitie with the Gospel, & therein to suffer trouble as euil doers, euen vnto bondes. And if ye refuse thus to do,* your owne bloud wil be vpon your owne heades. And as ye haue had plenteous preaching of the Gospel, more then other haue had: so shall ye be sure if ye repent not, and bring forth fruites worthy of repentāce, to be sorer plagued, & to receiue greater vengeance at Gods hand, then others, and the kyngdome of God shalbe taken from you, and be geuen to an other nation, which will bring forth the fruites thereof.

Wherefore my dearly beloued in Christ, take good heede to your selues, & ponder well in your mindes, how fearefull and horrible a thing it is to fal into the hādes of the liuing God. And see that ye receiue not the worde of God in vaine, but continually labour in fayth, and declare your fayth by your good workes, which are infallible witnesses of y^e true iustifying fayth, which is neuer idle, but worketh by charitie. And see that ye continually geue yourselues vnto all maner of good workes: amongst the which, the chieftest are to be obedient to the Magistrates, sith they are the ordinaunce of God, whether they be good or euil,* vnles they commaunde Idolatry and vngodlines, that is to say, thinges contrary vnto true Religion. For then ought we to say with Peter: We ought more to obey God then man. But in any wyse we must beware of tumult, insurrection, rebellion, or resistance.

The weapon of a Christian in this matter,* ought to be the sword of the spirite, which is Gods word and prayer, coupled with humilitie and due submission,* and with readynes of hart, rather to dye then to do any vngodlynnesse. Christ also doth teach vs, that al power is of God, yea euē the power of the wicked, which God causeth often tymes to raigne for our sinnes, & disobedience towards him and his word. Whosoever then doth resist any power, doth resist the ordinaunce of God, and so purchase to him selfe vtter destruction and vndoing.

We must also by al meanes, be promoters of vnity, peace and concorde. We must honour and reuerence Princes,* and all that be in authoritie, and pray for them, and be diligent to set forth their profite and commoditie.

Page 1570 Secondly, we must obey our parents, or them that be in their rowmes, & be careful for our households, that they be prouided for & fed, not onely w^t bodely foode, but muche rather with spirituall foode, which is the word of God.

Thirdly, we must serue our neighbors by all meanes we can, remembering well the saying of Christ: Whatsoever ye woulde that men shoulde doe vnto you,* doe ye likewise vnto them, for this is the lawe and the Prophets.

Fourthly, we must diligently exercise the necessarye worke of prayer for all estates:* knowing that God therefore hath so much commaunded it, and hath made so great promises vnto it, and doeth so well accept it. After these workes we must learne to know the Crosse, & what affection and minde we must beare towards our aduersaries and enemies, what so euer they be, to suffer all aduersities and euils patiently, to pray for them that hurt, persecute, and trouble vs: and by thus vsing our selues, we shal obtaine an hope & certaintie of our vocation, that we be the elect children of God.

And thus, I commende you brethren vnto God, and to the word of his grace,* which is able to builde further, & geue you an inheritaunce among al thē, which are sanctified: beseechyng you to helpe M. Saūders & me your late Pastours, and all them that be in bondes for the Gospels sake, with your praiers to God for vs, that we may be deliuered from all them that beleue not, and frō vnreasonable and froward mē, and that this our imprisonment & afflictio may be to the glory and profit of our Christian brethren in the world, & that Christ may be magnified in our bodies, whether it be by death or by lyfe. Amen.

Salute from me all the faythfull brethren: & because I write not seuerall Letters to them, let them either ⟨◇⟩ or heare these my letters. The grace of our Lord be with you all. Amē. The xxviii. of Iune, by the vnprofitable seruaūt of Iesus Christ, and now also his prisoner. George Marsh.

Saue your selues from this vntoward generation. *Pray, pray, pray. Neuer more neede.

An other Letter of the sayd George Marsh, to certaine of his dearely beloued frendes at Manchester in Lancashire.

GRace be with you, and peace from God ou• Father, and from our Lord Iesus Christ. Amen.

*After salutations in Christe to you, with thanks for youre frendly remembraunces of mee, desiring and wishing vnto you, not onely in my letters, but also in my daily praier, such consolation in spirite, and taste of heauenly treasures, that ye may therby continually worke in faith, labour in loue, perseueer in hope, and be pacient in all your tribulations and persecutions, euen vnto the ende and glorious comming of Christ: these shalbe ea•nestly to exhort and beseeche you in Christ, as ye haue receyued the Lord Iesus, * euen so to walke, rooted in him, and not to be afraid of any terrour of your aduersaries, be they neuer so manye and mighty, and you on the other side neuer so fewe and weake: for the battell is the Lordes. And as in times past, God was with Abraham, Moses, Isaac, Dauid the Machabees and other, & fought for them, and deliuered all their ennemies into their handes, euen so hath he promised to be with vs also, vnto the worlds end, and so to assist, strengthen, and helpe vs, that no man shalbe able to withstande vs. For as I was with Moses, so will I be with thee (sayth God) and wil neuer leaue thee nor forsake thee. Be strong and bolde: neither feare nor dread: for the Lord thy God is wyth thee, whether soeuer thou goest. Nowe if God be on oure side, who can be against vs? *

In this our spirituall warfare, is no man ouercome, vnles he traiterously leaue and forsake his captaine, * either cowardly cast away his weapons, or willingly yelde himselfe to his ennemies, either fearefully turne his backe and flie. Be strong therefore in the Lord (deare brethren) and in the power of his might, and put on all the armour of God, * that ye may be able to stand stedfast against the craftie assaults of the deuill.

Now, what weapons ye must fight withall, learne of S. Paul, a champion both much exercised, and also most valiaunt and inuincible. * For we must thinke none other, but that the life of man is a perpetuall warfare vppon earth, as the examples of all godly men, throughout all ages to declare. The valiant warrior S. Paul, being deliuered from the handes of the vngodly, and that so many times, and also from so many extreme pearils and dangers of death (as he his owne selfe doth witnes) is faine to commit him selfe in the ende to the rough waters of the sea: * where he was in great pearil and ieoperdie of his owne life: yet was God alwaies (to the great comfort of all that heare of it) most ready to comfort and succour him, and gloriously deliuered him out of all his troubles: so that no manne that inuaded him, could doe him any harme, and in the ende he was compelled to saye: I haue finished my course: * the time of my departing is at hand: I long to be loosed, and to be with Christ, which is best of all, most heartely desiring death.

These things be written for our learning and comforte, and be to vs a sure obligation, * that if we submit our selues to God & his holy word, no man shalbe able to hurt vs, and that he will deliuer vs from all troubles, yea from death also, vntil such time as we couet and desire to die. Let vs therefore runne with patience vnto the battaile that is set before vs, * and looke vnto Iesus the Captaine and finisher of our faith, and after his example, for the rewardes sake that is set out vnto vs, patiently beare the crosse and despise the shame. For all that will liue godly in Christ Iesu, shall suffer persecution.

Christ was no sooner baptised and declared to the world to be the sonne of God, * but Sathan was by and by ready to tempte hym: which thing we must looke for also: yea, the more we shall encrease in faith and vertuous liuing, the more strongly will Sathan assault vs: whom we must learne after the example of Christ, to fight againste, and ouercome with the holy and sacred Scriptures and worde of God (which are our heauenly armour) and sword of the spirite. And let the fasting of Christ, while hee was tempted in the wildernes, be vnto vs an example of sober liuing, not for the space of 40. daies (as the Papists doe fondly fansie of their owne braines) but as long as wee are in the wilderness of this wretched life, assaulted of Sathan,* who like a roaring Lyon walketh about, and ceaseth not, seeking our vtter destruction.

Neither can the seruants of God at any time come & stand before God, that is, leade a godly life, and walke innocently before God. But Sathan commeth also among them, that is, he daily accuseth, finedeth fault, vexeth,* persecuteth and troubleth the godly: for it is the nature and propertie of the deuill alwayes to hurt, and do mischief, vnlesse he be forbidden of God: for vnlesse God do permit him, he can do nothing at all, not so much as enter into a filthy hogge: but we are more of price then many hogs before God, if we cleaue vnto his sonne by faith.

Let vs therefore knowing Sathans deceits and rancor, walke the more warely, and take vnto vs the shield of faith,* wherewith we may be able to quench and ouercome all the fiery and deadly dartes of the wicked. Let vs take to vs the helmet of saluation, & sworde of the spirit, which is the word of God, and learne to vse the same according to the example of oure graunde Captayne Christ. Let vs fast and pray continually. For this frantike kinde of deuils goeth not out otherwise (as Christ doeth teach vs) but by faithfull praier and fasting, whiche is true abstinence and sobernesse of liuing,* if we vse the same according to the doctrin of the gospell and worde of God. Fasting is acceptable to God, if it be done without hypocrisie, that is to say: •f we vse it to this entent, that thereby this mortall body and disobedient carcase maye be •amed and brought vnder the subiection of the spirite:,* and againe, if we fast to this intent, that we maye spare wherewyth to helpe and succour our poore needie brethren.

This fast do the true Christians vse all the dayes of their life, although among the common sort of people remaineth yet still that superstitious kinde of fasting, which God so earnestly reprooueth by his Prophet Esay. For as for true chastening of the body, and abstaining from vice, with shewing mercye towardes our needy neighbours, we wil neither vnderstand nor heare of, but still thinke with the Iewes, that we doe God a great pleasure when we fast, and that we then fast,* when we abstaine from one thing, and fil our bellies with an other. And verely in this poynt doth our superstition much excede the superstitiō of the Iewes: for we neuer reade that they euer tooke it for a fast, to abstaine from flesh, and to eate either fish or white meat, as they call it.

To fasting and praier must be ioyned almes, and mercye towardes the poore and needie: and that our almes may be acceptable vnto God, three things are chiefly required.

First, that we geue with a chearefull and ioyfull heart: For the Lord loueth a chearefull geuer.

Secondly, that we geue liberally, putting aside al nigardship, knowing that he that soweth little, shall reape little, and hee that soweth plenteously, shall reape plenteously.* Lette euerye manne therefore doe accordinge as hee is able. The poorest caitiffe in the world may geue as great and acceptable an almes in the sight of God, as the richest man in the worlde can doe. The poore widowe that did offer but two mites,* whiche make a farthing, did highly please Christ: In so much that he affirmed with an othe, That shee of her penurie, had added more to the offrings of God, then all the rich men, which of their superfluitie had cast in very muche. For if there be first a willing minde (as S. Paule sayth) it is accepted, according to that a mā hath,* and not according that a man hath not.

Thirdly, we must geue wythout hypocrisie and ostentation, not seeking the praise of men, or our own glorie of profite.* And although the Scriptures in some places make mention of a rewarde to oure almes and other good woorkes, yet ought we not to thinke that wee doe merite or deserue any thyng:* but rather wee oughte to acknowledge, that God of his mere mercy rewardeth in vs hys owne giftes. For what hathe hee that geueth almes, that hee hathe not receiued, hee then that geueth vnto a poore man anye manner of thing, geueth not of his owne, but of those goodes whych he hath receiued of God. What haste thou Page 1571 (saith the apostle) that thou hast not receiued? If thou hast receiued it, why reioycest thou, as though thou hadst not receiued it?

This sentence ought to be had in remembrance of all men. For if we haue nothing, but that which wee haue receiued, what can we deserue? or what neede we to dispute and reason of our owne merites? It commeth of the free gift of God, that we liue, that we loue God, that we walke in his feare. Where is our deseruing then? We must also in this our spiritual warfare arme our selues with continuall praier, a very necessary, strong, and inuincible weapon, and after the example of Christ and al other godly men, crie heartily vnto God in faith, in all our distresses and anguishes. Let vs goe boldly to the seate of grace, where we shall be sure to receiue mercie,* and finde grace to helpe in time of neede. For now is pride and persecution encreased: nowe is the time of destruction and wrathfull displeasure.

Wherfore my deare brethren, be ye feruēt in the law of God, and ieoperd ye your liues if neede shall so require,* for the testament of the fathers, and so shall yee receiue great honour, and an euerlasting name. Remember Abraham: Was not he found faithfull in temptation,* and it was reckened vnto him for righteousnes? Ioseph in time of his trouble kept the commaundement, and was made a Lord of Egypt. Phinees was so feruent for the honor of God,* that he obtained the couenaut of an euerlasting Priesthode. Iosua for the fulfilling the word of God, was made the captaine of Israel. Caleb bare recorde before the Congregation, and receiued an heritage.* Dauid also in his mercifull kindnesse obtained the throne of an euerlasting kingdome. Elias being zealous and feruent in the law, was taken vp into heauen. Ananias, Azarias,* and Misael remained stedfast in the faith, and were deliuered out of the fire. In like maner Daniel being vnguiltie, was saued from the mouth of the Lions.

And thus ye may cōsider throughout al ages since the world began,* that who soeuer putte their trust in God, were not ouercome. Feare not ye then the wordes of vngodly men: for their glory is but dong and wormes: to day are they set vp, and to morowe are they gone: For they are toured into earth, and theyr memorial commeth to naught. Wherfore let vs take good hearts vnto vs, and quite our selues like men in the lawe: for if we doe the things that are commaunded vs in the law of the Lorde our God, we shall obtaine great honour therein.

Beloued in Christ, let vs not faint because of affliction, wherwith God trieth all them that are sealed vnto life euerlasting:* for the onely way into the kingdome of God, is through much tribulation. For the kingdome of heauen (as God teacheth by hys Prophet Esdras) is like a Citie builded and set vpon a broad field,* and full of all good thinges, but the entraunce is narrowe and sodaine,* [full of sorrow and trauaile, pearils and labours] Like as if there were a fire at the right hand, and a deepe water at the les•• and as it were one straight path betwene them both, so smal, that there could but one man goe there. If this Citie now were geuen to an heire, and he neuer went through the pearillous way, how would he receiue his inheritaunce? Wherefore seeing we are in this narrowe and straight way, which leadeth vnto the most ioyfull and pleasaunt Citie of euerlasting life: let vs not stagger, eyther turne backe, being afraide of the daungerous and pearillous way, but followe our Captaine Iesus Christ in the narrowe and straight way, and be afraide of nothing, no not euen of death it selfe: * for it is he that must lead vs to our iourneys ende, and open vs the doore vnto euerlasting life.

Consider also the course of thys world, howe many there be which for their maisters sake, * or for a litle promotions sake, wold aduenture their liues in worldly affaires, as cōmonly in warres, & yet is their reward but light & transitory, & ours is vnspeakable, great and euerlasting. They suffer paines to be made Lordes on earth for a short season: howe much more ought we to endure like paines (yea peradventure much lesse) to be made kinges in heauen for euermore? Consider also the wicked of this worlde, which for a litle pleasures sake, or to be auenged on their ennemies, will fight with sworde and weapons, and put them selues in daunger of imprisonment and hanging. So much as vertue is better then vice, & God mightier then the deuil, so much ought we to excell them in this our spirituall battaile.

And seeing brethren, it hath pleased God to set me, and that most worthy minister of Christ, Iohn Bradforde, your countrey men in the forefront of this battaile, where (for the time) is most daunger, I beseeche you all in the bowels of Christe to helpe vs and all other our felow souldiors standing in like perillous place, with your praiers to God for vs, that we maye quite our selues like men in the Lord, and geue some example of boldnes & constancie, mingled with pacience in the feare of God, that yee and others our brethren, thorough oure example, may be so encouraged and strenghtned to folow vs, that ye also may leaue example to your weake brethren in the world, to followe you. Amen.

Consider what I say: the Lorde geue vs vnderstanding in all things. * Brethren the time is short: it remaineth that yee vse thys world as though ye vsed it not: for the fashion of this worlde vanisheth away. See that ye loue not the world, neither the things that are in the world: but set your affection on heauenly things, where Christ sitteth on the right hand of God. Be •eeke, & long suffering, serue and edifie one other, * with the gift that God hath geuen you. Beware of strange doctrine: lay aside the old conuersation of greedy lustes, and walke in a new life. Beware of all vncleannes, couetousnes, foolish talking, false doctrine & dronkennes: Reioyce & be thankful towards God, & submit your selues one to an other▪ Cease from sinne, spend no more time in vice, be sober and apt to pray, be pacient in trouble, loue each other, and let the glory of God and profite of your neighbor, be the onely marke ye shoote at in all your doings. Repent ye of the life that is past, and take better heede to your doings hereafter. And aboue all things cleaue yee fast to him, who was deliuered to death for our sins, & rose againe for our iustification. To whome with the father & the holy ghost be al honor & rule for euermore. Amen.

Salute from me in Christe all others, which loue vs in the faith, and at your discretiō make them partakers of these letters: and pray ye all for me and other in bondes for the Gospell, that the same God (which by his grace hath called vs from wicked papistrie, vnto true Christianitie, and now of loue prooueth out patience by persecution, wil of his mercy and fauour in the end gloriously deliuer vs, either by death, or by life, to his glory, Amē

At Lancaster the 30. of August. 1554.

By me an vnprofitable seruant of Christ, George Marsh.

To his welbeloued in Christ Ienkin Crampton, Iames Leiuer, Elice Fogge▪ Rafe Bradshaw, the wife of Richard Bradshaw, Elice Crampton, and to euery one of them be these deliuered from Lancaster. G. Marsh.

The grace of our Lord Iesus Christ, & the loue of God, & the felowship of the holy Ghost be w^t you al. Amen.*

After salutations in Christ, and harty thanks for your frendly tokens, and your other remembraunces towards me, beseeching God y^t ye may encrease in faith, feare, loue, and 〈◇〉 good gifts, & grow vp into a perfit man in Christe: these be earnestly to exhort you, yea & to beseech you in the •ender mercy of Christe, that w^t purpose of heart ye continually cleaue vnto the Lorde, and that ye worship & serue him in spirite, in the gospel of his sonne. For God wil not be worshipped after the commandements & traditions of men, neither yet by any other meanes appoynted, prescribed, and taught vs, but by his holy word. And though all men for the most parte defile them selues with the wicked traditions of men & ordinances after y^e world, and not after Christ: yet doe ye after the ensample of Tobie,* Daniel & his 3. companions, Matharhias and his 5. sonnes, be at a poynt with your selues that ye wil not be defiled wyth y^e vncleane meates of the heathen, I do meane the filthinesse of Idolatrie, and the very Heathenish ceremonyes of the Papistes: but as true worshippers, serue ye God in spirite and verity, according to his sacred Scriptures:* which I would wish and will you aboue all things continually and reuerently (as both S. Paule and Christ commaund you) to searche and read, with the wholesome monitions of the same: to teach, exhort, comfort & edifie one an other,* and your brethren & neighbours, now in time of thys our miserable captiuitie, and great famishment of soules, for want of the foode of Gods worde. And doubt not,* but that the merciful Lord, who hath promised to be with vs euen vnto the worldes end, and that whensoever 2. or 3. be gathered together in his name, hee will be in the midst of them, will assist you, and teach you the right meanings of the sacred Scriptures, will keepe you from all errors, and lead you into all truth, as he hath faithfully promised.

And though ye thinke your selues vnable to teach, yet at the cōmaundement of Christ now in time of famine, the hungry people being in wildernes farre frō any townes,* which if they be sent away fasting, are sure to faint & perish by the way, employ and bestow those fiue loaues and two fishes that ye haue, vpon that hungrie multitude, although ye thinke it nothing among so many. And y^t he increased the v. loaues and the ij. fishes to feede v. M. men,* besides women and children, shall also augment his gifts in you, not only to the edifying and winning of others in christ, but also to an exceding great increase of your know^lledge in God & his holy word. And feare not your aduersaries: for either according to his accustomed maner God shal blind their eies that they shal not espie you,* either get you fauour in their sight, either els graciously deliuer you out of their handes by one meanes or other.

Obeie with reuerence al your superiours, vnlesse they commaund idolatrie or vngodlinesse.*
Make prouision for your households, chiefly that they be instructed and taught in the law of God.
Loue your wiues euen as your owne selues, & as Christ loued the congregatiō. Loue your children, but rate thē not, lest they be of a desperate mind: and Page 1572 bring them vp in the nurture & information of the Lorde, and teache them euen as the godly parents of Tobie the younger, and Susanna did teach their children, euen from their infancy to reuerence God according to his lawe, & to abstaine from sin,* prouiding y^t in no wise they be brought vp in idlenes & wantonnes, seing y^t ye reckon your selues to be the children of God, and looke for the life whych God shall geue to them that neuer tourne their beliefe from him.* See that ye euer feare God, and keepe his commandements: and though the plague of God chance vnto you, yet remaine yee stedfast in the faith and feare of God, and thanke him and serue hym in such holines and righteousnes as are acceptable before him all the dayes of your life. Comfort your selues in all your aduersities, & stay your selues in him, who hath promised not to leaue you as fatherles and motherles children without any comfort, but y^t he wil come to you like a most gentle & merciful Lorde. He will continually stand by you in all your troubles, assisting, helping and succoring you at all times. I wil be with you (sayth he) vnto the ende of the world. And clea•e you fast vnto him, which was incarnate• liued, wrought, taught, & died for your sinnes: yea rose againē from death, ascended into heauen for your iustification. Repēt ye of the life that is past, and cease from sinne, and from hence forward liue as much time as remaineth in the flesh, not after the lusts of men, but after the will of God. To do good & distribute, forget not. Fast and pray busily, & as euery man hath receiued the gift, minister the same one to an other as good ministers of the manifold graces of God, that God in all things may be glorified through Iesus Christ, to whome be praise and dominion for euer, and while the world standeth, Amen.

Yours George Marsh.

An other Letter.

The same grace and peace (dearely beloued in Christe) doe I intirely desire and wish vnto you, which the Apostle S. Paule wisheth to all them, vnto whome he did write and send hys Epistles, then which 2. things no better can be wished and desired of God. Grace is throughout all the Epistles of Paule, taken for the free mercy and fauour of God, wherby he saueth vs freely, without any deseruings or workes of the lawe. In like maner peace is taken for the quietnes and tranquillitie of the conscience, being throughly perswaded that through the only merits of Christes death and bloudshedding, there is an attonement and peace made betweene God and vs, so that God will no more impute our sinnes vnto vs, nor yet condemne vs.

Dearely beloued, I wil not be negligent to put you alwaies in remembraunce of things, though that yee knowe them your selues, and be also established in the present truthe: notwithstanding, I thinke it mete (as long as I am in this tabernacle) to stirre you vp, by putting you in remembraunce. Wherefore I beseeche you brethren, and exhort you in the Lord Iesus, that ye encrease more and more, euē as ye haue receiued how ye ought to walke and to please God. And as Barnabas that good man, & full of the holy ghost,* exhorted the Antiochiās, with purpose of hart, cleaue ye continually vnto the Lord. And stand fast, & be not moued frō the hope of the Gospell, whereof (God be thanked) ye haue had plenteous preaching vnto you these yeares past, by the faithfull Ministers of Iesus Christ, Leiuer, Pilkenton, Bradford, Saunders, and others like,* which now when persecution ariseth because of the worde, doe not fall away like shrinking children and forsake the truthe, but are prest and ready for your sakes, which are hys mysticall body, to forsake the chiefe & principall delites of this life, and some of them in geuing place to the outrageous tyrannie of the world, to forsake their liuings, frends, natie land, and other chiefe pleasures of this life, and to commit themselues to painefull exile,* that if it please God, Christ may come againe out of Egypt. And other some are ready to fulfil their ministerie vnto the vtmost: that is to witte, with their painfull imprisonmentes and bloudshedding (if neede shall so require) to confirme and seale Christes Gospell, whereof they haue bene ministers: and as S Paul sayth: not onely to be cast into prison, but also to die for the name of the Lord Iesus.

Be ye not therefore ashamed of the testimonie of our Lorde Iesus, neither be yee ashamed of vs which are his prisonners, but suffer ye aduersitie with the gospel, for which worde we suffer as euil doers, euen vnto bonds: but the word of God is not bound with vs. Therefore we suffer all things for the elect sake, that they also may obtaine the saluation which is in Christ Iesu, with eternall glory: wherefore stand ye fast in the faith, and be not moued from the hope of the Gospell,* and so shall ye make vs euen wyth ioy to suffer for your sakes, and as the Apostle sayeth. To fulfill that which is behinde of the passions of Christ in our flesh, for his bodies sake, which is the congregation. Saint Paul doth not here meane, that there wanteth any thing in the passion of Christe, which may be supplied by man, for the passion of Christ (as touching his owne person) is that most perfecte and omnisufficient sacrifice, wherby we are all made perfect, as many as are sanctified in his bloud: but these his words ought to be vnderstande of the elect and chosen, in whome Christ is and shall be persecuted vnto the worldes ende. The passion of Christ then, as touching his mysticall body which is the Church, shall not be perfecte till they haue all suffered, whome God hath appoynted to suffer for his sonnes sake. Wherefore stablish your selues and be of good, comfort, & be not mooued in these afflictions, knowing that we are appoynted therunto. For on your partes nothing cā be greater consolation & inwarde ioy vnto vs in our aduersitie, then to heare of your faith and loue, and that yee haue a good remembrance of vs alwaies, praying for vs as we doe for you, as the Apostle wryteth of the Thessalonians, saying:* Nowe are we alieue if ye stand stedfast in the Lorde: for good shepheardes doe alwayes count the welfare and prosperous estate of Christes flocke to be their owne: for while it goeth well with the congregation, it goeth wel with them also in whatsoever affliction or aduersity they be: but when they see the churche in any pearill or weakenesse, then be they wearie of their owne liues, then can they haue no rest nor ioy. Who is weake, sayeth S. Paule, and I am not weake? Who is offended and I do not burne? But this affection is not in them that seeke their owne luker and glory.

And for asmuch as the life of man is a perpetual warfare vpon earth, let vs run with ioy vnto the battell that is set before vs,* & like good Warriours of Iesus Christ, please him, who hath chosen vs to be soldiours, & not like shrinking children faint and fall away from the truth now in time of aduersitie and tribulation, wherewith all that wil liuely godly in Christ Iesu, must be tried, euen as golde & siluer is prooued in the fire,* and whereof all the scriptures haue geuen vs so much forewarning For God is wōt for the most part, to warne his electe and chosen what affliction and trouble shal happen vnto them for his sake, not to the entent to fray them thereby, but rather to prepare their mindes against the boistrous stormes of persecution. As we haue a notable exāple in the Apostle S Paule, vnto whome God sent Agabus, who prophecied vnto him of the imprisonment and bandes, that hee should suffer at Ierusalem: In whom we haue also a good example of constancie & stedfastnes, which regarding nothing the teares of his familiar frēds, nor yet the peril of his own life, did through fire & water go on stil to set forth the glory of God; and he being deliuered frō the hands of his vngodly & bloudthirsty enmies, & that so many times, is in cōclusion fain to commit himself to the rough waters of the sea, where he was a long season in great peril & ieoperdy of his own life. But God was alwais (to the great cōfort of all that shal heare of it) most ready to help & succor hym. First he did send him a most frendly and swete cōpanye, I meane Aristarchus and Lucas, so ruling the heart of the vnder captaine Iulius, that he courteously intreated him,* & gaue him liberty to go to his frendes, and to refresh him selfe, and he was beneficiall vnto him at all times. In like manner was God with Ioseph, and deliuered him from all his aduersities, and gaue him fauoure and wisdom in the sight of Pharaο king of Egypt, in so much that he made him Gouvernour ouer all Egypt, and ouer all his houshold. In like manner was hee with Ieremie, and Daniel in theyr great troubles, and appoynted men for them in their most troubles, to relieue, succour, and helpe them to their singular comfort.

Also when Peter was in Herodes prison,* sleeping betwene 2. soldiours, bound with 2 chaines, and the keepers before the dore keeping the prisone, the same night that Herode had intended to haue brought him out vnto the people the day following, and to haue put him vnto death to please the Iewes withal, as a litle before he had killed Iames the brother of Iohn with the sword: god sent his angel, and the chaines fell off from Peters hands, and the yron gate opened vnto him by his owne accorde, and so was Peter wonderfully deliuered by God. For it is the true liuing God that looseth al bandes, and deliuereth out of prison, and not that fained God S. Leonard. On that true God did S. Peter call: vnto him did he ascribe the glory of his deliuerance, saying: Nowe I know of a truth that God hath sent his Angel. &c.

These things are written for our learning, that we through patience and comforte of the scriptures might haue hope. The God of patience and comfort, graūt that we be like minded one towardes an other, after the ensample of Christe Iesu, that we all agreeing together, may with one mouth glorifie God the father of our Lord Iesus Christ.

A poore prisoner for Christ, George Marsh.

An other letter of George Marshe to Robert Langley.

THE grace of our Lord Iesus Christ, & the loue of God, and the fellowship of the holy Ghost be with you good brother in Christe, Robert Langley,* & with all them that loue the Lord Iesus vnfainedly. Amen.

After harty commendations to you, w^t thanks for that ye did visite me a prisoner in Christ, & vnacquainted with you, to your costes, this shal be to let you knowe, that yee shall receiue from me mine examination and handling at Page 1573 Lathum, and the cause of mine imprisonmēt, according as I did promise you: and this ye shal receiue by my brother or some one of the Bradshawes of Bolton w^tin this seuen night, willing you to shew the same to such faithfull mē about Manchester or els where, as you do take to be fauorers of true religion, and Christes holy word, and then to deliuer it againe. And wheras you did put me in comfort, that if I did want any thing necessary vnto thys life, you with some others, would be bearers with me in this my costly and painful affliction. I geue you most hearty thankes, and reioyce greatly in the Lord, who stirreth vp the hearts of others to be carefull for me in this my great necessitie. I thanke God, as yet I doe want nothing, and intende to be as little chargeable vnto others (sauing my mother) as I can. If I do want, I wil be bolde wyth you and others, to send for your reliefe and helpe in my necessitie: desiring you in the meane while to pray for mee, and all others in the bondes of Christ: that God woulde performe the thing which he hath begon in vs, that we maye with boldnesse confesse Iesus Christe, and fighte the good fight of faith.

Yours George Marsh.

A letter of George Marshe to a certaine godly frende.

GRace be with you, and peace be multiplied in the knowledge of God and Iesus the Lord.

After hearty commendations and thanks to you, not only for your large token,* but much more for your louing letters, ful of consolation to me as touching my person to you vnknownen: these shall be to certifie you that I reioyce greatly in the Lorde, when I do perceiue how my sweete sauour Christ doth stirre vp the mindes, not only of my familiar frends in times past, but also of sondry and diuers heeretofore vnto me vnknowne and vnacquainted, to beare part with me in this my painfull & costly imprisonment, sending me things not onely necessary for thys present life, but also comfortable letters, incouraging & exhorting me to continue grounded and stablished in the faith, and not to be moued away from the hope of the Gospell, wherof, according to my small talent I haue bene a minister: and daily I call and crie vnto the Lord, in whom is al my trust, and wythout whom I can do nothing, that he which hath begon a good worke in me, wold vouchsafe to go forth with it vntill the day of Iesus Christ, being surely certified in my conscience of this, that he will so doe, for as much as he hath geuen me, that not only I shoulde beleue on him, but also suffer for his sake. The Lord strengthen me with hys holy spirite, that I maye be one of the number of those blessed, which enduring to the ende, shalbe saued.

And whereas you say that my suffering of persecution wyth Christ, is a thing to you most comfortable, I make answere that in all mine aduersitye and necessitye, nothing on your behalfe is greater consolation vnto me, then to heare of the faith and loue of others, and how they haue good remembrance of vs alwayes, euen as the Apostle reporteth by the Thessalonians, saying: Now are ye aliue if ye stande stedfast in the Lorde. For my trust in the Lord is, that this my businesse shall happen to the furtherance of the gospel, and that you will be none of those forgetfull and hypocritish hearers,* whereof some being but wayside hearers, the deuil commeth and taketh away the woord out of their heartes, least they shoulde beleue and be saued (but lette praier be made without ceassing by the congregation vnto God for them) and (no doubt) God will to your consolation, gloriously deliuer by one mean•s or other his oppressed. Onely tary ye the Lords leisure: be strong, let your heart be of good comfort, and waite yee still for the Lorde. He tarieth not, that will come, looke for hym therefore and faint not, and he will neuer faile you.

Yours George Marsh.

A letter of a godly brother one Iames Bradshaw, sent to George Marsh in prisone.

GRace and peace from God the father, and the Lord Iesu Christ be with you alway.* Amen.

We had a letter from you, which is a great cōfort vnto vs, to see you take the crosse so thankfully. Trouble & affliction doth prooue, try, instructe, confirme & strengthen the faith, prouoke and stirre vp prayer, driue and force vs to amendement of life,* to the feare of God, to mekenes, to patience, to constancie, to gentlenesse, to sobernesse, temperancie, and to all maner of vertues, and are the occasion of exceeding much good, as wel transitorie as eternal, in this world as in the world to come. There is neither good nor bad, godly nor vngodly, but hee hathe one crosse or other. And although some there be that can shift for a while, and make prouision for thēselues for a time, by craft or subtilty and dissimulatiō, or by some fashion in fellowship (as they call it) yet they bring them selues at length into the highest danger, confusion and shame, both in this world, & in the world to come. And seing that all the troubles and aduersity in this world, are a thousand times more light & easy, yea nothing in cōparison of the eternal fire, which is prepared and already kindled for the vnfaithfull and wicked enemies of God: all faithfull and godly persons ought to beare and suffer their transitorye affliction and aduersitie the more patiently, willingly, and thankfully: considering and remembring all the dearely beloued frendes of God, which were wonderfully vexed & plaged of their enemies Abraham of the Caldeis, Lot, of the Sodomites, Isaac, of Ismael, Iacob of Esau, Moses of his people, Dauid of Saule and of his owne sonnes. As for Iob,* he had not a drop of bloud in hys body. Iohn Baptist the holiest that euer was borne of a woman, was without any law, right or reason, beheaded in prison, as thoughe God had knowen nothing at all of hym.

We haue many thousand fellow martyrs and companions of our miserie and aduersitie, in respecte of whose imprisonment, racking, chaines, fire, wilde beastes, and other meanes, wherwith they were tormented, al that we suffer is but a blast of winde. Therefore nowe who soeuer is ashamed of the crosse of Christ, and agreued therewith, the same is ashamed to haue Christ for his fellow & companion, and therefore shal the Lord Iesus Christ be ashamed of him againe at the latter day.

Thus I leaue for this time, beseeching you to lette me haue your aduise, because I do not outwardly speake that with my tong, that I do thinke w^t my heart. Pray for me, as I for you. I beseeche the holy Ghost haue you in hys keeping alway. Amen.

By your frend Iames Bradshaw.

A prayer of George Marsh, which he vsed daily to say.

OH Lord Iesu Christ, which art the onely phisition of woūded consciences, wee miserable sinners trusting in thy gracious goodnes, doe briefly open to thee the euil tree of our heart, with all the rootes, boughes, leaues and fruits, & withal the crookes,* knots and knoures, all which thou knowest: for thou throughly perceiuest as wel the inwarde lustes, doubtings, and denying thy prouidēce, as these grosse outward sinnes which we commit inwardly and deadly. Wherefore we beseeche thee, according to the litle measure of our infirmitie, althoughe we be farre vnable and vnapt to pray, that thou wouldest mercifully circumcise our stonie hearts, and for these old hearts, create new within vs, and replenish vs with a new spirite, and water vs and moysten vs wyth the iuyce of heauenly grace, and welles of spiritual waters, wher by the inwarde venome and noysome iuyce of the flesh may be dried vp, and custome of the olde man changed, and our heart alwaies bringing forth thornes and briars to be burned with fire, from hence foorth may beare spiritual fruites in righteousnes & holinesse, vnto life euerlasting. Amen.

Beloued, amonge other exercises, I doe daily on my knees vse this confession of sinnes, willing and exhorting you to do the same, & daily to acknowledge vnfaignedly to God your vnbelief, vnthakfulnes, & disobedience against him. This shal ye do if ye wil diligently consider and loke your selues first in the pure glasse of Gods commaundements, and there see our outward filthines and vncleannes, and so learne to vanquish the same, that is to wit, to fall in hearty displeasure against sinne, & therby be prouoked to long after Christ. For we truely are sinners: but he is iust, and the iustifier of all them that beleue on him. We are poore,but he is rich in mercy towarde all them that cal vpon him. If we hunger and thirst for righteousnesse, let vs resort vnto his table, for he is a most liberall feast maker. He wil set before vs his owne holy body, which was geuē for vs to be our meat, and hys precious bloud which was shed for vs, and for many for the remission of sinnes, to be our drinke. He biddeth, willeth, & calleth for geasts, which hunger and thirst. Come (sayeth he) all ye that labour and are laden, and I will refresh you, coole and ease you, and you shall finde rest vnto your soules.

The life and historie of W. Flower, who for striking of a priest, was apprehended, first hauing hys hande cut off, and after martyred for his constant standing to the truth.

William Flower, otherwise named Branch, first cōcerning his trade of life & bringing vp, he was born at Snowhil in the County of Cambridge,* where he went to schoole certaine yeares, and then came to the Abbey of Ely: where after hee hadde remained a while, hee was a professed Monke, according to the order and rule of the Page 1574 same house, wherein hee remained, vsing and bearing the habite of a Monke, and obseruing the rules and orders of the same house, vntill he came to 21. yeres of age, or thereabout: and before hee came to that age, and being a professed Monke,* hee was made a priest also in the same house, and there did celebrate and singe Masse a good space together. After that, by reason of a visitation, and certaine Iniunctions geuen in the same time by the authoritie of king Henry the eight, he forsooke the same house, and casting frō him the sayd Monkes habite and religion aforesayde, tooke vpon him and vsed the habite of a secular priest, and returned to Snowhill, where hee was borne, and there hee did celebrate and sing Masse, and taught childrē their Primer and Accidence, about halfe a yeare together.

Then he went from thence to Ludgate in Suffolke, & there serued as a seculare priest about a quarter of a yeare: and from thence he then went to Stonyland, where he taried and serued as a secular priest also, vntill the comming out of the sixe Articles: and then hee departed from thence, and went into Gloucester shiere, where after he had made his aboade in the countrey a while, at lengthe in Tewkesbury according to Gods holy ordinance, he married a wife, with whom he euer after faithfully and honestly cōtinued: and after his marriage, he taried in Tewkesbury about 2. yeares together:* and then from thence he went vnto Bros•ey, where he taried three quarters of a yere, and practised Phisicke and Surgerie, and from thence hee remooued to Northampton shier, where vnder a Gentleman he taught children their primers, and to wryte and read, a good space. And so departing from those parties, hee came to London, and there remained for a certain space. After that being desirous to see his countrey, he returned to Snowhil where hee was borne:* from thence to Brankstrey in Essex, then to Coxal, where he taught children a space: and so came to Lambeth beside London, where he hired a house, and placed his wife, where he and his wife did euer since dwell together till this time: howbeit for the most part he was alwayes abroade, and very seldome at home, except once or twise in a moneth, to visite and see his wife: where hee being at home vpon Easter day about 10. and a 11. a clocke in the fore noone of the same daye, came ouer the water from Lambeth into Sainte Margaretes Church at Westminster,* where he finding & seeing a Prieste called Iohn Cheltam, ministring and geuing the sacrament of the aultare to the people, and therewith being greatly offended in his cōscience with the Prieste for the same his doing (for that hee iudged hym not to be a Catholike Minister) neyther hys act to be catholike and laudable, according to Gods word, did strike and wounde him vpon the head, and also vppon the arme and hande with his woodknife, the Priest hauing the same time in his hande a Chalice, with certaine consetrated hostes therin, which were sprinkled with the bloud of the sayde priest.

*In the whych so doing, as in deede he did not well, or Euangelically, so afterward being examined before bishop Boner, did no lesse confesse his not well doing in the same, submitting therefore hym selfe willingly to punishmente, when it should come. Howbeit touching his beliefe in the sacrament, and the popish ministration, he neither woulde nor did submit him selfe.

Wherupon the foresaid Wil. Flower, being first apprehended & laid in the Gate house at Westminster (where hee had geuen two groates y^e same day a litle before to the prisoners, saying, he would shortly after come to them) wyth as many yrons as he could beare: afterward was conuented before Boner his Ordinarie. April 19. anno 1555. where the B. after he had sworne hym vpon a booke (according to his ordinarye maner) ministred articles & interrogatories to him. But before I speake of the articles, firste we haue here to set forth what cōmunication passed betwixt him & Rob. Smith being then also there prisoner w^t hym in newgate, concerning his facte done at Westminster, the tenor & effect of which communication here foloweth.

A communication or debating betweene Robert Smith prisoner in Newgate, and W. Flower, concerning his striking of the priest at Westminster.

Robert Smith.

*FRend, for as much as I do vnderstand that you do professe the Gospell, and also haue so done a long season, I am bolde to come vnto you, and in the way of communication to demaunde and learne a truth at your owne mouth, of certaine thyngs by you committed, to the astonishynge not onely of mee, but of diuers other that also professe the veritie.

Flower.

I praise God for hys great goodnesse, in shewing me the light of hys holy woorde: and I geue you heartie thanks for your visitation: intending by Gods grace to declare all the truth that ye shal demaunde lawfully of me, in all things.

Smith.

Then I desire you to shewe me the truthe of your deede, committed on Iohn Cheltam priest, in the Church, as nere as you can, that I may heare of your owne mouth howe it was.

Flo.

I came from my house at Lambeth, ouer the water▪ and entring into saint Margaretes Church (so called) and there seeing the people falling down before a most shamefull and detestable Idoll,* being moued with extreeme zeale for my God, whome I saw before my face dishonoured, I drewe foorth my Hanger, and strake the priest which ministred the same vnto them: whereupon I was immediately apprehended: and this is most true, as the acte is manifest.

Smith.

Did ye not know the person that ye strake, or were ye not zelous vpon him for any euil wil, or hatred betwene you at any time.

Flo.

No verily, I neuer to my knowledge sawe the person before that present, neither ought him or any man aliuie euil wil, or malice: for if he had not had it, an other shoulde, if I hadde any time come where the like occasion had bene ministred, if God had permitted me to doe it.

Smith.

Doe ye thinke that thing to be well done, and after the rule of the Gospell.

Flo

I do confesse all flesh to be subiect to the power of almighty God,* whom he maketh his ministers to do his wil and pleasure: as in example, Moses, Aaron, Phinees, Iosua, Zimrie, Ihehie, Iudith, Mathathiah, wyth many other, not only chaunging degrees, but also planting zeales to hys honour, against all order and respect of flesh and bloude. For, as sayeth S. Paule, Hys workes are past finiding out: by whose spirite I haue also geuen my fleshe at thys present vnto suche order, as it shall please the good will of God to appoynt, in death, which before the act committed, I looked for.

Smith.

Thinke you it conuenient for me, or any other, to do the like by your example?

Flo.

No verily: neither do I know if it were to do againe,* whether I coulde doe it againe, or no: for I was vp verry early at Paules church (so called) vpon Christes day in the morning, to haue done it in my ielousie: but when I came in place, I was no more able to doe it, then nowe to vndoe that is don: and yet now being compelled by the spirit, not onely to come ouer the water, and to enter the churche, but being in minde fully content to die for the Lord, gaue ouer my flesh willingly without all feare, I praise God: Wherefore I can not learne you to doe the like. Firste, because I knowe not what is in you. Secondly, because the rules of the Gospell commaundeth vs to suffer wyth pacience all wrongs & iniuries: yet neuerthesse, if he make you worthy, y^t hath made me zealous, ye shall not be letted, iudged, nor condemned: for he doth in his people hys vnspeakable workes in all ages, which no man can cōprehend: I humbly beseech you to iudge the best of the spirit, and cōdemne not Gods doings: for I can not expresse wyth my mouthe the great mercies y^t God hath shewed on me in thys thing, which I repent not.

Smith.

Are ye not assured to haue death ministred vnto you for the same act committed, and euen with extremitie?

Flo.

I did before the deede committed, adiudge my bodye to dye for the same: * whereuppon I caryed aboute mee in wryting, mine opinion of God and the holy Scriptures: that if it had pleased God to haue geuē them leaue to haue killed my body in the church, they might in the sayde wryting haue seene my hope, which (I praise God) is layde vp safe within my brest, notwithstanding any death that may be ministred vnto my body in thys worlde: being ascertained of euerlasting life throughe Iesus Christe our Lorde, and being most heartily sorie for al mine offences committed in this flesh, and trusting shortly through hys mercye, to cease from the same.

Smith.

It is no neede to examine or commune with you of the hope that yee haue any further: for I perceiue (God be praised) ye are in good estate, & therefore I beseeche God for his mercies, spreade his wings ouer you, y^t as for his loue you haue ben zelous, euen to the losse of this life, so he may geue you his holy spirite to conduct you out of thys death, into a better life, which I thinke wil be shortly.

Flo.

I hunger for the same (deare frend) being fully ascertained that they can kill but the bodye, which I am assured shall receiue life againe euerlasting, and see no more death: entirely desiring you, and all that feare the Lorde, to praye wyth me to almighty God, to performe the same in mee shortly. And thus Robert Smith departed, leauing him in the dungeon, and went againe to hys warde. And thys (gentle Reader) is the truthe, as neare as the saide Smyth coulde reporte it.

Page 1575 And thus muche concerninge the talke betweene hym and Robert Smith in Newgate, concerning hys facte in striking the Priest. Nowe to returne againe to the matter of his examination, where we leaft, we shewed before how thys William Flower, after hys striking the Prieste, firste was layde in the Gatehouse: then being examined before Boner, had articles ministred against him: the copy wherof heere followeth.

Articles obiected and ministred by Boner, against William Branch, alias Flower, late of Lambeth, in the Countie of Surrie.

*First, that thou being of lawful age and discretion, at the least of 17. yeare old, wast professed a Monke in the late Abbey of Ely, wherin after thy profession thou remainedst vntill the age of 21.

yeares, vsing all the meane tyme, the habit and religion of the same house, and wast reputed and taken notoriously for such a person.*

Item, that after the premisses, thou wast ordered and made prieste, according to the laudable custome of the Catholike Church, and afterward thou didst execute and minister as a priest, and was commonly reputed, named, and taken for a priest.

Item, that after the premisses, thou forgetting God, thy conscience, honestie, and the laudable order of the Catholike church, diddest contrary to thy profession and vow, take as vnto thy wife, one woman, commonly called Alice Pulton, in the parish church of Tewkesbury, in the Dioces of Gloucester, with whom thou haddest mutuall cohabitation and carnall copulation, as man and wife, and begatest of her two children.

Item, that thou being a religious man and a Priest, diddest contrary to the order of the ecclesiastical lawes,* take vpon thee to practise in diuers places within the dioces of London, Phisicke and Surgerie, when thou wast not admitted, expert, nor learned.

Item, that vpon Easter day last past, that is to witte, the 14. day of thys present moneth of Aprill, within the parish Church of S. Margarets at Westminster, wythin the Countie of Middlesex and Diocesse of London, thou dydst maliciously, outrageously, and violently pul out thy weapon, that is to wit, thy Woodknife or hanger. And wheras the priest and minister there called sir Iohn Cheltam, was executing his cure and charge, especially in doing hys seruice, and ministring the sacramēt of the aultar to the communicants, then didst thou wickedly & abominably smite with thy said weapon the said priest, first vpō the head very sore, & afterwards vpon his hands or other parts of his b / dy, drawing bloud abundantly vpon him: the sayd priest then holding the sayd sacramēt in his hand, and geuing no occasion why thou shouldest so hurte him: the people greuously being offended therewith, and the said church polluted thereby, so that the inhabitantes were compelled to repaire to an other Church to communicate, and to receyue the sayde sacrament.

Item, that by reason of the premisses, thou wast and art by the ecclesiastical lawes of the church, amongst other penalties, excommunicate and accursed, ipso facto, and not to be companied withal, neither in church, nor elsewhere but in speciall cases.

Item, that thou concerning the veritye of Christes naturall body and bloude in the sacrament of the aultar, haste ben by the space of these yeares.

20.19.18.17.16.15.14.13.12.11.10.9.8.7.6.5.4.3.2. and 1. or any one of them, and yet art at this present of the opinion: that is to say, that in the sayd sacrament of the aultare,* after the wordes of consecration, there is not really, truely, and in very dede, contained (vnder the formes of bread) the very true and naturall body of our sauour Iesus Christ.

Item, that thou for the hatred and disdaine that thou hadst & didst beare against the said sacrament, and the vertue thereof, and against the said priest ministring the same, (as before) did smite, wound, and hurte him in maner and forme as before is declared.

Iem, that thou ouer and besides the paynes due vnto thee for the doing of the cruell facte, art also by the order of the ecclesiasticall lawes of the church, and the laudable custome & ordinaunce of the same, to be reputed, taken, & iudged (as thou arte in deede) a very heritike, and to be punyshed by and with the pains due for heresie, by reason of thy sayd heresie and damnable opinion.

Item, that al the premisses be true, manifest, and notorious and famous, and that vpon the same, and euery part thereof, there was and is wythin the sayd parish of Saint Margaretes and other places thereabout, a publike voice and fame

The answeare of William Flower, made to the articles aforesayde.

TO the first article, he answereth and confesseth the same to be true in euery part thereof,* except that he sayth and confesseth that he neuer consented and agreed in hys heart to be a Monke.

To the second article he answeareth,* and confesseth the same to be true in euery part therof. Howbeit he saith, that he neuer did, nor yet doth esteme y^e said order of priesthoode, according to the said order of the Catholike church, because he was offended therewith in his conscience.

To the thirde article he answeareth, and confesseth that he intending to liue in godly matrimonie, & not forgetting God,* did mary with the saide Alice Pulton named in thys article, wherein he beleueth that he did well, and according to Gods lawes. Further, confessing and beleeuing, that al the time when he was professed Monke, and made priest, he did therby vtterly forget God: but when he did so mary the sayd Alice Pulton, and in continuing with her, did beget three children, he did remember God, as he sayeth, and beleeueth that he did then lawfully.

To the fourth article he answeareth, and beleeueth the same to be true in euery part thereof.

To the fifth article hee answeareth, and confesseth that hys cōscience being greatly offended with the said sir Iohn Cheltam priest, for ministring of the sacrament of the altar to the people at the place and time specified in this article, he did smite and strike the same priest wyth hys hanger or woodknife, as wel vpon his head, as vpon other partes & places of his body, which he remembreth not, whereby the bloud ran out, and was shed in the saide Church, as he beleueth, hauing, as he sayth, none other cause or matter so to doe, but onely that his conscience was offended and greeued, in that the same Priest did so geue and minister the sayd Sacrament to the people: which people he beleeueth was greatly abashed and offended with his saide facte and doying, and were enforced and compelled to goe out of the Churche, and to repaire to an other to receiue the sayde sacrament. And further, being then demaunded and examined, whether he did then minde and intende to haue killed the said priest, or not? he said he would not answeare thereunto. And being further examined whether he did well or euil in striking the sayd priest? he would make no answeare thereunto, as he sayd.

To the sixt he answereth & saith, that whether he be so excommunicate or accursed, as is contained in this article, he referreth him selfe herein to the Ecclesiasticall lawes.

To the seuenth he aunsweareth and sayeth, that by the space of sixe and twentie yeares now past, he hath alwaies bene, and yet is of this opinion touching the saide Sacrament of the aultare, as followeth: videlicet, that in the Sacrament of the aultar, after the words of consecration, there is not really, truely, and in very dede contained vnder the forme of breade, the very true naturall body of our sauour Iesus Christ.

To the eight he answeareth, and beleueth the same to be true in euery part thereof.

To the ninth he answeareth, & herein he referreth hym selfe to the said lawes, custome, and ordinaunce specified in this article, that is to say, the Canonickall lawes.

To the last he answeareth & beleueth, that those things before by him confessed be true, and those which he hath denied, be vntrue: and that the said common voyce and fame, hath and doth only labor and go vpon those things by him before confessed.

By me William Flower, alias Branch.

After this examination done, the bishop began after the best sort of his fine Diuinitie to instruct him,* and to exhort him to returne againe to the vnitie of his mother the Catholike church, with such reasons as he is commonly wōt to vse to others, promising many faire things if he woulde so do, besides the remitting of that was past.

To this William Flower answering againe, thanked him for hys offer: and where it was in his power to kill or not to kil his body, he stode therwith contented,* let him do therein what he thought: yet ouer his soule he had no suche power, whych being once separated from the bodye, is in the handes of no man, but onely of God, eyther to saue or spill. As concerning his opinion of the sacrament, he sayd, he would neuer goe from y^t he had spoken, do he wyth him what he would.

Then the B. assigned him againe to appeare in y^e same place at after noone, betwixte 3. or 4. In the meane time to aduise himselfe of his former answeres, whether he would stand to the same his opinions or no? which if hee so did, he would further proceede against him. &c.

Page 1576At after noone the sayd William Flower appeared agayne before the sayd B. the houre and place appoynted. To whome the B. sitting in his Consistorie, spake these wordes. Branch, ye were this forenoone here before me, and made aunsver to certaine articles:* and thereupon I respited you till now, to the intent you shoulde consider and weigh with your selfe your state, and to remember while you haue tyme, both your abhominable act, and also that euill opinion which ye haue conceyued touchyng the veritie of Christes true natural body in the sacrament of the aultar.

To whom the sayd Branch answered agayne, and said as followeth:* That which I haue sayd, I will stand too: and therefore I require that the lawe may proceed agaynst me. Wherupon the Bish.

commanded his Notary (Harward by name) to read to him agayne his articles, as before. Which beyng read, the said W. Flower persistyng in his godly sentence, answered to all partes of the articles, as in the forenoone before, saue onely that he requested the B. concernyng the fift article, he might alter somthing his answer therein, after this tenor and maner of wordes: to wit. And moreouer confesseth and sayth, that where as he strake the priest on Easter day last past, in S. Margarets church in Westminster, he hath since that tyme, & yet doth mislike hymselfe in that doying, and doth now iudge and beleue that the same his act was euill and naught. Howbeit he saith and beleueth, that as for the matter and cause wherfore he so stroke the said priest (which was for ministring of the sacrament of the aaltar,* which he taketh and iudgeth abhominable) he did nor doth not mislike hymself at all therein.

Moreouer, he desireth of the said B. licence to be granted him, to alter and take out somewhat of the ix. Article, & in place therof, these words to be placed: to wit, Herein he referreth himselfe to the lawes, custome and ordinance specified in this article,* &c. At which request, Boner granted to the altering of both the articles according as he desired, and so put in the actes.

After this, the B. turning agayne to his old maner of exhorting, went about with words (and words onely) to perswade him to submit himselfe to the Catholike church, and to the faith therof. Which all his perswasions notwithstanding, Wil. remained stil in the constancy of his sentēce, saying, that he would not be remooued from that hee had spoken, to die therfore. Whereupon the Bish. assigned him the next day (being the xx. day of Aprill) to appeare in the same day and place, betwene the houres of 8. and 9. before noone, there and then to heare the sentence pronounced, in case he would not relent, &c.

¶The last appearance of William Flower, before Bishop Boner.

IN the which day, houre, and place, the said Wil. Flower as he was appoynted,* was brought by his keeper, belonging to the Warden of the Fleete, before Boner, who after his woonted maner of perswasion, goyng about to reduce hym to his catholike church and the vnitie thereof, that is, from Christ to Antichrist: sometimes with fayre promises alluring, sometyme with manasses and terrors, fearing hym,* &c. To this Wil. answering, said on this wise Do what ye will, I am at a point: for the heauens shal as soone fall, as I will forsake myne opinion, &c. Wherupon the B. after he had commaunded these wordes to be registred, called for the depositions of certaine witnesses, producted for the better information of this matter,* y^e names of which witnesses were these: Wil. Genings, I. Bray, Rob. Graunt, Richard Dodde, William Pampion, Rob. Smalwood, the parish Priest of S. Margarets at Westminster. The summe and effect of whose depositions here insueth.

¶The depositions or attestations producted vpon the aunswers of Wil. Flower.

ROBERT Grant of Westminster, examined vpon the said answers of Wil. Flower, sayth and deposeth: That he did heare and see the sayd Flower, acknowledge & recognise the sayd answers, and subscribe to the same with hys own hand, and also was present in the church of S. Margarets in Westminster, when the sayd Wil. Flower dyd smite and wound the Priest, when (as he sayth) hee was ministring the Sacrament: and how this examine amongst other, preased towards him to take him, and was hurt therby vpō his chin, & after he was takē, this examine help to conduct him to the gatehouse at Westminster.

Richard Dod of Westminster, examined vpon the sayd answers, sayth and deposeth: that he did heare and see the sayd Flower acknowledge and recognise the said answers, & subscribe to the same with his owne hand: & also did see & was present, when the sayd Flower vpon Easter day last past, drew his woodknife and strake the priest vpon y^e hed, hand, and arme: who beyng wounded therewith, and hauyng a chalice with consecrated hostes therin in his hand, sprinkled with the sayd priests bloud, was holpen & rescued by this examine, and the sayde Flower caried to the Gatehouse at Westminster, and his woodknife takē away by this Examine.

William Pampion, one of the churchwardens of the sayd parish church of S. Margaretes in Westminster, examined vpon the said answers of the sayd Flower, sayth and deposeth, that the same answers be true, & in hys sight were subscribed with the hande of the sayde Flower. And that vpon Easter day last past, about xj. of the clocke in the forenoone, in the parish church at S. Margarets in Westminster, among a great number of the people ready to be houseled, the priests backe beyng turned toward the sayd Flower, he the sayd Flower sodenly drewe forth hys woodknife, and strake sir Iohn Cheltham the priest, both vpon his head, hand, and arme, whereby he was wounded, and bled abundantly, and the chalice with consecrated hosts beyng in his hand, were sprinkled w^t hys bloud, and the people in great feare cried out lamentably, and thought they should presently haue bene killed.

Robert Smalwood of Westminster, examined vpon the said answers, saith and deposeth: that he did heare and see the sayd Flower acknowledge and recognise the sayde answers, and subscribe the same with his owne hand, and sayth further, touching the striking and woundyng the priest in S. Margarets church in Westminster, vpon Easter day last, this examine sayth, he was not there when y^e fact was done, but immediately after, he came to church, and found sir Iohn hurt, and wounded in the head, hand, and arme, by the sayd Flower, and the people in great heuines by reason therof. Also the people did report (as this examine saith) that Flower did the deed, as the priest had the chalice in his hande, ministring the Sacrament to the people.

William Ienings of Westminster, beyng examined vpon the answers of the sayd Wil. Flower, sayth & deposeth by vertue of his oth: that he did heare and see the sayd Flower, acknowledge and recognise the sayde aunswers, and subscribe to the same with his owne hande in the consistory place: and further deposeth, that he (vpon Easter day last past) was present in the church of S. Margarets in Westminster, where Flower strake the sayd Sir Iohn Cheltham priest, first vpon the head, and afterward vpon his arme two sore strokes, whereby the sayd priest is lyke to loose his hand. Also this Iurate deposed, that the sayd sir Iohn Cheltham had a chalice with certaine consecrated hosts therein (in his hand) which were sprinckled with the bloud of the sayd priest, and after the sayd Flower was apprehended by this examine and others, they caried hym immediately to the gatehouse in Westminster.

Iohn Bray one of the churchwardēs of the parish church of S. Margarets in Westminster, sworne and examined vpon the sayd aunsweres, sayth and deposeth, that he did heare and see the said Flower acknowledge and recognise the sayd answers, & also subscribe vnto the same. And further deposeth of Flowers strikyng the priest, in effect, as the rest of the examines doe, and that this sayd Iurate was present there at the deed doying.

After the depositions of these foresayd witnesses being taken, published, and denounced, the sayd B. speakyng to Wil. Flower, asked hym if he knew any matter or cause why his sentence should not be red, and he to be pronounced as an heretike. Wherevnto the martyr of God answereth agayne as followeth: I haue nothyng at all to say, for I haue already sayd vnto you all that I haue to say, & that I haue said, I will not go from, and therefore do what you wyll, &c.

Which when he had spoken, the Bish. proceeded to the sentence,* condemnyng and excommunicating hym for an heretike, & after pronounced hym also to be disgraded, and so committed hym to the secular power. Upon the 24. day of the foresayd moneth of Aprill, which was S. Markes euen, he was brought to the place of martyrdome, whiche was in S. Margarets churchyard at Westminster, where the fact was committed, and there commyng to the stake Page 1577 where he should be burned, first he maketh his prayer to almighty God, with a confession of his Christian fayth, in maner as followeth.

¶ A prayer and confession of W. Flower.

OH eternall God, most mighty and mercifull father, who hast sent downe thy sonne vpon the earth,* to saue me & all mankynd, who ascended vp into heauen agayne, and left hys bloud here vpon the earth behynd hym, for the redemption of our sins, haue mercy vpon me, haue mercy vpon me, for thy deare sonne our sauour Iesus Christes sake, in whom I confesse onely to bee all saluation and iustification, and that there is none other mean, nor way▪ nor holynes, in which, or by which any man can be saued in this world. This is my fayth, which I beseech all men here to beare witnesse of.

Then he sayd the Lords prayer, and so made an end.

Then M. Cholmley came to him, willyng hym to recant his heresie,* whereby he might do good to the people, or els he would be damned.

Flower answered as followeth. Sir, I beseech you for Gods sake be contented: for that I haue sayd, I haue said, and I haue bene of this fayth from the beginnyng: and I trust to the liuyng God hee will geue me his holy spirite to continue to the ende. Then he desired all the world to forgeue hym whome he had offended, as he forgaue all the world.

This done, first his hand beyng held vp agaynst the stake, was stroken of, his left hand beyng stayed behynde hym. At the which striking of his hand, certaine that were present beholders of the matter, and purposely obseruyng the same, credibly enformed vs, that he in no part of hys body did once shrinke at the strikyng therof, but once a little he stirred his shoulders.

And thus fire was set vnto hym, who burning therein cried with a loud voyce: Oh the sonne of God haue mercye vpon me, Oh the sonne of God receyue my soule, three tymes, and so his spech beyng taken from hym, he spake no more, lifyng vp notwithstanding his stumpe with hys other arme, as long as he could.

And thus endured this constant witnes and faythfull seruaunt of God, the extremitie of the fire, beyng therein cruelly handled, by reason that to his burning little wood was brought, so that for lacke of fagots there not sufficient to burne hym, they were fayne to strike hym downe into the fire. Where he lying along (which was dolefull to behold) vpon the ground, hys nether part was consumed in the fire, whilest hys vpper part was cleane without the fire, hys tongue in all mens sight still moouyng in hys mouth.

May. 1555.

The 3. of May a letter was sent to George Colte and Thom. Daniell, to make search for, and apprehend Iohn Bernard and Iohn Walshe, who vsed to repaire to Sudbury, and caryng about with them the bones of Pigotte that was burned, do shew them to the people, perswading them to be constant in his religion, and vpon examination to commit them to further orderyng accordyng to the lawes.

This day Stephen Appes was committed to the litle ease in the Tower, there to remayne two or three dayes, vntill further examination.

The 12. day M. Thomas Rosse preacher, was by the counsailes letters deliuered from the Tower to the Shiriffe of Northfolke, to be conueyed and deliuered to the B. of Norwich, and he eyther to reduce hym to recant, or els proceed agaynst hym according to the law.

The 16. a letter was sent to the L. Treasurer, signifiyng what the L. had done for Rosse, and that order should be geuen according to his L. request, for letters to the Bishops, & as Appes (whom the Lieuutenant of the Tower reporteth to be mad) his L. perceiuyng the same to be true should commit hym to Bedlem, there to remayne vntill their further order.

The 26. a letter was sent to the L. Treasurer, to conferre with the B. of London, and the Iustices of Peace of that Countie, wherein they are to be executed, that are alredy condemned for religion, & vpon agrement of places, to geue order for their execution accordingly.

The 28. a letter was sent to the L. Treasurer, to cause speedie preparation to be made of such mony as was appoynted for such persons as should cary the ioyful tidings of Queene Maries good deliury of chyld, to diuers princes: so as they be not compelled to stay when tyme shall come. The Embassadors were to the Emperour, the L. Admirall, to the French King the L. Fitzwaters, to the kyng of Romaines Sir Henry Sidney, to the K. of Portingall, Rich. Shelley, whose free passage through France M. Doctor Wootton was willed to procure by letters the 24. of Iune.

The 29. was a letter directed to Sir Frances Inglefield Page 1578 to make search for one Iohn D. at Londō,* and to apprehend him and send him to the Counsaile, and to make search for such papers & bookes as may thinke may touch the same D. or one Bengier.

☛The burning and Martyrdome of Iohn Cardmaker, & Iohn Warne Vpholster, which suffered both together in Smithfield. An. 1555. May. 30.

VPon the 30. day of May suffred together in Smithfield Iohn Cardmaker, otherwise called Tailour, Prebendarie of the church of Wels: & Ioh. Warne Upholster, of the parish of S. Iohn in Walbrooke. Of whome it remaineth now particularly to entreat, beginning first with M. Cardmaker,* who first was an obseruant Frier before the dissolution of the Abbeyes: then after was a married Minister, and in king Edwards time appointed to be Reader in Paules, where the Papistes were so much agrieved with hym for his doctrines sake, that in his reading they cut and mangled his gowne with their kniues. This Cardmaker being apprehended in the beginnyng of Queene Maries raigne,* with M. Barlowe Bishop of Bathe, was brought to London: and layde in prison in the Fleete, king Edwards lawes yet beyng in force. But after the Parliament was ended, in which the Pope was againe admitted as supreme hed of the church, and the Byshops had also gotten power and authoritie, Ex officio, to exercise their tyranny: these two were both brought before Winchester Chauncellour, and others appointed by Commission (as before is mentioned) to examine the fayth of such as were then prisoners, and as vnto others before, so now vnto them, the Chancellor offred the Queenes mercy, if they would agree and be conformable, &c.

To this they both made such an answer, as the Chancellor with his fellow Commissioners allowed them for catholike. Whether they of weakenes so answered, or he•of subletie would so vnderstand their answer,* that he might haue some forged example of a shrinking brother, to lay in the dish of the rest, which were to be examined, it may easily be perceiued by this, that to all them which followed in examination, he obiected the example of Barlow & Cardmaker, commending their sobernes, discretion & lerning. But whatsoeuer their answer was, yet notwithstanding Barlow was led againe to the Fleete, from whence he afterward beyng deliuered,* did by exile constantly beare witnes to the truth of Christes gospell. Cardmaker was conueyed to the Counter in Breadstreete, the B. of London procuring it to be published, that he should shortly be deliuered, after that he had subscribed to Transubstantiation and certaine other articles.

To the same prison where Cardmaker was, Laurēce Sanders was brought (after the sentence of excommunication and condemnation was pronounced against hym) where these two prisoners had such christian conference, that whatsoeuer the breath of the bishops blusted,* & the tickle cares of the people too lightly beleued, in y^e end they both shewed themselues constant confessors and worthy martyrs of Christ: as of Laurence Sanders it is already written. After whose departure Cardmaker remayned there prisoner, to be baited of the Papistes, which would needes seeme to haue a certayne hope that Cardmaker was become theirs. Continuall and great conference diuers of them had with hym, with reasonyngs, perswadyngs, threatnyngs, and all to none effect. To the end that their doyngs might appeare, hee required them to put their reasons in writyng, and promised by writyng to answer them.

Doctor Martin who bare also a part in those pageants,* tooke vppon hym to be the chiefe doer by writyng, whose long vnsauery letters and simple reasons for Trāsubstantiation, and such papisticall trash, this Cardmaker answered largely, learnedly, & substantially, confuting the same, openyng the falsehood of his arguments, and deliueyng the sentences of the Fathers which Martin abused for his purpose) to their true vnderstanding: which his answers I would had come to our hands. Thus constantly abode this man of God all the enemies doyngs, as he did also the death which he suffered in Smithfield in London. Whereof ye shall heare more anon, but first we will surveye the matter and maner of his articles objected against him by B. Boner, with his answers annexed to the same, as consequently here vnder followeth.

¶Articles objected by Boner against Ioh. Taylor, aliàs Cardmaker, with hys answers vnto the same.

First, I Edmund B. of London, object against thee Sir Iohn Taylor aliàs Cardmaker,* that thou wast and art of the citie and Dioces of London, and so of the iurisdiction of me Edmund B. of London.

Item, that thou in tymes past diddest professe the rule of S. Fraunces, and diddest by vow promise to keepe pouertie, chastitie, and obedience, according to the rule of S. Frances.

Item, that thou in tymes past didst receyue all the orders of the church then vsed, to wit, tam maiores, quam minores.

Item, that thou after thy said entrie into religion and profession and orders aforesaid,* didst take to wife a widow and with her hadst carnal copulation, and didst get of her a woman child, breaking thereby thy vow and order, & also the ordinance of the church.

Item, that thou hast beleued and taught, and so doest beleue that in the sacrament of the aulter vnder the visible signes there: that is to say,* vnder the formes of bread and wyne, there is really and truly the true and very naturall body and bloud of our sauour Iesus Christ.

Item, that the beliefe of the catholike church is,* that in hauing the body and bloud of Christ really and truly contained in the sacrament of the altar, is to haue (by the omnipotent power of almighty God) the body and bloud of Christ there inuisibly and really present vnder the said sacrament, and not to make thereby a new God, or a newe Christ, or a new body of Christ.

Item, that it may stand wel together, & so is the fayth of the Catholike church: that the body of Christ is visibly and truly ascended into heauen, and there is in the visible forme of his humanitie: and yet the same body in substāce is inuisibly and truly conteyned in the sayde Sacrament of the aulter.

Item, that Christ at his last supper takyng bread into his hands, blessing it, breakyng it, geuyng it to his apostles, and saying: Take, eate, this is my body, did institute a Sacrament there, * willyng that his body really and truly should be conteyned in the sayd sacrament, no substance of bread and wyne there remainyng, but onely the accidents thereof.

¶Answers of Cardmaker, to the articles aforesayd.

TO the first article he answereth, and confesseth the same to be true in euery part therof.*

To the 2. article he aunswereth and confesseth, that he beyng vnder age, did professe the said order and religion, & afterward by the autoritie of K. Henry the 8. he was dispensed with for the same religion.

To the 3. he aunswereth, and confesseth the same to bee true in euery part thereof.

To the 4. he aunswereth, and confesseth the first part therof to be true: and to the second part of the same article he answereth and saith, that in mariage he brake no vow, because he was set at liberty to mary, both by the lawes of this realme, and also by the lawes and ordinaunces of the Church of the same.

To the 5. he answereth & confesseth, th th• hath beleueed & taught, as it is conteined in this acti•e, but he doth not now so beleue nor teach.

To the 6. he answereth, that he doth not beleue y^e same to be true in any part therof.

To the 7. he aunswereth, that he doth not beleuee the same to be true in any part thereof.

To the 8. he answereth and doth beleuee, videlicet, that it is true: that is to say,* that Christ takyng breade at hys last supper into hys handes, blessing it, breakyng it, geuyng it to his disciples, and saying: Take, eate, this is my body, did institute a sacrament there. And to the other part of this article, videlicet, (willyng that his bodye really and truely should be conteyned in the sayd sacrament, no substance of bread and wyne there remayning, but onely the accidents thereof) he answereth, that he doth not beleuee the same to be true.

By me Iohn Cardmaker.

M. Cardmaker calling to mynd afterwards the redy cauillings of the papists, and thinking himself not to haue fully and according to his true meaning answered the latter part of the last eight article, did the next day after the foresaid answers, exhibite vnto the Bish. in a schedule this here after followyng.

Page 1579Where in my answer to your articles I deny the presence of Christ in the Sacrament, I meane not his sacramentall presence, for that I confesse, but my deniall is of his carnall presence in the same. But yet further, because this word is oftentimes taken of the holy fathers,* not only for the bread and wyne, but also for the whole administration and receiuyng of the same, accordyng to Christes institution: so I say, that Christ is present spirituallly too, and in all them which worthily receiueth the Sacrament:* so that my deniall is still of the reall, carnall, and corporall presence in the sacrament, and not of the sacramentall nor spirituall presence.

This haue I thought good to adde to my former aunswer, because no man should misunderstand it.

By me Iohn Cardmaker.

Next to these articles of M. Cardmaker, I thought best to inferre the articles and answers likewise of Iohn Warne his martyr fellow, in maner as followeth.

¶Articles ministred agaynst Iohn VVarne Vpholster, of the parish of S. Iohn in Walbrooke, with his answers to the same.

*First, that thou Iohn Warne, beyng of the age of xxix. yeres, & of the parish of S. Iohn of Walbrooke in London, hast beleueed, and doest beleuee firmly and stedfastly, that in the Sacrament commonly called the Sacramēt of the aultar, there is not the very true and naturall body of our Sauour Christ in substaunce, vnder the formes of bread and wyne.

Item, that thou hast beleued, and doest beleue, that after the words of consecration spoken by the priest,* there is not (as the church of England doth beleue and teach) the body of Christ: but that there doth only remayne the substance of material bread, as it is before the consecration, or speaking of the wordes of consecration: and that the sayd bread is in no wyse altered or changed.

Item, that thou hast sayd and doest beleuee, that if the Catholike church do beleue and teach,* that there is in the masse (now vsed in England and in other places of Christendome) a sacrifice wherein there is a sacrament conteinyng the body and bloud of Christ really and truly: then that beliefe and fayth of the church is naught, and agaynst Gods truth and the scripture.

Item, that thou hast said, that where about a twelue moneths agone & more,* a great rough water Spaniell of thyne, was shorne in the hed, & had a crowne like a Priest made in the same, thou diddest laugh at it & like it, though thou didst it not thy selfe, nor knowest who did it.

Item, that thou, neither this Lent last past, nor at any tyme since the Queenes Maiesties raigne, hast come into the church, or heard masse, or bene confessed, or receiued the sacrament of the aultar: and hast said, that thou art not sory that thou hast so done, but thou art glad, because thou hast not therewith defiled thy conscience, which otherwise thou shouldest so haue done.

Upon all which articles Iohn Warne being examined by the said Boner, in presence of diuers witnesses, the 23. of May, ann. 1555. did confesse and beleue the same, & subscribe hereunto his name with his owne hand.

By me Iohn Warne.

Also it was objected against the said Iohn Warne, by the B. aforesayd, as followeth.

Item, that thou Iohn Warne wast in tyme past here in the city of London, conuented in the Guildhal for heresie against the sacrament of the aultar, according to the order of the lawes of this Realme of England in the time of king Henry the 8. and when Alderman Barnes was shirife, & the Thursday after that Anne Askew was burnt in Smithfield, and therupon thou wast sent as a prisoner to Newgate, to whom Edmond B. of London did repayre with his chaplens, to instruct thee in y^e true faith of Christ, touchyng the said Sacrament of the aultar, & to bring thee from thy error, which was, that in the Sacrament of the altar there is not the body of Christ, nor any corporal preence of Christes body & blood, vnder the formes of bread & wyne: but that in the sayd sacrament there is onely materiall bread & wyne, without any substance of Christs body and blood at all, & because thou wouldst not leaue & for sake thy sayd heresie therin, but persist & abide obstinately and wilfully therein, thou wert according to y^e said lawes condemned to death,* & to be burnt: and thereupon labour beyng made for thee to the king and other in the Courte, thou hadst a pardon of king Henry the 8. and so thereby didst saue thy lyfe. Neuerthelesse, in thy heart, conscience, and mynd, thou didst both then and also afore, beleue no otherwyse then at this present thou doest beleue: that is to say, that in the Sacrament of the aultar there is neyther the very true body or blood of Christ,* nor no other substace but the substaunce of materiall bread and wyne, and to receiue the sayd materiall bread and wyne, and to breake it, and to distribute it among the people, onely is the true receiuyng of Christes body, and no otherwise: so that thy fayth and beliefe is, that in the sayd sacrament there is no substance of Christes material body and blood: but all the thyng that is there, is materiall bread, and the receiuyng thereof as afore: and that the substance of the natural and true body of Christ borne of the Uirgine Mary, is only in heauen, and not in the sacrament of the aultare. In which thine opinion, thou hast euer hitherto since continued, and so doest continue at this present, thou confessing all this to be true, and in witnes therof, subscribing thy name thereunto as followeth.

By me Iohn Warne.

Iohn Warne beyng examined vpon these foresaid articles by the Bish. before certaine witnesses,* whose names were Iohn Boswel, Iohn Heywood, Robert Rauens, the xxij. of May, did aunswere to the same, confessing and graunting the articles and the contentes thereof to bee true, accordyng as they were objected in euery part, subscribing also the same with hys hand. Such strength and fortitude gods holy spirit wrought in hym, to stand stoutly and confidently to the defence of the sincere doctrine of hys sonne.

Whereupon the B. exhorting him with many wordes to leaue his heresies (as he called them) and to returne to the bosom of his mother the holy church, commanded him to appeare agayne the next day, being the xxiiij. of the same moneth.

Who so doying (and aunswering as he did before) was willed to come thither agayne at after noone, & so hee dyd:* where and at what tyme he was earnestly exhorted by the sayd Bish. to recant his opinions. To whom he aunswered, that he would not depart from his receyued profession, vnlesse he were therunto throughly perswaded by the holy scriptures.

Upon which aunswer he was willed to come agayne the next day, beyng the 25. day of the same moneth,* at one of the clocke in the after noone. At which day and houre, the B. examined him agayne vpon all his former articles before objected, to the which he most constantly did sticke, with his further aunswer thereunto added: I am persuaded, quoth he, to be in the right opinion, and that I see no cause to repent, for all filthines & Idolatry is in the church of Rome.

The B. then seyng that notwithstanding all his faire promises & terrible threatnyngs (whereof he vsed store) he could not any thing preuaile:* finished this examination with the definitiue sentence of condemnation pronounced against the said Iohn Warne, and so charged the Shiriffs of London with him, vnder whose custody he remained in the prison of Newgate, vntil the 30. day of the same month of May.

Upon the which 30. of May, being the day appoynted for their execution, Iohn Cardmaker with the sayd Iohn Warne, were brought by the shiriffes to the place where they should suffer. Who beyng come to the stake, first the Shiriffes called Cardmaker aside, and talked with hym secretly, so long, that in the meane tyme Warne had made hys prayers, was chayned to the stake, and had wood and reede set about hym, so that nothyng wanted, but the firyng: but styll aboade Cardmaker talkyng with the shiriffes.

The people whiche before had heard that Cardmaker would recant, and beholding this maner of doing,* were in a meruailous dumpe and sadnes, thinkyng in deede that Cardmaker should now recant at the burning of Warne. At length Cardmaker departed from the Shiriffes, and came towards the stake, and (in his garments as he was) kneeled downe & made a long prayer in silence to himself: yet the people cōfirmed themselues in their fantasie of his recanting, seyng him in his garments praying secretly, & no semblance of any burning.

His prayers being ended, he rose vp, put of his cloths vnto his shirt, went with bolde courage to the stake,* and kissed it sweetly: he toke Warne by the hand, and comforted him heartily, & so gaue himselfe to be also bound to the stake most gladly. The people seyng this so sodenly done, contrary to their feareful expectation, as mē deliuered out of a great doubt, cried out for ioy (with so great a shout as hath not lightly ben heard a greater) saieng: God be praised, Page 1580 the Lord strengthen thee Cardmaker,* the Lord Iesus receiue thy spirite. And this continued while the executioner put fire to them, and they both passed thorough the fire to the blessed rest and peace among Gods holy saints and martyrs, to enioy the crowne of triumph and victory prepared for the elect souldiors and warriours of Christ Iesus in his blessed kingdome. To whome be glory and maiesty for euer, Amen.

¶The confession of the fayth of Iohn Warne Citizen of London, which he wrote the day before he was burned, the 30. day of May. 1555.

I beleeeue in God the father almighty, maker of heauen and earth.

A Father, because hee is the Father of our Lord Iesus Christ,* who is the euerlasting word, whome before all worldes he hath begotten of himselfe, which worde was made flesh, and therein also manifested to be his sonne: in whom he hath adopted vs to be his children, the inheriters of his kyngdom, and therefore he is our father: An almighty God, because he hath of nothing created all things visible and inuisible, both in heauen and in earth, euen all creatures conteyned therin, and gouerneth them.

And in Iesus Christ his onely sonne our Lord.

The eternall word, perfect God with his father of equal power in all things, of the same substance, of like glory, by whom all things were made, and haue life, & without whom nothing liueth: he was made also perfect mā, and so being very God, and very man in one person, is the onely Sauour, Redeemer, and Ransomer of them which were lost in Adam our forefather. He is the onely meane of our deliuerance, the hope of our health, the suretie of our saluation.

Which was conceived by the holy Ghost, borne of the Virgin Mary.

According to the Fathers most mercifull promise, this eternal sonne of God, forsaking the heauenly glory, humbled himselfe to take flesh of a virgin, according to y^e scriptures, vniting the substance of the Godhed, to the substāce of the manhoode, which he tooke of the substaunce of that blessed virgin Mary, in one person, to become therein the very Massiah, the annointed king and priest, for euer appointed to pacifie the fathers wrath, which was iustlye gone out agaynst vs all for our sinne.

Suffred vnder Pontius Pilate, was crucified, dead, and buried, and descended into hell.

He was arraigned before Pontius Pilate the ruler of Iewrie, and so vniustly accused of many crimes, that the Ruler iudged him innocent, and sought meanes to deliuer him: but contrary to knowne iustice, he did let go Barrabas which had deserued death, and deliuered Christ to bee crucified, who deserued no death: which doth declare vnto vs manifestly, that he suffred for our sinnes, & was buffeted for our offences, as the prophets do witnes: thereby to haue it manifested to all men, that he is that Lambe of God that taketh away the sinnes of the world. Therefore sufferyng for our sinnes, he receiued and did beare our deserued condemnation, the paines of death, the tast of abiectiō, the very terror of hell, yelding his spirit to his father, his body to be buried in earth.

The third day he rose againe from death to lyfe.

To make full and perfect the whole worke of our redemption and iustification, the same crucified body which was layd in the graue, was raised vp againe the third day from death, by the power of hys Father, and glory of hys Godhead: he became the first fruits of the resurrection, & got the victory of death, that all by him might be raised vp from death. Thorough whome all true penitent sinners may now boldly come vnto the father, and haue remission of their sinnes.

He ascended into heauen, and sitteth on the right hand of God the father almighty.

After that in his death and resurrectiō he had conquered sinne, death, and the deuil, and had bene conuersant 40. days in the earth being seene of the Apostles, & more then v. hundred brethren at once, in the same body in which he wrought the worke of our saluation, he ascended into heauen with eternal triumph, for the victory ouer death, sinne and hel, leauing the passage open, by which all true beleeuers may and shal enter into his kingdom,* where he now sitteth at his fathers right hand, that is to say, in power & glory equall, in maiesty coeternall.

From thence he shal come to iudge the quicke & the dead.

He shal appeare againe in great glory to receiue his elect vnto himselfe, & to put his enemies vnder his feete, chaunging all liuyng men in a moment, and raising vp al that be dead, that all may be brought to his iudgement. In this shall he geue ech man according to his deedes. They which haue folowed him in regeneratiō, which haue their sinnes washed away in hys bloud, & are clothed with hys righteousnes, shall receiue the euerlasting kingdome, and raigne with him for euer: and they which after the race of the corrupt generation of Adam haue followed fleshe and Page 1581 bloud, shall receiue euerlasting damnation with the deuill and hys angels.

I beleeeue in the holy ghost.

I do beleue that the holy ghost is God, the third person in Trinitie, in vnitie of the Godhed equal with the father & the sonne, geuen through Christ to inhabite our spirites, by which we are made to feele and vnderstand the great power, vertue, & louing kindnes of Christ our lord. For he illumineth, quickneth, and certifieth our spirit, that by him we are sealed vp vnto the day of redemption, by whom we are regenerate and made new cretures, so that by hym and through hym, we do receyue all the aboundāt goodnes promised vs in Iesus Christ.

The holy Catholike Church.

This is an holy number of Adams posteritie, elected, gathered,* washed, and purified by the bloud of the Lambe from the beginning of the world, and is dispersed through the same, by the tyranny of Gog & Magog, that is to say, the Turke and his tyranny, and Antichrist, otherwyse named the Bish. of Rome and hys aungels, as this day also doth teach.

The Communion of Saints.

Which most holy congregation (beyng as Paule teacheth, builded vppon the foundation of the Apostles and Prophetes, Christ beyng the head corner stone) though it be by the tyranny of Satan and his ministers persecuted, some by imprisonment, some by death, and some by other afflictions & painful torments: yet doth it remayne in one perfect vnitie both in faith and fellowship: which vnity is knit in an vnspeakable knot, as well of them which are departed from this mortal life, as of them which now be liuyng, and hereafter shall be in the same, and so shall continue vntill they all do meete in the kyngdome, where the head Iesus Christ, with all hys holy members (of which number thorough Christ I assuredly beleeeue that I am one) shall be fully complete, knit, and vnited together for euermore.

The forgeuenesse of sinnes.

I do beleeeue that my sinnes and all their sinnes which do rightly beleeeue the holy Scripture,* are forgiven onely thorough that Iesus Christ, of whom onely I do professe that I haue my whole and full saluation and redemption, which S. Paule saith, commeth not through our workes and deseruyngs, but freely by grace, lest any should boast hymselfe. Thorough the bloud of his Crosse all thyngs in heauen and earth are reconciled, and set at peace wyth the Father, without him no heauenly lyfe is geuen, nor sinne forgiven.

The resurrection of the body.

I do beleue, that by the same my sauour Christ, I, and all men shall rise againe from death: for he, as Paul sayth, is risen agayne frō the dead, and is become the first fruits of them which sleepe.* For by a man came death, and by a man commeth the resurrection from death. This man is Christ, through the power of whose resurrection, I beleue that we all shall rise agayne in these our bodyes: the elect clothed with immortalitie to liue with Christ for euer: the reprobate also shall rise immortall to liue with the deuill and his angels in death euerlasting.

And the life euerlasting.

Through the same Iesus & by none other, I am sure to haue life euerlasting. He onely is the way and entrance into the kingdome of heauen.* For so God loued the world, that he did geue his onely sonne Iesus Christ, to the ende that so many as do beleue in him, might haue euerlasting lyfe. The which I am sure to possesse so soone as I am dissolued,* & departed out of this tabernacle, & in the last day shall both body and soule possesse the same for euer: to the which God graunt all men to come,

I beleue that the sacramentes, that is to say, of Baptisme and of the Lordes supper are seales of Gods moste mercyfull promises towards mankind.* In Baptisme, as by the outward creature of water I am washed from the filthines which hangeth on my flesh: so do I assuredly beleue, y^t I am by Christes blood washed cleane frō my sins, through which I haue sure confidence of my certaine saluation. In the partaking of the Lordes supper, as I receyue the substance of bread & wyne (the nature of which is to strengthen the body,) so do I by faith receyue the redemption wrought in Christes body broken on the crosse, life by his death, resurrection by his resurrection, and in summe, all that euer Christ in his body suffered for my saluation, to the strengthening of my faith in the same. And I beleue that God hath appointed the eatyng & drinking of the creatures of bread and wine in his holy supper according to his word, to mooue and to stirre vp my mynd to beleue these articles aboue written.

This is my faith: this I do beleue, and I am content by Gods grace to confirme and seale the truth of the same with my blood.

By me Iohn Warne.

¶A letter of Iohn Cardmaker to a certaine friend of his.

The peace of God be with you.

Y^Ou shall right well perceiue,* that I am not gone backe as some men do report me, but as ready to geue my lyfe, as any of my brethren that are gone before me, although by a pollicie I haue a little prolonged it, and that for the best, as already it appeareth vnto me, and shortly shall appeare vnto all. That day that I recant any poynt of doctrine, I shall suffer twenty kyndes of death, the Lord beyng myne assistance, as I doubt not, but he wil. Commend me to my friend, and tell hym no lesse. This the Lorde strengthen you, me, and all his elect. My riches and pouertie is as it was woont to be, and I haue learned to reioyce in pouertie, as well as in riches, for that count I now to bee very riches. Thus fare ye well in Christ. Salute all my brethren in my name. I haue conferred with some of my aduersaries, learned men, and I finde that they be but Sophistes and shadowes.

¶A note concerning M. Cardmaker.

MAister Cardmaker beyng condemned, & in Newgate one Beard a Promooter came to him two or thre daies before he was burned, and said vnto him: Sir,* I am sent vnto you by the Counsaile, to knowe whether ye will recant or no?

Cardmaker.

From which Counsaile are ye come? I thinke ye are not come, nor yet sent from the Queenes counsaile, but rather from the commissioners, vnto whō (as I suppose) ye belong. And where as ye would know, whether I wil recant or no, thus, I pray you, report of me to those whom ye said, sent you. I know you are a Tailor by your occupation, and haue endeououred your selfe to be a cunning workeman, and therby to get your liuing: so I haue bene a preacher these xx. yeres, and euer since that God by his great mercy hath opened myne eyes to see hys eternal truth, I haue by his grace endeououred my selfe to call vpō him, to geue me the true vnderstanding of his holy word, and I thanke hym for his great mercy, I hope I haue discharged my conscience in the setting forth of the same, to that little talent that I haue receiued.

Beard.

Yea sir, but what say you to the blessed Sacrament of the aultar?

Card.

I say and marke it well, that Christ the nyght before hys bitter passion, ordeyned the holy and blessed Communion, & hath geuen commandement, that his death should be preached before the receiuyng therof, in the remēbrance of his body broken, and his precious bloud shed for the for|geuenes of our sinnes, to as many as faithfully beleeeue and trust in hym.

And furthermore,* to conclude the matter briefly wyth hym, he asked of him, whether the Sacrament he spake of, had a beginnyng, or no? Whereunto when he had graunted and affirmed the same to be, then maister Cardmaker againe thus inferred thereupon: If the Sacrament (said he) as you confesse, haue a beginning, and an ending, then it cannot bee God: for God hath no beginnyng nor endyng, and so willyng hym well to note the same, he departed from hym.

Iune. An. 1555.

The 5. day M. Secretary Bourne, the M. of the Roles Sir Frances Englefield, Sir Richard Read and Doctor Hughes, anchorising them or two or three of them at the least, to proceed to further examination of Benger, Cary, D. and Field, vppon such poynts as they shall gather out of their former confessions, touchyng their lewd & vayne practises of calculing or coniuryng, presently sent vnto thē with the sayd letters.

The 7. day there was another letter to sir Iohn Tregonwel, willing hym to ioyne in commission with the said L. North, and others abouenamed, about the examination of the said parties & others, for coniuring & witchcraft. And the 29. of August Cary and D. were set at liberty vpon bands for their good abearyng vntil Christmas after.

The 12. day a letter was sent to the L. Treasurer, to cause Writs to be made to the Shirife of Sussex, for y^e burnyng and executing of Dirike a Brewer, at Lewes, and other two, the one at Stainings, the other at Chichester.

The 23. of Iune a letter was sent to Boner, to examine a report geuen to the counsail of 4. parishes within y^e Soken of Essex, that should still vse the English seruice, and to punish the offenders if any such be.

¶The story of Iohn Ardeley and Iohn Symson of the Parish of Wigborow the great, in Essex.

*With Mayster Cardmaker and Iohn Warne, vpon the same day, & in the same company, & for the same cause was also cōdemned Iohn Ardeley and Iohn Symson, which was the 25. day of Maye. But before we come to the story of them, first here is to be noted the copy of the King and Queenes letter, directed frō the Court the same day▪ and sent by a Poste early in the morning to the bishop in tenor and forme as foloweth.

¶To the right reuerend Father in God, our right trusty and welbeloued, the Bishop of London.

Right reuerend father in God, right trusty and welbeloued, we greet you well. And where of late we addressed our letters to the Iustices of peace within euerye of the Countyes of this our Realme, wherby amongst other instructions geuen them for the good order and quiet gouernement of the Country about them, they are willed to haue a speciall regard vnto such disordred persons, as forgetting theyr dueties towardes God and vs, do leane to any erroneous and hereticall opinions, refusing to shew them selues conformable to the Catholick Religiō of Christes church: wherein if they cannot by good admonitions and fayre meanes reforme them, they are willed to deliuer them to the Ordinarye, to be by him charitably trauelled withall, and remoued (if it may be) from their noughty opinions, or els if they cōtinue obstinate, to be ordered according to the lawes prouided in that behalfe: vnderstanding nowe, to our no little maruell, that diuers of the sayd disordered persons, being by the Iustices of peace for theyr contempt and obstinacy, brought to the Ordinaryes to be vsed, as is aforesayd, are either refused to be receiued at theyr hands, or if they be receiued, are neither so trauelled with, as christian charity requireth, nor yet proceeded withall according to the order of Iustice, but are suffered to continue in theyr errors, to the dishonor of almighty God, and daungerous exemple of others: like as we finde this matter very straunge, so haue thought conueniēt, both to signify our knowledge & therwith also to admonish you to haue in this behalfe such regard hencefoorth to the office of a good pastor and Bishop, as whē any such offenders shalbe by the sayd Officers or Iustices of peace brought vnto you, you to vse your good wisdom & discretiō in procuring to remoue thē frō theyr errorrs, if it may be, or els in proceeding agaynst them (if they shall cōtinue obstinate) according to the order of the lawes: so as through your good furtherance, both Gods glory may bee better aduaunced, and the common wealth more quietly gouerned. Yeuen vnder our signet, at our honour of Hampton Courte, the 24. of May, the 1. and 2. yeares of our reignes.

This letter thus comming from the Court to the Bishop, made him the more earnest and hasty to the condemnation, as well of others, as of these men, of whom now we haue presently to entreat, of Iohn Symson, I meane and Iohn Ardeley. Whyche both beyng of one countrey, and of one Towne together, and of one trade, that is, being both husbandmen in the town of Wigborow in Essex,*and also almost both of one age, sane that Symson was of the age of 34. the other of 30. were brought vp both together, by the vnder Shyriffe of Essex, to Boner Bishop of London, vpō the accusation (as in that time it was called) of heresy.

As touching the order & maner of theyr examinations before the bishop, as the articles ministred against them, were much like: so theyr aunsweres agayne vnto the same were not much discrepant in maner & forme, as out of the Bishops owne Registers here foloweth expressed.

¶Articles obiected agaynst Iohn Symson, and Iohn Ardeley, of the Parish of Wigborow the great in Essex, husbandmen, by Boner Bishop of London, at Fulham. 22. of May. 1555.

*1. First, that thou Ioh. Symson (or Ioh. Ardeley) husbandman, of the age of 34. yeres, or thereabout, wast and art of the parish of great Wigborow, within the dioces of Londō, and thou hast not beleued, nor doest beleue, that there is here in earth one Catholicke and vniuersal whole Church, which doth hold and beleue all the fayth & religiō of Christ and all the necessary articles and sacramentes of the same.

2. Item, that thou hast not beleued, nor doest beleue, that thou art necessarily bounden vnder the payne of damnation of thy soule, to geue full fayth and credence unto the sayd Catholique and vniuersall Church, and to the Religion of the same, in all necessary poyntes of the sayd fayth and Religion, without wauering or doubting in the sayde fayth and Religion, or in any part therof.

3. Item, that thou hast not beleueed, nor doest beleue, that that fayth and Religion: whiche both the Church of Rome, Italy, Spayn, England, Fraunce, Ireland,* Scotland, and all other Churches in Europe, being true members and partes of the sayd Catholick & vniuersall church do beleue and teach, is both agreing with the sayd Catholicke and vniuersall Church, and the fayth and Religion, of Christ, and also is the very true fayth & Religion, which all Christen people ought to beleue, obserue, folow & keep, but contrariwise thou hast beleued, and doest beleue, that that fayth and Religion, which the sayd Church of Rome, and all the other Churches aforesayd haue heretofore beleued, and do nowe beleue, is false, erroneous and nought, & in no wise ought to be beleued, obserued, kept, and followed of any Christian man.

4. Item, that albeit it bee true, that in the Sacrament of the aultar there is in substance the very body and bloud of Christ vnder the formes of bread and wyne, and albeit, that it be so beleued, taught & preached vndoubtedly in the sayd Church of Rome, and all the other Churches aforesayd, yet thou hast not so beleued, nor doest so beleue,* but contrariwise thou hast & doest beleue firmly, & stedfastly, that there is not in the sayd sacrament of the aultar, vnder the sayd formes of breade and wine, the very substaunce of Christes body and bloud, but that there is onely the substaunce of material and common bread and wine, with the formes therof: and that the sayd materiall & commō bread and wine are onely the signes and tokens of Christs body and bloud, and by fayth to be reciued, onely for a remembraunce of Christes passion & death, without any such substaunce of Christes body and bloud at all.

5. Item, that thou hast beleued and taught, and thou hast openly spoken, and to thy power maynteyned and defended, and so doest beleue, thinke, maynteyn and defend, that the very true receiuing and eating of Christes body & bloud, is onely to take materiall and commō bread,* and to breake it, and to distribute it amongst the people, remembring therby the passion and death of Christ onely.

6. Item, that thou hast likewise beleued, taught, and spoken, that the Masse now vsed in this Realme of England, and others the churches aforesayd,* is abhominable & naught and full of Idolatry, and is of the ordinance of the Pope, and not of the institution of Christ, & hath no goodnes in it, sauing the gloria in excelsis, and the Epistle and the Gospell, & that therefore thou hast not, nor wilt not come and be present at the Masse, nor receiue the Sacrament of the aultar, or any other Sacrament of the Church as they are now vsed in this Realme of Englande, and other the Churches aforesayd.

7. Item, that thou hast in tymes past beleued precisely, and obstinately affirmed and sayd, & so doest now beleue & thinke that auricular confession is not needfull to be made vnto the Prieste, but it is a thing superfluous and vayne, and ought onely to be made to God & to none other persō: and likewise thou hast condemned as superfluous, vayne, and vnprofitable, all the ceremonies of the church and the seruice of the same, & hast sayd that no seruice in the church ought to be sayd, but in the English tongue, and if it be otherwise sayd, it is vnlawfull and nought.

¶The aunsweres of Iohn Symson and also of Iohn Ardeley, to the foresayd Articles.

TO the firste, they beleue, that here in earth there is one Catholicke and vniuersall holy Church,* which doeth hold and beleue as is contained in the first article, and that this Church is dispersed and scattered abroad throughout the whole world.

To the second, they beleue, that they be bound to geue fayth and credence vnto it, as is conteyned in the second Article.

To the third, as concerning the fayth and Religion of the Church of Rome, of Italy, Spaine, Fraunce, Ireland, Scotland, and other Churches in Europa, they say, they haue nothing to doe with that fayth and Religion, but as concerning the fayth and Religion of England, that if the sayde Church of England be ruled and Gouerned by the word of life, then the Church of England hath the fayth & Religion of the Catholicke Church, and not otherwise: & doe say also, that if the Church of England were ruled by the word of life, it woulde not go about to condemne them and others of this heresy.

To the fourth they aunswere, that in the Sacrament, commonly called the Sacrament of the aultar, there is very bread and very wine, not altered nor chaunged in substaunce in anye wise,* and that hee that receiueth the sayde bread and wyne, doth spiritually and by fayth only receiue Page 1583 the body and bloud of Christ,* but not the very naturall body and bloud of Christ in substaunce, vnder the formes of bread and wine.

To the fift they say, they haue aunswered aunswering to the sayde fourth article, and yet neuerthelesse they saye, that they haue beleued, and doe beleue, that in the sacramēt of the Aultar there is not the verye substaunce of Christes body and bloud, but onely the substaunce of naturall bread and wine.

To the sixt they say, that they beleue, that the Masse is of the Pope,* and not of Christ, and therefore it is not good, nor hauing in it any goodnes, sauing the Gloria in excelsis, the Epistle and Gospell, the Creed, and the Pater noster: & for this cause they say, they haue not, nor will not come and heare Masse.

To the seuenth, Iohn Ardeley aunswereth, and sayth, that he beleueth the contentes of the same to bee true: but Iohn Symson doth answere, that he is not as yet fully resolued with himselfe, what aunswere to make therunto, & further sayth, that as touching the common and dayly seruice sayd & vsed in the church, he sayth, that he neuer sayd, that seruice in the Churche ought to be sayd but in the Englishe tongue, nor yet he neuer sayd, that if it be otherwise sayd and vsed then in English, it is vnlawful and nought.

Iohn Ardeley, and Iohn Symson.

*Thus these articles being to them objected, and theyr aunsweres made vnto the same, as before, the Bishop according to the old trade of his Consistorie Court, respited them to the after noone, bidding them to make their appearaunce the sayd day and place, betweene the houres of two and three. At what tyme the sayd Byshop repeatyng agayne the sayd articles vnto them, and beginnyng with Iohn Ardeley did vrge and sollicitate, according to his maner of wordes, to recant.

To whom Iohn Ardely againe constantly standyng to his professed Religion,* gaue answere in wordes, as foloweth: My Lord (quoth he) neyther you, nor any other of your Religion, is of the Catholique Church, for you be of a false fayth: and I doubt not but you shall be deceyued at length, beare as good a face as ye can. You will shedde the innocent bloud, and you haue killed many, and yet goe abot to kyll more. &c.

And added further, saying: If euery heare of my head were a man, I would suffer death in the opinion and fayth that I am now in. These with many other woordes he spake.* Then the Byshop yet demaunding if he woulde relinquish his erroneous opinions (as he called them) and be reduced againe to the vnitie of y^e Church, he answered, as foloweth: No, God foreshield that I should so do: for then I should loose my soule.

After this, the sayd Byshop asking Iohn Ardeley (after his formall manner) if he knewe any cause why hee shoulde not haue sentence condemnatorie agaynst hym, so read the condemnation, as he also did against Iohn Simson, standyng lykewyse in the same cause and constancie with Iohn Ardeley: which was done the xxv. day of May, and so were they both committed to the secular power, that is, to the handes of the Sheriffes, to be conueyed to the place where they should be executed. But before I come to their execution, here is not to be passed a thing not vnworthy the looking vpon, which happened in the closing vp of the examination of these two innocent martyrs of God, which is this.

A Note.

At the tyme of the examination of this Symson and Iohn Ardeley aforesaid,* there was assembled such a great multitude of people, that because the Consistorie was not able to hold them, they were fayne to stand in the Church, neare about the sayd Consistorie, wayting to see the prisoners, when they should depart. It happened in the meane time that the Bishop being set in heate with the stoute and bolde aunsweares of the sayd two prisoners (especially of Iohn Symson) burst out in his loud and angry voice, and sayd: Haue him away, haue him away.

Now the people in the Church hearing these wordes, and thinking (because the daye was farre spent) that the prisoners had their iudgement, they beyng desirous to see the prisoners had to Newgate, seuered them selues, one runnyng one way, an other an other way, whiche caused such a noyse in the Church, that they in y^e Consistorie were all amased, and marueiled what it should meane: wherfore the Byshop also being somewhat afrayde of this sodayne styrre,* asked what there was to do. The standers by answeyng, sayd, that there was like to be some tumult, for they were together by the eares.

When the Bishop heard this, by & by his hart was in his heeles, & leauing his seat, he with the rest of that court be tooke them to theyr legges, hastening with all speed possible to recouer the doore that went into the bishops house: but the rest being somewhat lighter of foot then my Lorde, did sooner recouer the dore, and thronging hastily to gette in kept the bishop still out, and cryed: Saue my Lord, saue my Lord, but meaning yet first to saue themselues, if any daunger should come, whereby they gaue the standers by good matter to laugh at: resēbling in some part a spectacle not much vnlike to the old stagers at Oxford, worse feared then hurt, when as the Church there was noysed to be on fire, wherof ye may read before. pag. 1180.

But of this matter enough.

Now Iohn Symson and Iohn Ardeley being deliuered (as is aforesayd) to the Shiriffes,* were shortly after sent downe from Londō to Essex, where both they on one day (which was about the 10. daye of Iune) were put to death, albeit in seuerall places: for Iohn Sympsō suffered at Rochford, Iohn Ardeley the same day was had to Railey, where he finished his martyrdome most quietly in the quarrell of Christes Gospell.

A note of Iohn Ardeley.*

FOR the better consideration of the rigorous crueltie of these Catholick dayes, this is furthermore not vnworthy of all men to be noted and knowen to all posteritie, concerning the examinations of this Ardeley and his company: how that they being brought before the Commissioners were by them greatly charged of stubbornes and vayne glory. Vnto whom they aunswered in defence of their owne simplicitie, that they were content willingly to yeelde to the Queene all their goodes and landes, so that they might be suffered to liue vnder her, in keepyng their conscience free from all Idolatie and papisticall Religion. Yet this would not be graunted, although they had offered all to their hart bloud: so greedy and so thirsty be these persecutors of Christian bloud. The Lord geue them repentaunce if it be his wil, and kepe from them the iust reward of such cruel dealing. Amen.

The ridiculous handling and proceedyng of Byshop Boner and his mates against Iohn Tooly, first suspected and condemned after his death, and then digged out of his graue, and geuen to the secular power, and so burned for an heretike.

ABout the same time of the burning of these two aforesayd, in the beginning of the sayd moneth of Iune,* fell out a soleme processe & much ado was made by the Popes spirituality agaynst Iohn Tooly, in a case of heresy. The story is this. There was about the tyme that the Spaniardes began first to keepe a stur in Englād, one Io. Tooly, a citizen & Pulter in London, who conspired with certain other of his society, to rob a Spaniard at s. Iames: & although the deed wer heinous & wicked of it self, yet was it aggrauated & made greater then it was by other, beyng cōmitted agaynst such a person, & agaynst such a countrey. which both the queene & her whole court did highly fauor. The robbery being known, & brought into iudgemēt, this Tooly was found guilty, and iudged to be hāged, wheras notwithstanding in this Realme there are many mo the•tes committed, then theeues executed.

The foresayd Tooly, being lead to the gallowes, (whiche stood fast by Charing Crosse a litle before he dyed, standing vpon the Carte, readde a certayne prayer in a printed booke, and two other prayers written in two seuerall papers, who then hauing the haltar about his necke, desired the people there present to pray for him, and to beare hym witnes that he dyed a true Christian man, and that he trusted to be saued onely by the merites of Christes passion,* & shedding of his precious bloud, and not by any masses, or Trentalles, Images, or Saintes, which were (as he said) mere Idolatry and superstition, and deuised by the bishop of Rome: and as he the same Tooly, and two other his fellowes, which were there hanged with him, did steale and robbe for couetousnes, so the bishop of Rome did sell hys Masses and Trentalles, with such other peltrye for couetousnes, and there being in a great anger (as appeared) agaynst the bishop of Rome, spake with a loud voyce these wordes folowing: From the tyranny of the Bishop of Rome, and all his detestable enormities: From false doctrine and heresy, and from the contempt of the word and commaundement, good Lord deliuer vs.

And then adding further to the same, he spake vnto the people: All you that be true Christian men, saye with me, Amen. And immediately therupon three hundred persons and more to the iudgement & estimatiō of those that were there present, answered and sayd. Amen,* three tymes together Page 1584 at the least.

After this it happened, that when Toolye had readde the Byll the fyrste tyme, it fell from him: and a certayne young man (who was thought to be a Prentise) stouped downe and tooke vp the Byll, and clymed vp by the Cart, and deliuered it vnto Tooly agayne, which he agayne di• reade to the people. That done, he deliuered vnto one of the Marshialles Officers the booke aforesayd, and wylled hym to deliuer it to one Haukes, saying that it was hys Booke. Furthermore, hee deliuered one of the Prayers written in a paper, to one Robert Bromley Sergeaunt, which desired to haue it of him. Upon the toppe of whiche Byll was written a line, conteynyng these wordes:

Beware of Antichrist: and subscribed vnderneath: Per me Thomam Harold prysoner in the Marshalsea, enemy to Antechriste. For the Byll aforesayde Robert Bromley was brought afterward Coram nobis, and was faine to aske pardon of the bishop, and to detest all the wordes of Tooly, and glad so to escape.

Thus while Tooly had made his prayers, as is aboue sayd, to be diliuered from the Popes tyranny, by the same prayer he fel into great tyranny. For so soon as the brute of this fact came vnto the eares of the Priests & Mitred prelates, they were not a litle mad therat, thinking it not tollerable that so great a reproch should be done agaynst the holy father. Calling therfore a coūsell together, as though it had bene a matter of great importance.* Toolyes talke at his death was debated among themselues.

At the last, (after much Pro and Contra) they all consented to those mens iudgements, which thought it meet that the vyolating of the Popes holynes shoulde be reuenged with fire and fagot. And I do easely beleue, that Cardinal Poole was no small doer in this sentence:* for as Winchester and Boner did alwayes thirst after the bloud of the liuing, so Pooles lightning was for the most part kindled agaynst the dead: and he reserued this charge onely to hymselfe, I knowe not for what purpose, except peraduenture being loth to be so cruel as the other, he thought neuerthesse by this meanes to discharge his duetye towarde the Pope. By the same Cardinalles like lightening and fierye fist, the bones of Martine Bucer, and Paulus Phagius, which had lyen almost two yeares in theyr graues,* were taken vp and burned at Cambridge, as Toolyes carkase was here at London. And besides this, because he woulde shew some token of his diligence in both Uniuersities, he caused Peter Martirs wife, a woman of worthy memory, to be digged out of the Churchyarde, and to be buried on the dunghill. Of these two prodigious actes, ye shal heare more hereafter. But now to our purpose of Tooly, which hauinge ended his prayer, was hanged, and put into hys graue, out of the which he was digged agayne, by the cōmaundement of the Bishops, and because he was so bolde to derogate the authority of the Bishop of Rome at y^e time of his death, it pleased them to iudge and cōdemne him as an hereticke, vpon the commaundement of the Counselles letter, as here appeareth.

¶A Letter sent vnto Boner Byshop of London, from the Counsell.

AFTER our very hartly commendations to your Lordship vnder standing that of late amongst others that haue suffered about London for theyr offences,* one leude person that was condemned for felony, dyed very obstinately, professing at the tyme of his death sundry hereticall and erronious opinions: like as we thinke it not conuenient that such a matter should be ouerpassed without some example to the world, so we thought good to pray your Lordshyppe, to cause further enquirye to be made thereof, and thereupon to proceede to the making out of such processe as by the Ecclesiasticall lawes is prouided in that behalfe. And so we bid your Lordship hartily well to fare. From Hamptō Courte, the 28. of April. 1555.

Your Lordships louing frendes.

Anon after, a Citation was set vpon Paules Church doore vnder the Bishop of Londons great seale: the tenor wherof here ensueth.

¶The writ of Mandate of Boner B. of London, set vp at Charing Crosse, on Paules Church doore, and at S. Martins in the field, for the cityng and further inquiring out of the case of Iohn Tooly.

EDmond by the sufferance of God, Bishop of London,* to all and singular Parsons, Uicars, Curates, and others, Clerks and learned men, being within our Dioces of London, and specially vnto Richard Clony our sworn Sumner, greeting, salutation, & benediction. For so much as it is come to our hearing by common fame, and the declaration of sundry credible persons, that one Iohn Tooly late Citizen and Pulter of London, the sonne of perdition and iniquity, comming to the profundity of malice, in the selfe same time in the which he should go to hanging, accor'dyng to the lawes of the Realme, for the greate the•e by him lately committed, at whiche time chie•ely he shoulde haue cared for the wealth of his soule, and to haue dyed in the vnity of the Catholique Church, did vtter diuers and sundry, damnable, blasphemous, and hereticall opinions, & errors, vtterly contrary & repugnant to the verity of the Catholicke fayth & vnity of the same, and did exhort, styrr vp, and encourage the people there standing in great multitude, to hold & defend the same errors and opinions: And moreouer, certain of the people there standing, as it did appeare, infected with errours and heresies, as •autours and defenders of the sayd Iohn, did confirme and geue expresse consent to the foresayd wordes, propositions, and affirmations: which thing we doe vtter with sorrow and bytternesse of hart.

We therfore the foresayd Edmond & bishop abouesayd,* not being able, nor daring passe ouer in silence, or winke at the foresaid hainous act, least by our negligence and slacknes, y^e bloud of thē might be required at our handes, at the most terrible day of iudgement, desiring to be certified and enformed, whether y^e premises declared vnto vs be of truth & least that any scabbed sheep, lurking amongst the simple flocke of our Lord do infect them with pestiferous heresy, to you, therfore, we straitly charge and commaūd, that you cite, or cause to be cited al and singular, hauing or knowing the truth of the premisses, by setting vp this Citation vpon the Church doore of Saint Martines in the field, being within our Dioces of London, and also vpon the Cathedrall Church doore of S. Paules in London, leauing there the copy hereof, or by other meanes or wayes, the best you can, that this Citation and Monition may come to theyr knowledge.

All which and singular by the tenor of these presentes, we cite and admonishe that they appeare, and euery one of them do appeare before vs or our Uicar generall, or Commissary, whatsoever he be in that behalfe, in our cathedrall Church of S. Paul in London, in the Consistory place vp on thursday the second day of May, now next ensuing, betwixt the houres of 9. & 10. of the clocke in the forenoone the same day, to beare witnes to the truth in this behalfe, and to depose and declare faythfully the trueth that they know or haue heard of the premisses: and moreouer, to do and receiue, that law and reason doth require.

Further, we commit vnto you, as before, and straytlye enioyning you do cōmaund,* that ye will generally cite the wife of the sayd Tooly that is dead & his children, his kynred by father and mother, his frendes, and his familiars in especiall, and all other and euery of thē, if there be any perhaps that desire to defend and purge the remembraunce of the person in the premisses, and that ye admonish them after the maner and forme aforesayd, whō we likewise by the tenor of these presentes, do in such sort cite and monish that they appeare all, & that euery one of thē do appeare (vnder pain to be cōpelled to keep silence for euer hereafter in this behalfe) before vs, or our Uicar generall in spirituall matters, or such our Commissary at the day, houre, and place aforesayd, to defende the good name and remembraunce of him that is dead, and to say, alledge, & propose in due forme of law, a cause reasonable, if they haue any or can tel of any why the sayd Iohn Tooly that is dead, ought not to be determined and declared for such an heretick and excommunicate person, and his remembrance condemned, in the detesting and condemning of so heynous a deed and crime, & his body or carkas to lacke Church buriall,* as a rottē mēber cut of from the church, and the same to be committed to the arme & power secular, and they compelled hereafter for euer to hold theyr peace.

And furthermore, to do, receiue, & to suffer, as law and reason will, and as the quality of suche matter, and the nature of themselues do constrayne and require: and moreouer, that you cite and monish after the maner aforesayd, all and euery of the receiuers, fautours, and creditours of the sayd Iohn Tooly that is dead, especially if any of them doe accline and geue consent to th•se wicked and detestable affirmations, propositions, and rehearsals aforesaid, that on this side the sayd thursday,* they returne and submit themselues vnto vs, and to the lap of the mother holy Church: which thing if they doe, we trusting vpon the mercye of almighty Page 1585 God, do promise that we will receiue them beyng penitent for such theyr errors & faultes, with thanks, benignity, mercy and fauor, to the comfort and health of their owne soules, and in that behalfe saue their honesties to the vttermost of our power: otherwise if they wil not provide thus to come of theyr owne accord, but to abide y^e ordinary processe of the law, let those mē know that we will punish more seuerely this offēce, according to the vttermost of the law, and as farre as the law will beare it: & what you shal do in the premisses, let him among you which shall execute this our present Mandate, certify vs, or our vicar general in spirituall matters, eyther by his owne person, or by his letters patents, tog•ther with these autētically sealed. Dated at London vnder our seale, the last day saue one of April. 1555. and of our Translation the 16.

When the tyme of this Citation was expired, and thys Tooly being cited, dyd not appeare: next in order of lawe came the suspension (where as one suspension had bene enough for him) and after that commeth the Excommunication,* that is, that no man should eat or drinke with him, or if any mette him by the way, he shoulde not bidde hym good morrow, and besides that, he should be excluded from the Communion of the Churche. These thynges beyng prepared in such maner, as in such cases ful wisely they vse to do, at length one stood out for the nonce, that made aunswere to certayne articles, rehearsed in iudgement openly, and that in the behalfe of the dead manne. But when the poore dead man could neyther speake for himselfe, nor did, (as they sayd) sufficiently aunswere them by the other, to auoyde the name of an hereticke: first witnesses were producted agaynst him, whose names were Hēry Clarke Esquire,* Thom. Way keeper of the Marshalsey, Philip Andrew Undermarshal, William Holingworth Fishmōger, William Gellard, William Walton Chaundler, Richarde Longman Marchaunt Taylour, Philip Britten, Iohn Burton Brewer, Thomas Smyth Sergeant. Then hee was for an hereticke condemned, aand so committed to the secular power,* namely to the Shiriffes of London, which with like diligence went aboute to execute their charge. Therefore receiuing the man being suspēded, excommunicated, condemned as an hereticke, and besides that beyng dead, they laid him on the fire to be burned, namely, ad perpetuam rei memoriam, for a continuall remembrance therof. This was done the fourth day of Iune.

Here foloweth the history and Martyrdome of the worthy seruaunt of Christ, Thomas Haukes Gentleman, with his examinations and aunsweres had with B. Boner, recorded and penned with his owne hand.

IMmediatly after the story of D. Taylor. pag. 1456. mention before was made of sixe men brought & conuēted before Bishop Boner vpon the eight day of February.* The names of which martyrs were Steuen Knight, William Pigot, Tho. Tomkins, Ioh Laurence, Wil. Hunter. In which number was also Tho. Haukes, & cōdemned likewise with thē the 9. day of the foresaid month of February. But because his execution did not so shortly followe wyth theirs, but was prolonged to this present x. day of the moneth of Iune, wherwith we are nowe in hand, it foloweth therefore now consequētly to enter tractation thereof, first, beginning briefly with his godly cōuersation & institution of life, then shewing of his troubles, also of his examinations and conflictes with the bishop and other aduersaries according as the order of his story both require.

As touching therefore his education and order of life, first hee was of the countrey of Essex,* borne of an honest stocke, in calling and profession a Courtier, brought vppe daintely from his childhoode, and like a Gentleman. Besides that, he was of such comelines and stature, so well endued with excellēt qualities, that he might seme on euery side a man (as it were) made for the purpose. But hys gentle behauour toward other, and especially his feruent study and singuler loue vnto true Religion and godlines did surmount all the rest. Wherein as God did singularly adorne him: euen so he being suche a valiaunt Martyr of God, may seeme to nobilitate the whole company of other holy martyrs, and as a bright starre, to make the Church of God and his trueth, of thēselues bright and cleare, more gloriously to shine by his example.

For if the conquestes of martyrs are the triumphes of Christ (as Saynt Ambrose doth notably and truely write) vndoubtedly Christ in few mē hath either conquered more notably,* or triumphed more gloriously, then in this young man: he stood so wisely in his cause, so godly in his life, and so constantly in his death.

But to the declaration of the matter: first this Haukes folowing the guise of the Court, as he grew in yeares, entred seruice with the Lord of Oxford, where he remained a good space,* being there right well esteemed & loued of all the houshold, so long as Edward the sixt liued. But he dying, all things begā to go backward, religiō to decay, godlines not only to waxe cold, but also to be in daūger euery where and chiefly in the houses of great men. Haukes mislikyng the state of thinges, and especially in such mens houses rather thē he would chaunge the profession of true godlines which he had tasted, thought to chaunge the place:* and so forsaking y^e Noble mans house, departed home to his own home, where more freely he might geue himselfe to God, & vse his owne conscience.

But what place in this worlde shall a man finde so secret for himselfe, whether that old wicked Serpent can not creep, wherby he may haue some matter to ouerthrow the quietnesse of the Godly? Nowe in the meane season (as it happened) Haukes keeping his house at home,* had borne vnto him a young sonne, whose baptisme was deferred to the third weeke, for that he would not suffer him to be baptised after the papistical maner, Which thing the aduersaries not able to suffer, laying handes vpon him,* did bryng him to the Earle of Oxforde, there to be reasoned with, as not sound in religion, in that he semed to contemne the sacramentes of the Church.

The Earle eyther intending not to trouble hymselfe in such matters,* or else seeyng hymselfe not able to weigh with him in suche cases of Religion, sent him vp to London with a messenger and letters, and so willing to cleare his owne handes, put him in the handes of Boner bishop of London: the contētes of which his letter sent to Boner, be these.

¶A Letter of the Earle of Oxford to Boner.

MOst reuerend father in God, be it knowne vnto you, that I haue sent you one Thomas Haukes,* dwelling in the County of Essex, who hath a child that hath remayned vnchristened more then three weekes, who being vpon the same examined, hath denied to haue it baptised, as it is now vsed in the Church: wherevpo n I haue sent him to your good Lordship, to vse as ye thinke best, by your good discretion.

Whē the bishop had perused this letter, and afterward read it to M. Haukes, he hearing the same, thought with himselfe, that he should not be very wel vsed, seing he was put to his discretion. Then wrote the bishop a letter again to him that sent the prisoner, with many great thanks for his diligence in setting forth the Queenes proceedynges. Then began the bishop to enter communication with M. Haukes, first asking what should moue him to leaue hys child vnchristened so long? To whom M. Haukes answered thus agayne as foloweth.

Haukes.

Because we be bound to do nothing contrarye to the word of God.*

Boner.

Why? Baptisme is •ommaunded by the worde of God.

Haukes.

His institution therin I do not deny.

Boner.

What deny ye then?

Haukes.

I deny all things inuented and deuised by man.

Boner.

What thinges be those that be deuised by man, that ye be so offended withall?

Haukes.

Your Oyle, Creame, Salt, Spettle, Candle,* and coniuring of water. &c.

Boner.

Will ye deny that which all the whole worlde, and your father hath bene contented withall?

Haukes.

What my father & all the whole world hath done, I haue nothing to do withall: but what God hath cōmaūded me to do, to that stand I.

Boner.

The Catholicke Church hath taught it.*

Haukes.

What is the Catholicke Church?

Boner.

It is the faythfull congregation, where so euer it be dispersed throughout the whole world.

Haukes.

Who is the head therof?

Boner.

Christ is the head therof.

Haukes.

Are we taught in Christ, or in the Church now?

Boner.

Haue ye not reade in the eyght of Iohn, where hee sayd, he would send his comforter which should teach you all thinges?

Haukes.

I graunt you it is so, that he woulde sende hys comforter, but to what ende? forsooth to this ende, that hee should lead you into all truth and verity, and that is not to teach a new doctrine.

Boner.

A Syr, ye are a right scripture man. For ye wyll haue nothing but the scripture. There is a great number Page 1586 of your countrey men of your opinion. Doe ye not knowe one Knight and Pigot?

Haukes.

Knight I know, but Pigot I do not know.

Boner.

I thought ye were acquaynted with him: it semeth so by your iudgement. What Preachers doe ye knowe in Essex.

Haukes.

I know none.

Boner.

Do ye not know one Baget there?

Haukes.

Yes forsooth, I know him.

Boner.

What maner a man is he?

Haukes.

An honest man, so farre as I know.

Boner.

Do you know him if you see him?

Haukes.

Yea that I do. Then sayd he to one of his seruantes, go call me Baget hither. And then he sayde to me: ye seme to be a very proud man & a stubburn. He that broght me vp, stood all this while by.

Haukes.

What should moue your Lordship so to say?

Boner.

Because I see in a man that came with you muche humility and lowlinesse.*

Haukes.

It semeth your Lordship speaketh that to me, because I make no more curtesy to you: and with that came Baget. Then the Bishop sayd to Baget: How say ye Syr, know ye this man?

Baget.

Yea forsooth my Lord: with that Baget and I shook handes. Then sayd the Bishop to Baget: Syr, this man hath a child,* which hath lien 3. weekes vnchristened (as I haue letters to shew) who refuseth to haue it baptised, as it is now vsed in the church: how say you thereto?

Baget.

Forsooth my Lord I say nothing thereto (with low curtesy to the hard ground.)

Boner.

Say ye nothing thereto? I will make you tell me whether it be laudable, and to be frequēted and vsed in the Church, or not.

Baget.

I beseeche your Lordship to pardon me, he is olde enough, let him aunswere for himselfe.

Boner.

Ah sir knaue, are ye at that poynt with me? Go call me the Porter,* sayd he, to one of his men. Thou shalt sit in the stockes, & haue nothing but bread & water. I perceyue I haue kept you to well. Haue I made thus much of you, and haue I you at this poynt? Then came the Byshoppes man, and sayd: The Porter is gone to London. Then said the Bishop to Baget:* Come with me, and he went awaye with him, and commaunded me away, and bade one of his Gentlemē to talke with me (who was one of his own teaching:) who desired amongst all other things, to know of me, with whom I was acquaynted in Essex, and what mē they were that were my teachers.

Haukes.

When I see your cōmission, I will make you answere. And then immediatly came the Bishop agayne: but ere he came, his man and I had much talke. Then the byshop sate down vnder a vine in his orchyard, & called Baget to him, whom he caried away, & brought againe, & called me also, and sayd to Baget: How say you now sir vnto Baptisme? Say whether it be to be frequented and vsed in the Church, as it is now, or no?

Baget.

Forsooth my Lord, I say it is good.

Boner.

*I befoole your hart, could ye not haue said so before? Ye haue wounded this mans conscience. Then the bishop turned to me, and sayd: How say ye now sir, this man is turned and conuerted.

Haukes.

*I builde my fayth neither vpon this man, neither vpon you, but onely vpon Christ Iesus, who as Paule sayth is the founder and author of all mens fayth.

Boner.

I perceiue ye are a stubborn felow. I must be glad to worke an other way with you, to win you.

Haukes.

Whatsoever ye doe, I am ready to suffer it: for I am in your handes to abide it.

Boner.

Well, ye are so: come on your wayes, ye shall go in and I will vse you Christianlike. You shall haue meate and drinke,* suche as I haue in my house: but in any wyse talke not.

Haukes.

I purpose to talke nothing but the worde of God and truth.

Boner.

I will haue no heresy talked on in my house.

Haukes.

Why is the trueth become heresy? God hath commaunded that wee shoulde haue none other talke in our houses, in our beddes, at our meat, and by the way, but all trueth.

Boner.

If ye will haue my fauor, be ruled by my counsell.

Haukes.

Then I trust you will graunt me my request.

Boner.

What is that?

Haukes.

That your Doctours and Seruauntes geue me none occasion: for if they doe, I wyll surely vtter my conscience. Then commaunded he his men to take in Baget, and let not Haukes and him talke together. And so thus we departed,* and went to dinner, and I dined at the Stewardes table.

After dynner, hys Chaplaynes and his men began to talke with me. But amongst all other, there was one Darbyshyre principall of Brodgate in Oxford,* & the Bishops kinsmā, who sayd to me, that I was to curious: for ye wil haue (sayd he) nothing but your litle prety Gods booke.

Haukes.

And is it not sufficient for my saluation? Yes (sayd he) it is sufficient for our saluation, but not for our instruction.

Haukes.

God send me the saluation,* and you the instruction. And as we thus reasoned, came the Byshop, who sayd vnto me: I gaue you a commaundement that you shoulde not talke.

Haukes.

And I desired you, that your Doctours and Seruauntes should geue me none▪ occasiō.* Then went we into his Orchard agayne he and his Doctors and I.

Boner.

Would not ye be contented to haue, that your childe shoulde bee Christened after the booke that was set out by king Edward?

Haukes.

Yes, with a good will: it is the thing that I desire.

Boner.

I thought so: ye would haue the same thing. The principal is in the name of the father, the sonne, & of the ho^ly ghost, and in necessity it may serue.

Haukes.

Christ did vse it without any such necessitye: and yet we lacke the chiefest poynt.

Boner.

What is that?

Haukes.

Go teach all nations, baptising them. &c.

Boner.

Thou speakest that because I am no Preacher.*

Haukes.

I speake the texte: I doe not meane you. Then spake all his Doctours, & his men that were with hym: he speaketh it of you my Lorde (with a greate noyse that they made.)

Boner.

Will ye be content to tary here, and your child shall be Baptised, and you shall not know of it, so that you will agree to it?

Haukes.

And if I would so haue done, I neded not to haue come to you: for I had the same counsell geuen before.

Boner.

You seeme to be a lustye young man: you will not geue your head for the washing. You will stand in the defence of it for the honour of your Countrey. Doe ye thinke that the Queene and I can not commaund it to be done in spite of your teeth?

Haukes.

What the Queene & you can do,* I will not stand in it: but ye get my conscience neuer the sooner.

Boner.

Well, you are a stubburne young man. I perceyue I must worke on other way with you.

Haukes.

Ye are in the handes of God, and so am I.

Boner.

What so euer you thinke, I woulde not haue you speake such wordes vnto me. And so we departed vntyll Euensong tyme: and ere Euensong was begon, my Lord called for me to come to him into the Chappell, and sayde: Haukes: thou art a proper young man, & God hath done his part vnto thee. I would be glad to do thee good. Thou knowest that I am thy Pastour, and one that should aunswere for thee. If I woulde not teach thee well. I shoulde aunswere for thy soule.

Haukes.

That I haue sayd, I will stand to it God willing: there is no way to remoue it.

Boner.

Nay, nay Haukes, thou shalt not be so wilfull. Remember Christ had two go into his vineyard? the one said he would & went not, the other sayd he would not & went.

Haukes.

The last went.

Boner.

Doe thou likewise, and I will talke frendly wyth thee: howe sayest thou? It is in the sixt of S. Iohn:*I am the bread of life: and the bread that I will geue, is my flesh, which I will geue for the life of the worlde. And who so euer eateth my flesh, and drinketh my bloud, hath euerlasting life. My flesh is very meat in deede, and my bloud is very drinke in deed. And hee that eateth my flesh, and drinketh my bloud, dwelleth in me, and I in him. Do ye beleue this?

Haukes.

Yea, I must needes beleue the Scriptures.

Boner.

Why? then I trust that ye be sound in the blessed sacrament.

Haukes.

I beseech your Lordship to feele my conscience no farther then in that, that I was accused in vnto you.

Boner.

Well, well, let vs go vnto Euensong.

Haukes.

With that I turned my backe to goe out of the Chappell.

Boner.

Why, will you not tary Euensong?

Haukes.

No forsooth.

Boner.

And why?

Haukes.

For I will not.*
_

Boner.

And why will you not?

Haukes.

For because I haue no edifiyng thereby, for I vnderstand no Latine.

Boner.

Why? you maye pray by your selfe. What bookes haue ye?

Haukes.

I haue the new Testament, the bookes of Salomon, and the Psalter.

Bo.

Why, I pray you tary here, & pray you on your psalter.

Page 1587

Haukes.

I wil not pray in this place, nor in none such. Thē sayd one of his chapleins: let him go my Lord, and he shal be no partaker with vs in our prayers.

Haukes.

I thinke my selfe best at ease when I am farthest from you: And so the Byshop went to Euensong, and I came downe and walked betwene the Hall and the Chap'pell in the Court, & taryed there till Euensong was done, and within an houre after that Euensong was done, the Bishop sent for me into his chamber where he lay himself,* & when I came, there was he, and three of his Chapleins.

Boner.

Ye know of the talke that was betwene you & me, as cōcerning the sacramēt. You would not haue your conscience sought any farther, then in that ye were accused of.

Haukes.

I thought you would not be both mine accuser & Iudge.

Boner.

Well, ye shall aunswere me to the Sacrament of the aultar, the Sacrament of Baptisme, the Sacramēt of Penance, and the Sacrament of Matrimony.

Haukes.

There is none of these, but I dare speake my conscience in them.

Boner.

The sacrament of the aultar ye seme to be sound in.

Haukes.

*In the Sacrament of the aultar? why Syr, I do not know it.

Boner.

Well, we will make you to know it, and beleue in it too, ere euer we haue done with you.

Haukes.

No, that shall ye neuer do.

Boner.

Yes, a Fagot will make you do it.

Hauk.

No, no, a poynt for your fagot. What God thinketh meete to be done, that shall ye do, and more shall ye not do.

Boner.

*Do ye not beleue that there remaineth in the blessed Sacrament of the aultar after the wordes of consecration be spoken, no more bread, but the very body and bloud of Christ? and at that word he put of his cap.

Haukes.

I do beleue as Christ hath taught me.

Boner.

Why? did not Christ say: Take: eate, this is my body?

Haukes.

Christ sayd so: but therefore it foloweth not, that the Sacrament of the aultar is so as you reach, neither did Christ euer teach it so to be.

Boner.

Why? the Catholicke Church taught it so, and they were of Christes Church.

Haukes.

How proue ye it? The Apostles neuer taught it so. Read the Actes, the second, and the twenty. Neither Peter nor Paule euer taught it, neither instituted it so.

Boner.

Ah Syr? ye will haue no more then the Scripture teacheth, but euen as Christ hath left it bare.

Haukes.

Hee that teacheth me any otherwise, I wyll not beleue him.

Boner.

*Why, then ye must eate a Lambe, if ye will haue but Christes institution onely.

Haukes.

Nay, that is not so. Before that Christ did institute the Sacrament, that ceremony ceased, and then begā the Sacrament.

Boner.

Alas, you know not how it begon, neither of the, in|stitution therof.

Haukes.

Then I would be glad to learne.

Boner.

Mary, we will teach you: but you are so stubburn that ye will not learne.*

Haukes.

Except ye learne me by the word of God, I wyll neuer credite you nor beleue you: and thus we concluded. Then the Bishop and his Chapleines laughed, and sayd: Iesu, Iesu, what a stubbernesse and arrogantnesse is this? and this was in his Chamber where he laye? Then sayde the Bishop to me, go ye downe and drinke, for it is fasting day: it is Midsommer euen, but I thinke ye loue neither fasting nor praying.

Haukes.

I will neuer deny fasting neither praying, so that it be done as it ought to be done,* and without hipocrisy or vayne glory.

Boner.

I lyke you the better for that: and so wee lefte for that night.

The next day the Bishop went to London: For Fecknam was made Deane that day, & I taried still at Fulhā. Then did the Bishops mē desire me to come to Masse, but I did vtterly refuse it, answering thē as I did theyr mayster.* That night the Bishop came home to Fulham agayn.

Talke betwene Harpsfield and Thomas Haukes.

Then vpon the Monday Morning very earely the Byshop dyd call for me.* There was with him Harpsfield Archdeacon of London, to whom the Bishop sayd: this is the man that I told you of, who would not haue his child Christened, nor will haue any ceremonies.

Harps.

Christ vsed ceremonies. Did he not take clay from the ground, and tooke spettle, & made the blind man to see?

Haukes.

I wotte well that, but Christ did neuer vse it in Baptisme. If ye will needes haue it, put it to the vse that Christ put it vnto.*

Harps.

I admit your child die vnchristened: what a heauy case stand you in?

Haukes.

I admit that if it do, what then?

Harps.

Mary then are ye damned, and your child both.

Hauk.

Iudge you no farther thē ye may by the scriptures.

Harps.

Do ye not know that your childe is borne in originall sinne?

Haukes.

Yes that I do.

Harps.

How is originall sinne washed away?

Haukes.

By true fayth and beliefe in Christ Iesus.

Harps.

How can your childe being an infant beleue.

Haukes.

The deliuerance of it from sinne, standeth in the fayth of his parentes.

Harps.

How proue you that?

Haukes.

By S. Paule in the 7. and the first to the Corinthians, saying: The vnbeleuing manne is sanctified by the beleuing woman,*and the vnbeleuing woman is sanctified by the beleuing man, or els were your children vncleane.

Harps.

I will proue that they whom thou puttest thy trust in, will be agaynst thee in this opinion.

Haukes.

Who be those?

Harps.

Your great learned men in Oxford.

Haukes.

If they do it by the Scriptures, I will beleue thē.

Boner.

Recant, recant: do ye not know that Christ sayd, except ye be Baptised, ye can not be saued?

Haukes.

Doth Christianity stand in outward ceremonyes or no?*

Boner.

Partly it doth: what say you to that?

Haukes.

I say as S. Peter sayth: Not the washing of water purgeth the filthinesse of the flesh, but a good conscience consenting vnto God.

Harps.

Beware of pride brother, beware of pride.

Haukes.

It is written: Pride serueth not for men, nor yet for the sonnes of men.*

Boner.

Let vs make an end here. How say you to y^e Masse Syrha?*

Haukes.

I say it is detestable, abhominable, and profitable for nothing.

Boner.

What (nothing profitable in it? what say you to the Epistle and Gospell?

Haukes.

It is good, if it be vsed as Christ left it to be vsed.

Boner.

Well, I am glad that ye somewhat recāt: recant all, recant all.

Haukes.

I haue recanted nothing, nor will do.

Bonor.

How say you to Confiteor?

Haukes.

I say it is abhominable & detestable,* ye and a blasphemy agaynst God and his sonne Christ, to call vpō any, to trust to any, or to pray to any, saue only to Christ Iesus.

Boner.

To trust to any, we bid you not: but to call vpon thē, and to pray to them we bid you.* Do ye not know whē ye come into the Courte ye can not speake with the king & Queene, vnlesse ye call to some of the priuy chāber that are next to the king and Queene?

Haukes.

They that list receiue your doctrine. You teach me that I should not beleue nor trust in any, but to cal on thē: and S. Paule sayth: How should I call vpon him, on whome I beleue not?

Boner.

Wyll you haue no body to pray for you, when you be dead?

Haukes.

No surelye excepte you canne prooue it by the Scriptures. Then the Bishoppe pointed vnto Harpsfield and sayd vnto me: Is it not wel done to desire this man to pray for me?

Haukes.

Yes surely, so long as we liue, prayer is auaylable of the righteous man: but this mans prayers, you beyng dead, profiteth nothing at all.

Boner.

Will ye graunt the prayer of the righteous man to preuayle?

Haukes.

I graunt it doth for the liuing, but not for the dead.

Boner.

Not for the dead?

Haukes.

No forsooth, for Daudid sayth: No man can deliuer his brother from death, nor make agreement vnto God for him: *for it cost more to redeeme theyr soules, so that ye must let that alone for euer.

Also Ezechiell sayth: Though Noe, Daniell, or Iob dwelt amongst them, *yet can they in theyr righteousnesse excede no farther then themselues. Then the Bishop said to Harpsfield: Syr, ye see this man hath no need of our Ladye, neither of any of the blessed Sayntes. Well, I will trouble you no longer: I did call you, * hoping that you shoulde doe some good on him, but it will not be. And he said to me: Syr, it is tyme to begin with you: we will rid you awaye and then we shall haue one hereticke lesse.

Harps.

What bookes haue you?

Haukes.

The new Testament, Salomons bookes and the Psalter.

Harps.

Will you read any other bookes?

Page 1588

Haukes.

Yea, if you will geue me suche bookes, as I will require.

Harps.

What bookes will you require?

Haukes.

Latimers bookes, my Lorde of Caunterburyes booke, Bradfords Sermons, Ridleyes bookes.

Boner.

Away, away, he will haue no bookes but suche as mayntayne his heresies: and so they departed, for Harpsfield was booted to ride vnto Oxforde, and I went to the Porters lodge agayne.

¶The next dayes talke.

*The next day came thither an old Byshoppe, who had a pearl in his eye, and he brought with him to my Lord a dish of apples, & a bottle of wine. For he had lost his lyuing, because hee had a wife. Then the Bishop called me agayne into the Orchard, and sayd to the old Bishop: this young man hath a childe, and will not haue it christened.

Haukes.

I deny not Baptisme.

Boner.

Thou art a foole, thou canst not tell what yⁿ wouldest haue, and that he spake with much anger.

Haukes.

A bishop must be blamelesse or faultles, sober, discreete, no chider, not geuen to anger.

Boner.

Thou iudgest me to be angry: no by my fayth am I not, and stroke himselfe vpon the brest.

Then sayd the old Bishop: Alas good yoūg man, you must be taught by y^e church, and by your auncients, and do as your forefathers haue done before you.

Boner.

No, no, he will haue nothing but the Scriptures, and God wot he doth not vnderstād them. He will haue no ceremonies in the Church, no not one. What say you to holy water?

Haukes.

I say to it, as to the rest, and to all that be of hys making that made them.

Boner.

Why, the scriptures doth allow it.

Haukes.

Where proue you that?

Boner.

In the booke of kinges, where Elizeus threw salt into the water.*

Haukes.

Ye say truth, it is so written in the fourth booke of Kinges, the second chapter: the children of the Prophetes came to Elizeus, saying: The dwelling of the city is pleasant, but the waters be corrupted. This was the cause that Elizeus threw salt into the water, and it became sweete & good and so when our waters be corrupted, if ye can by putting in of salte make them sweete, cleare, and wholesome, wee will the better beleue your ceremonies.

Boner.

How say ye to holy bread?

Haukes.

Euen as I sayde to the others. What Scripture haue you to defend it?

Boner.

Haue ye not read where Christ fedde fiue thousand men with fiue loaues, and three fishes?

Haukes.

Will ye make that holy bread? There Christ dealt fish with his holy bread.

Boner.

Looke I pray you, how captious this man is.

Haukes.

Christ did not this miracle, or other, because wee should doe the like miracle, but because we should beleue and credite his doctrine thereby.

Boner.

Ye beleue no doctrine, but that whiche is wrought by miracles.

Haukes.

No forsooth, for Christ sayth: These tokens shall follow them that beleue in me: they shall speake with new tongues they shall cast out Deuils,*and if they drinke any deadly poyson, it shall not hurt them.

Boner.

With what newe tongues doe ye speake?

Haukes.

Forsooth, where before that I came to the knowledge of Gods word. I was a soule blasphemmer and filthy talker, since I came to the knowledge thereof, I haue lauded God, praysed God, and geuen thanks vnto God euē with the same tongue: and is not this a new tongue?

Boner.

*How do ye cast out Deuils?

Haukes.

Christ did cast them out by hys word, and he hath left the same word, that whosoeuer doth credite and beleue it, shall cast out deuils.

Boner.

Did you euer drinke any deadly poyson?

Haukes.

Ye forsooth that I haue: for I haue dronken of y^e pestilent traditions and ceremonies of the Byshoppe of Rome.

Boner.

Now you shew your selfe to be a right hereticke.

Haukes.

I pray you what is heresie?

Boner.

*All thinges that are contrary to Gods word.

Haukes.

If I stand in any thing contrary thereto, then am I worthy so to be called.

Boner.

Thou art one, and thou shalt be burned, if y^u stand and continue in this opinion. Ye thinke we are afrayd to put one of you to death: yes, yes there is a brotherhead of you, but I will breake it, I warrant you.

Haukes.

Where proue you that Christ or his Apostles dyd kill any man for his fayth?

Boner.

Did not Paule excommunicate?*

Haukes.

Yes my Lorde, but there is a great difference betweene excommunicating and burning.

Boner.

Haue ye not read of the man and the woman in the Actes of the Apostles, whome Peter destroyed?

Haukes.

Yes forsooth, I haue read of one Ananias, & Saphira his wife, which were destroyed for lying agaynst the holy Ghost, which serueth nothing your purpose.

Boner.

Well you will graunt one yet.*

Haukes.

Well if you will haue vs to graunt you be of god, then shew mercy for that God requireth.

Boner.

We will shew such mercy vnto you, as ye shewed vnto vs: for my benefice or bishopricke was taken away from me, so that I had not one penny to liue vpon.

Haukes.

I pray you my Lord, what do ye geue him nowe that was in the bishopricke or benefice before that ye came agayne to it? whereunto he aunswered me neuer a word: for he turned his backe vnto me, & talked with other men, saying that he was very sory for me, but he trusted that I would turne with S. Paul, because I was so earnest: and so he departed and went to dinner,* and I to the Porters lodge agayne.

After dinner I was called into the Hall agayne, and the Bishop desired the old bishop to take me into his chamber for I would be glad (sayd he) if ye tould conuert him. So he took me into his chamber, & sate him down in a chayre, and sayde to me: I woulde to God I coulde doe you some good. Ye are a young man, and I woulde not wishe you to go to farre, but learn of your elders to beare somewhat.

Haukes.

I will beare with nothing that is contrary to the word of God. And I looked that the olde Bishop shoulde haue made me an aunswere, and he was fast a sleepe.

Then I departed out of y^e chamber alone and went to the Porters lodge againe, and there saw I the old Bishop last: I suppose he is not yet awake.

Talke betweene Fecknam and Hawkes.*

THE next day came Fecknam vnto me and said: are ye he that will haue no ceremonies?

Haukes.

What meane you by that?

Fecknam.

Ye will not haue your childe christened, but in English, and you will haue no ceremonies.

Haukes.

What soeuer the scripture cōmaundeth to be done I refuse not.

Fecknam.

Ceremonies are to be vsed by the scriptures.*

Haukes.

Which be those?

Fecknam.

How say you by Paules breeches?

Haukes.

I haue read no such thing.

Fecknam.

Haue yee not read in the Actes of the Apostles, how thinges went from Paules body, and they receaued health thereby?

Haukes.

I haue read in the xix. of the Acts, how there went partlets and napkins from Paules bodye. Is it that that ye meane?*

Feck.

Yea the same is it: what say you to those ceremonies?

Haukes.

I say nothing to y^e ceremonies. For the text sayth,* that God did so worke by the handes of Paule, that there went partlets & napkins frō him. &c. So that it seemed by y^e text, that it was God that wrought & not y^e ceremonies.

Feck.

How say ye to the woman that came behinde Christ and touched the hemme of his vesture? did not her disease depart from her by that ceremony?

Haukes.

No forsooth: For Christ turned back and sayde to Peter: Who is it that touched me? and Peter sayd: Thou seest the people thrust thee: and askest thou who touched me? Some body hath touched me (sayth Christ) for vertue hath gone out of me. I praye you, whether was it the vertue that healed this woman, or his vesture?

Fecknam.

Both.

Haukes,

Then is not Christ true: for he sayd, Go thy way,*thy fayth hath made thee whole.

Boner.

Away, away to the sacrament, for these are but trifles to that.

Fecknam.

How say ye Syrha: Christ tooke bread, & brake it, and sayd: Take, eate, this is my body?

Haukes.

I graunt Christ sayd so.

Fecknam.

And is it not so?

Haukes.

No forsooth, I do not vnderstand it so.

Fecknam.

Why, then is Christ a lyer?

Haukes.

I thinke ye will so proue him.

Fecknam.

Will I? why,* I haue spoken the woordes that Christ spake.

Haukes.

Is euery worde to be vnderstand as Christ spake it? Christ said: I am a dore, a vyne, I am a king, a way. &c.

Feck.

Christ spake these wordes in parables.

Hau.

And why speaketh he this in parables, when hee sayd: I am a dore a vyne, a king, a way, &c. more then thys Page 1589 when he sayd: This is my body? For after the same phrase of speache, as hee sayth: This is my body: so sayth hee: I am a doore, a vine, a king, a way, he sayth not I am like a dore, lyke a vyne. &c.

Then Fecknam stoode vp and sayd: I had such a one before me this other day. Alas, these places serue nothyng for your purposes. But I perceiue ye hang and build on them that be at Oxford.

Haukes.

What meane you by that?

Fecknam.

I meane Latymer, Cranmer, and Rydley.

Haukes.

I know nothyng els by thē, but that they be both godly and learned.

Fecknam.

*wilt thou trust to such doltes? One of them hath written a booke, wherein he affirmeth a reall presence in the Sacrament.

Haukes.

What hee hath done, I know not, but what hee doth I know.

Fecknam.

Ridley hath preached at Paules Crosse openly, that the deuill beleueth better then you: for he beleueth that Christ is able of stones to make bread, and ye will not beleue that Christes body is in the Sacrament, and yet thou buildest thy fayth vpon them.

Haukes.

*I build my fayth vppon no man, and that shall ye well know: for if those men, and as many mo as they bee, should recant, and deny that they haue sayde or done, yet will I stand to it, and by this shall ye knowe that I build my fayth vpon no man.

Boner.

If any of those recant, what will ye say to it?

Haukes.

When they recant, I will make you aunswere.

Boner.

Then thou wilt say as thou doest now for all that.

Haukes.

Yea in deede wil I, & that trust to it, by gods grace

Boner.

*I dare say Cranmer would recant, so that he might haue his liuyng. And so the Byshop and Fecknam departed from me with great laughing, & I went agayne to the Porters lodge.

¶Talke betwene Haukes and Chadsey.

*The next day came Doct. Chadsey to the Byshop, and him. The Byshop declared vnto him that I hadde stande stubbornely in my defense agaynst the Christenyng of my childe, and against the ceremonies of the Church, and that I would not haue it Christened, but in English.

Then sayd Doct. Chadsey: then hee denyeth the order of the Catholicke Church.

Boner.

Yea, hee thinketh that there is no Churche but in England, and in Germany.

Haukes.

And yee thinke that there is no Churche but the Church of Rome.

Chad.

What say ye to the Church of Rome.

Haukes.

I say it is a church of a sort of vicious Cardinals. Priestes, * Monkes and Fryers, whiche I will neuer credite nor beleue.

Chad.

How say ye to the bishop of Rome?

Chad.

From him and all his detestable enormities good Lorde deliuer vs.

Chad.

Mary so may wee saye from king Henry the eight, and all his detestable enormities, good Lord deliuer vs.

Haukes.

Where were ye whiles that he liued, that ye would not say so?

Chad.

I was not farre.

Haukes.

Where were ye in his sonnes dayes.

Chad.

In prison.

Haukes

It was for your well doing.

Boner.

He will by no meanes come within my Chappell nor here Masse: for neither the Masse, neither the Sacrament of the aulter can hee abide, neither will he haue anye seruice but in English.*

Chad.

Christ neuer spake in English.

Haukes.

Neither spake he euer anye latine, but alwayes in such a tongue as the people might be edified thereby. And Paule sayth, that tongues profite vs nothing. He maketh a similitude betweene the pipe and the harpe, and except it be vnderstanded what the trumpet meaneth, who can prepare himselfe to the battell: so if I heare the tongue which I do not vnderstand, what profite haue I therby? no more then hee hath by the trumpet, that knoweth not what it meaneth.

Chad.

If ye vnderstand Paules saying, he speaketh it vnder a prophecie. If we prophecie to you in tongues. &c.

Haukes.

Forsooth Paule speaketh playnly of tongues: for tongues serue not for them that beleue.

Chad.

I tell you Paul speaketh altogether vpō prophecy.

Haukes.

Paule maketh a distinction betweene prophecyng & tongues, saying, That if anye man speake with tongues, let it be by two or three at the most, & let an other interprete it. But if there be no interpreter,*let them keepe silence in the congregation, and let himselfe pray vnto God: and then let the Prophetes speake two or three, and that by course, and let the other iudge: and if any reuelatiō be made to him that sitteth by, let the first holde his peace: so that it seemeth that Paule maketh a distinction betweene tongues and Prophecyng.

Boner.

The order was taken in the Catholicke Churche that y^e Latin tongue shuld serue through the whole world,* because that they should pray all generally together in one tongue, and that to auoyd all contention and strife, and to haue one vniuersall order through the whole worlde.

Haukes,

This did your Counsels of Rome conclude.

Boner.

Understande yee what the generall Councils of Rome ment?

Haukes.

In deede all your generall Councils of Rome be in Latin, and I am an English man:* therefore I haue nothing to do with them.

Chad.

Ye are to blame, being an vnlearned man to reprove all the Councils throughout all the whole world.

Haukes.

I reprotoe them not, but Paule rebuketh them, saying: If any man preach any other doctrine then that whiche I haue taught, do you hold him accursed.

Chad.

Hath any man preached any other doctrine to you?

Haukes.

Yea, I haue bene taught an other Gospel since I came into this house.*

Chad.

What Gospell haue ye bene taught?

Haukes.

Praying to Sayntes, and to our Lady, and trust in the Masse, holy bread, and holy water, and in Idols.

Chad.

He that teacheth you so, teacheth not amisse.

Haukes.

Cursed be hee that teacheth me so: for I will not trust him, nor beleue him.

Boner.

You speake of Idols, and yee knowe not what they meane.*

Haukes.

God hath taught vs what they be: for whatsoever is made, grauen, or deuised by mans hand, contrarie to Gods word, that same is an Idoll. What say you to that?

Chad.

What be those that ye are so offended withall?

Haukes.

The crosse of wood, siluer, copper, or gold. &c.*

Boner.

What say ye to that?

Haukes.

I say it is an Idoll. What say you to it?

Bone.

I say euery Idoll is an image,* but euery image is not an Idoll.

Haukes.

I say, what difference is there betweene an Idol and an Image?

Boner.

If it be a false God: & an Image made of him,* that is an Idoll: but if an Image be made of God himselfe, it is no Idoll, but an Image, because he is a true God.

Haukes.

Lay your Image of your true God and of youre false God together, and ye shall see the differēce. Haue not your Images feete and goe not, eyes and see not, eares & heare not, handes and feele not, mouthes and speake not? and euen so haue your Idols.

Chad.

God forbid, sayth S. Paule,* That I should reioyce in any thing els, but in the Crosse of Christ Iesus.

Haukes.

Do ye vnderstand Paule so? Doe ye vnderstand Paule? Unto the which he aunswered me neuer a word.

Boner.

Where can wee haue a godlyer remēbraunce when we ride by the way: then to see the Crosse.

Haukes.

If the Crosse were such profite vnto vs, why did not Christes Disciples take it vp: and set it on a pole, and cary it in procession with Salue festa dies?

Chad.

It was taken vp.

Haukes.

Who tooke it vp? Helene, as ye say: for shee sent a peece of it to a place of Religion, where I was with y^e visiters when that house was suppressed, and the peece of the holy crosse (which the religious had in such estimatiō,^{*} and had robbed many a soule, committing idolatry to it) was called for, and when it was proued, and all come to all, it was but a peece of a lath couered ouer with copper, double gilted as it had bene cleane gold.

Boner.

Fie, fie. I dare say thou slaunderest it.

Haukes.

I know it to be true, & do not beleue the cōtrary. And thus did the Bishop & the Doctour depart in a great fume: & Chadsay said vnto me, as he was about to depart: it is pitie y^t thou shouldest liue, or any such as thou art. I answered: in this case I desire not to liue, but rather to die

Chad.

Ye dye boldly, because ye would glory in your death as Ioane Butcher did.^{*}

Haukes.

What Ioan Butcher did, I haue nothing to doe withall: but I would my part might be to morow. GOD make you in a better minde, sayde they both, & so they departed, and I went to the Porters lodge with my keeper.

The next day Doct. Chedsey preached in the Boshops Chappell, & did not begin his sermon vntill all the seruice was done: and then came the porter for me, and sayd: my Lord would haue you come to the sermon, and so I went to the chappell dore, and stode without the dore.

Boner.

Is not this fellow come?

Haukes.

Yes I am here.

Boner.

Come in man.

Haukes.

No that I will not. He called againe, and aunswered: I will come no nearer, and so I stode at the dore. Then said the Bishop, go to your sermon.

Then Doctour Chadsey put the stole about his neck, and caried the holy water sprinckle vnto the Bishop,* who blessed him, and gaue him holye water, and so hee went to his sermon. The text that he entreated on, was the xvi. of Mathew. Whome do men say that I the sonne of man am? Peter sayd: some say that thou art Helias, some saye that thou art Iohn Baptist, some say thou art one of the Prophetes. But whom say ye that I am? Then sayd Peter, thou art Christ the sonne of the euerliuyng God. Then left he the text there, & sayd? Whose sinnes soeuer ye binde: are boūd: which authoritie (sayd he) is left to the heades of the Church: as my Lord here is one, and so vnto all the rest that be vnderneath him. But the Church hath bene much kicked at sith the beginning: yet kicke the heretickes, spurne the heretickes neuer so much, the church doth stand and florishe. And then he went straight way to the sacrament, and sayd his minde on it, exalting it aboue the heauen, (as the most of thē doe) and so returned to hys place agayne, saying: whose sinnes ye do remit, are remitted and forgeuen:* and so he applyed it to the byshops & priestes to forgeue sinnes, and sayd, all that be of the Churche will come and receiue the same. And this he proued by S. Ioh. in the xi,* chapter, saying that Christ came to rayse Lazarus which when he was risen, was bound in bands: then sayd Christ to them that were in authoritie (who were his disciples:) go ye and lose him, lose him you. And this was y^e effect of his Sermon, applying all to them that they haue the same authoritie that christ spake of to his Apostles, and so ended his sermon, and they went to dinner.

An other communication betweene Thomas Haukes, and the Byshop.

ANd after dinner I was called into the chappel, where as were certayne of the Queenes seruants and other straungers,* whom I did know.

Boner.

Haukes how like you the sermon?

Haukes.

As I like all the rest of his doctrine?

Boner.

What? are ye not edified therby.

Haukes.

No surely.

Boner.

It was made onely because of you.

Haukes.

Why? then am I sory that ye had no mo hereticks here, as ye call them, I am sory, that ye haue bestowed so much labour on one, and so little regarded.

Boner.

Well, I will leaue you here, for I haue busines. I pray you talke with him: for if ye could do him good (sayd he) I would be glad.

This the Bishop spake to the Queenes men, who said vnto me: Alas what meane you to trouble your self about such matters, against the Queenes proceedinges.

Haukes.

Those matters haue I aunswered before thē that be in authoritie: and vnles I see you haue a further commission,* I will aunswere you nothing at all. Then sayd y^e bishops men (which were many) my Lord hath commaūded you to talke with them.

Haukes.

If my Lorde will talke with me himselfe, I will answere him. They cryed fagottes, burne him, hang him, to prison with him: it is pitie that he liueth, lay Irons vpon him: and with a great noyse they spake these woordes. Then in the midst of all the rage, I departed from them, and went to the porters lodge againe.

The next dayes talke.

THE next day, the Bishop called me into his chamber, & sayd: ye haue bene with mee a great while: & ye are neuer the better but worse and worse:* and therefore I will delay the time no longer, but send you to Newgate.

Haukes.

My Lord you ran do me no better pleasure.

Boner.

Why? would ye so fayne go to prison?

Haukes.

Truely I did looke for none other, when I came to your handes.

Boner.

Come on your wayes: ye shall see what I haue written. Then did he shew me certaine articles, and these are the contentes of them:*

Whether the Catholicke Church do teach and beleue y^t Christes reall presence doth remaine in the Sacrament or no, after the wordes of consecration: according to y^e words of S. Paule, which are these: Is not the bread which we break the partaking of the body of Christ, and the cup which we blesse, the partaking of the bloud of Christ? whiche if it were not so, Paule would neuer haue sayd it.

Haukes.

What your Church doth, I cannot tell: but I am sure that the holy Catholicke Church doth neither so take it, nor beleue it.

Boner.

Whether doth the Catholicke Church teach and beleue the Baptisme that now is vsed in the Church, or no?

Haukes.

I aunswered to it, as I did to y^e other question before. Then did the Byshop with much flattery counsell me to be perswaded, & to keepe me out of prison,* which I vtterly refused, and so we departed. And I supposed that the next day I should haue gone to prison, and so I had, saue for the Archdeacon of Canterbury, whose name is Harpsfield, whome the bishop had desired to talke with me, and began to perswade me concerning the Sacrament, & the ceremonies: and after much talke he sayd that the Sacrament of the aultar was the same body that was borne of y^e virgine Mary, which did hang vpon the Crosse.

Haukes.

He was vpon the crosse both aliue & dead: which of them was the Sacrament?*

Harps.

The Archdeacon aunswered, aliue.

Haukes.

How proue you that?

Harps.

Ye must beleue. Doth not S. Iohn say: He is already condemned, that beleueth not?

Haukes.

S. Iohn sayth: He that beleueeth not in the sonne of God, is already condemned: but he sayth not, he that beleueth not in the sacrament, is already condemned.

Harps.

There is no talke with you: for ye are both without fayth and learning, and therefore I will talke no more with you in scripture.

Haukes.

Thē ij. that stode by, bad me enter further in talke with him, and then said I vnto him: * why is the Roodeloft set betwixt the body of the Church, and the Chauncel?

Harps.

I cannot tell: for ye haue asked a question, which ye cannot assoyle your selfe.

Haukes.

Yes that I can: for this sayth one of your owne Doctours: that the body of the Church doth represent the Church militant: and the Chauncell the Church triumphant: and so because we cannot go from the Church militant to the Church triumphant, but that we must beare the crosse of Christ, this is the cause of the Roodeloft being betweene the body of the Church and the Chauncell.

Harps.

This is well and clarkely concluded.

Haukes.

As all the rest of your doctrine is: & so with many perswasions on his part we ended, and so departed: and I to the Porters lodge agayne.

¶An other dayes talke.

The next day in the morning, which was the first day of Iuly, the Bishop did call mee himselfe from the Porters lodge, commaunding me to make me ready to goe to prison, and to take such things with me,* as I had of mine owne. And I sayd, I do neither intend to bribe, neither to steale, God willing. Then he did write my warrant to the Keeper of the Gatehouse at Westminster, and deliuered it to Harpsfield, who with his owne man and one of the byshops mē brought me to prison, & deliuered the warrant & me both to y^e Keeper: & this was contayned in y^e warrant.

I will and commaund you,* that you receaue him who commeth named in this warrant, and that he be kept as a safe prisoner, and that no man speake with him, and that ye deliuer him to no man, except it be to the Councell, or to a Iustice: For he is a Sacramētary, and one that speaketh agaynst Baptisme, a seditious man, a perilous man to be abroad in these perilous dayes.

And thus was I receiued, & they departed.* And there I remayned. xiiij. dayes, & then the bishop sent two of his mē vnto me, saying: My Lord would be glad to know how ye do. I aunswered them, I doe like a poore prisoner. They sayd: My Lord would know whether ye be the same man that ye were when ye departed? I sayd, I am no chaungeling. They sayd, my Lord would be glad that ye should do well. I sayd: If my Lord wil me any good, I pray you desire him to suffer my frendes to come to me. So they sayde they would speake for me, but I heard no more of them.

This is the first examination of me Thomas Haukes being examined by Edmund Boner, then Bishop of Lōdon, and by his Chaplaines and Doctours at Fulham 4. miles from London, where I lay till I came to prison to Westminster: and after his two men had bene with me, I heard no more of hym, till the thyrd day of September.

¶Here followeth the second tyme of mine examinacion, the whiche was the thyrd day of September for the Bishop did send his men for me, to come to hys Pallace to London, and so my keeper and his men brought me to his place the same day.

The Bishop of Winchester, then beyng Chauncellour,* preached that day at Paules crosse, and the Byshop of London sayd to my Keeper, I thinke your man will not go to the sermon to day.

Haukes.

Yes my Lord, I pray you let me go: and that that Page 1591 is good, I will receiue, and y^e rest I will leaue behind me, and so I went. And when the sermon was done, I & my Keeper came to the Bishops house, and there we remayned till dinner was done: and after dinner the Bishop called for mee, and asked me if I were the same man that I was before.

Haukes.

I am no chaungeling nor none will be.

Boner.

Ye shall finde no chaungeling neither. And so hee returned into his chamber, and there he did write the side of a sheete of paper, and all that while I stood in the great chāber, & as many with me as might wel stand in the chāber. And as I stode, Doctour Smith came vnto me (who once recanted,* as it appeared in Print) saying y^t he woulde be glad to talke brotherly with me. I asked him what he was. Then sayd they that stode by, he is D. Smith. Then sayd I: are you he that did recant? And he sayd, it was no recantation, but a declaration.

Haukes.

Ye were best to term it wel, for your own honesty.

D. Smith.

Shall I terme it as it pleaseth you?

Haukes.

*To be short with you, I will knowe whether ye wil recant anye more or no, before that I talk w^t you, credite you or beleue you: and so I departed from him to the other side of y^e chāber. Then sayd the Bishops men & hys Chaplaynes, that my Lord commanded me to talke with him. Then they that stoode by, cryed with a great noyse: hang him, burne him: it is pittie that hee liueth, that disobeyeth my Lordes commaundement.

Then sayd one Miles Huggard? where prooue you y^e infantes were baptised?

Haukes.

Go teach all nations, baptising them in the name of the father, and of the sonne, and of the holy Ghost. Syr here is none excepted.

M. Hug.

What shall we go to teach children?

Haukes.

That word doth trouble you: it might be left out full well: it is to much for you to teach. Is not your name Miles Huggard?

M Hug.

So am I called.

Haukes.

Be you not a Hosier, and dwell in pudding lane?

M. Hug.

Yes that I am, and there I do dwell.

Haukes.

It would seeme so, for ye can better skill to eate a pudding and make a hose then in Scripture eyther to answeere or oppose.* With that hee was in great rage, and dyd chafe vp and downe. Then I desired that some mā would take some payne to walke the Gentleman, hee did fret so for anger. Then one that stode by mee, (who is parson of Hornechurch and Rumford in Essex) sayd: alas what doe you meane? a young man to be so stubburne? there semeth to much pride in you.

Haukes.

Are not ye the parson of Hornechurch?

Parson.

Yes that I am.

Haukes.

Did ye not set such a priest in your benefice?

Parson.

Yes for a shift.

Haukes.

Like will to like: such maister, suche man. For I know the Priest to be a very vile man,* as any could be. I asked the Parson what kinne he was to the weather cock of Paules? and he fell in a great laughter, with the rest of his companions. He sayd that I did rayle.

Then sayd an other that stode by vnto me: what booke haue you here? I aunswered the new testament. May I looke in it, sayd he? Yea that ye may sayd I. And so he looked in my booke, and sayde it was corrupt I aunswered him if the things contayned in it be true,* then are ye all false Prophetes. He said y^t he would appose me in the first word of y^e Testament, saying: here is a generatiō of christ. And Esay sayth, no man can tell his generation.

Haukes.

What meaneth Esay by that?

I would learne of you (sayd he.)

Haukes.

Ye would be angry if the scholler should teach the mayster: but if ye will haue me to teach you, I will tel you Esay as meaning.

Then sayd he, no man can tell the generation betwene the father and the sonne: but you (I dare saye) did knowe it before.

Haukes.

Why then Esay denieth not the generation.

Then sayd he, why is Christ called Christ?

Haukes.

Because he is a Messias.

Then said he, why is he called a Messias?

Haukes.

Because he was so prophecied by the Prophetes.

Then said he: why is your booke called a booke?

Haukes.

These wordes do breede more strife, then godly edifying.

Beware sayd he, that ye do not decline from the church for if ye do, you will proue your selfe an hereticke.

Haukes.

Euen as ye do call vs heretickes, that do encline to Christes Church,* from your Church: so are ye all false Prophetes, that do decline from Christes church, to your owne Church. And by this shall all men knowe you to be false Prophetes, if ye say, this sayth the Church, and wil not say, this sayth our Lord. And so he went his waye, as though he had a flea in his eare.

Then came an other and sayd vnto me,* he would talk with me, for he perceiued (as he sayde) that I was angry and out of pacience.

Haukes.

I will see your commission, or euer I talke wyth you, or with any man more. For I wist not how to be tyd of them: they came so thicke about me. For I sayde that I came to talke with my Lord, and not with any of them.

With that came the Bishoppe, bringing a letter in hys hand the which he had written in my name, & read it vnto me after this maner: I Tho. Haukes, do here confesse and declare before my said Ordinary Edmund Bishop of Lōdon, that the Masse is abhominable and detestable, & full of all superstition, and also as concerning the sacrament of the body and bloud of Christ (commonly called the sacrament of y^e aultar) that Christ is in no part therof, but onely in heauen: this I haue beleued, & this I do beleue &c.

Haukes.

Stop there my Lord: what I haue beleued, what haue you to doe withall? But what I doe beleue, to that stand I, and will.

Then he tooke his penne, & said that he would scrape it out for my pleasure, and so did to my thinking.

Then he went further with his writing, and sayde: I Thomas Haukes haue talked with my sayd Ordinary, & with certayne good, godly, and learned men. Notwithstāding I stand still in myne opinion.

Haukes.

Shall I graunt you to be good, godly, and learned men, and yet graunt my selfe to stand in a contrary opinion? No, I will not graunt you to be good, godly and learned men.

Boner.

Ye will graunt that ye haue talked with vs: the other I will put out for your pleasure. Then saide al his Doctours, if your Lordship be ruled by him, he will cause you to put out altogether: and then he read more vnto me. Here vnto this bill haue I set to my hand: and then he offered me the bill & his pene, and bad me set my hand to it.*

Haukes.

Ye get not my hand to any thing of your makyng or deuising.

Boner.

Wilt not thou set to thy hande? It shalbe to thy shame for the denying of it.

And then he called al his Doctours, and sayd he would haue euery mans hand to it that was in the chamber, & so he had of their hands to it, and said: he that wil not set his hand to it, I would he were hanged, and so saide all hys Chaplaines and Doctors with a great noyse.

Then the bishop thrust me on the breast with great anger, and sayd he would be euen with me and with all such proud knaues in Essex.*

Haukes.

Ye shall do no more thē God shal geue you leaue.

Boner.

This geare shall not be vnpunished, trust to it.

Haukes.

As for your cursinges, raylinges, and blaspheminges, I care not for them: for I knowe the mothes and wormes shall eat you, as they eate cloth or wooll.

Byshop.

I will be euen with you, when time shall come.

Haukes.

Ye may in your malice destroy a man: but when ye haue done, ye can not do so much as make a finger, and ye be meetly euen with some of vs already.

Boner.

If I do thee any wrong, take the lawe of me.

Haukes.

Salomon saith: Go not to lawe with a Iudge. For hee will iudge according to hys owne honour.

Boner.

Salomon sayth: Geue not a foole an aunswere.

Haukes.

What? do ye count me a foole?

Boner.

Yea be my trouth do I, and so doest thou me to: but God forgeue thee, * and so do I.

Hatkes.

Thought is free my Lord. Then tooke Boner the bill and read it agayne, and when he saw that he could not haue my hand to it, then he woulde haue had me to take it into my hand, and to geue it him agayne.

Haukes.

What needeth that ceremonye? Neither shall it come into my hand, hart, nor minde. Then he wrapt it vp, and put it in his bosome, and in a great anger went hys way, & called for his horse and went to horsebacke, for the same day hee rode in visitatiō into Essex: and so went I to prison, from whence I came, with my Keeper. And thys was the second time of my examination. Written by mee Thomas Haukes, who desireth all faithfull men and brethren, to pray vnto God to strengthen me in his truth vnto the end. Pray, pray, pray, gentle brethren pray.

The publicke examination of Thomas Haukes.

AFTER all these priuate conferences, perswasions, & long debatings had with Thomas Haukes in the byshops house, as hetherto haue bene declared, the Bishop seing no hope to winne him to his wicked wayes,* was fully set to proceede openly agaynst him after the ordinary course of his popish law. Wherupon T. Haukes shortly •fter was cited with the rest of his other fellowes, aboue specified, to Page 1592 wit•e, Thom. Tomkins. Ste. Knight, W. Pygot, Iohn Laurence, and W. Hunter, to appeare in the bishops Cōsisto•y, the 8. day of February, this present yeare, videl. 1555. Upon which appearaunce was laid against him, in lyke order,* as to the other, first the bill o• his confession, writte• with Boners hand, to the whiche bill ye heard before how the blessed seruaunt of God denyed to subscribe.

A•ter which bill of confession being read, and hee constantly standing to the said confession, the Bishop then assigned him with the other v. the next day folowing, which was the ix. of February, to appeare before him againe, to geue a resolute aunswere what they woulde sticke vnto. Wh•ch day being come, and these foresaid vi. prisoners being se•erally called before the Bishop, at the comming of Thomas Haukes,* the Bishop willed him to remember what was sayd to him yesterday, and nowe while he had time and space, to aduise with himselfe, what he would answe•e: for he stode vpon life and death. Well, quoth maister Haukes againe, I wil willingly receaue what soeuer shal be put vnto me.

Then were certayn other Interrogatories or Articles commensed agaynst him by the said Bishop (in like maner as to the other) to the number of foure: with an other bill also, which Boner brought out of his bosome containyng priuate matters against the sayd Thomas Haukes, which the bishop called heresies and errours, but we may better call them Christian verities. To the whiche matter being read, the said Haukes answered openly againe saying that it was true, and that he was glad it was so true, as it was: with moe woordes to the like effect. And this was on the forenoone, the ix. day of February.

In the after noone agayn the sayd Haukes appearing and hearing the •oresaid bill of his confession,* with the Articles and Interrogatories read vto him, with like constancie in answering again to the b•shop: My Lord (saide he) as you being my frend haue caused these my sayinges to be writtē: so do you cause them to be read: and yet I wil neuer go from them.

And then being exhorted by the Byshoppe with many fayre wordes, to returne againe to the bosome of the mother Church: * No my Lord (sayd he) that will I not: for if I had an hundreth bodies, I woulde suffer them all to be torne in peeces, rather then I will abiure or recant.

And so continuing still in the same song, notwithstanding that the Doctors and Lawyers were euer calling vppon him to come again to the vnitie of the Church he euer kept them of with this aunswere, * that he would neuer go from the beliefe he was in, so long as he liued. Wherupon Boner, at last read the sentence of death vppon him, & so was he cōdemned the same day with the residue of his fellowes which was the 9. of February.

Neuertheles his execution was prolonged, * and he remained in prison till the 10. day of Iune.

Then was he committed to the handes and charge of the Lord Rich, who being assisted with power sufficiēt of y^e worshipfull of the shyre, had the foresayd Tho. Haukes downe into Essex, with vi. other fellow prisoners (whose stories hereafter folow) there to suffer martirdōe, Haukes at Coxehall, the other seuerally in other seuerall places.

Thomas Haukes by the way vsed much exhortation to his frendes, and when soeuer oportunitie serued to talk with them, he would familiarly admonish them.

A little before his death certayne there were of his familiar acquayntaunce and frendes, * who frequenting hys company more familiarly, which seemed not a little to be confirmed both by the example of his constancie, & by hys talke: yet notwithstanding the same agayne being feared with the sharpenes of the punishment, which he was going to, priuely desired that in the midst of the flame hee would shewe them some token if he coulde, whereby they might be more certayn whether the payne of such burning were so greate, that a man might not therein keepe hys minde quiet and pacient. Which thing he promised them to do, and so secretly betwene them it was agreed, that if the rage of the payne were tollerable and might be suffered, then he should lift vp his handes aboue his head toward heauen before he gaue vp the ghost. *

Not long after, when the houre was come Thomas Haukes was leade awaye to the place apoynted for the slaughter, by the Lorde Rich & his assistaunce, who beyng now come vnto the stake, there mildly & patiently addressed himselfe to the fire, * hauing a straitte chayne cast about his middle, with no smal multitude of people on euery side compassing him about. Unto whome after he had spoken many thinges, but especially vnto the Lorde Rich, reasoning with him of the innocent bloud of Sayntes, at lēgth after his feruent prayers first made, and poured out vnto god, the fire was set vnto him.

¶The Martirdome of Thomas Haukes in Essex, at a Towne called Coxehall. Anno. 1555. Iune. 10.

In the which when he continued long, and when his speech was taken away by violence of the flame, his skin also drawn together, and his fingers consumed with the fire, so that now all men thought certainly he had bene Page 1593 gone, sodainely and contrary to all expectation, the blessed seruaunt of GOD, beyng myndefull of his promise afore made, reached vp his hands burning on a light fier (which was marueilous to behold) ouer his head to y^e liuing God, and with great reioysing,* as seemed, strooke or clapped thē three tymes together. At the sight whereof there followed such applause & outcry of the people, and especially of them which vnderstode the matter, that y^e like hath not cōmonly bene heard: And so the blessed Martyr of Christ, straight way sinckyng downe into the fire, gaue vp his spirite. An. 1555. Iune. 10. And thus haue you playnely and expresly described vnto you the whole story,* as well of the lyfe, as of the death of Thomas Haukes, a most constant & faythfull witnes of Christes holy Gospell.

¶Letters. ¶An Epistle to the Congregation by Thomas Haukes.

GRace, mercy, and peace, from God the father, and from our Lord Iesust Christ,* bee alway with you all (my deare brethren and sisterne in the Lord Iesus Christ) for euer: and his holy Spirite conduct and leade you all in all your doynge, that you may alwayes direct your deedes according to his holy word, that when he shall appeare to reward euery man according to their woorkes: ye may as obedient children be found watching, ready to enter into his euerlasting kingdome with your lamps burning, and when the Bridegrome shall shew himselfe, ye neede not to be ashamed of this life that God hath lent you, whiche is but trāsitory, vaine, and like vnto a vapour, that for a season appeareth and vanisheth away: so soone passeth away all our terrestriall honour, glory, and felicitie. For all fleshe (sayth the Prophet) is grasse, and all his glory, as the floure of the fiede, which for a season sheweth her beautie, and as soone as the Lord bloweth vpon it, it withereth awaye, and departeth. For in this transitory and daungerous wildernes,* we are as Pilgrimes and straungers, following the footesteps of Moses, among many vnspeakeable daungers, beholding nothing with our outward man, but all vaine vanities, and vexation of mind: subiect to hunger, colde, nakednesse, bondes, sickenes, losse, labours, banishment, in daunger of that dreadfull dragon, and his sinnefull seede, to be deuoured, tempted, and tormented, who ceaseth not behind euery bush to lay a baite, when we walke awry to haue his pleasure vpō vs, casting abroad his apples in al places, times, and seasons, to see if Adam will be allured and entised to leaue the liuing God & his most holy Commaundements whereby hee is assured of euerlasting life, promising the world at will, to all that will fall downe in all ages, & for a messe of potage, sel & set at naught, the euerlasting kingdome of heauen. So frayle is flesh and bloud: And in especiall Israell is most ready to walke awry, when he is filled wyth al maner of riches ((as sayth the Prophet.)

Therefore I am bolde in bondes (as entirely desiring your euerlasting health & felicitie) to warne you, and most hartely desire you to watch and pray: for our estate is dangerous,* and requireth continuall prayer. For on the hygh mountaynes doth not grow most plenty of grasse, neither are the highest trees farthest from daunger, but seldome sure, & alwaies shaken of euery wind that bloweth. Such a deceitfull thing (saith our sauior) is honor and riches, y^t without grace it choketh vp the good seede sowne on hys creatures, & blindeth so their seeing, that they go gropyng at none day in darckenes: it maketh a man thinck himselfe somewhat, y^t is nothing at all. For though for our honour we esteeme our selues & stand in our owne light,* yet when we shall stand before the liuing God, there shalbe no respect of persons. For riches helpeth not in the day of vengeance: neither can we make the Lord partiall for money. But as ye haue ministred vnto the Saintes, so shall ye receiue y^e reward, which I am fully persuaded & assured shal be plenteously poured vppon you all, for y^e great goodnes shewed vnto the seruants of the liuing God. And I most hartely beseeche almighty God to poure forth a plenteous reward vpon you for y^e same, & that he wil assist you wyth his holy spirite in al your doings, that ye may growe (as you haue begon) vnto such a perfection as may be to gods honour, your owne saluation, and the strengthning of the weake members of christ.* For though the world rage, and blaspheme the elect of God, ye knowe that it did so vnto Christ, his Apostles, and to all that were in the primitiue Church, and shalbe vnto the worldes end.

Therefore beleue in the light, while ye haue it, least it be taken away from you: If you shall seeme to neglect the great mercy of God that hath bene opened vnto you, and your harts cōsented vnto it y^t it is the very and onely truth pronōuced by Gods onely sonne Iesus Christ, by the good will of our heauenly father. Therefore I say in the bowels of my Lord Iesus Christ, sticke fast vnto it: let it neuer departe out of your harts and couersation, that you with vs and we with you, at the great day being one flocke, as we haue one shepheard, may rise to the life immortall, through Iesus Christ our onely Sauour, Amen.

¶Yours in him that liueth for euer. Thomas Haukes.

Here followeth an other letter of Tho. Haukes sent to his wife after his condemnation, being prisoner in Newgate: the copy wherof is this.

¶The copy of Thomas Haukes letter to his wife.

GRace be with you, and peace from God the father,* and from our Lord Iesus Christ, which gaue himselfe for our sinnes, to deliuer vs from this present euill worlde, through the good will of God our father, to whō be praise for euer and euer. Amen.

My deare Yokefellow in the Lord, for as much as the Lord hath not onely called me to worke in his vineyarde but hath also fulfilled his good worke in me (I trust to his glory, & to the comfort of al those y^t looke for his comming) I thought it my duety (deare yokefellowe) to write vnto you some lessons out of Gods booke: and if you will direct your selfe therafter, doubt not of it, but God, who refuseth none that will come to him with theyr whole hart, will assist you with his holy spirit, and direct you in al his wayes, to his honour, and glory, who graūt it for his mer|cies sake. Amen.

First I exhort you to feare God,* to serue and honor his holye name, loue hym with all your hart, soule, and minde to beleue faithfully al his promises, to lay sure hold vpon them, that in al your troubles what so euer they are ye may runne straight to the great mercye of God, and hee will bring you forth of them, keepe you within hys wings then shall ye be sure that neither deuill, flesh, nor hell shall be able to hurt you.

But take heede: If ye wil not keepe his holy preceptes and lawes, and to the vttermost of your power, cal for the help of God to walke in the same, but will leaue them and runne to all abominations with the wicked world, & doe as they do, then be sure to haue your part with the wicked world in the burning lake that neuer shall bee quenched.* Therefore beware of Idolatrye, whiche doth most of all stincke before the face of almighty God, and was of al good men most detested from the beginning of the worlde. For the which, what kingdomes, nations, and realmes God hath punished with most terrible plagues, w^t fire,* brymstone, hunger, sword, and pestilence. &c. to the vtter subuersion of them, it is manifestly to be seene through the whole Byble. Yea his owne peculiar people, whome he had done so much for, when they fell from him, and went & serued other Gods, contrary to his commaundement, he vtterly destroyed, and rooted them out from of the earth: and as many as dyed in that damnable state (not repenting their abhominable euill) he threw them into y^e pit of hell. Again how he hath preserued those that abhorre superstition and Idolatry, and that haue onely taken hold vpon God with their whole hart, to serue him, & to loue him, to feare him, &c. it is most manifestly to be seene euen frō the beginning, out of what great daungers he hath euer deliuered them: yea whē al hope of deliuerāce was past as touchyng their expectation, euen then in y^e sight of all his enemies would he work his godly will and purpose, to the vtter amazing and destructiō of all those that were his manifest enemies.

Further I exhort you in the bowels of Christ,* that you will exercise and be steadfast in prayer: for prayer is y^e onely meane to pearce the heauens to obtayne at the hand of God, what soeuer we desire, so y^t it be asked in fayth. Oh what notable thinges do we read in Scriptures that hath bene obtayned through feruent praier? We are commaunded to call vpon him for helpe, ayde and succour in necessities & troubles, & he hath promised to help vs. Again they that will not cal vpon him, with thes whole hart, but vpon other dead creatures, in whō there is no help (for there was none found worthy to open the booke, but onely the Lambe Christ whiche was killed for our sinnes) I saye who that wil refuse his help, must euen by y^e terrible iudgment of God, come vtterly to confusion: as it hath, and is dayly manifest to be seene. And whatsoever you desire of God in your prayer, aske it for Iesus Christes sake,* for whom & in whō God hath promised to geue vs all things necessary. And though that which ye aske, come not by and by at y^e first and second calling, yet continue still knocking and hee will at the length open his trasures of mercye▪ so Page 1594 that ye shalbe sure to obtaine: for he hath so promised if ye continue in faith, hoping surely in him. These former lessons, w^t all such instructiōs as I haue told you by mouth, I do wish that ye would most earnestly learne: and then I doubt not, but God, who is the geuer of all grace, wyll assist you in all your doings, that ye may be found worthy of his kingdome, which is prepared through Christ.

*Further, where it hath pleased God to send vs childrē, my desire is that they may bee brought vp in the feare of God, and in his lawes. And this is to certifie you, that ye deliuer in any wise my eldest sonne vnto M. Throgmorton, who vpō his good wil hath promised me to bring him vp according to my desire, and (I trust) as God hath put into his hart. See therefore that ye deliuer him in any wyse without delay: and as for the other, if ye shall seeme to be burdened with him (which I thinke nature will not suffer) my desire is that it be brought vp in the feare of God to the vttermost of your endeouour, with some honest man that hath the feare of God before his eies, and let vs geue thanks vnto God which hath giuen them vs, beseechyng hym that they may be counted worthy to be of that flocke that shall stand on the right hand of the Maiestie of God, when he shall iudge the world. Amen.

Yet once againe I warne you, that ye continue in feruent prayer, as I sayd before: then shall ye be sure, y^t God euen of his owne mercy, according as he hath promysed, will be an husband vnto you, & prouide better for you thē I was euer able to do: yea, he wil cause all men that feare him, to pitie you, to helpe you, succour you in all your necessities, so that if any will do you wrong, he wil be ad•enged on hym. Moreouer, I wish you to keepe company w^t those,* of whome yee may learne to come to a more perfect knowlege in God, and I doubt not but God will prouide that such will bee glad to receiue you, if you shall professe and go forward in his truth.

Finally, and to make an end, I desire you that ye take heed with whom ye couple your selfe. See that he be a mā that feareth God,* loueth his lawes, and will walke in the same to the vttermost of hys power: such a one as can be content to loue you & to care for you. Take heede he be no brawler, no drunkard, no wicked person, not giuen to filthines, no worldling, no dicer nor carder. In fine, no filthy person, but chuse you such a one as God may be glorified in both your liues. And again on your part, loue him, serue him, obey him in all godlines, as long as God shall geue you life in this world. Then shall ye both be sure to obtaine that kingdome which God the father hath prepared, and Iesus Christ obtayned for you, that neuer shall haue end, where I trust to abide your comming. Amen.

By your husband Tho. Haukes.

Ye heard before in the letter of Tho. Haukes written to his wyfe, mention made concerning his eldest sonne to be sent to M. Throgmorton. Now what he writeth hymselfe to the said M. Throgmorton touching the same matter, by this his letter to the said party here vnder ensuyng, may appeare.

¶A letter of Thomas Haukes to M. Clement Throgmorton.

*GRace, mercy, and peace from God the father, and from our Lord Iesus Christ, be with you, & assist you in al your thoughts words, and works, that he in all things as most woorthy, may be glorified, and that the blessing of Abraham may be poured plenteously on you and all your posteritie.

Where as the loue of God hath mooued you to require my sonne to be brought vp before your eyes, & the selfe same loue hath also mooued me in like case to leaue hym in your hands, as vnto a father in myne absence, I shall require you in Gods behalf according to your promise, that ye will see hym brought vp in the feare of the Lord, and instructed in the knowledge of his holy word, that he may thereby learne to leaue the euill and know the good, and alwayes be pricked forward with fatherly instructions to folow my footsteps, that as almighty God hath made me worthy through his speciall grace to worke his will in obedience, he may learne to follow me his father in the like, to gods honor and prayse: And this I require you in Gods behalfe to fulfill or cause to be fulfilled, as ye before the liuing God will make aunswer for the same. I haue left for the child certaine bookes which shall be deliuered vnto you, wherein his instruction and saluation lieth, if he learne and practise the same. And thus, most humbly beseeching you once agayne, to be as good vnto him as your promise was to me, that is, to be a father, & a wall of defence vnto hym in all troubles, I leaue him in your hand through the Lord Iesu, and desire him to blesse both him & you according to his good promise: & all that good which ye shal do vnto him, I shal most hartily desire the euerlasting God to recompence vnto you in hys kingdome, where I hope to meete both him and you among all Gods elect. To which God be all praise, honor and glory. Amen.

Yours and all mens in Christ Iesu, Tho. Haukes.

¶The history of Thomas VVattes, examined, tried, and burnt for the truth of the Gospell.

THomas Wattes of Billerica,* within the county of Essex, and of the Dioces of London, was by his occupation a linnen Draper, who before he was apprehēded, had sold and made away his cloth in his shop, and disposed his things being set in order to his wyfe and children, & gaue away much of his cloth vnto the poore.* For he looked always to be taken by gods aduersaries and his, as shortly after came in deed to passe: so that vpon the 26. day of April, he was apprehended and brought before the L. Rich, and other Commissioners at Chelmesford, and the•e beyng accused for not commyng to the church, was vpon the same examined before the L. Rich, Henry Tyrel, Sir Anthony Browne, Edmund Tyrell, Tho. Mildman, Iohn Wiseman, Rog. Appleton, Rich. Weston, Iustice Gaudy. &c. The summe and principall effect of which examination here vnder followeth briefly expressed ¶The examination of Tho. VVattes, before the Lord Rich and others.

WHen this Tho. Wattes came before the L. Rich and other the Iustices,* whose names are specified in the letter followyng (which they sent vnto the B. of London agaynst him) at the sessions at Chelmesford, the Lord Rich sayd these words or the lyke in effect vnto hym.

Wattes, ye be brought hither (as I vnderstand) because of disobedience to the Kyng and Queens lawes. Ye will not come to the Church, ye will not heare Masse, &c. but haue your conuenticles a sort of you in corners, contrary to the K. and Queenes proceedings. Unto whiche hys words Wattes answered and sayd.

My L. if I haue offended a lawe,* I am subiect here to the lawe. Then Anth. Browne Iustice, sayd vnto hym: Wats, I pray thee tell me who hath bene thy schoole maister, to teach thee this geare,* or where didst thou first learn this religion? Forsooth (quoth Wattes) euen of you Sir: you taught it me, and none more then you. For in K. Edwards dayes in open sessions you spake against this Religion now vsed, no preacher more. You then sayd, y^e masse was abhominable, & all their trumpery besides, wishing and earnestly exhorting that none should beleeeue therin, & that our beliefe should be onely in Christ: and you said thē whosoeuer should bryng in any strange natiō to rule here it were treason, and not to be suffred.

Then said Browne to my Lord Rich, he belies me my Lord. What a knaue is this? he wil soone belye me behind my backe, when he doth it before my face, and my L. Rich sayd againe, I dare say he doth so.

After these wordes, Wattes tooke occasion to speake somewhat of King Phillip and of hys commyng in, but what it was, I coulde not iustly learne. But this muche was heard, that after those wordes spoken, the Benche among themselues stood vp, and sayd one to another: treason, sayng one good man called Iustice Gawdy,* who a little before was about to speake: but when he heard them cry treason, he helde downe his head as one grieued and troubled at their doyngs.

In conclusion, the Commissioners being wery of him or els not willing to meddle further in such high matters, sent him vp to the B. of London, with their letter withal, importing the cause of his sending vp as by the contentes thereof here vnder followeth to be seene.

¶A letter sent by certaine Iustices in Essex to Boner B. of London.

AFTER our most hartly cōmendations to your good lordship, these shall be to aduertise you,* that at our Sessions of Oyer & Terminer holden at Chelmesford the 26. day of April last past, there came before vs in open Courte one Thomas Wattes of Billerica within your dioces, by ordinary proces, and then and there being examined why he refused to come to his parish Church, and there to receiue the sacrament of the aultar and heare diuine seruice, according to the institution of holy church, he openly there answered generally that like as the seruice of the Church set out in the dayes of late King Edward the 6. was sayd by vs now to be abominable, hereticall, schismaticall,* & all naught, so he sayd that all that is nowe vsed & done in the Church is abhominable, hereticall, schismaticall, and all naught, with diuers other erroneous & arrogant words: and therefore we haue thought good to send hym to your Page 1595 Lordship, to be further examined by you of his perticular opinions, as to your pastorall office shall seeme conuenient, certifieng you further, that in our opinion he is one of the most arrogant heretikes that hath bene heard speake, or euer came before you, & not meet to be kept here in any Gaole, as well for feare of corrupting others, as for diuers & sundry other speciall causes hereafter to be more declared. Thus leauing to molest your good Lordship, we commit you to the holy ghost.

Geuen at Chelmesford the 27. of Aprill. An. 1555.

Your good Lordships most assured,

- R. Rich.
- Henry Tirrell.
- *Anthony Browne.
- Edmund Tirrell.
- T. Myldman.
- Iohn Wiseman.
- Rog. Appleton.
- Rich. Weston.

Now when the B. had receiued him, how he vsed him 〈◇〉 is easie (by his common practises with others) to iudge. What his priuate conferēces were, I know not, but what was publicly done in the Consistory at Paules (the common stage for these tragedies) you shall here see.

The first appearance of Thomas Wattes in the bishops Consistorie.

Ffirst vppon Thursday, beyng the second day of May, Thomas Wattes was brought thether before the Bishop of London,* & there being examined vpon his words had before the L. Rich and others (as is conteined in their letters) he did earnestly affirme the same to be true. Wherupon the Bishop objected, and examined him vpon these Articles following, to the which he aunswered, as vnder may appeare.

¶Articles objected agaynst Thomas Wattes of Byllerica in the Countie of Essex, within the Diocesse of London, by Boner Bish. there, as ensueth.

1. Ffirst that the said Tho. Wattes was of Billerica, & so of the iurisdiction of the B. of London.*
2. Item, that he beleueed not in the Sacraments of the the holy and Catholike church, as the Catholike church of Rome, and all other Churches members of the same, euer hetherto hath beleued, & is taught of al good & faithful people, nor hath allowed the said sacraments, rites, vsages, or ceremonies of the said church,* but hath despised the same.
3. Item, that he beleueeth, & also hath taught others, that the substaunce of materiall bread and wyne do remaine in the Sacrament of the aultar after the consecration,* & that the sayd materiall bread and wyne are the signes & tokens of Christes body hanged vpon the crosse, and of hys bloud there shed, and that in the sayd Sacrament there is only a memory or remembraunce of Christes body & bloud, and nothyng els.
4. Item, that he beleueth, and doth precisely affirme, that the very true presence of Christes body and bloud in substaunce,* is not in the Sacrament of the aultar, but only in heauen, and no where els.
5. Item, that he beleueeth, affirmeth, and sayth, that the Masse now vsed in the church of Rome here in England, and other places is full of Idolatry,* abomination & wickednes, and that Christ did neuer institute it, nor ordayne it, nor yet allow it as a good and laudable thyng to be vsed in his Church.
6. Item, that he beleueeth and affirmeth that auricular confession to be made vnto the Priest, is not necessary, but superfluous: and that it is enough for a man to beleue onely, & to confesse hymselfe vnto God, without any priest or minister at any tyme, though he may haue the Priest to confesse hym vnto.
7. Item, that he beleueth that Luther, Wickliffe, Doctor Barnes,* and all others that haue holden against the Sacrament of the aultar, & suffred death by fire or otherwise, for the maintenaunce of the said opinion, were good men, and faithfull seruauents and Martyrs of Christ, in so beleeuynge and dieng.
8. Item, that he hath and doth beleue, that to fast, pray, or to do almes deeds,* is a thyng vtterly vnprofitable: for if a man shal be saued, he shalbe saued without doing of them: and if he shall be damned, they shall not helpe him, or doe hym any good at all.

9. Item, that the said Wattes of late comming into open Court at the Sessions before the Lord Riche, Sir Henry Tirell Knight, Anthony Browne Esquier, and others, & beyng then and there examined,* did openly confesse, that hee had refused to come to the Church, and to heare there the diuine seruice, and to receiue the sacrament of the aultar, according to the order of the Church: because that like as the seruice of the Church set out in the dayes of the late king Edward the 6. was said and alledged to be abhominable, hereticall, schismaticall, and all naught: so hee the said Thomas Wattes thē and there said openly before the said Commissioners, that all that is now vsed and done in the Church, is abhominable, hereticall, schismaticall, and altogether naught: And that he did also then vtter before the sayd Commissioners, other erroneous and arrogant words, to the hurt of his soule, and to the euill example of the people there present.

10 Item,* that he the said Thomas by reason of the premisses, was and is to be takē, had, reputed, and iudged as a manifest & open heretike, and for the same, by the order of ecclesiasticall lawes is to be declared, accursed: and beyng obstinate and incorrigible, is to be deliuered to the secular power, there to be punished as an heretike.

11 Item, that he ouer and besides all these offences, and trespasses aforesaid, had also added this trespassed, that is to wit: that he had beleued and deliberately spoken,* that the Church of Rome in her rites, ceremonies, Sacramentes, constitutions, and traditions, is the Synagoge of Satan, and therefore that he had consented and agreed in opinion & beliefe, with one Iohn Tooly, of late hanged at Charing crosse, who at the tyme of his executing, desired the people to pray, to be deliuered from the tyranny of the Bishop of Rome, with all his enormities: as who should say, that his authoritie and doings were tyranny, and had all enormities and iniquities in them.

12 Item, that the premisses and euery part thereof, bee true, notorious, manifest, and openly spoken, & talked of amongst the honest & credible persons in great multitude, and that of all & singular the same within Billerica aforesayd, and other places there about, beyng of the diocesse of London, there is a common voyce and fame thereof.

TO the first he sayd and confessed the same to bee true in euery part thereof.*

To the 2. Article he answered that he beleueth in al the Sacraments according to Christes institution, & the Catholike church: but not according to the Bish. of Romes church: and further said, that he doth not beleue now as he had done in tymes past: for in tyme past he beleueed as the church then beleueed, but now he doth not so beleue: for the church of Rome had deceiued vs, and therefore hee sayd he did not beleue as the church of Rome beleueth, but as Christ hath taught him: And further said,* that hee was so taught to beleue by preachyng of one M. Aluey, & other whose names he remembred not: which Aluey he said did preach the word of God truly and sincerely.

To the 3. he aunswered, that he hath and doth beleue, that Christes body is in heauen, and no where els: & further, that he will neuer beleue that Christes body is in the Sacrament.

To the 4. he aunswered, confessing and firmly beleueing the same to be true.

To the 5. that he did beleue, that the Masse is abhominable, and that he will not go one iot from that his belief.

To the 6. that he neither did, nor yet doth beleue that the priest can absolue him of his sinnes: howbeit, he denieth not but it is good to aske counsell at the priests mouth.

To the 7. he sayd, that he knoweth not what the opinions of the sayd persons named in the sayd article were: and in case the said persones did beleue that the body and bloud of Christ were reall and in very deed in the Sacrament of the altar, then that they were not good men. But in case they did beleue that the body & bloud of Christ was not in the Sacrament of the aultar really and truely, then he beleued that they were good christian men.

To the 8. that he had not spokē as is conteined in this article, but said, that he hath and doth beleue that fastyng, prayers and almes deeds be works of a liuely faith.

To the 9. he confessed, that he did vtter and speake, as in this article is conteyned, and further desired God that he might dye in that fayth and beliefe, wherein he now is.

To the x. he answered and said, that he wil submit him selfe herein to the order of the law: and further said that he trusteth that with God he shall be blessed, although wyth men he be accursed.

To the xi. he sayd,* that he beleued that the B. of Rome is a mortall enemy to Christ and hys Church. And as for Tooly he sayd, he dyd neuer see or know hym: but in case the sayd Tooly dyd wish and pray as is conteyned in the Article, then he dyd likewyse wish and consent with hym therein.

Page 1596To the 12. he answered, that al which before he confessed to be true, is also true: and all that he hath denied to be true, he denieth againe to be true, and beleueth the same to be according to such things as he hath confessed.

By me Tho. Wattes.

An other appearance of Thomas Wattes in the Consistorie.

THEse Articles thus propounded and answeared, the bishop commaunded him to appeare again in the same place at 3. of the clocke in the after noone,* vppon the same day. At which houre being brought thither by his keeper, the Bishop beganne with him in this wise: Wattes, you know what I said vnto you to day, and what I appoynted vnto you at this time. The time is nowe come: waigh and consider with your selfe, that you are but a man: and allbeit that yee will wilfully cast away your body, yet cast not so away your soule, but while yee haue time, retourne and confesse the truth.

*Whereunto Thomas Wattes answered and sayde: I am weary to liue in such idolatry as ye would haue me to l•ue in. Upon which aunswere the bishop caused his articles againe to be read. He thereto answered as before, and farther subscribed the same with his owne hand.

An other appearance before D. Harpsfield.

The bishop, after many perswasions to cause him to recant, willed him to depart as then, and to come againe on Saturday at 8. of the clocke in the morning.* Where (the Bishop being absent) D. Nicholas Harpesfielde, as then being his deputie, did sit and earnestly exhorted him to deny his opinions. To whome in the ende he answered.

Wel, ye haue a law to condemne me, and I submit my selfe to the law: but not to the lawes of the Church (as you call it.) And farther I doe affirme, and will stande to mine answeres that I haue made.

Wherupon D. Harpsfield willed him to appeare there againe vpon friday, being the 10. day of the same month of May. Uppon which day the bishop priuately sent for the sayd Thomas Wattes into his chamber, and there wyth many faire promises, tempted and tried him, whether hee would reuoke hys errorrs (as he then termed them.) But Wattes answered hym in this sorte: I will not beleue your Church, neither the Romish Church, and therefore you doe but labour in vaine thus to trauaile with me. He was here vpon againe dismissed for that time,* vntil friday the 17. day of May, and then commaunded to appeare in the Consistorie: whych commandement he obeyed, & hauing the accustomed former Articles ministred vnto him, made then such answeres as before.

Thus being tost to and fro, from day to day, and houre to houre: he was at the last, the 18. day of the month of May,* brought into the consistorie, where firste was made a brieue recitall of all the former processe: and there the sayd Wattes being (by the byshop and others) willed to deny his profession, made this final answer: God kepe me from the doctrine that ye wold haue me to come vnto, which ye haue now declared. And I beseech God y^t I may perseuer in that that I haue done, for I wil stand to mine answeres.

The Byshop perceiuing his faire flattering promises nothing to preuaile (& hauing no great store of other reasons to perswade with) put forth his last and strongest argument of condemnation.* Which being ended, he was deliuered to the sheriffes of London, & by them was sent to Newgate, where he remained vntil the 9. day of Iune, or as some record, to the 22. of May: at what time he was caried vnto Chelmesforde, and there was brought to Scots house, keeping then an Inne at Chelmesforde, where, as they were eating meat with Hauks and the rest that came downe to their burning, they prayed together both afore and after their meate.

Then Wats went and praied priuately to himself, and afterward came to his wife and his 6. childrē being there, and said these words in effect: Wife, and my good children, I must now depart from you.* Therefore hence forth know I you no more, but as the Lord hath geuen you vnto me, so I geue you againe vnto the Lord, whom I charge you see you do obey, and feare him: and beware yee turne not to this abhominable papistrie, against the which I shall anone (by Gods grace) geue my bloude. Let not the murthering of Gods Saintes cause you to relent, but take occasion thereby to be the stronger in the Lords quarel, and I doubt not but he wil be a mercifull father vnto you. All these and suche like woordes spake he vnto them, and they vnto him, of whome two (as it is sayd) offered to be burnt wyth him. In the ende he badde them farewell, and kissed them all, and was caried to the fire.

The burning of Thomas Wattes, Martyr.

At the stake, after he had kissed it, he spake to my Lord Rich, these or the like words: My Lord sayth he, beware,* beware, for you doe against your owne conscience herein, and without you repent, the Lord wil reuenge it: For you are the cause of this my death.

Concerning the childebed of Queene Mary, as it was rumoured among the people.

Long perswasion had bene in England with great expectation, for the space of halfe a yeare or more,* that the Queene was conceiued w^t childe. This report was made by the Queenes Phisitions, & other nie about the Court: so that diuers were punished for saying the contrary. And commaundement was geuen, that in all churches supplication and prayers should be made for the Queenes good deliuerie: the certificate whereof ye may read before in the letter of the Counsel sent to Boner, pag. 1405. And also the same moreouer may appeare by prouision made before in the Act of Parliament for the childe. pag. 1410.

And now for somuch as in y^e beginning of this month of Iune about Whitsontide,* the time was thought to be nie, that this young Maister should come into the world, and that midwiues, rockers, nurses, with the cradle & all, were prepared and in a readines, sodēly vpon what cause or occasion it is vncertaine, a certaine vaine rumour was blowne in London of the prosperous deliuerance of the Queene, and the birth of the childe: In so muche that the Bels were rong, Bonfiers and processions made, not only in the Citie of London,* and in most other partes of the realme, but also in the towne of Antwarpe, gunnes were shot off vpon the riuer, by the English shippes, and the Mariners thereof rewarded wyth an hundred pistolettes or Italian crownes by the Ladie Regent, who was the Queene of Hungarie.* Such great reioysing and triumph was for the Queenes deliuerie, & that there was a Prince borne. Yea, diuers Preachers, namely one, the Parson of S. Anne within Aldergate, after Procession and Te Deum song, tooke vpon him to describe the proportion of y^e child, how faire, howe beautifull, and great a Prince it was, as the like had not bene seene.

In the midst of this great adoe, there was a simple man (this I speake but vpon information) dwelling wⁱn 4. miles of Barwicke, that neuer had bene before halfe way to London, whiche sayde concerning the Bonfiers made for Queene Maries childe: Here is a ioyful triūph, but at length al wil not proue worth a messe of potage,* as in dede it came to passe: For in y^e end al proued clean cōtrary, & the ioy and expectations of mē were much deceiued. For the people were certified, y^t the Queene neither was as then deliuered, nor after was in hope to haue any child.

Page 1597At thys time many talked diuersly: some sayd thys rumour of the Queenes conception was spread for a po•icie: some other affirmed that shee was deceiued by a Tympanie or some other like disease, to thinke her selfe with child, and was not:* some thought she was with childe, and that it did by some chaunce miscarie, or els that she was bewitched: but what was the truth therof, the Lord knoweth, to whome nothing is secrete. One thing of mine owne hearing, and seeing I can not passe ouer vnwitnessed.

There came to me, whom I did both heare and see, one Isabell Malt, a woman dwellyng in Aldersgate streete in Horne alley, not farre from the house where this present booke was Printed, who before witnes made this declaration vnto vs, that she beyng deliuered of a māchild vpō Whitsonday in the mornyng, whiche was the xi. day of Iune. an. 1555. there came to her the Lord North, and an other Lord to her vnknowē, dwellyng thē about old Fish streete, demaūdyng of her if she would part with her child, and would sweare that she neuer knewe nor had no such child. Whiche if she would, her sonne (they sayd) should be well prouided for, she should take no care for it, with many fayre offers if she would part with the child.

After that came other womē also, of whō one she sayd should haue bene the Rocker, but she in no wise would let go her sonne, who at y^e writyng hereof being aliue & called Timothe Malt, was of the age of xiiij. yeares & vpward.

*Thus much (I say) I heard of the woman her selfe. What credite is to bee geuen to her relation, I deale not withall, but leaue it to the libertie of the Reader, to beleue it they that list: to them that list not, I haue no further warrant to assure them.

*Among many other great preparations made for the Queenes deliuerance of childe, there was a cradle very sumptuously and gorgeously trimmed, vppon the whiche cradle for the child appointed, these Uerses were written, both in Latin and English.

Quam Mariae sobolem Deus optime summe dedisti,

Anglis inc•lumem redde, tuere, rege.

The Child which thou to Mary, O Lord of might hast send. To Englandes ioy in health preserue,* keepe and defend.

About this tyme there came ouer into England a certaine English booke, geuing warnyng to English men of the Spanyardes, and disclosing certaine close practises for recouery of Abbay landes, which booke was called A warnyng for England. Whereof ye shall vnderstand more (God willyng) when we come to the Spanish Inquisition. So that by the occasion of this booke, vppon the xiiij. day of this moneth came out a certaine Proclamation, set forth in the name of the Kyng and Queene, repealyng & disanullyng all maner of bookes writtē or Printed, whatsoever should touche any thyng the impayryng of the Popes dignitie, whereby not onely much godly edification was hyndred: but also great perill grew among the people. The copy of which Proclamation here foloweth.

A Proclamation set out by the King and Queene for the restraining of all bookes and wrytings tending againg the doctrine of the Pope and his Church.

WHere as by the Statute made in the seconde yeare of king Henrie the fourth concerning the repressing of heresies, there is ordained and prouided a great punishment, not only for the authours, makers, and wryters of bookes containing wicked doctrine and erroneous and hereticall opinions contrary to the Catholicke faith, and determination of the holy Church, & likewise for their fautors & supporters, but also for such as shal haue or keepe any suche bookes or wrytings, and not make deliuerie of them to the Ordinarie of the Diocesse or his Ministers, wyth in a certaine time limited in the sayd Statute, which Acte or Statute being by authoritie of Parliament of late reuiued,* was also openly proclaimed, to the intent the subiectes of the realme vpon such Proclamation should the rather eschew the danger and penaltie of the sayde Statute, and as yet neuerthelesse, in moste partes of the Realme the same is neglected, and little regarded: The King and Queene our soueraigne Lord and Ladie,* therefore. &c. straightly charge and commaunde, that no persone or persones, of what estate, degree, or condition soeuer he or they be, from hencefoorth presume to bring or conuey, or cause to bee brought or conueied into this Realme, any bookes, wrytings or woorkes heereafter mentioned: that is to saye, anye booke or bookes, wrytings or woorkes made or sette foorth, by, or in the name of Martine Luther, or any booke or bookes, wrytings or woorkes made or sette forth, by, or in the name of Oecolampadius, Zwinglius, Iohn Caluine, Pomerane, Iohn Alasco, Bullinger, Bucer, Melancthon, Bernardinus Ochinus,* Erasmus Sarcerius, Peter Martyr, Hugh Latymer, Robert Barnes, otherwyse called Frier Barnes, Iohn Bale, otherwise called Frier Bale, Iustus Ionas, Iohn Hoper, Myles Couerdal, William Tyndal, Thomas Cranmer late Archbishop of Canterburie, William Turner, Theodore Basill, otherwise called Thomas Beacon, Ihon Frith, Roy, and the booke commonly called Halles Chronicle,* or anye of them, in the Latine tounge, Dutch tounge, English tounge, Italian tounge, or French tounge, or any other like booke, paper, wryting, or woorkes, made, printed, or sette foorth, by any other persone or persones, containing false doctrine contrarie, and against the Catholicke faith, and the doctrine of the Catholicke Church: And also that no person or persons presume to write,* printe, vtter, sell, reade, or kepe anye, or cause to bee wrytten, printed, vttered, or kept, anye of the sayde bookes, papers, woorkes or wrytings, or any booke or bookes wrytten or printed in the Latine or English tounge, concerning the common seruice and administration sette foorth in English to be vsed in the Churches of this Realme, in the time of king Edward the sixth, commonly called the Communion booke or booke of common seruice and ordering of Ministers, otherwise called The booke sette foorth by authoritie of Parliament, for common prayer & administration of the Sacramentes, or to be vsed in the mother tounge wythin the Church of England, but shall wythin the space of fyfteene dayes nexte after the publication of this Proclamation, bring or deliuer, or cause the sayde bookes, wrytinges, and woorkes, and euerye of them remaining in their custodies and keeping, to be broughte and deliuered to the Ordinarie of the Diocesse, where suche bookes, woorkes, or wrytinges be or remaine: or to his Chauncellour or Commissaries, without fraud, coulour, or deceite, at the sayde Ordinaries will and disposition, to be burnt, or otherwise to be vsed or ordered by the sayde Ordinaries, as by the Canons or spiritual lawes it is in that case limitted and appoynted, vppon paine that euerye offender contrary to this Proclamation, shal incurre the daunger and penalties contained in the sayde Statute, and as they will auoide theyr Maiesties high indignation and displeasure, and further answere at their vttermost pearils.*

And their Maiesties by this Proclamation geue full power and authoritie to all Byshops and Ordinaries, and all Iustices of peace, Maiors, Sheriffes, Bailiffes of Cities and Townes corporate, and other head Officers wythin this Realme and the dominions thereof, and expresly commaundeth and willeth the same and euery of them, that they and euerye of them within their seuerall limites and iurisdictions, shall in the default & negligence of the sayde Subiectes, after the sayde fyfteene dayes expired, enquire and searche out the sayde bookes, wrytings and woorkes, and for this purpose enter into the house or houses, closets, and secrete places of euery persone, of what so euer degree, beyng negligent in thys behalfe, and suspected to keepe any such boke, wryting, or woorkes, contrary to this Proclamation: And that the sayde Iustices, Maiors, Sheriffes, Bailiffes, and other heade Officers aboue specified, and euery of them wythin theyr sayde limites and iurisdictions, finiding any of the sayde subiectes negligent and faultie in this behalfe, shall commit euery such offender to Warde, there to remaine without baile or mainprise, till the same offender or offenders haue receiued such punishment, as the sayde Statute doeth limite and appoynte in this behalfe. Geuen vnder our Signes Manuel, at oure Honour of Hampton Courte, the thirteene day of Iune, the first and second yeares of our raignes.

Imprinted by Iohn Cawood. Anno. 1555.

Articles to be enquired vppon by the wardones of euery, companie, touching seditious bookes, especially touching the booke called A Warning for England.

1 WHether they haue seene any of the forsaid bookes.*

2 Whether they haue hearde of anye of the sayde bookes.

3 Where they were, and in what place they haue seene them.

4 Whome they know to haue lately come from beyonde the sea, especially from Zurik, Strausbrough, Frankford, Wezel, Emden, and Disburge.

5 Whome they knowe, or vehemently suspect to be common cariers of letters or money thether from hence.

6 That they bring to my Lord Maior all suche seditious bookes as they haue, or shall haue found hereafter.

In this proclamation thou hast hearde (Christian reader) the profounde and learned Censure of the Catholike Church of Englande, what bookes they mislike and reiect as heretical, schismatical, and pernicious. Against the which Catholicke censure of these learned fathers, I haue Page 1598 not at this time to inferre: neither doeth my laisure serue now to wryte Apologies in defence of these Authors here condemned. Onely so much leaue it may please the reader to graūt me to set before him here a pair of balance, where in to waigh the bookes on the one side condemned, wyth y^e bookes on the other side allowed, to the end that we waying the one with the other, may discern the better betwene them,* which part wayeth best with Gods holy trueth and true catholicke church against manifest idolatrie and palpable abomination. And nowe therefore, as they haue in this present proclamation geuen their condemnation vpon these bookes aboue recited, so I desire thee to geue thy censure vpon their bookes by them allowed, and vpon the matter in them contained, and marke wel what good stuff it is.

*And first to begin with the Primer in English for children after the vse of Salisburie, Imprinted wyth Priueledge according vnto the Kinge and Queenes Maiesties letters patentes in the raigne of Queene Mary. Lette vs repeate and suruey some part of the said Primer (for to expresse all it were too long) beginning wyth the firste lesson of our Ladye, in these wordes:

Holye Marye: mother most pure of virgines all: mother and daughter of the king celestiall: So comfort vs in our desolation: That by thy prayer and special meditation, we enioy the reward of the heauenly raigne. &c.

Conferre this with the Scriptures, good reader, and iudge vp rightly whether this doctrine •e tollerable in the Church or not.

It followeth more in the second Lesson.

Holy Mary of all godly the godliest,

Pray for vs of all holy the holiest.

That he our praier accept may in good wise.

which of thee was borne and raigneth aboue the skies. &c.

In the third lesson.

Thy sonne beseeche with humble intercession,

To purge vs cleane of our transgression,

That so being redeemed we may the place ascende,

Where thou dwellest with him world without ende.

The Uersicle.

Pray for the people, entreat for the Clergie, make enter cession for the deuout womankinde,*let al feele thy helpe that worthely solemnise thy memoriall. &c.

An other Uersicle.

Holy Mother of God make thy petition, that wee maye deserue Christes promission. &c.

And in the Antheme after Benedictus, thus it followeth.

We beseech thee of thy pitie to haue vs in remembraunce, & to make meanes for vs vnto Christ, that we being supported by thy helpe, may deserue to attaine the kingdome of heauen.

Furthermore in the Collect after it followeth.

*And graunte that through the gracious intercession of the virgine thy mother, wee may be deliuered from this present heauinesse, and haue the fruition of eternall gladnesse.

It followeth moreouer in the sayde Primer thus, concerning the materiall Crosse.

*O God which haste ascended thy most holy Crosse, and hast geuen light to the darkenesse of the world, vouchsafe by the vertue of thy Crosse to illumine, visite, and comfort both our hearts and bodies. &c.

Moreouer, in the name of S. Iohn Baptiste thus it prayeth.

*O Lord defend vs alway through the continuall succours of S. Iohn Baptist. For the more fraile we be, the more nede we haue to be relieued with necessary prayers. &c.

In which wordes note (good reader) not only the absurditie of doctrine, but also the stolidity of the reason. For where their doctrine pretendeth that saint Iohn Baptiste should pray for vs, * here we pray to God for s. Iohn Baptist, that he wil heare his praier praying for vs. It followeth furthermore in the name of Peter and Paul.

Heare vs mercifully▪ and graunt that through the merites of them both, we may obtaine the glory euerlasting. &c.

And of S. Andrew.

So lette hym (O Lorde) be a continuall petitioner for vs to thee. &c.

Of S. Laurence thus.

S. Laurence the Deacon did worke a good worke. For by the vertue of the holy crosse he gaue sight to the blinde. &c.

And howe can this be true, when the holy Crosse was not yet found in the time of s. Laurence. For Helen whych first found the crosse (as they saye) came after S. Laurence more then 40. yeares.

*To Tho. Becket Archbishop of Canterburie.

By the bloud of Thomas, which he for thee did spende,

Make vs Christ to clime, whether Thomas did ascende.

Of S. Nicholas.

O God which hast glorified blessed Nicholas thy holy Bishop with innumerable myracles graunt we beseeche thee, *that by his merites & prayers we may be deliuered from the fire of hell.

Of Mary Magdalen.

Graunt we beseeche thee, through thy mercy, to let her purchase for vs the blisse euerlasting. &c.

An other prayer of our Ladie.

The dolorous compassion of Gods sweete mother,
Bring vs to the blisse of almighty God the father. &c.

An other prayer in the sayd Primer to our Lady.

Establish vs in peace and tranquillitie,

And chaunge the name of sinfull Eua:

Loose thy prisoners from captiuitie,

Vnto the blinde geue sight againe.*

Deliuier vs from malignitie,

To the ende we may some grace attaine.

Shewe thy selfe to be a mother:

So that he accept our petition.

Deliuier vs from bondage of sinne. &c.

Item.

Holy mother succour the miserable, comfort the weake spirited, geue courage to the desperate, praye for the people, make intercession for the Cleargy, and be a meane for the deuout womankinde. &c.

An other blasphemous prayer.

O thou meeke mother haue mercy therefore,

On wretches, for whom thou haddest these paines all,*

Seeing thy sonne that vine cluster pressed sore,

And from the pestilence of death eternall,

Keepe vs by voiding the feende infernall,

And ioyne vs with them which rewarded be,

With eternall life, seeing the Deitie.

An other blasphemie in the sayde Primer.

Haile Queene mother of mercy, our life, our sweetnes,*oure hope Vnto thee do we crie and sigh, weeping and wailing. Come of therefore our Patronesse, cast vpon vs thy pitiful eyes, and after this oure banishmente, shewe to vs the blessed fruite of thy wombe. O gate of glory be for vs a reconciliation vnto the father and the sonne. From the wretched their faultes expell: wbye the spots of sinnes vncleane. &c.

Item to our Lady.

The fruite of thy wombe euerlasting,

We may behold through thy deseruing &c.

Item.

Graunt we beseeche thee,*that by her merites and praiers we may attaine to that vnspeakeable ioy, wheras she being assumpt, doth now enioy with thee in heauen for euer.

And thus much hitherto of this catholike Primer, called our Ladies mattens. Wherunto if it were not tedious for the Reader, we would also adioyne our Ladies Psalter, to the intent that all indifferent Readers, as they haue seene what bookes these Catholike fathers haue condemned and do cōdemne for hereticall: so the same may also see & iudge what bokes on y^e other side they approue as lawfull and Catholike. And for as muche as it is not knowen peradventure to all men, what our Ladies Psalter is, or what it meaneth: yea, and some peradventure will denie any such booke of our ladies psalter to be writtē or approued, here therefore we wil first produce the name of the author, who was Bonauenture a Seraphical doctor, bishop also & Cardinall, canonised moreouer by Pope Sixtus 4. an. 1482. for a saint in the Calēdar, who in his boke thus entituled in Latine: Incipit Psalterium beatae virginis,compilatum per Seraphicum Doctorem Sanctum Bonauenturam Episcopum Albanensem, necnon sanctae Romanae Ecclesiae Praesbyterum Cardinalem, in honorem genetricis. &c. Fol. 84. in the second part of his whole woorkes (which were imprinted at Argentine. An. 1495.) to shewe him selfe a deuout seruant to his Ladie, hath taken euery Psalme of Dauids Psalter (which he peculiarly made and referred to almighty God) and hath in diuers of the sayde Psalmes and verses putte out the name of the Lorde, and hath placed in the name of our Ladye. This being done through the whole Psalmes & euery one of them, it is now called our Ladies Psalter, vsed to be song & saide in the praise and seruice of our Lady. A briefe tast wherof for examples sake (for to shewe all it were too long) we thought here to exhibite vnto the reader, in order as foloweth.

The title in English of this Psalter.

☞ Here beginneth the Psalter of the blessed Uirgine, made by the Seraphicall Doctoure S. Bonauenture, the Bishop of Albane,* and Cardinall of the holy Church of Rome. &c.

1 BEatus vir, qui intelligit nomen tuum Maria virgo, gratia tua animam eius confortabit.
Tanquam aquarum fontibus Page 1599 irrigatum vberimum in eo fructum iusticiae propagabis.

excellencia sanctitatis Misericordia tua & gratia vbique praedicatur. &c. Gloria patri. That is to say.*

Blessed is the man which vnderstandeth thy name, O virgine Marie, thy grace shall comforte hys soule. Thou shalt bring forth in him the most plentiful fruite of iustice, being watered as it were, wyth fountaines of water. All women thou passest in the beautie of thy body, all Angels and Archaungels in the excellencie of thy holinesse.* Thy mercy and thy grace is magnified euery where. &c. Glorie be to the father. &c.

2 Quare fremuerunt inimici nostri & aduersum nos meditati sunt inania? Protegat nos dextera tua Mater Dei vt acies terribiliter confundens & destruens eos. Venite ad eam, qui laboratis & tribulati estis, & dabit refrigerium animabus vestris. Accedite ad eam in tentationibus vestris, & stabiliet vos serenitas vultus eius Benedicite illam in toto corde vestro, misericordia enim illius plena est te•ra. &c. Gloria patri. &c.

Why doe our enemies freat and imagine vaine things against vs? Let thy right hand defend vs o mother of god, terribly cō•ounding & destroying them as a sword. Come vnto her all ye y^t labor and are troubled, and shee wil geue rest vnto your soules. Come vnto her in your temptations, and her louing countenance shall stablish & comfort you. Blesse her with all your heart: for the earth is full of her mercy. Glory be to the father. &c.

3 Domina quid multiplicati sunt qui tribulant me? In tempestate tua persequeris & dissipabis eos. Dissolue colligationes impietatis nostrae: tolle fasciculos peccatorum nostrorum. Miserere mei Domina & sana infirmitatem meam: tolle dolorem & angustiam cordis mei. Ne tradas me manibus inimicorum meorum, & in die mortis meae comforta animam meam. Deduc me ad portum salutis, & spiritum meum redde factori meo.

Why are they so many O Lady that trouble mee? In thy surye thou shalt persecute and destroy them. Loose the bondes of our impietie,* and take away the burden of our sinnes. Haue mercy vpon me, O lady, and heale my infirmitie. Take away my sorow and the anguish of my heart. Deliuer me not into the handes of mine enemies, & in the day of my death comfort my soule. Bring me vnto the hauen of saluation, and restore my spirit vnto my maker and creator. Glory be to the. &c.

4 Cum inuoca•em• exaudisti me Domina, & è sublimi solio tuo mei dignata es recordari. A rugientibus praeparatis ad escam & de manibus quaerentium me liberabit gratia tua. Quoniam benigna est misericordia & pietas tua in omnes, qui inuocant nomen sanctum tuum. Benedicta sis Domina in aeternum, & maiestas tua in seculum. Glorificate eum omnes gentes. &c.

When I called to thee, thou heardest me, O my Lady, and out of thy high throne thou didst vouchsafe to thinke vpon me.* From the roaring of them that prepare themselues to deuoure me, & out of the handes of such as seeke after my life, thy grace shall deliuer me: Because thy mercy and thy pitie are great towards all them that call vpon thy holy name. Blessed be thou O Lady for euer, and thy maiestie for euer and euer. Glorifie her all nations of the earth. &c.

5 Verba mea auribus percipe Domina. &c. Conuerte luctum nostrum in gaudium, & tribulationem nostram in iubilationem. Corruant ante pedes nostros inimici nostri: virtute tua eorum capita conterantur. &c.

Heare my wordes O Lady. &c. Turne our mourning into gladnesse, and our trouble into reioysing. Let our enemies fall before our feete, & wich thy power dash theyr hea•s in peeces.

O lady suffer me not to be rebuked in gods anger, nor to be chastened in his heauie displeasure. &c. From y^e gate and deepe pit of hel, with thy holy prayers deliuer vs. Let the euerlasting gates be opened, that we may shew foorth thy marueilous woorkes for euer. Because the deade: nor they that be in hell, shall not praise thee O Ladie, but they shall obtaine by thy grace life euerlasting.

7 Domina mea in te speraui, de inimicis meis libera me Domina. Conclude ora Leonis, & labia persequentium constringe. Non moreris propter nomen tuum facere nobis misericordiam tuam. Splendor vultus tui fulgeat super nos, vt seruetur conscientia nostra apud altissimum. Si persequitur inimicus animam meam Domina, *adiutorio tuo comforter, ne vibret gladiū suum contra me.

O my Ladye, in thee doe I put my trust: deliuer mee from mine enemies o Lady. *Stoppe the mouth of the Lion, and binde the lippes of the persecutors, make no tarying for thy names sake, to shew thy mercy vppon me. Let the brightnes of thy countenance shine vpon vs, *that our conscience may be sauēd before the most highest. If the ennemy doe persecute my soule O Lady, helpe me that he destroy me not.

9 Confitebor tibi Domina in toto corde meo, & narrabo in populis laudem & gloriam tuam. &c. Inueniant gratiam per te inuentricem gratiae & salutis: Respirant ad indulgētiam humiles poenitentes: sana contritiones cordis eorum. &c.

I wil geue thanks to thee O Lady with my *whole heart, and wil shewe forth amongst the nations thy praise and glory. &c. They shall finde grace through thee, the sinder out of grace and saluation, the humble and penytent grone for pardon and forgeuenesse, heale thou the sores of their heart. &c.

11 In Domina confido. &c. Exquirite illam a inuentute vestra & glorificabit vos. &c. Misericordia illius nostrorum auferat multitudinem peccatorum, & foecūditatem nobis conferat meritorum. &c.

In thee O lady do I put my trust. &c. Seeke her euen from your youth: and shee shall glorify you. &c. *Her mercy take from vs the multitude of our sinnes, and geue vnto vs plenteousnesse of merites. &c.

12 Saluum me fac mater pulchrae dilectionis, sons clemenciae. &c. Gyrum terrae sola circuis, vt subuenias inuocantibus te. &c.

Saue me O mother of Loue, & fountaine of mercy. &c. Thou thy selfe alone haste gone about the compasse of the earth, to helpe them that call vpon thee, &c.

13 Vsquequo domina obliuisceris me, & non liberas me in d^ee tribulationis? vsquequo exaltabitur inimicus meus super me^a potentia virtutis tuae contere ipsum. &c. Magnificamus te gratiae inuentricem, per quam saecula reparantur. &c.

How long doest thou forget me O Lady, and dost not deliuer me in the day of my trouble? Howe long shal mine enemy triumph ouer me? With thy mighty power destroy him. &c. We magnifie thee the finder & the author of grace, by whom the world is repaired. &c.

16 Conserua me domina, quoniam speraui in te. &c. Benedicta sint vbera tua, quibus^{*} lacte deifico saluatorem enutristi. &c.

Preserue me O Lady, for in thee haue I put my trust. &c. Blessed be thy breastes,^{*} which with thy deifying milke diddest nourish the Sauour. &c.

18 Diligam te domina coeli & terrae: in gentibus nomen tuum inuocabo. Confitemini illi tribulati corde, & roborabit vos contra inimicos vestros &c. Religiosi omnes honorate illam, quia ipsa est adiutrix vestra & specialis aduocata. Esto refrigerium nostrum gloriosa mater Christi, quia tu es totius religionis mirabile firmamentum.

I will loue thee O Lady of heauen and earth: I will call vpon thy name among the nations. Confesse your selues vnto her, ye that are troubled in heart, and she shal strengthen you against your enemies. &c. Al ye cloisterers honoure her, for shee is your helper and speciall aduocate. Be thou our refreshing and rest,^{*} for thou arte the marueilous foundation of all religion.

20 Exaudi nos Domina in die tribulationis. &c. Ne proijcias nos in tempore mortis nostrae, sed succurre animae, cum deseruerit corpus suum. Mitte Angelum in occursum eius per quem ab hostibus defendatur &c. Sentiat in poenis refrigerium tuum, & concede ei locum inter electos Dei.

Here vs O Lady in the day of trouble, &c. Cast vs not away in the time of our death, but succour our soule when it forsaketh the body. Sende an Angell to meete it, that it may be defended from the enemies. &c. In torments and paines let it feele thy comforte, and graunt to it a place among the elects of God.

25 Ad te Domina leuaui animam. &c. Nō praeualeant aduersum me laquei mortis. &c. Ductrix mea esto ad patriam, & me coetui angelorum digneris aggregare:

To thee O Lady do I lift vp my soule. &c. Let not the snares of death preuaile against me. &c. Be thou my guide to the heauenly rest, and to the company of Angels associate me.

26 Iudica me Domina, quoniam ab innocentia mea digressus sum: sed quia speraui in te, non infirmabor. &c.

*Judge thou me, O Ladye, for I am fallen from mine innocencie: but because I put my trust in thee, therefore I shall not fall. &c.

27 Domina illuminatio mea sit splendor faciei tuae. &c. serenitas gratiae tuae refulgeat menti meae. &c.

O Lady let the brightnesse of thy face be my light, and let the clearenesse of thy grace shine vnto my minde. &c.

28 Ad te Domina clamabo. &c. Miserere mei in die angustiae meae, & in luce veritatis tuae libera me.

To thee O Ladie. &c. Haue mercy vpon me in the day of my trouble, and in the light of thy truth deliuer me. &c.

Page 160031 In te Domina speraui, non confundar in aeternum, in gloria tua suscipe me. Tu es fortitudo mea & refugium meum▪ consolatio mea & protectio mea. &c. Educas me de laqueo, quem abscondiderunt mihi, quoniam tu es adiutrix mea. In manus tuas Domina commendo spiritum meum.

In thee O Lady do I put my trust, let me not be confounded for euer, *in thy glory receyue me. Thou art my strength & my refuge, my consolation and protection, &c. Deliuer me from the snare that they haue layd for mee, because thou art my helper. Into thy hands I commend my spirit, &c.

34 Benedicam Dominam in omni tempore. &c. In periculis, in rebus dubijs inuocate eam, & in necessitatibus inuenietis auxilium, &c. Sumite exemplum conuersationis eius & emulamini studia humilitatis eius. Quia ergo Domina humillima fuisti, verbum increatum ex te carnem suscipere coegisti.

I will alwayes prayse our Lady, &c. In perils, in aduersitie call vpon her, and in tyme of neede ye shall fynde succor. *Let her conuersation be an example vnto you, and follow the vertue of her humilitie. Because therefore, O Lady thou wast humbly and lowly, thou didst compel the word increate to take flesh of thee.

36 Dixit iniustus. &c. A malo proposito discedat mater Dei. Inclina vultum Dei super nos: Coge illum peccatoribus misereri, &c. Benedictum sit imperium tuum super coelos: benedicta sit magnificentia tua super terram.

The wicked man sayd, &c. Let hym depart from hys euill purpose, O mother of God turne the countenance of God toward vs: *Compell him to be merciful vnto sinners. Blessed be thy Imperie and dominion in heauen, & •lessed be thy magnificence vpon the earth.

45 Eructauit cor meum verbum bonum Domina, &c. Per tuam sanctitatem peccata mea purgentur: per tuam integritatem mihi incorruptibilitas condonetur, &c.

My hart is inditing a new matter O Lady. &c. By thy holynes let my sinnes be purged, * by thy integritie let me obtayne incorruption. &c.

47 Omnes gentes plaudite manibus. &c. Quoniā ipsa est porta vitae▪ ianua salutis, & vitae nostrae reconciliatrix: spes poenitentium, solamen lugentium, pax beata cordium atque salus. Miserere mei Domina, miserere mei, quia tu es lux & spes omnium cōfidentium in te. &c.

Clap your hands all ye people. &c. For she is the gate of life, * the dore of saluation, the reconciler of our lyfe: the hope of the penitent, the comfort of the sorrowful, the blessed peace of hearts, and saluation. Haue mercy vppon me O Lady, haue mercy vpō me, for thou art the light & hope of all that put their trust in thee.

51 Miserere mei Domina, quae mater misericordiae nuncuparis. Et secundum viscera miserationum tuarum munda me ab omnibus iniquitatibus meis. &c.

Haue mercy vppon me O Lady, which art called the mother of mercy, and in the bowels of thy great compassion clense me from mine iniquities.

54 Domina in Nomine tuo saluum me fac, & ab iniusticijs meis libera me. &c.

*O Lady in thy name saue me, and from myne vnrighteousnes deliuer me. &c.

70 Domina in adiutorium meum intende. &c. Miserere seruorum tuorum super quos inuocatum est nomen tuum, &c.

Make hast O Lady to help me. &c. Haue mercy on thy seruants, vpon whom thy name is inuocated. &c.

71 In te Domina speraui, non confundar in aeternum, in tua misericordia libera me. &c.

*In thee Lady haue I put my trust: let me not confoūded for euer, in thy mercy deliuer me, &c.

79 Domina venerunt gentes in haereditatem Dei quas tu meritis tuis Christo confederasti &c.

O Ladye, the Gentiles are come into the inheritance of God, whom thou diddest ioyne vnto Christ by thy merites, &c.

89 Qui regis Israell, &c. Odor vitae de illa progreditur & omnis salus de corde illius scaturizat. *

Thou that rulest Israel, &c. The sauour of life cōmeth from her, and all health floweth out of her heart, &c.

*91 Qui habitat in adiutorio matris Dei in protectione ipsius commorabitur. &c. Clamate ad illam in periculis vestris & flagellum non appropinquabit tabernaculo vestro. Fructus gratiae inueniet qui sperauerit in illa, porta paradisi reserabitur ei.

Who so dwelleth in the helpe of the Mother of God, shall dwell in the shadow of her protection. &c. Cry vnto her in your daungers, and the scourge shall not come nere your tabernacle. The fruite of Grace shall be to hym who so trusteth in her, and the gate of Paradise shall be open to hym.

95 Venite exultemus Dominae nostrae. &c. Suscipe in fine animas nostras, & introduc nos in requiem aeternam. &c.

Come, let vs reioyce to our Ladye, &c. Receyue our soules at our last ende, and bryng them into euerlastyng rest, &c.

105 Confitemini Dominae nostrae, & inuocate nomen eius, *&c. Salus sempiterna in manu tua, Domina. &c.

Prayse our Lady and call vpon her name. &c. Euerlasting saluation is in thy hand O Lady, &c.

110 Dixit Dominus Dominae nostrae, sede mater mea a dextris meis &c.

The Lord sayd vnto our Lady: * sit here my mother on my right hand. &c, 114 In exitu animae meae ex hoc mundo occurre ei Domina & suscipe eam &c. Esto illi scala ad regnum coelorum & iter rectum ad paradisum Dei. &c.

In the passing of my soule out of this world, come and meete it O Lady, and receyue it, &c. Be to it a ladder vnto the kingdome of heauen, and a right way to the Paradise of God, &c.

119 Miserationibus tuis plena est terra, ideo viam iustificationum tuarum exquisiui. &c. Concupiscam in aeternum laudare te Domina cum docueris me *iustificationes tuas. &c.

The whole earth is full of thy mercies, and therefore I will search out the way of thy iustifications. &c. I will couet for euer to praise thee O Lady, when thou shalt teache me thy iustifications. &c.

125 Qui confidunt in te mater Dei, *non timebunt à facie inimici. &c.

They that put their trust in thee O mother of God, shal not be afraid of the face of their enemy. &c.

127 *Nisi Domina aedificauerit domum cordis nostri, non permanebit aedificium eius.

Except our Lady shall build the house of our hart, the building therof shall not continue, &c.

128 Beati omnes qui timent Dominam nostram, & beati omnes qui sciunt facere voluntatem tuam. &c.

Blessed is euery one that feareth our Lady, and blessed be all they which know to do her will. &c.

130 De profundis clamaui ad te Domina,*Domina exaudi vocem meam: Fiant aures tuae intendentes, &c.

Out of the deepe I haue called vnto thee O Ladye, O Lady heare my voyce, &c.

132 Memento Domina Dauid & omnium inuocantium nomen tuum. &c.

O Lady remember Dauid and all them that call vpon thy name. &c.

134 Ecce nunc benedicite Dominam omnes qui*speratis in nomine sancto eius. &c.

Behold and blesse now our Lady, all ye that put your trust in her holy name.

136 Super flumina Babylonis. &c.*Non inuenietur propitiatio sine illa. &c.

At the flouds of Babylon, &c. There is no propitiation to be found without her. &c.

140 Eripe me Domina ab omni malo,*& ab hoste inferni defende me. &c.

Deliuier me O Lady from all euill, and from the infernall enemy defend me. &c.

145 Oculi nostri sperant in te Domina. Mitte nobis cibum & escam delectantem. Laudationem tuam loquitur lingua mea & benedicam te in seculum seculi.

Our eyes looke vp and trust in thee, do thou sende vs meate and food conuenient. &c. My tounge shall speake thy prayse, and shall blesse thee for euer.

148 Lauda Hierusalem Dominam, glorifica illam etiam ô Sion. Ipsa enim construit muros tuos & filios tuos benedicit. Gratia sua te impinguat, pacem{que} donat terminis tuis.

Prayse thou our Lady O Hierusalem, and glorify her also O thou Sion, for she buildeth vp thy wals,* and blesseth thy children, her grace maketh thee fat, & geueth peace vnto thy coastes. &c.

I could also recite other things moe of like blasphemy following immediately after this Psalter of our Lady, in the Seraphicall doctor aforesayd, as these.

Ecce Domina Saluatrix mea, fiducialiter agam in te,*& non timebo. &c. Quia fortitudo mea es tu. &c. Et facta es mihi in salutem. i Behold O Lady my Sauour, I will be bolde in thee, and will not feare. &c. Because thou art my strength, &c. And art become my saluation. &c.

Exulta totum genus humanum, quia talem dedit tibi mediatricem dominus Deus tuus. i. Reioyce O all mankynde, because the Lord thy God hath geuen vnto thee such a Mediatrix. &c.*

Confitebor tibi domina, quia abscondisti haec à sapientibus, & reuelasti ea paruulis. i. I will confesse to thee O Lady,* because thou hast hid these things from the wyse, and hast reuealed them to the little ones. &c.

Generatio praua atque peruersa agnosce Dominam nostram salutricem tuā. Nunquid ipsa est mater tua quae possidet te, & in fide Page 1601 generauit te? i. O thou wicked and peeuish generation, knowledge our Lady thy sauour. Is not she the mother that hath possessed thee, and in fayth hath begotten thee?

O benedicta in manibus tuis reposita est nostra salus. i. O thou blessed,* in thy hands is layd vp our saluation, &c.

I nomine tuo omne genu flectatur, coelestium. &c. In thy name let euery knee bend, in heauen and earth, and in hell.

Quemadmodum infans sine nutrice non potest viuere: ita nec sine Domina nostra posses habere salutem. i. Like as the in•ant cannot lyue without the nurse, so neither canst thou haue saluation without our Lady.

Quicumque vult saluus esse ante omnia opus est vt teneat de Maria firmam fidem. Quam nisi quisque in integram inuiolatamque seruauerit, absque dubio in aeternum peribit. i. Who so will be saued, before all thyngs he must needes hold his beliefe of our Lady, which beliefe, vnles euery one shal hold perfect and sound, shall perish without doubt for euer.

Moreouer, after these so horrible things & vntolerable to be heard, consequently in the next tractation followeth the rosary or garland of our Lady, compiled by the said S. Bonaventure:
wherein these words are to be red as followeth: O Mediatrix betweene God and man, the Lorde hath worthily magnified thee,*that thou onely shouldst conceyue hys sonne &c. Wherefore O good Mary our mediatrix, mother of Grace, and mother of Mercy. &c. And moreouer within fewe lynes it followeth in these woordes: Therefore O our Empresse and Lady most bountifull, by the authoritie of a Mother commaund, commaund (I say) thy welbeloued sonne, that he wil stirre vp our myndes from the loue of worldly thyngs, to heuenly desires. &c.

Item, O the Aduocate of the miserable, the eyes of thy seruants be directed to thee. &c.

To these premisses, I might also adioyne the horrible and most blasphemous wordes of the said
Bonaventure in the said booke, Fol. 100. pag. 2. col. 1. which I besech thee to read and note.
Quae maior bonitas quam quod Christus. i. What greater goodnes can be, then that Christ is content to be captiue vpon the aultar.

Whereupon he speaketh in the person of Ieremy, saying. Behold, I am in your hands, do with me as you see good. &c. Where note (sayth he) that when any Duke or prince •s taken prisoner for hys subiectes, he is not let goe, before he paye some great summe of mony for hys ransome.*Euen so neither we ought to let Christ go out of our hands beyng our prisoner and captiue except he graunt vnto vs remission of our sinnes and his heauenly kingdome. The priest therfore lifteth vp the body of Christ vpon the aultar: as though he sayd thus: behold hym whome the whole world is not able to comprehend, he is holden here our captiue, wherfore let vs hold hym fast and not let hym go before we obtayne of hym our requests. &c.

Notes.

Is not here good Catholike stuffe (christen Readers) trow you? Conferre I beseech you this doctrine wyth the doctrine of the Apostles, which teach vs that we are fullye complet in Christ, and I wil referre me to no better iudge then to your own conscience. And now therfore, if any mā haue bene in doubt in tymes past of the doctrine and proceedings of the church of Rome, whether it be rightly char'ged with blynd errors, with blasphemy intollerable, & Idolatry abominable or not, here now may he be fully certified & resoluēd. For where was euer idolatry or blasphemy to be found, if it be not here in this Mattins & Psalter of our Lady? * If Idolatry be to make an idoll to bee worshipped as God, which is no God, what doe we here but make an idoll of our Lady (as we call her) to be worshipped with no lesse dignity, glory, authority, reuerence, and seruice, then is the Lord God himselfe. As he is called our Lord, so she is called our lady. And if he be kyng, yet she is the queene of heauē.* And though he haue the name of god, yet she bereth so the title of the mother of God, that as mothers haue authority ouer their children, so she is willed to shew her selfe to be his mother, to cause him to grāt our petitions. Finally, if he be our patron, yet is she our patro'nesse. The commandement saith: Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and hym only shalt thou serue. And what worship or seruice can we geue to God, more then we doe ascribe vnto her? Or what benefit is to be asked at y^e hands of Christ our Sauour, which is not equally asked of her? To saue our soules, to geue vs peace, to graunt grace, to comfort the desperate, to loose our captiuitie, to release our sinnes,* to deliuer from the fiend, to bryng to heauen. &c. to her we pray, we cry, we creepe, we sigh, we grone, wee knock and kneele, to her we trust, and if we beleue not also in our Lady,* we be heretikes ipso facto.

Furthermore, as Christ our onely Lord and Sauour hath his Church and Congregation which professeth hys name, of whom we are called Christians: so neither is she likewise without her chapels, her cloisters, her Chapters, fraternities and brotherhoods, which professing her name in like sort, are called our Ladies brethren, or white friers, besides an innumerable sort of other patrons of churches, of whom euery one hath his peculiar church and religion by himselfe, yet all these together be included vnder the generall deuotion of our Lady their supreme patronesse and gouernesse.

Now to proceed further to the other prrt of the commaundement, which sayeth: Him onely shalt thou serue: What seruice hath the Lord in all the church, but our Lady also iointly with him hath the lyke? Her Masse, her Mattins, her Euensong, her Houres and Complin, her Rosaries, her Anthems, her Collects, her Primer, her Psalter, her holydaies likewyse, yea fiue to one. Finally, as y^e Lord hath his prayer called the Lordes prayer, so hath shee her Aue Maries, yea x. Aues to one Pater noster: yea, & read further in the said Bonauenture,* and ye shal see her also to haue her Te Deum, her Benedictus, her Magnificat, and also her Quicunque vult.

If the Lorde our God had not expressed vnto vs hys own will by playne worde, limiting vnto vs by expresse iniunction, what to beleue, what to folow, & how to worship and serue him, & how to receiue from him our saluation, but had left vs to the imagination of our owne inuētions, euery man to shift for himself after his own pollicy, then peraduenture this way taken by the Popes Church, to make frends & mediators betwene God and vs, for reconciliation, remission & saluation, might haue some ryme or reason: but now gods word doth bynde vs, doth prescribe and limite vs precisely in euery point touching saluation, what to beleue, & what to do, shewing vs plainly, that we cannot be saued, but by the bloud of hys sonne only, neither cā be iustified but by faith only in y^e same Christ his sonne. Wherefore not to beleue that which he hath promised is infidelitie, and to follow any other beliefe then he hath set vs, is plaine idolatry.* The which ij. special errors most commonly doe followe the doctrine of the Romish church, as not only in this primer and psalter of our Lady aforesaid, but also in all their proceedings, teachings, and preachings besides, may well appeare.* For where the scripture perfectly doth promise and pronounce vs to bee iustified through our fayth in Christ, & willeth vs to seeke our saluation no where els, but onely in the merits of Iesus: the institution of the church of Rome neyther wyll receiue that God hath freely geuen (wherein standeth infidelity) neither yet will seek the same there where as they should, but in the merites and prayers of our Lady, of S. Iohn Baptist, s. Peter and Paule, s. Andrew, s. Nicholas, s. Thomas of Canterbury, & by the worthines of the materiall crosse, and such other vnlawfull meanes, wherein standeth plaine idolatry. And yet such bookes as these can be suffered among the Catholikes to be currant, as good, wholesome and lawfull bookes, where as the other which lead vs the true way from infidelitie and blynd idlatry, to true christianitie in no wise can be sufferable. But of this to complaine, it is vaine. Wherefore to passe from this proclamation, let vs proceede (God willing) in the course of our history.

¶The story of Thomas Osmond, William Bamford, and Thomas Osborne Martyrs.

MEntion was made before in the storye of Thomas Haukes, of sixe prisoners besides,* whiche were sente downe with hym to Essex the same tyme as hee wente to execution. Of which sixe prisoners, three were sent to be burned, the other three to recant, and to doe penance: of whome it followeth next in story nowe to intreate. The names of which sixe were these, Thomas Osmund Fuller, William Bamford, alias Butler, Weauer, Thomas Osborne Fuller, Nicholas Chamberlaine Weauer, Thomas Brodehill Weauer, Richard Webbe Weauer: beyng all of the towne of Coxehall. All which sixe Coxehall men nexte after the Examinations of Thomas Haukes and Thomas Wattes, were sent vp to Boner to bee examined by the Earle of Oxford and sir Phillip Paris knight, with a letter with them also sent, the copy whereof here followeth.

¶A letter sent from the Erle of Oxford to Boner B. of London.

AFTER our hartly commendations vnto your good Lord^dship,* this shalbe to aduertise the same y^t the Constables of Coxehall within your Dioces, haue brought before vs this day 6. persons dwelling in the town of Coxhal, aforesayd, Page 1602 whose names hereafter do folow, videlicet, Nicholas Chamberlaine Weauer, Iohn Wallet Fuller, Tho. Brody Weauer, Rich. Web Weauer, William Bamford aliâs Butler, Weauer, and Tho. Osborne Fuller, for that they at the feast of Easter now last,* haue not obeyed to the order of the holy catholike Church in receiuyng of the sacraments: but o^stinately refusing the same, besides the holdyng of diuers other opinions, contrary to the faith of the said church. Wherefore we haue thought it good to send the same persons vnto your good lordship, further to be ordered, as in such case shal appertain. Thus we commit your good Lordship to the keping of almighty God.

From Hedingham the 1. of May. 1555.

Your Lordships assuredly. Oxford. Phillip Paris.

Thus the said prisoners beyng sent vp the first day of May, were brought before the sayd Bishop the xvij. of the sayd moneth to be examined,* vpon diuers and sundry Articles ministred & obiected agaynst them: whereunto they were compelled to aunswer and to put theyr hands to the same: the copy of which their Articles and aunswers, beyng all one in forme and effect (if the Register say true) here followeth.

1. Firſt that thou Thomas Osmund Fuller, waſt and art of the Pariſh of Coxehall,* within the Dioces of London, and thou haſt not beleueed nor doeſt beleuee that there is here in the earth one Catholike & vniuerſal whole Church, which doth hold and beleue all the fayth & Religion of Chriſt, and all the neceſſary Articles & ſacraments of the ſame.
2. Item, that thou haſt not beleueed nor doeſt beleue that thou art neceſſarily bounden vnder the payne of damnation,* of thy ſoule, to geue full fayth and credence vnto y^e ſayd Catholike and vniuerſall Church, and to the faith and religion of the ſame in all neceſſary poyntes of the ſayd fayth and religion, without doubting or wauering in the ſayde fayth and religion, or in any part thereof.
3. Item, that thou haſt not beleueed that the faith and religion, which both the Church of Rome, Italy, Spayne, England, France, Ireland, Scotland, and all other churches in Europe, beyng true members and partes of the ſayd Catholike and vniuerſall Church do beleuee & teach,* is both agreeyng with the faith and religion of Chriſt, and alſo is the very true faith and religion, which all chriſtian people ought to beleuee, obſerue, follow, and keepe: but contrarywiſe, thou haſt beleueed, and doeſt beleuee, that that fayth and religion, which the ſayd church of Rome, & all the other Churches aforeſayd, haue heretofore beleueed, and do beleue is falſe, erroneous, and naught, & in no wiſe ought to be beleueed, obſerued, kept, and followed of any Chriſtian perſon.
4. Item, that albeit it be true that in the ſacrament of the altar, there is in ſubſtance the very body and bloud of our ſauour Chriſt vnder the formes of bread and wyne: & albeit that it be ſo beleueed, taught and preached vndoubtedly in the ſayd church of Rome and all other churches aforeſayd, yet thou haſt not ſo beleueed, nor doeſt ſo beleuee, but contrarywiſe thou haſt beleueed, and doeſt beleuee firmly and ſtedfaſtly, that there is not in the ſayd ſacrament of the aulter, vnder the ſayd formes of bread and wyne, the very ſubſtance of Chriſtes body and bloud, but that there is only the ſubſtance of materiall and common bread and wine,* with the formes thereof, and that the ſayd material & common bread and wyne are onely the ſignes and tokens of Chriſtes body and bloud, and are by fayth to be receyued onely for a remembraunce of Chriſtes paſſion and death, without any ſuch ſubſtance of Chriſtes body and bloud at all.

*5. Item, that thou hast beleued and taught, and hast opely spoken and defended, and so doest beleue, thinke, maintaine and defend, that the very true receiuing and eatyng of Christes body and bloud, is onely to take materiall and common bread, and to breake it, and distribute it amongst the people, remembring thereby the passion and death of Christ onely.

6. Item, that thou hast likewyse beleueed, thought, and spoken, that the masse now vsed in this realm of England and other the churches aforesaid,* is abominable & naught, and full of idolatry, and is of the ordinance of the Pope & not of the institution of Christ: and hath no goodnes in it sauynge the Gloria in excelsis, the Epistle and Gospell, and therefore thou hast not, nor wilt not come and be present at masse, nor receiue the sacrament of the altar, nor any other sacramēt of the church, as they are now vsed in this realm of England. &c.

7. Item, that thou hast in tymes past beleued, & yet doest now beleue,* that auricular confession is not necessary to be made vnto the priest: but is a thing superfluous, voyd, and naught, only to be made to God, & to none other person. And likewyse thou hast condemned as superfluous, vayne and vnprofitable, all the ceremonies of the church, and the seruice of the same, and hast sayd that no seruice in the church ought to be sayd but in the English tong, and if it be otherwise, it is vnlawfull and naught.

8. Item, that thou beyng notoriously and openly suspected for an heretike, and a person culpable in the premisses, was of late called and cōuented before the Erle of Oxford, and M. Phillip Paris,* and there was charged with the said heresies, especially against the sacrament of the altar. And because thou didst maintaine and stand to thy said heresies, and wouldst not come to the church and be confessed and receiue the said sacrament as other christian people did, but vtterly didst refuse to doe the same, thou wast by the said Earle of Oxford, and M. Phillip Paris sēt vp by a Constable vnto me Bishoppe of London, and was by them denounced, detected, and put vp to me as an heretike and misbeleuyng person.

9. Item, that thou hast knowen and beleueed, thou doest know and beleue, or at the least thou hast credibly heard reported, spoken, and said, that all and all maner persons, which do teach, preach, or hold any thing concernyng the sacraments of thr Church, or any the articles of the fayth, otherwise then is found already discussed and determined by the mother the holy church, or doth call into doubte or question that thyng which is already decided or determined by the Church, or that willingly and wittingly do vtter openly or priuily, any slaunderous or blasphemous wordes concernyng the sayd Sacraments or any of them, or that do preach, teach, or keepe any sect or kynd of heresie agaynst the wholesome doctrine of the church, & doe wittingly, willingly, or obstinately defend the said sect or kind of heresie, are by the Canons of the whole and vniuersall Catholike Church, and also by the Ecclesiasticall lawes of this Church of England by their so doing, accursed with that curse, which doth separate them from the entry into the Church, from the receiuing of the Sacramentes, and from the company of faythfull people, and are (in continuynge in this sayd sect and heresie) to be pronounced, declared, and taken for heretikes, and to be deliuered to the secular power, and by the lawes temporall of this realme of England, and the custome of the same, to be by the sayde secular power put to death and burnt for this sayd sect and heresie.

10 Item, that thou by reason of the premisses wast & art to be pronounced, takē, had, reputed, and iudged for a manifest and open, wilfull and obstinate heretike, for a wycked and cursed person, and to bee punished accordingly for the same, accordyng to the said Canon lawes, vsages, and customes.

The aunsweres whiche the sayd Thomas Osmund William Bamford, and Nicholas Chamberlaine seuerally made vnto these Articles.

TO the first they aunswered and confessed the same to be true,^{*} except that they do beleue y^t there is here in earth one Catholicke & whole Church, and that the same church doth hold and beleue as is conteined in this Article.

To the second they aunswere, & beleue the sayd Article not to be true: for they say that they haue & doe beleue that they are necessarily bounden vnder payne of damnatiō of their soule, to geue full fayth and credēce vnto the said Catholicke Church & to the fayth and religion of the same, in all necessary points of the same fayth and religiō, without waueryng or doubtyng in any part therof.

To the third they aūswere, that the Church of Rome,^{*} & other Churches mentioned in this Article, bee not true mēbers & partes (as they be vsed in fayth & religion) of the Catholicke Church of Christ, & that the fayth and religion vsed in the sayd Churches, is not agreable with y^e Church of Christ, but are false and erroneous.

To the fourth they aunswere and say that how so euer the sayd Churches of Rome and others of Christendome haue and do beleue touchyng the Sacramēt of the aulter, yet they do beleue, that in the Sacramēt vnder the formes of bread & wine, there is not the very substaūce of Christes body & bloud, but that there is onely the substaūce of materiall bread and wine, & that the same materiall bread & wyne be onely the signes and tokēs of Christes body and Page 1603 bloud, and are to be receiued onely for a remembraunce of Christes passion and death, without any substaunce of Christes body and bloud at all.

To the fi•t Article they aunswere, that the true receiuyng and eatyng of Christes body,^{*} accordyng to Christes institution, is to take, distribute and eate materiall bread, and thereby to remember the passion and death of Christ, and so receiue by fayth (as they beleue) Christes body and bloud and not otherwise.

To the sixt they aunswere the same to bee true in euery part therof, except that ouer and besides the Gloria in excelsis, the Epistle and Gospell, which they beleue to bee good they beleue the Pater noster and Cre•de vse in the Masse be also good.

^{*}To the seuēth they aunswere and confesse, that auricular confession is not necessary to be made to the Priest: neuerthesse they th•ncke that it is necessary to goe to such a Priest, as is able to geue good counsell. And that for counsell only, and not otherwise. And as concerning the ceremonies of the church, they answer the same to be vayne & vnprofitable. No seruice in the Church ought to be sayde, but onely in the English tong.

To the eight they answer and beleue the same to bee true in euery part thereof, except that they doe not beleue that they be heretikes, or suspected of heresie.

To the ninth, Osmund and Bamford aunswered, that they referred themselues to the sayd lawes, mentioned in that article, but Chamberlaine made no aunswer at all to this article.

To the tenth, the sayd Osmond and Bamford answered and sayd, that by reason of their beliefe afore by them confessed, they are not to bee reputed, taken or iudged for wilfull and obstinate heretikes, nor to be punished therefore, as is declared in that article. The other aunswered nothyng.

¶Scholies vpon the foresayd articles.

THEse articles in the same forme & maner of words are commonly objected to all other that follow after,* with the same aunsweres also thereto annexed. In which articles thou mayest note (Reader) the crafty and subtile handlyng of these Lawyers and Registers, who so deceitfully frame theyr articles and positions, that vnlesse a man doe aduisedly consider them, it is hard for a simple man to aunswer to them, but he shall be snared and intangled. So they paynt their Church with such a visage of vniuersall, whole, holy, catholike, as who should saye: Hee that denieth Rome, denieth the holye Church of Christ here in earth. Likewyse in examinyng them, and specially the simple sorte in the matter of the Sacrament, to the materiall breade in the Sacrament, they put this worde (onely) very captiously and fraudulently, to take them at the worst auauntage, makyng the people beleue that they take the holy Sacrament to bee no better then onely common bread* when they doe not so, but make a difference betweene the same, both in the vse, honour, & name thereof.

Agayne, when the Examinates hold but only agaynst the erroneous poyntes of Romish Religion, these bishops in theyr Interrogatories geue out the matter so generally as thogh the said Examinates in generally spake against all the articles of fayth taught in Rome, Spayne, England, Fraunce, Scotland. &c.

Moreouer, concernyng Latin seruice, in such crafty forme of words, they propound their article, that it might appeare to the people, these men do deny any seruice to be lawfull in any place, cuntry, or language, but onely in English.

And as these articles are crafty, captiously and deceitfully in forme of words deuised by the bishops and their Notaries, so the aunswers agayne to the same, be no lesse subtilly framed, & after the most odious manner put downe in the name of the Examinates, which beyng read vnto them, thus without further aduise they were constraigned vpon a sodaine to subscribe the same with their hands. Wherby if any word escaped their hand, peradventure not considerably subscribed: there the Papists take their aduantage agaynst them, to defame them and to bryng them into hatred with the people.

These Articles thus propounded and aunswered, they were vntil the after none dismissed. At what tyme they did agayne appeare, and there were examined and trauayled with by fayre and flattering speaches, as well of the Bish. as of others his assistance, to recant and reuoke their opinions, who notwithstanding remayned constant & firme, and therefore after the common vsage of their Ecclesiasticall lawes,*were sent away agayne vntill the next day beyng Saturday, and the xvij. day of May. Then in the fore noone the Bishop vsing his accustomed maner of proceeding: which he hath vsed before as well with them as w^t others, did likewyse dismisse them, and at last in the after noone condemned them as heretikes,*and so deliuered thē to the Shirifes, in whose custodie they remayned vntill they were deliuered to the shiriffe of Essex, & by hym were executed, Chamberlayne at Colchester, the 14. of Iune, Thomas Osmund at Maningtree, the 15. of Iune, & William Bamford, aliâs Butler, at Harwich, the same 15. day in the month of Iune.

¶The history of the worthy Martyr and seruauent of God, M. Iohn Bradford, with his lyfe and actes, and sundry conflicts, with his aduersaries, and Martyrdome, at length most constantly suffered for the testimony of Christ and hys truth.

AS touching first the country and education of Iohn Bradford,* he was borne at Manchester in Lancastershire. His parents did bring hym vp in learnyng from his infancie, vntill he attained such knowledge in the Latin tong, and skill in writing, that he was able to gaine his own liuyng in some honest condition.* Then he became seruauent to sir Iohn Harington knight, who in the great affaires of K. Henry the 8. and K. Edward the 6. which he had in hand when he was Treasurer of the kings campes & buildyng, at diuers times in Bullonois, had such experiēce of Bradfords actiuitie in writyng, of expertnes in the arte of Auditors, and also of his faythfull trustines,* that not onely in those affaires, but in many other of his priuate busines he trusted Bradford, in such sort that aboue all other he vsed his faythfull seruice.

Thus continued Bradford certayne yeares in a right honest and good trade of life, after the course of this world, lyke to come forward (as they say) if his mynde could so haue liked, or had ben giuē to the world as many other be. But the Lord which had elected him vnto a better function, and preordained him to preach the gospell of Christ in that houre of grace which in his secret counsell he had appointed, called this his chosen chyld to the vnderstandyng and pertakyng of the same Gospell of lyfe. In which call, he was so truely taught, that forthwith his effectuall call was perceyued by the frutes. For then Bradford did forsake his worldly affaires & forwardnes in worldly welth,* and after the iust accompt geuen to his Maister of all hys doyngs, he departed from hym, and with meruailous fauour to further the kyngdome of God by the ministry of his holy word,* he gaue himselfe wholly to the studye of the holy scriptures. The which his purpose to accomplish the better, he departed from the Temple at London, where the temporall law is studied, and went to the vniuersitie of Cambridge, to learne by Gods law how to further the building of the Lordes Temple. In Cambridge his diligence in study, his profiting in knowledge and godly conuersation so pleased all men, that within one whole yeare after that he had bene there, the Uniuersitie did geue hym the degree of a M. of Arte.

Immediately after the Maister and fellowes of Penbroke hal did geue him a felowship in their Colledge with them: yea that man of God Martin Bucer so lyked him,* that he had him not onely most deare vnto him, but also often tymes exhorted him to bestow his talent in preaching. Unto which Bradford aunswered alwayes, that he was vnable to serue in that office through want of learnyng. To the whiche Bucer was wont to reply, saying: If thou haue not fine manchet bread yet geue the poore people barly bread,* or whatsoever els the Lord hath committed vnto thee. And whiles Bradford was thus persuaded to enter into the ministry, Doctour Ridley that worthy Byshop of Lōdon and glorious Martyr of Christ, accordyng to the order that then was in the Church of England called hym to take the degree of Deacon.* Which order because it was not without some such abuse as to the whiche Bradford would not consent, the Byshop yet perceauyng that Bradford was willing to enter into y^e ministry, was content to order him Deacon without any abuse, euen as he desired. This beyng done, he obteyned for him a licence to preache, and did geue him a Prebend in his Cathedrall Church of Saint Paules.

In this preaching office by the space of three yeaes, how faithfully Bradford walked, how diligently he labored, many partes of England can testify. Sharply he opened and reprobued sinne, sweetely he preached Christ crucified, pithily he impugned heresies and errorrs, earnestly he persuaded to godly life. After the death of blessed yong King Edward the sixt, when Queene Mary had gotten the crowne, still continued Bradford diligent in preaching Page 1604 vntil he was vniustly depriued both of his office & libertie by the Queene and her Councell. To the doying whereof, because they had no iust cause, they tooke occasiō to do this iniurie for such an acte, as among Turkes and Infidels would haue bene with thankfulnes rewarded,* and with great fauour accepted, as in deed it did no lesse deserue.

The fact was this. The xiiij. day of August, in the first yere of the raigne of Queene Mary, M. Bourne then B. of Bath, made a seditious sermon at Paules crosse in Lōdon, as partly is declared before, pag. to set popery abroch, in such sort that it mooued the people to no small indignation, beyng almost ready to pull hym out of the pulpit. Neither could the reuerence of the place, nor the presence of the B. Boner, who then was his maister, nor yet the commandement of the Maior of London, whō the people ought to haue obeied, stay their rage: but the more they spake, the more the people were incēsed. At length Bourn seyng the people in such a moode, and himselfe in such peril (whereof he was sufficiently warned by the hurlyng of a drawen dagger at hym as he stode in the pulpit) and that he was put from endyng his sermon, fearing least against his will, hee should there ende his wretched lyfe, desired Bradford who stood in y^e pulpit behynd him, to come forth and to stande in his place and speake to the people.* Good Bradford at his request was content, and there spake to the people of godly and quiet obedience. Whome as soone as the people saw to beginne to speake vnto them, so glad they were to heare him, that they cried with a great shout: Bradford, Bradford, God saue thy life Bradford: well declaring not only what affectiō they bare vnto him, but also what regard they gaue to his words. For after that he had entred a little to preach vnto them,* and to exhort them to quiet & pacience, eftsoones all the raging ceased, and they in the end quietly departed ech man to his house. Yet in the meane season (for it was a long tyme before that so great a multitude could all depart) Bourne thought (and truely) himselfe not yet full sure of his lyfe till he were safely housed, notwithstanding, that the Maior & Shirifes of London were there at hand to helpe him. Wherefore he desired Bradford not to depart from him till hee were in safetie:* which Bradford according to his promise performed. For while the Maior and Shiriffes did leade Bourne to the Scholemaisters house, which is next to the pulpit, Bradford went at his backe, shadowyng him from the people with his gowne, and so to set him safe.

Let the Reader now consider the peril of Bourne, the charitie of Bradford, and the headines of the multitude, & also the grudging myndes of certaine, which yet still there remayned behind, greeued not a little theyr mindes, to see that so good a man should saue y^e life of such a popish priest, so impudently and openly rayling against K. Edward. Among whō, one gentlemā sayd these words:

Ah Bradford, Bradford, thou sauest him y^t wil help to burne thee. I geue thee his life: if it were not for thee, I would (I assure thee) t• him through with my sword. Thus Bourne for that tyme, through Bradfordes meanes escaped bodily death: but God hath his iudgement to be shewed in the tyme appoynted.*

The same sonday in the after noone Bradford preached at the Bow church in Cheapside, and reprov'd the people sharply for theyr seditious misdemeanor. After this he did abide still in London with an innocent conscience, to try what should become of his iust doing.

Within three daies after he was sent for to the Tower of London, where the Queene then was, to appeare there before the counsell. There was he charged with this act of sauing of Bourne, which act they there called seditious, & also objected agaynst him for preaching, and so by them he was cōmitted first to the Tower, then vnto other prisons, out of the which neither his innocency, godlines, nor charitable dealing could purchase him liberty of body, till by death (which he suffred for Christes cause) he obteyned the heauenly liberty, of which neither Pope nor papist shall euer depriue him. From the Tower he came to the kinges Benche in Southwarke: and after his condemnation, he was sent to the Counter in the Poultry in London: in the which two places for the time he did remayne prisoner, he preached twice a day continually, vnlesse sicknes hindered him: where also the sacrament was often ministred, & thorow his meanes (the keepers so well did beare with him) such resort of good folkes was dayly to his lecture, and to the ministration of the sacrament, that commonly his chāber was well nigh filled therewith. Preaching, reading & praying was all his whole life. He did not eate aboue one meale a day: which was but very little when he took it: & his continuall study was vpon his knees. In the midst of dinner he vsed often to muse with himselfe, hauyng his hat ouer his eyes, from whence came commonly plenty of teares droppng on his trencher. Uery gentle her was <◇> man and childe, and in so good credite with his keeper, y^t at is desire,* in an euening (beyng prisoner in the kinges Bench in Soutwarke) he had licence vpō hys promise to returne agayne that night, to go into London without any keeper, to visite one that was sicke, lying by the Stilyard. Neither did he fayle his promise, but returned vnto his prison againe, rather preuenting his houre, then breaking his fidelitie: so constant was he in word in deede.

Of personage he was somewhat tall and slēder, spare of body, of a faint sanguine colour, w^t an Awburne beard. He slept not commonly aboue foure houres in the night: & in his bedde till sleep came, his booke went not out of his hand. His chief recreation was in no gaming or other pastime, but onely in honest company, & comely talke, wherein he would spend a little time after dinner at the bourde, and so to prayer and his booke agayne. He counted that houre not well spent, wherein he did not some good,* either with his pen, study, or in exhorting of others. &c. He was no niggard of his purse, but would liberally participate y^t he had to hys fellowe prisoners. And commonly once a weeke he visited the theeues, pickpurses, and such others that were with him in the prison where he lay, on the other side: vnto whō he would geue godly exhortation to learne the amendment of their liues by their troubles, and after that so done, distribute among them some portion of money to theyr comfort.

By the way this I thought not to conceale. While he was in the kinges Bench,* and Mayster Saunders in the Marshalsey, both prisoners, on the backside of those two prisons they mette many times, and conferred together when they would: so mercifully did the Lorde worke for them, euen in the middest of theyr troubles: and the sayde Bradford was so trusted with his keeper,* and had such libertie in the backside, that there was no day but that he might haue easily escaped away, if he would, but that the Lord had an other worke to doe for him. In the sommer tyme while he was in the sayd Kinges Benche, he had libertie of his keeper, to ryde into Oxfordshyre, to a Marchauntes house of his acquayntaunce, and horse and all thinges prepared for him for that iourney, and the partie in a readines that should ride with him: but God preuented him by sicknes that he went not at all.

One of his old friends and acquaintaunce came vnto him whilest he was prisoner, and asked hym, if he sited to get hym out, what then he would do, or whether he would go? Unto whom he made answer, as not caring whether he went out or no: but if he did, he said hee would marry,* and abyde still in England secretly, teaching the people as the tyme would suffer him, and occupy himselfe that way. He was had in so great reuerence and admiration wyth all good men, that a multitude which neuer knew him but by fame, greatly lamented his death: yea,* and a number also of the Papistes themselues, wished hartily hys lyfe. There were fewe dayes in which he was thought not to spend some tears before he went to bed,* neyther was there euer any prisoner with hym, but by his company he greatly profited, as all they will yet witnes, and haue confessed of hym no lesse, to the glory of God, whose societie he frequented, as among many, one speciall thyng I thought to note, which is this.

Bishop Farrer beyng in the kynges Bench prisoner, as before you haue hard, was trauailed withall of the Papists in the end of Lent, to receiue the sacrament at Easter in one kind, who after much perswading, yelded to them,* and promised so to do. Then (so it happened by gods prouidence) the Easter euen, the day before hee should haue done it, was Bradford brought to the Kings Benche prisoner, where the Lord making him his instrument▪ Bradford only was the meane that the said B. Farrer reuoked his promise and word, and would neuer after yeeld to bee spotted with that papisticall pitch: so effectually the Lord wrought by this worthy seruauant of his. Such an instrument was he in gods church, that few or none there were that knew him, but esteemed him as a precious iewell and Gods true messenger.*

The night before he was had to Newgate, which was the saterday night, he was sore troubled diuers tymes in his sleepe by dreams, how the chaine for his burning was brought to the Counter gate, and how the next day beyng Sonday, he should be had to Newgate, and on the Monday after burned in Smithfield, as in deed it came to passe accordingly, which hereafter shalbe shewed. Now he beyng vexed so often tymes in this sort with these dreames, about 3. of the clocke in the morning, hee waked hym that lay with hym, and told him his vnquiet sleepe, & what he was troubled withall. Then after a little talke, Maister Bradford rose out of the bed, and gaue hymselfe to his olde Page 1605 exercise of readyng and prayer, as alwayes he had vsed before: and at dinner according to his accustomed maner, he did eat his meat, and was very mery, no body being with hym from mornynge till night, but he that lay with hym, with whom he had many tymes on that day communication of death, of the kingdome of heauen, and of the ripenes of sinne in that tyme.

In the after noone they two walking together in the keepers chamber, sodainly the keepers wife came vp, as one halfe amazed,* & seeming much troubled, beyng almost wyndles said: Oh M. Bradford, I come to bring you heauy newes. What is that said he? Marry quoth she, to morow you must be burned, & your chaine is now a buying, & soone you must go to Newgate. With that M. Bradford put of his cap, and lifting vp his eyes to heauen, sayd: I thanke God for it: I haue looked for the same a long time, and therefore it commeth not now to me sodainly, but as a thing waited for euery day and houre, the Lord make me worthy therof: & so thanking her for her gentlenes, departed vp into his chamber, and called his friend with hym, who when he came thither, he went secretly himselfe alone a long tyme and prayed. Which done, he came agayne to him that was in his chamber, and tooke him diuers writings and papers, & shewed him his mind in those things what he would haue done, and after they had spent the after noone till night in many and sundry such things, at last came to him halfe a dosen of his friends more, with whom all the euening he spent the tyme in prayer and other good exercises, so wonderfully, that it was meruailous to heare and see his doyngs.

A little before he went out of the Counter, hee made a notable prayer of his farewell,* with such plenty of teares, and abundant spirit of praier, that it rauished the myndes of the hearers. Also, when he shifted himself with a cleane shirt that was made for his burning (by one M. Walter Marlars wyfe, who was a good nurse vnto him, & his very good friend) he made such a prayer of the wedding garment, that some of those that were present, were in suche great admiration, that their eyes were as throughly occupied in looking on hym, as their eares gaue place to heare his prayer.* At his departing out of the chamber, he made likewyse a prayer, and gaue money to euery seruaunt and officer of the house, with exhortation to them to feare and serue God, continually labouring to eschew all maner of euill. That done, he turned him to the wall and praied vehemently, that his words might not be spoken in vayne, but that the Lord would worke the same in them effectually,* for his Christes sake. Then beyng beneath in the Court, all the prisoners cried out to him and bid him farewell, as the rest of the house had done before with weping teares.

The time they caried him to Newgate, was about xj. or xij. a clocke in the night, when it was thought none would be stirring abroad: and yet contrary to their expectation in that behalfe,* was there in Chepeside & other places (betweene the Counter and Newgate) a great multitude of people that came to see him, which most gently bade him farewell, praying for him with most lamentable and pitifull teares, and he againe as gently bade them fare wel, praying most hartily for them & their welfare. Now, whether it were a commandement from the Queene and her counsaile, or from Boner and his adherentes, or whether it were merily deuised of the Lord Mayor, Aldermen, & Shiriffes of London, or no, I cannot tell: but a great noyse there was ouer night about the city by diuers, that Bradford should be burnt the next day in Smithfield, by 4. of the clocke in the mornyn,* before it should be greatly knowen to any. In which rumor many heads had diuers myndes: some thinking the feare of the people to bee the cause thereof. Other thought nay, that it was rather because the Papists iudged, his death would conuert many to the truth, and geue a great ouerthrowe to their kingdō. So some thought one thyng, and some another, that no iust coniecture of the cause could bee knowen that euer I heard yet. But this was certayne, the people preuented the deuise suspected: for the next day, at the said hower of 4. a clocke in the mornyn, there was in Smithfield such a multitude of men and women,* that many beyng in admiration thereof, thought it was not possible that they could haue warning of his death, being so great a number in so short tyme, vnlesse it were by the singular prouidence of almighty God.

Well, this tooke not effect as the people thought: for that mornynge it was ix. a clocke of the day, before Maister Bradford was brought into Smithfield: which in goyng thorow Newgate thitherward, spied a friend of his whō he loued, standyng on the one side the way to the Keepers houseward, vnto whom he reached his hand ouer the people, and pluckt him to hym, and deliuered to him from his hed, his veluet night cap, and also his handkerchief, with other things besides. Which after a little secret talke with hym, and ech of them parting frō other, immediately came to him a brother in lawe of hys, called Roger Beswike, which as soone as he had taken the sayde Bradford by the hand, one of the Shiriffes of London called Woodroft, came with his staffe and brake the sayd Rogers head, that the bloud ran about his shoulders. Which sight Bradford beholdyng with griefe, bade his brother farewell, willyng to commend hym to his mother, and the rest of his frends and to get hym to some Surgeon betymes: and so they departing, had little or no talke at all together. Then was he led forth to Smithfield with a great company of weaponed men, to conduct hym thither, as the lyke was not seene at no mans burning: for in euery corner of Smithfield there were some, besides those which stood about the stake. Bradford then beyng come to the place, fell flatte to the ground, secretly making his prayers to almighty god. Then rising agayne, and putting of his clothes vnto hys shirt, he went to the stake, and there suffered with a young man of xx. yeares of age, ioyfully and constantly, whose name was Iohn Leafe. Touchyng the order and maner of whose burnyng, more shal be sayd (God willyng) hereafter. In the meane tyme, we will now shewe foorth the sundry examinations, conflicts, and conferences betwene hym and other hys aduersaries, duryng the tyme of his imprisonment, which was in all, two yeares lacking one moneth and a halfe. Which examinations here follow to be declared.

It was before a little aboue declared, that Ioh. Bradford within three dayes after the Sermon of M. Bourne, was by the Counsaile committed to the Tower, where he remayned from the moneth of August, an. 1553. to the 22. day of Ianuary, an. 1555. vpon which day he was called out to examination before Ste. Winchester and other of the Commissioners. The effect of which examination and communication which passed betwene him & them, proceded in maner as followeth.

¶The effect of the communication betweene Iohn Bradford and the Lord Chauncellour, and other in Commission with him, the xxij. of Ianuary. Anno. 1555.

After the L. Chancellor and the residue of the Queens Counsaile in Commission with him, had ended there talke with M. Farrer late Bish. of S. Davids, the vnder marshall of the kings Bench was commaunded to bring in Iohn Bradford: who beyng come into the presence of the counsaile sittynge at a table, kneeled down on his knee, but immediately by the L. Chancellor was bidden to stād vp, and so he did.

When he was risen, the L. Chauncellor earnestly looked vpon him, to haue (belike) ouerfaced him: but he gaue no place, that is, he ceased not in like maner to looke on the L. Chauncellor still continually, saue that once he cast vp his eyes to heauenward, sighing for gods grace, and so ouerfaced hym.

L. Chauncellor.

Then the L. Chauncellor as it were amased, and something troubled, spake thus to him in effect: * that of long tyme he had bene imprisoned iustly for his seditious behaiour at Paules crosse, the xiiij. of August. an. 1553. for his false preachyng and arrogancie, takyng vpon hym to preache without authoritie. But now (quoth he) the tyme of mercy is come, and therefore the Queenes highnesse mynding to offer vnto you mercye, hath by vs sent for you, to declare and geue the same, if so be you wyll with vs returne: and if you wil do as we haue done, you shall find as we haue found, I warraunt you. This was the summe of his wordes, and in maner the same wordes which he spake.

Brad.

To these wordes Iohn Bradford spake (after reuerend obeisance made) in this maner. * My Lord & Lordes all, I confesse that I haue bene long imprisoned, & (wyth humble reuerence be it spokē) vniustly, for that I dyd nothing seditiously, falsly, or arrogantly, in worde or fact, by preaching or otherwise, but rather sought truth, peace, and all godly quietnes, as an obedient & faythfull subiect, both in goyng about to saue the Bish. of Bathe now, then M. Bourne, the preacher at the Crosse, and in preachyng for quietnes accordingly.

L. Chaunc.

At these words, * or rather before he had fully finished, the sayd L. Chauncellor somethyng snuffed, and spake with an admiration, that there was a loud lye: for (quoth he) the fact was seditious, as you my L. of London can beare witnes.

Page 1606

Boner.

* You say true my Lord: I saw him with mine own eyes, when he tooke vpon him to rule and leade the people malaparty, thereby declaring that he was the authour of the sedition.

Brad.

My Lordes, notwithstanding my Lord Byshope seing and saying, * yet the truth I haue told, as one day my Lord God almighty shall reueale to al the world, whē we shall all come & appeare before him: In the meane season, because I can not be beleued of you, I must and am ready to suffer, as now your sayinges be, what so euer God shall licence you to do vnto me.

L. Chaunc.

I know thou hast a glorious tongue, and goodly shewes thou makest: * but all is lyes thou speakest. And agayne, I haue not forgotten howe stubborne thou wast when thou wast before vs in the Tower, wherupon thou wast committed to prison concerning religion, I haue not forgotten thy behaiour and talke, wherthrough worthelye thou hast bene kept in prison, as one that woulde haue done more hurt then I will speake of.

Brad.

My Lord, as I said, I say again, that I stand as before you, so before God, and one day we shall all stand before him: the truth then will be the truth, though now you will not so take it. Yea my Lord, I dare say, that my Lord of Bath M. Bourne will witnesse with me, that I sought his safegarde with the perill of mine owne life, I thanke God therfore.

Boner.

That is not true: for I my selfe did see thee take vpon thee too much,*

Brad.

No, I tooke nothing vpon me vndesired, and that of Mayster Bourne himselfe, as if he were here present, I dare say he would affirme. For he desired me both to helpe him to pacifye the people, and also not to leaue him tyll he was in safety. And as for my behauour in the Tower, and talke before your honours, if I did or sayde any thing that did not beseeme me,* if your Lordships would tell me wherin it was, I should and would shortly make you answere.

Chaunc.

Well, to leaue this matter: how sayest thou now? Wilt thou returne againe, and do as we haue done, & thou shalt receiue the Queenes mercy and pardon?

Brad.

My Lorde, I desire mercye with Gods mercy, but mercy with Gods wrath, God keepe me from: Although (I thanke God therfore) my cōscience doth not accuse me, that I did speake any thing wherfore I should need to receiue the Queenes mercy or pardon. For all that euer I did or spake, was both agreyng to Gods Lawes, amd the lawes of the Realme at that present, and did make muche to quietnes.

Chaunc.

Well, if thou make this babling, rolling in thy eloquent tongue, and yet being altogether ignorant & vainglorious, and wilt not receiue mercy offered to thee, know for truth that the Queene is minded to make a * purgation of all such as thou art.

Brad.

The Lorde before whom I stand, as well as before you, knoweth what vaynglory I haue sought, and seek in this behalfe: his mercy I desire, and also would be glad of the Queenes fauour, to liue as a subiecte without clog of conscience. But otherwise the Lordes mercye is better to me then life. And I know to whom I haue committed my life, euen into his hands which will keep it, so that no man may take it away before it bee his pleasure. There are xij. houres in the day, and as long as they last, so long shal no man haue power theron. Therefore his good will be done: life in his displeasure is worse then death, and death in his true fauor, is true life.

Chaunc.

I know well enough that we shal haue glorious talke enough of thee: be sure therfore, that as thou hast deceiued the people with false and deuilish doctrine, so shalt thou receiue.

Brad.

I haue not deceiued the people, nor taughte any other doctrine, then by Gods grace I am, and hope shall be ready to confirme with my life.* And as for the deuilishnes and falsenes in the doctrine, I would be sory you coulde so proue it.

Dures.

Why, tell me what you say by the ministration of y^e Communion, as now you know i[•] is?

Brad.

My Lord, here I must desire of your Lordship and of all your honours a question, before I dare make you an answer to any interrogatory or question, wherewith you now beginne. I haue bene sixe times sworne that I shall in no case consent to the practising of any iurisdiction,* or any authoritye on the Bishoppe of Romes behalfe within this Realme of Englande. Nowe before God I humblye pray your honours to tell me whether you aske me thys question by his authority, or no? If you doe, I dare not, nor may aunswere you any thing in his authority, whiche you shall demaund of me, except I woulde be forsworne, which God forbid.

Sec. Bourn.

Hast thou bene sworne sixe times? what office hast thou borne?

Brad.

For sooth I was thrise sworne in Cambridge, when I was admitted Mayster of Arte, when I was admitted fellow of Penbroke hall, & when I was there, the Uisitors came thither, and sware the Uniuersitye. Agayne,* I was sworne when I entred into the Ministerye, when I had a Prebend geuen me, and when I was sworne to serue the king a litle before his death.

Chaunc.

Tush,* Herodes othes a man should make no cōscience at.

Brad.

But my Lord, these were no Herodes othes no vnlawfull othes, but othes according to Gods word, as you your selfe haue well affirmed in your booke De vera obedientia.*

M. Roch.

My Lordes (quoth an other of the Counsell that stode by the table,* Mayster Rochester I weene) I neuer knew wherefore this man was in prison before now: but I see well that it had not bene good that this man had bene abroad,) What the cause was that he was put in prison, I know not: but I now wel know that not without a cause he was and is to be kept in prison.

Bourne.

Yea it was reported this Parliament time by the Earle of Darbye, that he hath done more hurt by Letters,* and exhorting those that haue come to him, in Religion, then euer he did whē he was abroad by preaching. In his letters he curseth all that teach any false doctrine (for so he calleth that whiche is not according to that he taught) and most hartily exhorteth them to whom he writeth to continue styll in that they haue receyued by hym,* and suche lyke as he is. All which wordes diuers of the Coūsell affirmed. Wherunto the sayde M. Bourne added, saying: how saye you sir, haue you not thus seditiously writtē and exhorted the people?

Brad.

I haue not written, nor spoken any thing seditiously neither (I thanke God therfore) haue I admitted any sedious cogitation, nor I trust neuer shall do.

Bourne.

Yea, but thou hast written letters.

Chaunc.

Why speakest thou not? Hast thou not written as he sayth?

Brad.

That I haue written, I haue written.

South.

Lord God,* what an arrogant and stubborne boy is this, that thus stoutly and dallyingly behaueth himselfe be'fore the Queenes Counsel? Wherat one looked vpon an other with disdaynfull countenaunces.

Brad.

My Lordes and Maysters, the Lord God which is, and will be iudge to vs all, knoweth, that as I am certain I stand now before his maiesty: so with reuerence in hys sight I stand before you, & vnto you accordingly in words and gesture I desire to behaue my selfe. Yf you otherwyse take it, I doubt not but God in his time wil reueale it. In the meane season I shall suffer with all due obediēce your sayinges and doynge too, I hope.

Chaunc.

These be gay glorious woordes of reuerence: but as in all other thinges,* so herein also thou doest nothyng but lye.

Brad.

Well, I would God the author of truth, and abhorrer of lyes would pull my tong out of my head before you all, and shew a terrible iudgement on me here present, if I haue purposed, or do purpose to lie before you, whatsoeuer you shall aske me.

Chaunc.

Why thē doest thou not answere? Hast thou written such letters as here is objected agaynst thee?

Brad.

As I sayde, my Lorde, that I haue written, I haue written, I stand now before you, which eyther can lay my Letters to my charge or no:* if you laye anye thing to my charge that I haue written, if I deny it, I am then a lyer.

Chaunc.

We shall neuer haue done with thee, I perceiue now: be short, be short, wilt thou haue mercy?

Brad.

I pray God geue me his mercy, and if therwith you will extende yours, I will not refuse it, but otherwise I will none.

Here now was much adoe, one speaking this, and an other that of his arrogancy, in refusing the Queenes pardon, whiche shee so louingly did offer vnto him: whereto Bradford answered thus.

Brad.

My Lordes, if I may liue as a quiet Subiect without clog of conscience,* I shall hartily thanke you for your pardon: if otherwise I behaue my selfe, then I am in danger of the law: in the meane season I aske no more, but the benefite of a Subiect, till I be conuincd of transgression. I• I can not haue this, as hitherto I haue not had, Gods good will be done.

Chaunc.

Uppon these wordes my Lorde Chauncelloure beganne a long processe of the false doctrine wherwith the people were deceiued in the dayes of Kyng Edward,* and so turned the ende of his talke to Bradford, saying: Howe sayest thou?

Brad.

My Lorde, the doctrine taught in king Edwardes dayes, was Gods pure Religion, the which as I then beleued, so do I now more beleue it then euer I did, & therin I am more confirmed and readye to declare it by Gods grace,* euen as he will, to the worlde, then I was when I first came into prison.

Dures.

What religion meane you in king Edwards daies? What yeare of his raigne?

Brad.

Forsooth euen the same yeare (my Lord) that the king dyed, & I was a Preacher. Here wrote Secretary Bourne I wote not what.

Chaunc.

Nowe after a litle pausing, my Lorde Chauncellour beginneth agayne to declare,* that the doctrine taught in king Edwardes dayes, was heresy, vsing for probation & demonstration thereof, no scripture nor reason, but this: that it ended with treason and rebellion, so that (quoth he) the very end were enough to improue that doctrine to bee nought.

Brad.

Ah my Lord, that you could enter into Gods Sanctuary, and marke the end of this presēt doctrine that you now so magnify.

Chaunc.

What meanest thou by that? I weene wee shall haue a snatch of rebellion euen now.

Brad.

My Lord. I meane no such ende as you woulde gather: I meane an end which no man seeth, but such as enter into Gods Sanctuary. If a man looke on present thinges, he will soone deceiue himselfe.

*Here nowe did my Lorde Chauncellour offer agayne mercy, and Bradforde aunswered, as before: Mercy wyth Gods mercy should be welcome, but otherwise he woulde none. Whereupon the Lord Chauncellour did ryng a litle bell, belike to call in some body, for there was present none in maner, but onely those before named, and the Byshoppe of Worcester. Nowe when one was come in: it is best (quoth Mayster Secretary Bourne) that you geue the keper a charge of this fellowe. So was the vnder Marshall called in.

Chaunc.

*Ye shall take this man to you, and keep him close without conferēce with any man, but by your knowledge, and suffer him not to write any Letters. &c. for he is of an other maner of charge vnto you now, then he was before. And so they departed, Bradforde looking as chearefully as any man coulde doe, declaring thereby euen a desire to geue his life for confirmation of that he hadde taught and written.

¶The effect of the second examination of Iohn Bradford in S. Mary Oueries Church, before the Lord Chauncellour, and diuers other Bishops, the 29. of Ianuary. 1555.

*After the excōmunication of Iohn Rogers, Ioh, Bradford was called in, and standing before the Lord Chaūcellor & other Bishops set with him, the said Lord Chauncellor spake thus in effect.

L. Chaunc.

Where before the xxij. of Ianuarye, the sayde Bradford was called before them (said he) and they offered vnto him the Queenes pardon, although he had contēned the same, and further sayd, that he would stiffely and stoutly maintein & defend the erroneous doctrine taught in the dayes of K. Edward the sixt: yet in consideration that the Queenes highnes was wōderfull mercifull, they thought good eftsoones to offer the same mercy agayn, before it were too late: therefore aduise you well (sayd he) there is yet space and grace before we so proceed, that you be committed to y^e•ecular power: as we must do and will doe, if you will not folow the example of mayster Barloe and mayster Cardmaker,* whome he there commended, adding Oratoriously amplifications to moue the sayd Bradford to yeld to the religion presently set forth.

Brad.

After the Lord Chauncellours long talke, Bradford began on this sort to speake: My Lord, and my Lordes all as now I stand in your sight before you, so I humbly beseech your honours to consider, that you sit in the seate of the Lord, who (as Dauid doth witnesse) is in the congregations of Iudges, and sitteth in the midst of them iudging: and as you would your place to be now of vs taken as Gods place, so demonstrate your selues to folowe hym in your sitting, that is, seeke no guiltlesse bloud, nor hunt not by questions to bring into the snare, thē which are out of the same. At this present I stand before you guilty or giltles: if guilty, then proceed and geue sentence accordingly: if giltles, thē geue me the benefit of a subiect, which hytherto I could not haue.*

Chaunc.

Here the Lord Chauncellour replyed, and sayde, that the sayde Bradford began with a true sentence: Deus stetit in Synagoga. &c But (quoth he) this and al thy gesture declareth but hypocrisie and vayne glory. And further hee made much ado to purge hymselfe, that he sought no guiltles bloud, and so beganne a long processe how that Bradfordes fact at Paules Crosse was presumptuous, arrogāt, and declared a taking vpon him to lead the people, which could not but turn to much disquietnes, in that thou (speaking to Bradford) wast so pre•ract and stout in religion at that present. For the which, as thou wast then committed to prison, so hitherto thou hast bene kept in prison,* where thou hast written letters to no little hurte to the Queenes people, as by the report of the Earle of Darby in the Parliament house was credibly declared. And to this he added, that the sayd Bradford did stubbornly behaue hymselfe the last time he was before them: and therefore not for any other thing now I demaund of thee (quoth he) but of and for thy doctrine and religion.

Brad.

My Lord where you accuse me of hypocrisie & vaine glory, I must, and will leaue it to the Lordes declaration, which one day will open yours and my truth, and heartie meanings: in the meane season I will content my selfe with the testimonie of myne owne conscience, which if it yeld to hypocrisie, could not but haue God to be my foe also: and so both God and man were against me. As for my fact at Paules Crosse,* and behauiour before you at the Tower, I doubt not but God will reueale it to my comfort. For if euer I did thyng, which God vsed to publike benefite, I thinke that my deed was one, and yet for it I haue bene and am kept of long tyme in prison. And as for letters and religion, I aunswer, as I did the last tyme I was before you.

Chaunc.

There diddest thou say stubbornly and malaper•ly,* that thou wouldst manly maintaine the erroneous doctrine in K. Edwards dayes.

Brad.

My Lord, I said the last time I was before you, that I had sixe times taken an oth that I should neuer consent to the practising of any iurisdiction on the Bish. of Romes behalfe, and therefore durst I not aunswere to any thyng that should be demaunded so, least I should be forsworne, which God forbid. Howbeit, sauynge myne othe,* I sayde that I was more confirmed in the doctrine set forth publicly in the dayes of K. Edward, then euer I was before I was put in prison: and so I thought I should bee, and thinke yet still I shall be found more ready to geue my life as God will, for the confirmation of the same.

Chaunc.

I remember well that thou madest such adoe about needles matter,* as though the othe against the Bish. of Rome were so great a matter. So others haue done before thee, but yet not in such sort as thou hast done, for thou pretendest a consciēce in it, which is nothyng els but meere hypocrisie.

Brad.

My conscience is knowne to the Lord: and whether I deale herein hipocritically, or no, he knoweth. As I said therfore then my Lord, so say I agayne now: that for feare lest I should be periured, I dare not make answere to any thing you shal demaund of me, if my answering should cōsent to the confirming or practising of any iurisdiction for the Bishop of Rome here in England.

L. Chaunc.

Why, diddest thou beginne to tell that wee are Dij and sit in Gods place, and now wilt thou not make vs an aunswere?

Brad.

My Lord, I sayd, you would haue your place taken of vs now, as Gods place: and therefore I brought forth that piece of scripture, that ye might the more be admonished to folow God and his wayes at this present,* who seeth vs all, and well perceiueth, whether of cōscience I pretend this matter of the oth, or no.

L. Chaunc.

No, all men may well see thine hopocrisy, for if for thine othes sake thou diddest not answere, then wouldest thou not haue spokē as thou diddest, & haue answered me at the first: but now men well perceiue, that this is but a starting hole to hide thy selfe in, because thou darest not answere, & so wouldest escape, blinding the simple peoples eies, as though of conscience you did all you do.

Brad.

That which I spake at the first, was not a replication or an answere to that you spake to me: and therefore I needed not to laye for me mine othe. For I thoughte you woulde haue more wayed what I dyd speake, then you did: but when I perceiued you didde not consider it, but came to aske matter, whereto by answering I should consent to the practising of Iurisdiction on the Byshoppe of Romes behalfe here in Englande, and so bee forsworne:* then of conscience and simplicitie I spake as I doe yet agayne speake, that I dare not for conscience sake answere you. And therefore I seeke no starting hoales▪ nor goe about to blinde the people as God knoweth. For if you of your honours shall tell me that you doe not aske me anye thing whereby mine answering should consent to the practising of the Byshoppe of Romes Iurisdiction, aske mee wherein you will, and you shall here that I wyll aunswere Page 1607 <1 page duplicate> Page 1608 you as flatlye as euer any did that came before you. I am not afrayd of death, I thanke God: for I looke and haue looked for nothing els at your hands of lōg time, but I am afrayd when death commeth, I should haue matter to trouble my conscience by the guiltines of periury, & therfore do I answere as I do.

L. Chanc.

These be gay glorious wordes, full of hypocrisy and vayne glory, and yet doest thou not know that I sit here as Bishop of Winchester in mine owne Dioces, and therfore may do this which I do, and more too?

Brad.

My Lord, geue me leaue to aske you this question, that my cōscience may be out of doubt in this matter. Tell me here Coram Deo,* before God, all this audience beyng witnes, that you demaunde of me nothing whereby mine aunswering should consent to and confirme the practise of Iurisdiction for the Bishop of Rome here in England, & your honour shall heare me geue you as flat and as playn answeres briefly, to what so euer you shall demaūd me, as euer any did.

L. Chanc.

Here the Lord Chauncellour was wonderfully offended, and spake much, how that the Bishop of Romes authority needed no confirmation of Bradfordes aunswering, nor no suche as he was, and turned his talke to the people, how that Bradford folowed crafty couetous Marchauntes, which because they would lend no mony to their neighbors when they were in neede, woulde say that they had sworne oft that they woulde neuer lend any more mony, because theyr detters had so oft deceiued them. Euen so thou (quoth he to Bradford) doest at this present, to cast a myst in the peoples eyes, to bleare them with an heresye (which is greater and more hurtfull to the commō wealth then the other is) pretend thine othe, whereby the people might make a conscience, whereas they shoulde not. Why speakest thou not?

Brad.

My Lord, as I sayd, I say agayne: I dare not aunswere you for feare of periury, from which God defēd me: or els I could tell you that there is a difference betwene othes:* Some be according to fayth and charity, as the othe agaynst the Bishop of Rome, some be agaynst fayth & charity: as this: to deny by othe my helpe to my brother in his neede.

L. Chaunc.

Here my Lord Chancellor agayne was muche offended, still saying, that Bradford durst not aunswere and further made much ado to proue the othe agaynst the Byshop of Rome, that it was agaynst charity.

Brad.

But Bradford aunswered, that how so euer his honor tooke him, yet was he assured of his meaning, that no feare but the feare of periury made him vnwilling to aunswere. For as for my death my lord (quoth he) as I know there at 12. houres in the day, so with the Lord my time is appoynted. And when it shalbe his good time, then shall I depart hence: but in the meane season I am safe enough, though all the people had sworne my death. Into his handes I haue cōmitted it, and do: his good will be done. And sauing mine oth, I will aunswere you in this behalfe that the oth agaynst the Bishop of Rome was not, nor is not agaynst charity.

L. Chan.

How proue you that.

Brad.

Forsooth, I proue it thus.

¶Argument.

*Fe- Nothing is agaynst charity, whiche is with Goddes word, and not agaynst it.

sti- The othe agaynst the Bishop of Romes authoritye in England, is with Gods word, and not agaynst it:

no. Ergo, the othe against the Bishop of Romes authority in England is not agaynst charity.

L. Chanc.

Is it not agaynst Goddes worde that a manne should take a king to be supreme head of the church in his Realme?

Brad.

*No sauing still myne othe, it is not agaynst Gods word, but with it, being taken in suche sense, as it may bee well takē: that is, attributing to the kinges power the soueraignty in all his dominion.

L. Chanc.

I pray you, where finde you that?

Brad.

I finde it in manye places, but specially in the 13. to the Romanes, where S. Paule writeth: Euery soule to bee subiect to the superior power▪ but what power? Quae gladium gestat: The power verily which beareth the sword, which is not the spirituall, but the the temporall power. As Chrysost. full well noteth vpon the same place, which your honour knoweth better then I. He (Chrysostome I meane) there playnely sheweth that Bishops, Prophets, and Apostles are obedient to the temporall Magistrates.

L. Chaunc.

Here yet more the Lorde Chauncelloure was styrred, and sayd, how that Bradforde went about to deny all obedience to the Queene for his othe: and so (quoth he) this man would make Gods word a warrant of disobedience, for he will answere the queene on this sort, that whē she sayth, now sweare to the Bishop of Rome, or obey his authority: No (will he say) for I am forsworne, & to make the Queene no Queene.

Brad.

No, I goe not about to denye all obedience to the Queenes highnesse, but denying obedience in this part, if she should demaunde it. For I was sworne to Kyng Edward, not simply, that is,* not onely concerning his owne person, but also concerning his successors, & therfore in denying to do the queenes request herein, I deny not her authority, nor become disobedient.

L. Chanc.

Yes that thou doest: and so he began to tel a long tale, how if a man should make an oth to pay to me an hūdred poundes by such a day, and the man to whom it was due would forgeue the debt, the debter would say. No, you can not do it, for I am forsworne then.

Brad.

Here Bradford desired my Lord Chancellour not to trifle it, saying, that he wondred his honour would make solemne othes made to God, trifles in that sort: and make so great a matter concerning vowes (as they call it) made to the Bishop for Mariage of Priestes.

L. Chaunc.

At these wordes the Lorde Chauncellour was much offended, and sayd, he dyd not trifle: but (quoth hee) thou goest about to deny obedience to the Queene, which now requireth obedience to the Bishop of Rome.

Brad.

No, my Lorde, I doe not denye obedience to the queene, if you would discerne betwene Genus and Species.* Because I may not obey in this: Ergo, I may not obey in the other, is no good reason. As if a man let or sell a piece of his inheritance, yet this notwithstanding, all his inheritāce is not let or sold: & so in this case all obedience I deny not, because I deny obedience in this branch.

L. Chaunc.

I will none of these similitudes.

Brad.

I would not vse them, if that you went not about to perswade the people, that I meane that whiche I neuer meant: for I my selfe not onely meane obedience, but wyll geue ensample of all most humble obedience, to y^e queenes highnesse, so long as she requireth not obedience agaynst God.

L. Chaunc.

No, no, all men may see your meaning well enough. There is no man though he be sworne to the king that doth therefore breake his othe, if he afterwarde bee sworne to the French king and to the Emperour.

Brad.

It is true my lord: but the cases be not like. For here is an exception: thou shalt not sweare to y^e bishop of Rome at any time. If in like maner we were sworne: thou shalt not serue the Emperour. &c. you see there were some alteratiō and more doubt. But I beseech your honor remember what ye your selfe haue written, answering the obiections here agaynst in your booke De vera obedientia: Vincat modo diuini verbi veritas. i. Let Gods word and the reason therof beare the bell away.

L. Chaunc.

Here the Lorde Chauncelloure was throughly moued, and sayd still, how that Bradford had written seditious letters, and peruerted the people therby,* & did stoutly stand, as though he would defēd the erronious doctrine in king Edwardes tyme, against all men: and now (quoth he) he sayth, he dare not aunswere.

Brad.

I haue written no seditious letters. I haue not peruerted the people, but that which I haue writtē & spoken, that will I neuer deny, by Gods grace. And where your Lordshippe sayth, that I dare not aunswere you: that all men may know I am not afrayd, sauing myne othe, aske me what you will, and I will playnely make you answere by Gods grace, although I now see my life lyeth thereon. But Oh Lord, into thy handes I committe it: come what come wyll, onely sanctify thy name in me, as in an instrument of thy grace. Amen. Nowe aske what you will, and you shall see I am not afrayd,* by Gods grace flatly to answere.

L. Chaunc.

Well then, how say you to the blessed sacramēt? Doe you not beleue there Christ to be present concernyng his naturall body?

Brad.

My Lord, I do beleue that Christ is corporally present at and in the due administration of the sacrament. By this word (corporally) I meane that Christ is there presēt corporally vnto fayth.*

L. Chaunc.

Unto fayth? we must haue many mo wordes to make it more playne.

Brad.

You shall so: but first geue me leaue to speake two wordes.

L. Chaunc.

Speake on.

Brad.

I haue bene now a yeare and almost three quarters in Prison, and of all this tyme you neuer questioned with me hereabout,* when I might haue spoken my conscience franckly without perill: but now haue you a law to hang vp and put to death, if a man answeere freely, & not to your Page 1609 appetite: and so now you come to demaund this question. Ah my Lorde, Christ vsed not this way to bring men to fayth. No more did the Prophetes or Apostles. Remember what Bernard writeth to Eugenius the pope: Apostolos lego stetisse iudicandos,*sedisse iudicantes non lego. Hoc erit, illud fuit. &c. that is, I read, that the Apostles stode to be iudged, but I read not, that they sate to iudge. This shall be: that was. &c.

L. Chaunc.

Here the Lord Chauncellour was appalled, as it seemed, and sayde most gently, that hee vsed not thys meanes. It was not my doying (quoth he) although some there be, that thinke this to be the best way. For I for my part haue bene challenged for being too gentle oftentimes.* Which thing the Bishop of London confirmed, and so did almost all the audience, that he had bene euer to milde and too gentle.

Brad.

At which wordes Bradford spake thus. My Lorde, I pray you stretch out your gentlenes, that I may feele it, for hitherto I neuer felt it.

L. Chaunc.

As soone as euer he had spoken thus, the Lorde chancelor, belike, thinking that Bradford would haue had mercy and pardon, said, that with all his hart, not only he, but the Queenes highnes would stretch out mercy, if with them he would returne.

Brad.

*Returne my Lord? God saue me from that goyng backe: I meane it not so, but I meane, that I was three quarters of a yeare in the Tower: you forbad▪ me paper, pen, and ynke, and neuer in all that time, nor sithens did I feele any gentlenesse from you. I haue rather hytherto found, as I looked for extremitie. And I thanke God that I perceiue nowe ye haue kept me in prison thus long, not for any matter you had, but for matter you woulde haue. Gods good will be done.

Here was now diuers telling my Lord it was dinner tyme. And so he rose vp, leauing Bradford speaking, and saying that in the after noone they would speak more with hym.* And so was he had into the Uestry, and was there al that day till darcke night, and so was conueyed agayne to prison.

In the meane tyme, about iiij. of the clocke the same after noone, a gentleman called Mayster Thomas Hussey of Lincolneshyre, which was once an Officer in the Duke of Northfolkes house, did come into the Reuestrye to enquire for one Stoning: and when it was aunswered hym by the vndermarshals officers of the Kinges Benche, that there was none such, hee entred into the house, and tooke acquayntance of Iohn Bradford saying,* that he would cōmon and speake with him the nexte morning for olde acquayntance.

The next morning about 7. of the clocke, this gentleman came into the chamber wherein Iohn Bradford dyd lye, and being with him, hee began a long Oration, how that of loue & olde acquayntāce he came vnto him to speak that whiche he woulde further vtter.* You did (sayd he) so wonderfully behaue your selfe before the Lord Chauncellour and other Bishops yesterday, that euen the veriest enemyes you haue, did see that they haue no matter agaynst you: & therefore I aduise you speaking (as though it came of his owne good will without making any other man priuy, or any other procuring hym, as he sayd) this day (for anone you shall be called before them again) to desire a time and men to conferre withal, so shall all men thinke a wonderfull wisdom, grauity and godlines in you: and by this meanes you shall escape present daūger, which els is nearer then you beware of. To this Iohn Bradford aunswered:* I neither can nor will make any such request. For thē shall I geue occasion to the people & to all other to thinke that I doubt of the Doctrine which I confesse: the whiche thing I do not for therof I am most assured, and therefore I will geue no such offence.

As they were thus talking, the chamber doore was vnlocked and Doctour Seton came in, who when hee sawe Mayster Hussey:* what Syr (quoth he) are you come before me? O Lord sayd Bradforde in his hart to God, goeth the matter thus? This man tolde me, no man knew of his comming: Lorde geue me grace to remember thy Lesson, Cauete ab hominibus illis.*Beware of those men. &c. Caste not your pearles before dogges: for I see these menne be come to hunt for matter, that the one may beare witnes with the other.

Seton.

*Doctour Seton after some by talke of Bradfordes age, of his country & such like, began a gay and long sermō of my Lord of Canterbury, M. Latimer, and M. Ridley, and howe they at Oxforde were not able to aunswere any thing at all: and that therefore my Lord of Canterbury desired to confer with the Bishop of Duresme and others: al which talke tended to this end that Iohn Bradford should make the like sute, being in nothing to be cōpared in learning to my Lord of Canterbury.

Brad.

To this, Iohn Bradford briefly answered as he did before to Mayster Hussey.

Seton.

With this aunswere neither the Doctour nor Gentleman being cōtented, after many perswasions: M. Doctour sayd: I haue heard much good talke of you,* and euen yesternight a Gentleman made report of you at the Lorde Chaūcellors table, that ye were able to perswade as much as any that he knewe. And I (though I neuer hearde you preach, & to my knowledge neuer did I see you before yesterday) yet me thought your modesty was such, your behauior and talke so without malice and impacience, that I would be sory ye should do worse then my selfe. And I tell you further, I do perceiue my Lorde Chauncellour hath a fantasy towardses you: wherefore be not so obstinate but desire respite, and some learned man to conferre withall. &c.

Brad.

But Iohn Bradforde kept still one aunswere: I can not, nor I will not so offende the people. I doubt not,* but am most certayne of the doctrine I haue taught.

Seton.

Here Mayster Doctoure waxed hoate, and called Bradford arrogant, proud, vayneglorious, and spake like a Prelate.

Brad.

But Bradforde aunswere, beware of iudgyng, least ye condemne your selfe. But styll Mayster Doctour Seton vrge him, shewing hym how mercifull my Lorde Chauncellour was, and how charitably they enterteyned hym.

Brad.

I neuer sawe any iustice, muche lesse loue,* I speake for my part (quoth Bradford) in my Lorde Chauncellor. Long haue I bene vniustly imprisoned, and handled in the same vncharitably, & now my Lord hath no iust matter agaynst me.

This talke serued not the Doctors purpose: wherefore he went frō matter to matter, frō this point to that poynt. Bradford still gaue him the hearing, and aunswered not: for he perceiued that they both did come but to fish for som such thinges as might make a shew that my Lord Chaūcellor had iustly kept him in prison.

When all theyr talke took no such effect as they would or looked for. Mayster Hussey asked Bradford:* will ye not admit conference, if my Lord Chauncellour should offer it publickely?

Brad.

Conference, if it had bene offered before the law had bene made, or if it were offered, so that I might be at liberty to conferre, and as sure, as he with whom I should conferre, then it were something: but els I see not to what other purpose conference should be offered, but to defer that which will come at the length, and the lingering may geue more offēce, then do good. Howbeit, if my Lord shall make such an offer of his owne motion, I will not refuse to conferre with whom so euer he shall appoynt.

Mayster Doctour hearing this, called Bradford arrogant, proud, and whatsoeuer pleased him.*

Then Bradford perceiuing by them, that he shoulde shortly be called for, besought them both to geue him leaue to talke with God, and to beg wisdom and grace of him: for (quoth he) otherwise I am helpelesse: and so they with much add departed. Then Bradford went to God & made his prayers, whiche the Lorde of his goodnesse dyd graciously accept in his need, praised therfore be his holy name. Shortly after they were gone, Bradforde was lead to the foresayd church, and there taryed vncalled for, till eleuen of the clocke, that is, till Mayster Saunders was excommunicated.

The effect and summe of the last examination of Iohn Bradford in the Church of S. Mary Oueries.

After the excommunication of Laurence Saunders, Iohn Bradford was called in,* & beyng brought in before the Lord Chauncellour and other the Bishops there sitting, the Lord Chauncellour began to speake thus in effect: that Bradford being now eftsoones come before them would answere with modesty and humility,* and conforme himselfe to the Catholicke Church with them and so yet he might finde mercy, because they would be loth to vse extremity. Therefore he concluded with an exhortation, that Bradford would recant his doctrine.

After the Lorde Chauncellor had ended his long Oration, Bradforde began to speake thus: As yesterday I besought your honours to set in your sight the Maiesty and presence of God to followe him, which seeketh not to subuert the simple by subtle questions: so I humbly beseech euery one of you to do this day:* for that you know well enough that guiltles bloud wil cry for vengeance. And this I pray not your Lordships to do as one that taketh vpon me to condemne you vtterly herein, but that ye might bee more admonished to do that which none doth so muche as Page 1610 he should doe: For our nature is so much corrupt, that wee are very obliuio•s and forget•ull of God. Agayne, as yesterday I pretended mine othe and othes agaynst the Byshop of Rome, that I shoulde neuer con•ent to the practysing of anye iurisdiction for him or on his behalfe in the realme of England: so do I agayn this day, least I should be periured. And last of all, as yesterday the aunsweres I made were by protestation and sauing mine othe, so I would your honors should knowe that mine aunsweres shall be this day: and this I do, that when death (which I look for at your hands) shall come, I may not be troubled with the guiltines of periury.

L. Chaunc.

At which wordes the Lord Chauncellour was wroth,* and sayd, that they had geuen him respite to deliberate till this day, whether he would recant his errours of the blessed Sacrament, which yesterday (quoth he) before vs you vttered.

Brad.

My Lord you gaue me no time of any such deliberation, neither did I speake anye thing of the Sacrament which you did disalow. For when I had declared a presēce of Christ to be there to fayth, you went frō that matter to purge your selfe that you were not cruell, and so went to dynner.

L. Chaunc.

What? I perceiue we must beginne all agayne with thee.* Did not I yesterday tell thee playnely that thou mad•st a cōscience where none should be? Did not I make it playne that the oth against the Bishop of Rome was an •••awfull oth?

Brad.

No in deed my Lord: You sayd so, but you proued it not yet, nor neuer can do.

L. Chaunc

Oh Lord God, what a felowe art thou? Thou wouldest go about to bring into the peoples heades, that we, all the Lordes of the parliament house, the Knyghtes and Burgesses, and all the whole realme be periured. Oh what an heresy is this? here good people you may see what a senceles heretick this fellow is. If I should make an oth I would neuer help my brother nor lend him mony in his need,* were this a good aunswere to tell my neighbour desiring my helpe, that I had made an oth to the contrary, O that I could not do it?

Brad.

*Oh my Lord, discerne betwixt othes, that be against charity and fayth, and othes that be according to fayth and charity, as this is agaynst the byshop of Rome.

Chaun.

Here the Lord Chauncellor made much ado, and a long time was spēt about othes, which were good & which were euill, he captiously asking often of Bradford a direct aunswere concerning othes: which Bradford woulde not geue simply, but with a distinction. Wherat the Chauncellor was much offended: but Bradforde still kept him at the bay, that the oth agaynst the Bishop of Rome was a lawful oth, vsing thereto the Lord Chauncellors owne booke, de vera Obedientia, for confirmation.

At the length they came to this issue, who shoulde bee Iudge of the lawfulness of the othe:*, and Bradford sayd the word of God, according to Christs word. Ioh. 12. My word shall iudge, and according to the testimony of Esay and Mithe, that Goddes worde comming out of Ierusalem, shall geue sentence among the Gentiles. By this word (quoth Bradford) my Lord, I will proue the othe agaynst the byshop of Romes authority, to be a good, a godly, and a lawfull othe. So that the Lord Chauncellor left his holde, and as the other day he pretended a deniall of the queenes authority and obedience to her highnes, so did he now.

But Bradford, as the day before, proued that obediēce in this poynt to the Queenes highnesse, if she should demaund an othe to the Bishop of Rome, being denied, was not a * generall deniall of her authority and of obedience to her: no more (quoth he) thē the sale, gift, or lease of a piece of a mans inheritaunce proueth it a sale, gift or lease of the whole inheritaunce.

And thus much ado was made about this matter: The Lord Chauncellour talking much and vsing many examples of debt, of going out of the Towne to morow by oth, and yet tarying till Friday and suche like. Whiche trifling talke Bradford did touch saying: that it was a wonder his honor weyed conscience no more in this, and would be so earnest in vowes of Priestes Mariages made to bishops, and be careles for solemne othes made to God,* & to Princes. Summa, this was the end. The Lord Chauncellor sayd, the Queene might dispense with it, and didde so to all the whole Realme. But Bradford sayd, that the queenes highnes could do no more but remitte her right: as for the othe made to God, she could neuer remit, forasmuch as it was made vnto God.

L. Chaunc.

At which wordes the Lord Chauncellour chaded wonderfully, and sayd that in playne sence I sclaundered the Realme of periury: And therefore (quoth he to the people) you may see how thys felow taketh vpon him, to haue more knowledge and conscience,* then all the wise mē of England, and yet he hath no conscience at all.

Brad.

Well my Lorde, let all the standers by see who hath conscience. I haue bene a yere and an halfe in prison. Now before al this people, declare wherfore I was imprisoned, or what cause you had to punish me. You sayd y^e other day in your owne house, my Lord of London witnessing with you, that I tooke vpon me to speake to the people vndesired. There he sitteth by you, I meane my Lorde of Bathe, which desired me himselfe for the passiō of Christ,* I would speake to the people. Upon whose words, I commyng into the Pulpite, had like to haue bene slayne with a dagger (which was hurled at him, I thinke) for it touched my sleeue. He then prayd me I would not leaue him, & I promised him as lōg as I liued, I would take hurt before him that day, and so went out of the pulpit, and entreated with the people, & at length brought him my selfe into an house.

Besides this, in the afternoone I preached in Bowe church, and there going vp into the Pulpit, one willed me not to reprove y^e people,* for (quoth he) you shal neuer come downe aliue, if you doe it. And yet notwithstanding I dyd in that Sermon reprove theyr fact, and called it sedition at the least twenty times. For all which my doynge, I haue receiued this recompence, prison a yere and an halfe and more, and death now which you go about. Let all men be iudge where conscience is.

In speaking of these wordes, there was endeuour to haue letted it: but Bradford still spake on, & gaue no place till he had made an end, speake what they would. And thē the Lord Chauncellour sayd, that for all that fayre tale, his fact at the Crosse was nought.

Brad.

No, my facte was good,* as you your selfe did beare witnesse with me. For when I was at the first before you in the Tower, you your selfe dydde say that my facte was good, but (quoth you) thy mind was euill. Well (quoth I) then my Lord, in that you alow the fact and condemne my minde, for as muche as otherwise I canne not declare my minde to man, but by saying and doing, God one daye I trust will open it, to my comfort, what my mind was, and what yours is.

L. Chaun.

Here the Lord Chauncellour was offended,* and sayd, that he neuer sayd so. I (quoth he) had not so litle wit I trow, as not to discerne betwixt meaning & doing: And so brought forth litle to y^e purpose, many exāples to proue that men construe thinges by the meaning of men and not by theyr doinges. But when this woulde not serue, the• commeth he to an other matter, & sayd that Bradford was put in prison at the first, because he would not yeld nor be conformable to the Queenes Religion.

Brad.

Why my Lord, your honor knoweth, that you would not thē reason with me in religion, but sayd, a time should afterwards be found out, whē I should be talked withall. But if it were as your Lordship sayeth, that I was put in prison for religion? in that my religiō was then authorised by publick lawes of the realme, could cōscience punish me or cast me in prison therfore? Wherefore let all men be iudge in whom conscience wanteth.*

M• Cham.

Here came foorth M. Chamberleyne of Woodstocke and spake to my Lord Chauncellor how that Brad|ford had bene a seruing man and was with Maister Harrington.

L. Chaunc.

True, and did deceyue his Mayster of Seuen score pounds, and because of this he went to be a Gospeller and a Preacher (good people) and yet you see howe hee pretendeth conscience.

Brad.

My Lord, I sette my foote by his whosoeuer he be, that can come forth and iustly vouche to my face that euer I deceiued my Mayster. And as you are chiefe iusticer by office in England, I desire iustice vpon them that so slaūder me, because they can not proue it.

L. Chaunc.

Here my Lorde Chauncellour and M. Chamberleyne were smitten blanck, and sayd they heard it.* But quoth my Lord Chauncellour we haue an other maner of matter then this agaynst you: for you are an hereticke.

Lond.

Yea quoth the Bishop of London,* he did wryte letters to M. Pendleton which knoweth his hande as well as his owne, your honour did see the letters.

Brad.

That is not true, I neuer did wryte to Pendleton sithens I came to prison, and therefore I am not iustly spoken of.

Lond.

Yea, but you indited it.

Brad.

I did not, nor know not what you meane, and this I offer to proue.*

Here came in an other, I trow they call him, Maister Allen one of the Clerkes of the Councell, putting y^e Lord Chauncelor in remembrance of letters written into Lankyshire.

L. Chaun.

You say true: for we haue his hand to shew.

Page 1611

Brad.

I denye that you haue my hand to shewe of Letters sent into Lankyshyre, otherwise then before you all I wil stand to, and proue them to be good and lawfull.

Here was all answered, and then the Lord Chauncellour began a new matter. Syr (quoth he) in my house the other day you did most cōtemptuously contēne y^e queenes mercy, and further sayd, that you would mainteine the erroneous doctrine in king Edwards dayes against all mē, And this you did most stoutly.

Brad.

Well, I am glad that all men see now you haue had no matter to imprisō me afore that day iustly. Now say I, that I did not contemptuously contemne the Queenes mercy, but would haue had it (though if iustice might take place I neede it not) so y^t I might haue had it with Gods mercy, that is, without doing or saying any thing agaynst God and his truth. And as for maintenaunce of doctryne, because I cā not tell how you wil stretch this word maintenance, I will repeat agayne that which I spake, I sayd I was more confirmed in the Religion set forth in Kyng Edwardes dayes then euer I was: and if God so would, I trust I shoulde declare it by geuing my life for the confirmation and testification thereof. So I sayd then, and so I say now. As for otherwise to mainteine it, then pertaineth to a priuate person by confession, I thought not, nor thinke not.

L. Chaunc.

Well, yesterday thou didst mainteine false heresy concerning the blessed Sacramēt,* and therfore we gaue thee respite till this day to deliberate.

Brad.

My Lord, as I sayde at the first, I spake nothing of the Sacrament but that which you allowed, and therefore reproued it not, nor gaue me any time to deliberate.

L. Chaunc.

Why? diddest thou not deny Christes presence in the Sacrament?

Brad.

No, I neuer denyed nor taught, but that to fayth whole Christ, body and bloud was as presēt as bread and wine to the due receiuer.

L. Chan.

Yea, but doest thou not beleue y^t Christes body naturally & really is there, vnder the formes of bread & wine?

Brad.

My Lord, I beleue Christ is present there to y^e fayth of the due receiuer: as for transubstantiation I playnely & flatly tell you, I beleue it not.

*Here was Bradford called Diabolus, a slaunderer, for we aske no question (quoth my Lord Chauncellor) of transubstantiation, but of Christes presence.

Brad.

I denye not his presence to the fayth of the receiuer, but denye that he is included in the bread, or that the bread is transubstantiate.

B. Worcest.

If he be not included, how is he then present?

Brad.

Forsooth though my fayth can tell how, yet my toūg can not expresse it, nor you, otherwise then by fayth heare it, or vnderstand it.

Here was much adoe, now one Doctour standyng vp and speaking thus, and others speaking that, & the Lorde Chauncellour talking much of Luther,* Zuinglius, Oecolampadius: but still Bradford kept him at this poynt, that Christ is present to fayth: and that there is no transubstantiation nor including of Christ in the breade: but all thys would not serue them.

Therefore an other bishop asked this question, whether the wicked man receiued Christes very bodye or no?_ And Bradford answered playnly no. Wherat the Lord Chauncellour made a long Oration, how that it could not be that Christ was present, except that the euill man receyued it. But Bradford put away all his Oration in fewe wordes, that grace was at that present offered to his Lordshyp, although he receiued it not: So that (quoth he) the receiuing maketh not the presence, as your Lordshippe woulde inferre, but Gods grace, truth, and power is the cause of the presence, whiche grace the wicked that lacke fayth can not receiue. And here Bradford prayd my Lord, not to diuorce that which God had coupled together.* He hath coupled al these together: Take, eate, this is my body: he sayth not: See, peepe, this is my body: but take eate. So that it appeareth this is a promise depending vpon condition, if we take & eate.

L. Chaunc.

Here the Lord Chauncellour and the other byshops made a great ado, that Bradford had foūd out a toy that no man els euer did, of the conditiō, & the Lord Chaūcellour made many wordes to the people there about.

Brad.

*But Bradford sayd thus: My Lord, are not these wordes, Take, eate, a commaundement? And are not these wordes, This is my body, a promise? If you will challenge the promise, and do not the commaudemēt, may you not deceiue your selfe?

L. Chaunc.

*Here the Lord Chauncellour denyed Christ to haue commaunded the Sacrament, and the vse of it.

Brad.

Why my Lord I pray you tell the people what mood Accipite, Māducate is: Is it not playne to children, y^t Christ in so saying commaundeth?

L. Chaunc.

At these wordes the Lord Chauncellour made a great toying and trifling at the imparatiue mood and fel to paresing or examining, as he should teach a childe: * & so concluded that it was no cōmaundemēt: but such a phrase as this, I pray you geue me drinke, which (quoth he) is no commaundement I trow.

Brad.

But Bradforde prayed him to leaue toying and trifling, and sayd thus: My Lord, if it be not a commaundement of Christ to take and eate the Sacrament, why dare any take vpon them to commaund and make that of neces'sity, which God leaueth free? as you do in making it a necessary commaundement, once a yeaere for all that be o• discretion to receiue the Sacrament.

L. Chaunc.

Here the Lord Chauncellour called him agayn *Diabolus or Calumniator, and began out of these wordes: Let a man proue himselfe, and so eate of the breade, (yea breade quoth Bradforde) and drinke of the cuppe, to prooue that it was no commaundement to receiue the Sacrament. For then (quoth he) if it were a cōmaundement, it should bind all men in all places, and at all times.

Brad.

O my Lord, discerne betwene commaundementes: * some be so generall, as the ten commaundemēts: that they binde alwayes, in all places, and all persons: some be not so generall: as this is of the Supper, the Sacrament of Baptisme, of the thrise appearing before the Lord yeaerly at Ierusalem, of Abraham offering of Isaac. &c.

Here my Lord Chauncellour denied the cup to be cōmaunded of Christ, for then (quoth he) we should haue eleuen commaundementes.

Brad.

In deed I thinke you thinke as you speake, for els would you not take the cup from the people, in that Christ sayeth: Drinke ye of it all. But howe saye you my Lordes: Christ sayth to you Bishops especially: Ite praedicate Euangelium. i. Go and preach the Gospell: Feede Christes flocke. &c. Is this a commaundement or no?

L. Chaun.

Here was my Lord Chauncellour in a chase, * and said as pleased him.

Duresme.

An other, the Bishop of Duresme I weene asked Bradford when Christ began to be present in the Sacrament? whether before the receiuer receiued it, or no?

Brad.

Bradford aunswered, that the question was curious and not necessary: and further sayd,* that as the cuppe was the newe Testament, so the breade was Christes bodye to hym that receiueh it duely, but yet so that the breade is bread. For (quoth he) in all the Scripture, you shall not finde this proposition, Non est panis, there is no bread. And so he brought forth Chrisostome: Si in corpore essemus. Homel. 83. in Mat. 34. Summa, much ado was hereaboutes, they calling Bradford hereticke, and hee desiring them to proceede on in Gods name, be looked for that which God had appoynted for them to do.

L. Chaunc.

This fellow is now in an other heresy of fatall necessity, as though all thinges were so tied together, that of mere necessity all must come to passe.

Brad.

But Bradford prayd him to take thinges as they be spoken, and not wrast them into a contrarye sence.* Your Lordship (quoth he) doth discerne betwixt God and man. Thinges are not by fortune to God at any tyme, though to man they seeme so sometimes. I speake but as the Apostles sayd: Lord (quoth they) see how Herode and Pontius Pilate, with the Prelates are gathered together agaynst thy Christ, to do that which thy hand and counsell hath before ordeyned for them to do.

L. Chaun.

Here began the Lord Chauncellour to read the excommunication. And in the excommunication, when he came to the name of Iohn Bradford Laicus, lay man: why (quoth he) art thou no Priest?

Brad.

No, nor neuer was, either Prieste, either benefited, either maryed, either any Preacher▪ afore publicke authority had established Religion, or Preacher after publicke authority had altered Religiō, and yet I am thus handled at your handes: but God, I doubt not, will geue his blessing where you curse. And so he fell downe on his knees, and hartily thanked God, that he counted him worthy to suffer for his sake.* And so praying God to geue him repētance, and a good minde, after the excommunication was read, he was deliuered to the Shyriffe of London, & so had to the Clincke, and after to the Counter in the Poultry in the same City of London, this being then purposed of his murtherers, that he should be deliuered from thēce to the Earle of Darby, to be cōueyed into Lankeshyre, and there to be burned in the towne of Manchester, where he was borne: but theyr purpose concerning the place was afterward altered: for they burned him in London.

After the condemnation of M. Bradford, which was the last day of Ianuary, M. Bradford being sent into pryson, dyd there remayne vntill the fyrst day of Iuly, during Page 1612 all which time, diuers other conferences and conflicties he susteineth with sondry aduersaries, whiche repayed vnto him in the prison. Of whom first byshop Boner comming to the Counter to disgrace D. Taylor, the 4. daye of February entred talk with y^e said M. Bradford: y^e effect wherof here ensueth.

¶Priuate talke had with Iohn Bradford, by such as the Prelates sent vnto him, after the time of condemnation, by his own writing.

*VPpon the 4. of February, that is, the same day M. Rogers was burned, Bonor bishop of London came to y^e Counter in the Poultry to disgrace M. Doctor Taylor about one of y^e clocke at after noone. But before he spake to M. Taylor, he called for Iohn Bradford which was prisoner there whome when he saw, he put of his cap and gaue him his hand, saying: because I perceaue that ye are desirous to conferre with some learned men, therefore I haue brought M. Archdeacon Harsfield to you. And I tel you you doe like a wise man. But I pray you goe roundly to worke: for the time is but short.

Bradford.

*My Lorde as roundly as I can I will goe to worke with you: I neuer desired to conferre with any mā, nor yet do. Howbeit if ye will haue one to talke with me, I am ready.

Boner.

What (quoth the Byshop in a fume to the keeper) did you not tell me that this man desired conference?

Keeper.

No my Lord, I told you that he would not refuse to conferre with any: but I did not say that it is his desire.

Boner.

Wel, M. Bradford, you are welbeloued, I pray you consider yourselfe, & refuse not charitie when it is offered.

Bradford.

*In deede my Lord, this is small charitie, to condemne a man as you haue condemned me, whiche neuer brake your lawes. In turky a man may haue charitie, but in England I could not yet finde it. I was condemned for my fayth, so soon as I vttered it at your requests, before I had committed any thing agaynst the lawes. And as for conference I am not afrayd to talke with whom you will. But to say that I desire to conferre, that do I not.

Boner.

Well, well. And so he called for M. Taylour and Bradford went his way.

An other priuate matter of talke betweene M. Bradford and Willerton, Creswel, Harding Harpsfield, and other moe.

VUpon an other day of February one, M. Willerton, a Chapleine of the bishop of London,* did come to confer with Bradford: but when he perceaued that Bradford desired not his comming, and therfore wished rather his departing them abiding, well maister Bradford (quoth hee) yet I pray you let vs conferre a litle: perchaunce you may do me good, If I can doe you none: Upon which wordes Bradford was content, and so they began to talke. Willerton spake much of the Doctours, the fathers, of the bread in the 6. chapter of Sainct Iohn. &c. labouring to proue transubstantiation, and that wicked men doe receaue Christ.

But Bradford on the contrary part improued hys authorities, so that they came to this issue, that Willerton should draw out of the scriptures and Doctours hys reasons, and Bradford would peruse them: and if hee coulde not answere them, then he would geue place. Likewyse should Bradford draw out his reasons out of the scriptures and Doctours, to which Willerton shoulde answere if he could: and so for that day they departed.

The next day following in the morning, Willerton sēt halfe a sheete of paper written on both sides,* contaynyng no reasons howe he gathered his doctrine, but onely bare sentēces: Panis quem ego dabo. &c. The bread which I wil geue is my fleshe: And the places in the 26. of Mathewe 14. of Marke. 22. of Luke, and the 10. and 11. to the Corinthians, with some sentences of the Doctours: All whiche made as much agaynst hym, as with hym.

*In the after noone he came himself, and there they had a long talke to little effect. At the length Willerton began to talk of the Church, saying that Bradford swerued from the Church.

Brad.

No, that I do not, but ye doe. For the * Churche is Christes spouse, and Christes obedient spouse, which your Church is not, which robbeth the people of the Lords cup, and of seruice in the English tongue.

Willerton.

Why? it is not profitable to haue the seruice in English: for it is written: Labia Sacerdotis custodiunt legem. The lips of the Priest should keepe the law, and out of his mouth man must looke for knowledge.

Bradford.

Soulde not the people then haue the scriptures? Wherefore serueth this saying of Christ: Searche the Scriptures?

Willerton.

This was not spoken to the people, but to the Scribes and learned men.

Brad.

Then the people must not haue the scriptures.*

Willerton.

No, for it was written: Erunt docti a Deo: They shalbe all taught of God.

Brad.

And must we learne all at the priestes?

Willerton.

Yea.

Brad.

Then I see you would bring the people to hang vp Christ and let Barrabas goe: as the priestes did then perswade the people. At whiche wordes, Mayster Willerton was so offended that he had no lust to talke any more.* In the end Bradford gaue him the reasons which he had gathered agaynst transubstantiation, & prayed him to frame his into the forme of reasons, and then, quoth Bradford, I will aunswere them.

Willer.

Well I will do so. But first I wil answere yours. The which thing vntill this day he hath not done.

Upon the 12. of February there came one of the Earle of Darbies seruantes to Bradford, saying:* My Lord hath sent me to you: he willeth you to tender your selfe, and he would be good Lord vnto you.

Bradford.

I thanke his Lordship for his good will toward me: but in this case I can not tender my selfe more then Gods honour.

Seruaunt.

Ah M. Bradford, consider your mother, sisters, frendes, kinsfolke, and country, what a great discomfort it wilbe vnto them to see you dye as an hereticke.

Brad.

I haue learned to forsake father, mother, brother sister, friend, and all that euer I haue,* yea euen mine owne selfe, for els I cannot be Christes Disciple.

Seruaunt.

If my Lord shuld obtayne for you that ye might depart the Realme, would ye not be content to be at the Queenes appoyntment, where shee would appoynt you beyond the sea?

Bradford.

No,* I had rather be burned in England then be burned beyond the seas. For I know that if she should sēd me to Paris, Louaine, or some such place, forthwith they would burne me.

Talke betweene Maister Bradford and one Percevall Creswell, and after that with Doctour Harding.

Vpon the 14. of February, Perciuall Creswell,* an olde acquayntaunce of Bradfordes came to him, bryngyng with him a kinsman of Mayster Fecknams, who after ma'ny wordes sayd.

Creswell.

I pray you let me make labour for you.

Bradford.

You may do what ye will.

Creswell.

But tell me what sute I should make for you.

Brad.

Forsooth that ye wil do, do it not at my request, for I desire nothing at your handes.* If the Queene will geue me life, I will thanke her. If she will banishe me, I will thanke her. If shee will burne me, I will thanke her: If she will condemne me to perpetuall prisonment. I wyll thanke her.

Hereupon Creswell went away,* and about a xi. of the clocke he and the other man came againe, & brought a booke of Mores making, desiring Bradford to read it ouer.

Bradford:

taking the booke, sayde: Good perciuall, I am setled for being moued in this article.

Creswell.

Oh, if euer ye loued me, do one thing for me.

Bradford.

What is it.

Creswell.

Desire and name what learned man or men yee will haue to come vnto you. My Lord •o York, my Lord of Lincolne, my Lorde of Bath, & others will gladly come vnto you.

Brad.

No, neuer will I desire them or anye other to come to conferre with me, for I am as certayne of my doctrine as I am of any thing, But for your pleasure, and also that all men may knowe I am not ashamed to haue my fayth •ifted and tryed, bring whom ye will, and I will talk with them, So they went their way.

About 3. of the clocke in the after noone Mayster Doctor Harding,* who was then the B. of Lincolns Chaplayn came to Bradford, and after a great and solemne protestation, shewing how y^t he had prayed to God before he came to turne his talke to Bradfords good, hee began to tell of the good opinion he had of Bradford, and spent the time in such tratling, so that their talke was to little purpose: saue that Bradford praied him to consider from whence he was fallen, and not to folow the world, nor to loue it: For the loue of God is not where the world is.

Harding.

But Harding counted Bradford in a damnable Page 1613 estate, as one being out of the church, & therefore willed him to take heede of his soule, & not to dye in such an opinion.

Brad.

What M. Harding, quoth Bradford? I haue heard you with these eares maintaine this that I stand in.

Harding.

I graunt that I haue taught that the doctrine of transubstantiation was a subtill doctrine, but otherwise I neuer taught it. And so he enueying against mariages of Priestes,* and namely against Peter Martyr. Martin Bucer, Luther, and such, which for breaking theyr vowes were iustly geuen vp into heresies (as he sayd) Bradford seyng him altogether geuen vp to Popery, after admonishment therof, bad him farewell.

Talke betweene D. Harpsfield Archdeacon, and Mayster Bradford.

*VPon the xxv. of February Perciuall Creswell came w^t M. Harpsfield Archdeacon of London, and a seruaunt wayting vpon him. After formall salutations, he made a long Oration, of which this is a short summe: That al mē euen the infidels, Turkes, Iewes, Anabaptistes, and Libertines desire felicitie as well as the Christians, and how that euery one thinketh they shall attayne to it by their religion. To which Bradford answered briefly, that he spake not farre amisse.

Harps.

Then sayd Harpsfield, but the way thither is not al alike.* For the infidels by Iupiter, Iuno, the Turke by hys Alcoran: the Iew by his Thalmod, doe beleue to come to heauen, For so may I speake of suche as beleue the immor^talitie of the soule.

Brad.

You speake truely.

Harps.

Well, then here is the matter, to know the way to this heauen.

Brad.

*We may not inuent any manner of wayes. There is but one way, & that is Iesus Christ, as he himselfe doth witnesse: I am the way.

Harps.

It is true that you say, and false also. I suppose that you meane by Christ, beleuing in Christ.

Brad.

I haue learned to discerne betwixt fayth & Christ, Albeit I confesse, that who so beleueth in Christ, the same shall be saued.

Harps.

No not all that beleue in Christ: for some shall say Lord, Lord, haue not we cast out deuils. &c. But Christ wil an^swere in the day of Iudgement to these: Depart from me, I know you not.

Brad.

You must make a difference betwixt beleuing, and saying I beleue,* As for example: if one shuld say & sweare hee loueth you, for all his saying yee will not beleue hym when you see he goeth about to vtter and do al the euill against you that he can.

Harps.

Well, this is not much material. There is but one way Christ. How come we to know him?
Where shall we seek to find him?

Brad

Forsooth, we must seek him by his word, and in his word, * and after his word.

Harpsfield.

Very good, but tell me now how first we came into the company of them that could tell vs this, but by Baptism?

Brad.

Baptism is the sacrament, by the which outwardly we are engrafted into Christ: I say outwardly, because I dare not exclude from Christ all that dye without Baptism. I will not tie God, where he is not bound. Some Infantes dye, whose Parentes desire Baptism for them, and can not haue it.

Harps.

To those we may thinke perchance that God will shew mercy.

Brad.

Yea, the children whose parentes do contemne baptism, will not I condemne, because the childe shall not beare the fathers offence.

Harpsfield.

Well, we agree that by Baptism then wee are brought, * and, as a man would say, begotten to Christ. For Christ is our father, and the church his spouse is our mother. As all men naturally haue Adam for their father, and Eve for their mother: so all spirituall men haue Christ for their father, and the Church for their mother. And as Eve was taken out of Adams side, so was the Church taken out of Christes side: whereout flowed blood for the satisfaction and purgation of our sinnes.

Brad.

All this is truly spoken.

Harps.

*Now, then tell me whether this Church of Christ hath not bene alwayes?

Brad.

Yea, sithens the creatiō of man, and shall be for euer.

Harps.

Uery good. But yet tel me whether this Church is a visible Church, or no?

Bradford.

It is no otherwise visible, then Christ was here on earth: that is, by no exteriour pompe or shewe that setteth her forth commonly, and therefore to see her wee must put on such eyes, as good men put on to see & know christ when hee walked here on earth: for as Eue was of y^e same substaunce that Adam was of, so was the Church of the same substaunce that Christ was of, flesh of his flesh, & bone of his bones, as Paule sayth, Ephes 5. Looke therfore how Christ was visibly knowne to be Christ when he was on earth, that is, by considering hym after the word of GOD so is the Church knowne.

Harps.

I do not come to reason at this present, & therefor• I will goe on forward.* Is not this Church a multitude?

Brad,

Yes that it is. Howbeit, lat•t anguis in herba, as the Prouerbe is. For in your question is a subtiltie. What visible multitude was there in He•ias tyme, or whē Moses was on the Mount, Aaron and all Israell worshipping the Cal•e?

Harps.

Ye diuert from the matter.

Brad.

No, nothing at all. For I doe preuent you, knowing well where about you go. And therfore f•wer wordes might well serue if that you so would.

Harfsfield.

Well, I perceauē you haue knowledge, and by a litle perceiue I the more. Tel me yet more, whether this multiude haue not the Ministry or preachyng of Gods worde?

Bradford.

Syr, ye goe about the bushe. If ye vnderstande Preaching for confessing the Gospel, I will go with you: for els if you will, you may knowe that persecution often letteth preaching.

Harps.

Well, I meane it so. Tell mee yet more: hath it not the Sacramentes administred?

Brad.

It hath the sacramentes, howbeit the administratiō of them is often letted. But I wil put you from your purpose, because I see where about you goe. If heretickes haue Baptisme and doe Baptise, as they did in S. Ciprians tyme, you knowe this Baptisme is Baptisme, & not to be reiterate. This Bradford did speake, that the stāders by might see, that though the Papistes Church haue baptisme which we haue receiued of them, yet therfore it is not the true Church, neither neede we to be baptised againe.

Harps.

You goe farre from the matter, and I perceiue you haue more errours then one.

Brad.

So you say: but that is not enough til you proue thē.

Harps.

Well, this Church is a multitude. Hath it not the preaching of the Gospell, & the ministratiō of the Sacraments? & yet more: hath it not the power of Iurisdiction?

Bradford.

What iurisdiction is exercised in persecution and affliction?

Harps.

I meane by iurisdiction admonishing one an other and so forth.

Brad.

Well, go to: what then?

Harps.

It hath also succession of Byshoppes. And here he made such a doe to proue y^t this was an essentiall poynt.

Bradford.

You say as you woulde haue it: for if this parte fayle you, all the Church y^t you go about to set vp will fall down.* You shall not finde in all y^e scripture this your essētiall parte of succession of Byshops. In Christes Church Antichrist will sit. And Peter telleth vs, as it went in the old Church afore Christes cōming, so will it be in the new church sithen Christes cōming: that is, as there were false Prophets, & such as bare rule were aduersaries to the true Prophets: so shall there be (sayth he) (false teachers, euen of such as are Byshops, and beare rule amongst the people.

Harps.

You go alwayes out of the matter: but I will proue further the succession of Byshops.

Bradford.

Do so.

Harps.

Tell me, were not the Apostles Byshops?

Brad.

No, except you will make a new definition of a Byshop, that is, geue him no certayne place.

Harps.

In deede, the Apostles office was not the Byshops office: for it was vniuersall, but yet Christ instituted Byshops in his church as Paule saith: he hath geuē Pastors, Prophetes. &c. so that I trow it be proued by the Scriptures the succession of Byshops to be an essentiall poynt.

Brad.

The Ministerie of Gods worde, and Ministers, be an essentiall poynt. But to translate this to the Byshops and their succession, is a plaine subiltie: And therfore that it may be playne, I will aske you a question. Tel me, whether that the Scripture knew any difference betwene Byshops and Ministers, which ye call Priestes?

Harps.

No.

Brad.

Well, then go on forewardes, and let vs see what ye shal get now by the succession of Byshops, that is, of Ministers, which can not be vnderstand of such Byshops as Minister not, but Lord it.

Harps

I perceiue that you are farre out of the way. By your doctrine you can neuer shew in your Church, a multitude which ministreth Gods word & his Sacramentes, which hath iurisdiction and succession of Byshops, which hath from tyme to tyme beleued as you beleue, beginning Page 1614 now and so going vpwardes as I will do of our doctrine and therefore are ye out of the church,* & so cannot be saued. Perchaunce you will bring me downwardes a shewe to bleare peoples eyes: but to go vpwardes, that you can neuer do, and this is the true tryall.

Brad.

*Yee must and will, I am assured, geue me leaue to follow the scriptures and examples of good men.

Harps

Yea.

Brad.

Well thē, Stephen was accused and condemned as I am, that he had taught new and false doctrine before the fathers of the Church then as they were taken. Stephen for his purgation improoueth their accusation. But how? doth he it by going vpwardes? no, but by cōming downwardes, beginning at Abrahā, and continuing still till Esayas tyme, and the peoples captiuitie. From whence he maketh a great leape vntill y^t time he was in, whiche was (I thinke) vpon a 400. yeares, & called them by their right names helhoundes, rather then heauen hounds. On this sort will I proue my fayth, & that can you neuer do yours.

Harfsfield.

*Yea sir, if we did knowe that you had the holye Ghost, then could we beleue you. Here Bradford woulde haue answered, that Steuens enemies would not beleue he had the holy Ghost, and therefore they did as they dyd: but as he was in speaking. M. Harps. arose vp, & the keeper and others that stode by, began to talk gently, praying Bradford to take heede to that maister Archdeacon spake, who still sayd that Bradford was out of the church.

Bradford.

Syr I am most certaine that I am in Christes Church, and I can shew a demonstration of my Religion from time to time continually.

God our father, for the name and bloud of his Christ be merciful vnto vs and vnto al his people, and deliuer them from false teachers, and blinde guydes, through whome (alas) I feare mee, much hurt will come to this realme of England. God our Father blesse vs, and keepe vs in hys truth and poore Church for euer. Amen.

Then the Archdeacon departed, saying that he would come againe the next morning.

¶The next dayes talke betweene Doctour Harpsfield and Maister Bradford.

Vpon the xvi. of February in the morning the Archdeacon and the other two with him came again,* and after a few by wordes spoken, they sate downe.

Harps.

Maister Archdeacon began a very long Oration, first repeting what they had said, and how farre they had gone ouer night, and therw^t did begin to proue vpwards succession of Bishops here in England for 800. yeares in Fraunce at Lyons for 1200. yeares:* in Spayne at Hispalen for 800. yeares. In Italy at Milan for 1200. yeares, labouring by this to proue his Church. He vsed also succession of Bishops in the East Church for the more confirmation of his wordes, and so concluded with an exhortation and an interrogation: the exhortation, that Bradford would obey this church: the interrogatiō, whether Brad-could shew any such succession for the demonstratiō of his Church (for so he called it) which followed.*

Bradford.

Unto this his long Oration Bradford made this short answere: my memory is euill, so that I cannot aunswere particularly your Oration.

Therefore I wil generally do it, thinking, because your Oration is rather to perswade then to proue, that a small aunswere will serue. If Christ or his Apostles being here on earth had bene required by the Prelates of the church then to haue made a demonstration of that church by succession of such high Priestes as had approued the doctrine which he taught,* I think that Christ would haue done as I do: that is, haue alledged y^t which vpholdeth the church euen, the veritie, y^e word of God taught & beleueed, not by the high Priests, which of long time had persecuted it, but by the Prophetes and other good simple men, which perchaunce were counted for heretickes of the Church: which Church was not tied to succession, but to the word of god. And this to thinke, S. Peter geueth me occasion, when he sayth that as it went in the Church before Christes comming, so shall it go in the Church after his comming: but then the pillers of the church were persecutors of the true Church: therefore the like we must looke for now.

Harps.

I can gather and proue succession in Ierusalem of the high Priestes from Aarons tyme.

Bradford.

I graunt, but not such succession as allowed the trueth.

Harps.

Why did they not allow Moses law?

Bradford.

Yes, and keepe it, as touchyng the bookes therof, as you doe the Bible, and holye Scriptures. But the true interpretation and meaning of it they did corrupt, as you haue done & doe, and therefore the persecution which they sturred vpp against the Prophetes and Christ, was not for the lawe, but for the interpretation of it. For they taught as you do now,* that we must fetch the interpretation of the scriptures at your handes. But to make an end death I looke dayly for, yea hourelly, and I think my time be but very short. Therefore I had need to spend as much tyme with God as I can whilst I haue it, for his helpe & comfort, and therefore I pray you beare with me that I do not now particularly and in moe wordes aunswere your lōg talk. If I saw death not so neare me as it is, I would then weigh euerye peece of your Oration, if you woulde geue me the summe of it, and I would answere accordingly: but because I dare not, nor I will not leaue of looking & preparing for that which is at hand, I shal desire you to hold me excused, because I do as I do, and hartely thanke you for youre gentle good will. I shall hartily praye God our father to geue you the same light and life I do wish to my selfe: & so Bradford began to arise vp.

Harps.

But then began Maister Archdeacon to tell hym that he was in very perilous case,* and that he was sory to see him so settled. As for death, whether it be nigh or farre of I know not, neither forceth it, so that you did die well.

Brad.

I doubt not in this case, but y^t I shall dye well: for as I hope and am certaine my death shall please the Lord so I trust I shall dye chearfully to y^e comfort of his childrē.

Harps.

But what if you be deceiued?

Bradford.

What if you shoulde say the sunne did not shyne now? (and the Sunne did shine through the windowe where they sat.)

Harps.

Well I am sory to see you so secure and carlesse.

Bradford.

In deed I am more carnally secure and carelesse then I shuld be: God make me more vigilant. But in this case I cannot be so secure, for I am most assured I am in y^e trueth.

Harpsfield.

That are ye not: for you are out of the Catholicke Church.

Bradford.

No, though you haue excommunicate me out of your Church, yet am I in the Catholicke Church of christ and am, and by Gods grace shalbe a childe & an obedient childe of it for euer. I hope Christ will haue no lesse care for me,* then he had for the blinde man excommunicated of the Synagoge: and further I am sure that the necessary Articles of the fayth, I meane the twelue Articles of the Creede, I confesse and beleue with that which you call the holy church, so that euen your church hath taken somthing to much vpon her to excommunicate me for that, which by the testimonye of my Lorde of Duresme in the booke of the sacrament lately put forth, was free many an hundred yeare after Christ, to beleue or not beleue.

Harps.

What is that?

Brad.

Transubstantiation.

Harps.

Why? ye are not condemned therfore onely.

Brad.

For that, and because I deny that wicked men do receiue Christes body.

Harpsfield.

You agree not with vs in the presence, nor in any thing els.

Bradford.

How you beleue you know: for my part I cōfesse a presence of whole Christ God and man, to the fayth of the receauer.

Harpsfield.

Nay, you must beleue a reall presence in the sacrament.

Brad.

In the Sacrament? Nay, I will not shut him in, nor ty• him to it otherwise then faith seeth and perceiueth.* If I should include Christ really present in the sacrament or tye hym to it otherwise then to the faith of the receiuer, then the wicked men should receiue him, which I doe not, nor will by Gods grace, beleue.

Harpsfield.

More pittie: But a man may easely perceauē, you make no presence at all, and therefore you agree not therein with vs.

Brad.

I confesse a presence, and a true presence, but to the fayth of the receauer.*

What (quoth one that stode by) of Christes very bodye which dyed for vs.

Brad.

Yea euen of whole Christ God & man to feed the fayth of hym that receiueth it.

Harps.

Why? this is nothing els but to exclude y^e omnipotency of God, and all kinde of miracle in the sacrament.

Brad.

I do not exclude his omnipotencie, but you doe it rather: for I beleue that Christ can accōplish hys promise,* the substaunce of bread and wyne being there, as well as the accidents, which you beleue not. When we come to the Sacrament, we come not to feede our bodies, and therfore we haue but a little peece of bread, but we come to feed our soules with Christ by fayth, whiche the wicked doe want, and therefore they receiue nothing but Panem domini as Iudas did, & not Panem Dominum, as y^e other Apostles did.

Harps.

The wicked do receauē the very body of Christ, but not the grace of his body.

Brad.

They receiue not the body. For Christes bodye is no dead carcase: he that receaueth it, receaueth the spirite, which is not without grace I trow.*

Harps,

Well, you haue many erroures. You count the Masse for abhomination, and yet S. Ambrose sayd Masse: and so he read out of a book written a sentence of S. Ambrose to proue it.

Brad.

Why sir, the masse as it is nowe, was nothing so in S. Ambrose time. Was not y^e most part of the Canon made sithen by Gregory and Scolasticus?

Harps.

In deede a great peece of it was made, as ye say, by Gregory: but Scolasticus was before Saint Ambrose tyme.

Brad.

I weene not: howbeit I will not contend. S. Gregory sayth, that the Apostles sayd Masse without the Canon, onely with the Lordes prayer.

Harps.

You say true: for the Canon is not the greatest part of the Masse, the greatest part is the sacrifice, eleuation, transubstantiation, and adoration.

Brad.

I can away with none of those.

Harps.

No, I thinke the same: but yet Hoc facite, telleth plainely the sacrifice of the Church.

Brad.

You confound Sacrifices, not discerning betwixt the sacrifice of the Church,* and for the Church. The sacrifice of the Church is no propiciatory sacrifice, but a gratulatory sacrifice. And as for Hoc facite, is not referred to any sacrificing, but to the whole action of takyng, eatyng, &c.

Harps.

You speake not learnedly now: for Christ made his supper onely to the twelue Apostles,* not admittynge his mother or any of the seuentie Disciples to it. Nowe the Apostles do signifie the Priestes.

Brad.

I thinke that you speake as you would men should vnderstand it: for els you would not keepe the cup away from the Laitie. Wee haue great cause to thanke you, that you will geue vs of your bread. For I perceiue you order the matter so, as though Christ had not commanded it to his whole Church.

Harps.

Then Harpsfield would haue proued Eleuation by a place of Basilius.

Brad.

*I haue read y^e place which seemeth to make nothing for eleuation: but be it as it is, this is no tyme for me to scan the doubtfull places of the doctors with you. I haue bene in prison long without bookes and al necessities for study, and now death draweth nye, and I by your leaue must now leaue of, to prepare for him.

Harps.

If I could do you good. I would be right glad eyther in soule or body. For you are in a perillous case both wayes.

Brad.

Syr I thanke you for your good will. My case is as it is. I thanke God it was neuer so well w^t me: for deathe to me shalbe life.

Creswel.

It were best for you to desire maister Archdeacon that he woulde make sute for you, that you might haue a time to conferre.

Harps.

I will do the best I can, for I pittie his case.

Bradford.

Sir, I will not desire anye body to sue for tyme for me. I am not wauering, neither woulde I that anye body should thinke I were so. But if you haue the charity and loue you pretend towardes me, and thereto do thinke that I am in an errour, I thinke the same shuld moue you to do as ye would be done to. As ye thinke of me, so doe I of you, that you are farre out of the way, and I do not only thinke it, but also am thereof most assured. And in thys and such like gentle talke they departed.

¶The talke of Doctor Heth Archbishop of Yorke, and day Byshop of Chichester, with Maister Bradford.

THE xxiii. of the same moneth, the Archbishop of Yorke, and the Bishop of Chichester came to the Counter to speake with Bradford. When hee was come before them,* they both, and especially the Bishop of York, vsed him very gently: they would haue him to sit downe, and because he would not, they also would not sit. So they all stode: & whether he woulde or not, they would needes he shoulde put on, not only his night cap but his vpper cap also, saying vnto him, that obedience was better then sacrifice.

Now thus standing together, my Lord of Yorke, began to tell Bradford howe that they were not sent to him, but of loue & charitie they came to him: and he, for that acquayntance also whiche he had with Bradford, more then the Bishoppe of Chichester had: then after commending Bradfordes godly life, he concluded w^t this question: how he was certayne of saluation and of his Religion.

Brad▪

After thanks for theyr good will. Bradford aunswered: by the word of God, euen by the Scriptures I am certayne of saluation, and Religion.

Yorke.

Uery well sayd: but how do ye know the worde of God and the scriptures, but by the Church?

Bradford.

In deede my Lorde, the Churche was and is a meane to bring a man more speedely to knowe the Scriptures and the worde of God, as was the woman of Samaria a meane that the Samaritans knewe Christ: but

[illustration]

☛ Certayne Bishops talking with Maister Bradford in prison.

Page 6116 as when they had heard him speake, they sayde: nowe we know that he is Christ, not because of thy wordes but because wee our selues haue heard him: so after we came to the hearing and reading of the Scriptures shewed vnto vs and discerned by the Church, we doe beleue them, and knowe them as Christes sheepe, not because y^e Church saith they are the Scriptures, but because they be so being thereof assured by the same spirite whiche wrote and spake them.

Yorke▪

*You knowe: in the Apostles time at the first the word was not written.

Bradford.

True, if you meane it for some books of the new Testament: but els for the old Testament Peter telleth vs Firm^{ore} sermonem propheticum habemus: We haue a more sure worde of prophecie▪ not that it is simply so, but in respect of the Apostles, which being aliue and compassed w^t infirmiti[•], attributed to the worde written m^{ore} firmitie, as wherewith no fault coulde be found, where as for the infirmitie of their persons men perchaunce might haue found some faulte at their preaching: albeit in very deede no lesse obedience and fayth ought to haue bene geuen to the one, then to the other: for all proceedeth foorth of one spirite of truth.

Yorke.

That place of Peter is not so to be vnderstand of the word written.

Brad.

Yea syr, that it is, and of none other.

Chic.

Yea, in deede Maister Bradford doth tell you truely in that poynt.

Yorke.

*Well, you know that Irenaeus and others doe magnifie much and alleage the Church agaynst the heretickes, and not the scripture.

Bradford.

True, for they had to do with such heretickes as did deny the scriptures, and yet did magnifie the Apostles so that they were inforced to vse the authoritie of those Churches wherein the Apostles had taught, and whiche had still retayned the same doctrine.

Chic.

You speake the very truth: for the heretickes dyd refuse all scriptures, except it were a peece of Lukes Gospel.

Brad.

Then the alledgyng of the Church cannot be princially vsed agaynst me, whiche am so farre from denying of the Scriptures that I appeale vnto them vtterly, as to the onely iudge.

Yorke.

A pretty matter, that you will take vppon you to iudge the Churche, I pray you where hath your Churche bene hetherto? For the church of Christ is Catholicke and visible hetherto.

Brad.

*My Lord, I doe not iudge the Church, when I discerne it from that congregation, & those whiche be not the Church, & I neuer denyed the Church to be Catholicke & visible althought at some times it is more visible then at some.

Chic.

I pray you tell me where the Church which allowed your doctrine, was these foure hundreth yeares?

Brad.

I will tell you my Lord, or rather you shal tell your selfe, if you will tell me this one thing, where the Churche was in Helias his time, when Helias sayde that hee was left alone?

Chic.

That is no aunswere.

Bradford.

I am sorry that you say so: but this will I tell your Lordship, that if you had the same eyes wherwith a man might haue espied the Churche then, you woulde not say it were no answer.* The fault why the Church is not seene of you, is not because the Churche is not visible, but because your eyes are not cleare inough to see it.

Chic.

You are much deceaued in making this collation betwixt the Church then and now.

Yorke.

Uery well spoken my Lord, for Christ sayde aedificabo Ecclesiam, I will build my Church and not I doe, or haue built it, but I will build it.

Bradford.

*My Lordes, Peter teacheth me to make thys collation, saying: as in y^e people there were false Prophetes, which were most in estimation afore Christes comming, so shall there be false teachers amongst the people after Christes comming and very many shall follow them And as for your future tense, I hope your grace will not thereby conclude christes Church not to haue bene before, but rather that there is no building in the Church but by Christes worke onely: for Paule and Apollo be but watterers.

Chichester.

In good fayth I am sorry to see you so light in iudging the Church.

Yorke.

He taketh vpon him as they all doe, to iudge the Church.* A man shall neuer come to certaintie that doth as they do.

Brad.

My Lordes, I speake simply what I thinke, & desire reason to aunswere my obiections. Your affections & sorrowes can not be my rules. If that you consider y^e order and case of my condemnation. I can not thinke but y^t it should somethyng mo^e your honours. You knowe it well enough (for you heard it) no matter was layd against me, but what was gathered vpon mine owne confession. Because I did deny Transubstantiation and the wicked to receaue Christes body in the Sacrament, therefore I was condemned and excōmunicate, but not of the churche although the pillars of the church (as they be taken) did it.

Chichester.

No. I heard say the cause of your imprisonmēt was, for that you exhorted the people to take the sword in the one hand, and the mattocke in the other.

Brad.

My Lord, I neuer ment any such thing, nor spake any thing in that sort.*

Yorke.

Yea, and you behaued your selfe before the Counsel so stoutly at the first, that you would defend the Religion then: and therefore worthely were you prisoned.

Brad.

Your grace did heare me answere my Lord Chauncellour to that poynt.* But put case I had bene so stout as they and your Grace make it: were not the lawes of the Realme on my side then? Wherefore vniustly was I prisoned: onely that which my Lord Chauncellour propounded, was my confession of Christes trueth agaynst Transubstantiation, and of that whiche the wicked do receaue, as I sayd.

Yorke.

You deny the presence.

Brad.

I do not, to the fayth of the worthy receiuers.

Yorke.

Why? what is that to say other,* then that Christ lyeth not on the aultar?

Brad.

My Lord, I beleue no such presence.

Chichest.

It seemeth that you haue not read Chrisostome for he proueth it.

Brad.

Hetherto I haue bene kept well inough without bookes: howbeit this I doe remember of Chrisostome,* that he sayth that Christ lyeth vpon the aultar, as the Seraphines with their tongues touche our lippes with the coales of the aultar in heauen, which is an hyperbolicall loquution, of whiche you know Chrisostome is full.

Yorke.

It is euident that you are to farre gone: but let vs come then to the Church, out of the whiche ye are excommunicate.

Brad.

I am not excommunicate out of Christes Church my Lord,* although they which seeme to be in the Church and of the Church haue excommunicated me, as the poore blinde man was, Iohn. 9. I am sure Christ receiueth me.

Yorke.

You do deceiue your selfe.

Here, after much talke of excommunication, at length Bradford sayd.

Brad.

Assuredly, as I thinke you did well to departe from the Romish church, so I thinke ye haue done wickedly to couple your selues to it againe, for you can neuer prooue it, which you call the mother church, to be Christes Church.

Chichest.

Ah M. Bradford, you were but a child when this matter began. I was a yong man, and then comming frō the Uniuersitie, I went with the world, but I tell you it was alwayes against my conscience.

Brad.

I was but a child then: howbeit as I tolde you, I thinke you haue done euill.* For ye are come & haue broght others to that wicked man which sitteth in the Temple of God, that is in the church: for it cannot be vnderstand of Mahomet, or any out of the Church, but of such as beare rule in the Church.

Yorke.

See how you build your fayth vpon such places of Scripture as are most obscure to deceyue your selfe, as though ye were in the Church where you are not.

Brad.

Well my Lord, though I might by fruites iudge of you and others: yet will I not vtterly exclude you out of the church. And if I were in your case, I would not condemne him vtterly, that is of my faith in the Sacrament: knowyng as you know, that at the least 800. yeares after Christ, as my L. of Duresme writeth,* it was free to beleue or not to beleue transubstantiation.

Yorke.

This is a toy that you haue found out of your own braine: as though a man not beleuing as the church doth, that is transubstantiation, were of the church.

Chichest.

He is an heretike, and so none of the Church that doth hold any doctrine against the definitiō of the church: as a man to hold against transubstantiatiō. Cyprian was no heretike though he beleued rebaptising of them which were baptised of heretikes, because hee helde it before the church had defined it, whereas if he had holden it after,* thē had he bene an heretike.

Brad.

Oh my Lord, wil ye condemne to the deuill any man that beleueueth truely the xij. Articles of the fayth (wherein I •ake the vnitie of Christes Church to consist) although in some points he beleuee not the definition of that which ye call the Church? I doubt not but that he which holdeth firmly the Articles of our beliefe, though in other thyngs he dissent from your definitions, yet he shalbe sauēd.

Yorke.

Chichester. Yea, sayde both the Byshops? this is your Diuinitie.

Page 1617

Brad.

No, it is Paules, which sayth, that if they holde the foundation Christ, though they build vpon him straw and stubble, yet they shall be sauēd.

Yorke.

Lord God, how you delite to leane to so hard and darke places of the Scriptures.

Chic.

I will shewe you how that Luther did excommunicate Zuinglius for this matter, and so he read a place of Luther making for his purpose.

Brad.

My Lord, what Luther writeth, as you muche passe not, *no more do I in this case▪ My fayth is not builded on Luther, Zuinglius, or Oecolampadius is this poynt: and in deede to tel you truely, I neuer read any of their works in this matter. As for them, I do think assuredly that they were, and are Gods Children and Sayntes with hym.

Yorke.

Well, you are out of y^e Communion of the Church.

Brad.

I am not: for it consisteth and is in fayth.

Yorke.

Loe, how make you your Church inuisible: for you would haue the Communion of it to consist in fayth.

Brad.

For to haue Communion with the Churche needeth no visiblenes of it: * for Communion consisteth, as I sayd, in faith, and not in exterior ceremonies, as appeareth both by Paule, which would haue one fayth, and by Irenaeus to Uictor, for the obseruation of Easter, saying that disagreeing of fastyng shoulde not breake the agreeyng of fayth.

Chichester.

The same place hath often euen wounded my conscience, because we disseuered our selues from the Sea of Rome.

Bradford.

Well, God forgeue you: for you haue done euill to bryng England thether agayne.

Yorke.

Here my Lord of Yorke tooke a booke of paper of common places, and read a peece of Saint Austen contra Epistolam Fundamenti, * how that there were many thinges that did holde S. Augustine in the bosome of the Churche consent of people and nations, authoritie confirmed wyth myracles, * nourished with hope, encreased with charitie, established with antiquitie: besides this, there holdeth me in the Church, sayth S. Augustine, the succession of priests from Peters seate vntill this present Bishop. Last of all the very name of Catholicke doth hould me. &c. Lo (quoth he) how say you to this of Saint Augustine? paynt me out your Church thus.

Bradford.

My Lord these wordes of S. Augustine make as much for me as for you: although I might aunswere, that all this, if they had bene so firme as you make them, might haue bene alledged against Christ and his apostles. For there was the lawe and the ceremonies consented on by the whole people, confirmed with myracles, antiquitie and continuall succession of Byshops from Aarons tyme vntill that present.

Chich.

In good fayth M. Bradford, you make to much of the state of the Church before Christes comming. *

Brad.

Therein I doe but as Peter teacheth. 2. Pet. 2. and Paule very often. You would gladly haue your Churche here very glorious, and as a most pleasant Lady. But as Christ sayde: Beatus est quicumque non fuerit offensus per me: So may his Churche say: Blessed are they that are not offended at me.

Yorke.

Yea, you thinke that none is of the Churche but such as suffer persecution.

Brad.

What I thinke, God knoweth. I pray your Grace iudge mee by my woordes and speaking,* and marke that Paule sayth: Omnes qui. &c. All that will liue godly in Christ Iesu must suffer persecution. Sometimes Christes Church hath rest here: but commonly it is not so, and specially towards the end her forme will be more vnseemely.

Yorke.

But what say you to Saint Augustine? where is your Church that hath the consent of people and nations?

Bradford.

Euen all people and nations that be Gods people haue consented with me,* and I with them in y^e doctrine of fayth.

Yorke.

Lo, ye go about to shift off all thinges.

Bradford.

No my Lorde: I meane simply, and so speake, God knoweth.

Yorke.

Sainct Austen doth here talke of succession euen frō Peters seate.*

Brad.

Yea, that seate then was nothing so muche corrupte as it is now.

Yorke.

Well, you alwayes iudge the church.

Bradford.

*No my Lord, Christes sheepe discern Christes voyce, but they iudge it not: so they discern the Church, but iudge her not.

Yorke.

Yes, that you do.

Bradford.

No, and it like your grace: and yet full well may one not onely doubt, but iudge also of the Romish church: for she obeyeth not christes voyce, as Christes true church doth.

Yorke.

Wherein.

Brad.

In latin seruice, and robbing the Laitie of Christes cup in the sacrament and in many other things, in which it committeth most horrible sacrilege.

Chic.

Why? Latin seruice was in England when the pope was gone.

Brad.

True: the tyme was in England whē the pope was away, but not all popery: as in king Henries dayes.

Yorke.

Latin seruice was appointed to be song and had in the Queere, where onely were Clerici, that is,* such as vnderstode latin, the people sitting in the body of the Church praying theyr owne priuate prayers: and this may wel be yet seene by making of the Chauncell and Queere, so as y^e people could not come in, or heare them.

Brad.

Yea, but in Chrisostomes time, and also in the latin church in Saint Ieromes tyme,* all the Church (sayth he) reboat. Amen. That is, aunswereth agayn mightely, Amen. Whereby we may see that the prayers were made so, that both the people heard them, and vnderstoode them.

Chic.

Ye are to blame to say that the Churche robbeth the people of the cup.

Bradford.

Well my Lorde, terme it as it please you: all men knowe that laytie hath none of it.

Chic.

In deede I would wish the Church would define agayne, that they might haue it, for my part.

Brad.

If God make it free, who cā define to make it bond?

Yorke.

Well mayster Bradford, we leese our labour,* for ye seeke to put away all thinges which are tolde you to your good: your Church no man can know.

Brad.

Yes, that ye may well.

Yorke.

I pray you whereby?

Brad.

Forsooth Chrisostome sayth:*Tantummodo per Scripturas, alonely by the Scriptures: and this speaketh he very oftentimes, as ye well know.

Yorke.

In deede that is of Chrysostome ••in opere imperfecto, whiche may be doubted of. The thing whereby the Church may be knowne best, is succession of Byshops.

Bradford.

No my Lorde: Lyra full well writeth vppon Mathew, that Ecclesia non consistit in hominibus ratione potestatis secularis aut Ecclesiasticae, sed in hominibus in quibus est notitia vera, & confessio fidei & veritatis, That is:* The church consisteth not in men by reason either of secular or temporall power: but in men indued with true knowledge, and confession of fayth, and of veritie.

And in Hylarius tyme, you knowe he wryteth to Aurentius, that the Church did rather delitescere in cauer••s, then eminere in primarijs sedibus, That is, was hidden rather in caues and holes, then did glister and shyne in thrones of preeminence.

Then came one of the seruantes and tolde them that my Lord of Duresme taryed for them at Mayster Yorkes house: and this was after that they had taryed three houres with Bradford. And after that their man was come, they put vp theyr writtten bookes of common places, and sayde that they lamented his case: they willed him to read ouer a booke, which did Doct. Crome good: & so wishyng hym good in woordes, they went their waye, and poore Bradford to his prison.

After this communication with the Bishops ended,* within two dayes following came into the Counter two Spanish Friers to talke with maister Bradford, sent (as they sayd) by the Earle of Darby, Of whome the one was y^e kinges Confessor: y^e other was Alphonsus, who had before written a popish booke agaynst heresies, the effecte of which their reasoning here likewise followeth.

Talke betweene mayster Bradford and two Spanishe Fryers.

VPpon the 25. day of February,* about 8. of the clock in the morning, two Spanish Fryers came to the Coüter where Bradford was prisoner: to whō Bradford was called. Then the one Fryer, which was the kinges Confessor, asked in Latin (for all their talke was in Latin) of Bradford, whether he had not seene nor heard of one Alphonsus that had written agaynst heresies?

Brad.

I do not know him.

Confes.

Well this man (poynting to Alphonsus) is he.* Wee are come to you of loue and charitie, by the meanes of the Earle of Darby, because you desired to conferre with vs.

Brad.

I neuer desired your comming, nor to conferre with you, or any other. But seeing you are come of charitie, as you say, I cannot but thanke you: and as touchyng conference, though I desire it not, yet I wil not refuse to talk with you, if you will.

Alphon.

It were requisite that you did praye vnto God, that ye might follow the direction of Gods spirite, that he woulde inspire you so that ye be not addict to your owne selfe will or wyt.

[illustration]

☞ The talke betweene M. Bradford, and two Spanish Fryers.

Brad.

Whereupon Bradford made a prayer, and besought God to direct all theyr willes,* wordes, and works, as the wils, wordes, and workes of his children for euer.

Alph.

Yea, you must pray with your hart. For if you speak but with tounge onely, God will not geue you his grace.

Brad.

Syr do not iudge, least ye be iudged. You haue heard my words, now charity would haue you to leaue y^e iudgement of the hart to God.

Alph.

You must be as it were a neuter, and not wedded to your selfe, but as one standing in doubt: pray and be ready to receiue what God shall enspire, for in vain laboreth our tounge to speake els.

Brad.

Syr my sentence, if you meane it for Religion, must not be in a doubting or vncertain,* as I thanke God I am certayne in that for which I am condēned: I haue no cause to doubt of it, but rather to be most certayne of it, and therfore I praye God to confirme mee more in it. For it is his trueth, and because it is so certayne and true that it may abide the light, I dare be bold to haue it looked on, and conferre it with you, or any man: in respect wherof I am both glad of your comming, and thanke you for it.

Alph.

What is the matter whereof you were condemned? we know not.

Brad.

Syr I haue bene in prison almost 2. yeares: I neuer transgressed any of theyr lawes wherefore I might iustlye be prisoned,* & now am I condēned onely because I franckly confessed (wherof I repēt not) my fayth concerning the sacrament, when I was demaūded in these 2. poynts: one that there is no transubstantiation: the other, that the wicked do not receiue Christes body.

Alph.

Let vs looke a little on the firste. Doe you not beleue that Christ is present really, and corporally in the forme of bread?

Brad.

No, I do beleue that Christ is present to the fayth of the worthy receiuer, as there is present bread and wyne to the senses and outward man: * as for any such presēce of including and placing Christ, I beleue not, nor dare beleue.

Alph.

I am sure you beleue Christes naturall body is circūscriptible. And here he made much ado of the 2. natures of Christ, how that the one is euery where, & the other is in his proper place, demaūding such questions, as no wise man would haue spent any time about. At length, because the Frier had forgotten to conclude, Bradforde put him in mind of it, and thus then at length he concluded: how that because Christes bodye was circumscribable concernyng the humayne nature in heauen, therefore it was so in the bread.

Brad.

How hangeth this together? Euen as if you should say: because you are here, Ergo it must needes followe that you are at Rome. For this you reason: Because Christes bodye is in heauen, Ergo it is in the Sacrament vnder the forme of bread: which no wise man will graunt.

Alph.

Why, will you beleue nothing, but that which is expressly spoken in the Scriptures?

Brad.

Yes Syr, I will beleue whatsoever you shall by demonstratian out of the Scripture declare vnto me.

Alph.

He is obstinate, quoth Alphonsus to his felow: and then turning to Bradford sayd, is not God able to do it? *

Brad.

Yes, but here the question is of Gods will, and not of his power.

Alph.

Why? doth he not say playnely, this is my body?

Brad.

Yes, and I deny not but that it is so, to the fayth of the worthy receyuer.

Alph.

To the fayth? how is that?

Brad.

Forsooth Syr as I haue no tounge to expresse it: so I know ye haue no eares to heare & vnderstand it. For fayth is more then man can vtter.

Alph.

But I can tell all that I beleue.

Brad.

You beleue not much then. For if you beleue y^e ioyes of heauen, and beleue no more therof then you can tell, you wil not yet desire to come thither. For as the mind is more capable & receiueable thē the mouth: so it conceiueth more then tounge can expresse.

Alph.

Christ sayth it is his body.

Brad.

And so say I, after a certayne maner.

Alph.

After a certayne maner? that is, * after an other maner then it is in heauen.

Brad.

S, Augustine telleth it more playnely, that it is christes body after the same maner as Circumcision was the couenaunt of God, and the Sacrament of fayth is fayth: or to make it more playne, as baptisme and the water of baptisme is regeneration.

Alph.

Uery well sayd, Baptisme and the water therof is a Sacrament of Gods grace & spirite in the water clensing the Baptised.

Brad.

No Syr, away w^t your enclosing but this I graunt, that after the same sort Christes bodye is in the breade, on which sort the grace and spirit of God is in the water.

Alph.

In water is Gods grace by signification.

Brad.

So is the body in the bread in the Sacrament.

Alph.

You are much deceiued in that you make no differēce betwene the Sacramentes that be standers, and the sacramentes that are transitory and passers by. As for example, the Sacrament of Order, which you deny, though S. Augustine affirme it, it is a standerd, although the ceremony be past. But in Baptisme so soone as the bodye is washed, the water ceaseth not to be a Sacrament.

Brad.

Uery good, and so it is in the Supper of the Lord: no Page 1618 <1 page duplicate> Page 1619 longer then it is in vse, is it Christes Sacrament.

Here was the Fryer in a wonderfull rage, and spake so high (as often he had done before) that the whole house rang agayne, cha•ing with om and cho. Hee hath a greate name of learning,* but surely hee hath little pacience. For if Bradford had bene any thing hote, one house coulde not haue held them. At the length hee commeth to this poynt, that Bradford coulde not finde in the Scripture Baptisme and the Lordes Supper to beare any similitude together. And here he triūphed before the conquest, saying that these men would receiue nothing but scripture, and yet were able to proue nothing by the Scripture.

Brad.

*Be pacient, & you shall see that by the Scripture I will finde Baptisme & the Lords supper coupled together.

Alph.

No, that canst thou neuer do. Let me see a text of it.

Brad.

Paule sayth: That as we are Baptised into one bodye: so were we potati in vno spiritu: that is: we haue dronk of one spirit, meaning of the cup in the Lordes Supper.

Alphon.

Paule hath no such wordes.

Brad.

Yes that he hath.

Confes.

I trow he hath not.

Brad.

Geue me a Testament, and I will shew you.

*So a Priest that sat by them, gaue him his Testamēt, and he shewed them the playne text. Then they looked one vpon an other. In fi•e the Friers found this simple shift, that Paule spake not of the Sacrament.

Brad.

Well the texte is playne enough, and there are of the fathers which do so vnderstand the place: For Chrisostom doth expound it so.

Alphon.

Alphonsus which had the Testament in his hand, desirous to suppress this foyle, turned the leaues of y^e book from leafe to leafe, till he came to the place. 1. Cor. 11. & there he read how that he was guilty, which made no difference of the Lordes body.

Brad.

Yea, but therewith he sayth: He that eateth of the bread: calling it bread still,* and that after consecration (as ye call it) as in the 10. to the Corinthians he saith: The bread which we breake.*&c.

Alphon.

Oh how ignoraunt are ye, which know not that thinges after theyr conuersion doe reteine the same names which they had before,* as Moses rod: and calling for a byble, after he had found the place, he began to triumph: But Bradford cooled him quickly, saying:

Brad.

Syr, there is mension made of the conuersiō, as wel, as that the same appeared to the sence. But here ye can not finde it so.* Find me one word how the bread is cōuerted, & I will then say, ye bring some matter that maketh for you

Alph.

At these wordes the Frier was troubled, & at length he sayd, how that Bradford hanged on his owne sence.

Brad.

No, that do I not: for I will bring you forth the Fathers of the Church 800. yeares after Christ, to confyrme this which I speake.

Alph.

No you haue the Church agaynst you.

Brad.

I haue not Christes Church agaynst me.

Alph.

Yes that you haue. What is the Church?

Brad.

Christes wife, the chayre and seat of verity.

Alph.

Is she visible?

Brad.

Yea that she is to then that will put on the spectacles of Gods word to looke on her.*

Alph.

This Church hath defined the contrary, and that I will proue by all the good Fathers from Christes Ascensiō euen for 800. yeares at the least continually.

Brad.

What will you so proue? Transubstantiation?

Alph.

Yea, that the bread is turned into Christes body.

Brad.

You speake more then you can do.

Alph.

That do I not.

Brad.

Then will I geue place.

Alph.

Will you beleue?

Brad.

Beliefe is Gods gift: therfore can not I promise: but I tell you that I will geue place: and I hope I shal beleue his truth alwayes, so good is he to me in Christ my sauior.

Alph.

Here the Frier founde a great faulte with Bradford that he made no difference betwixte habitus,^{*} and actus: as though actus which he called crudelity, had bene in our power. But this he let passe, & came agayne asking Bradford if he could proue it as he said, whether he wuld geue place.

Brad.

Yea that I will. Then called he for paper, pen & inke, to write, and then sayd I: what and if that I proue by the testimony of the Fathers, that continually for viij. hundreth yeres after Christ at the least, they did beleue that the substance of bread doth remayne in the Sacrament? what will you do?

Alph.

I will geue place.

Brad.

Then write you here that you will geue place if I so proue, & I will write that I wil geue place if you so proue: because ye are the auncient, ye shall haue the preheminence.

*Here the Frier fumed maruellously, and sayde: I came not to learne at thee, Are not here witnesses? (meaning the two Priestes) be not they sufficient? But the man was so chafed, that if Bradford had not passed ouer this matter of writing, the Frier would haue fallen to playne scolding.

Confes.

At the length the kinges Confessour asked Bradford what the second question was?

Brad.

That wicked men receiue not Christes bodye in the Sacrament, as S. Augustine speaketh of Iudas, that hee receiued Panem Domini, but not Panem Dominum.

Alph.

S. Augustine sayth not so.

Brad.

Yes that doth he.* So they arose and talked no more of that matter. Thus went they away, without byddyng Bradford farewell.

A Priest.

After they were none, one of the Priestes came, & willed Bradford not to be so obstinate.

Brad.

Syr, be not you so wauering: in all the scripture can not you finde me, non est panis.

Priest.

Yes that I can in fiue places.

Brad.

Then I will eat your booke.* So the booke was opened, but no place found: and he went his way smiling. God helpe vs.

¶Talke betwene Mayster Bradford and Doctour Weston and others.

IT folowed after this, vpō the 21. of the moneth of march,* that by meanes of one of the Earle of Darbyes mē, there came to the Counter to dyner one M. Collier, once Warden of Manchester, and the sayde seruaunt of the Earle of Darby, of whom Mayster Bradford learned that Doctor Weston Deane of Westminster woulde be with him in the after noone about two of the clocke. At dynner time, when the sayd Warden did discommend king Edward, & went aʒbout to set forth the authority of the Pope, which Bradford withstood, defending the kinges fayth, that it was Catholicke, and that the authority of the bishop of Romes supremacy was vsurped,* bringing forth the testimonye of Gregory, which affirmeth the name of supreme head, to be a title of the forerunner to Antichrist: a woman prysoner was brought in, wherupon the sayd Bradford tooke occasion to rise from the table, and so wēt to his prison chamber to beg of God grace, and helpe therin continuing there still vntill he was called down to speak with mayster Weston, which was then come in.

Mayster Bradford then being called downe, so soone as he was entred into the Hall,* M. Weston very gentlye tooke him by the hand, & asked how he did, with such other talke. At length he willed auoydaunce of the chamber: So they all went out, saue Mayster Weston himselfe, M. Colliar, the Earle of Darbyes seruant, the Subdeane of Westminster, the Keeper, Mayster Clayden, and the Parson of the Church where the Counter is.

Now thē he began with M. Bradford, to tell how that he was often minded to haue come vnto him, beyng therto desired of the Earle of Darby: and (quoth he) after that I perceiued by his man, that you could be contēted rather to speake with me, then any others: I coulde not come but to do you good, if I can, for hurt you be sure I will not.

Bradford.

Syr quoth Mayster Bradford when I perceyued by the report of my Lords seruant: that you did beare me good will, more (as he sayd) then any other of your sort, I tolde him then, that therefore I could be better content & more willing to talke with you, if you shoulde come vnto me. This did I say quoth he, otherwise I desired not your comming.

West.

Wel quoth he: now I am come to talk with you: but before we shall enter into any talke, certayn principles we must agree vpon, which shall be this dayes worke.

First (quoth he) I shall desire you to put away all vain glory, and not hold any thing for the prayse of the world.*

Brad.

Syr S. Augustine maketh that in deed a piece of the definitiō of an heretick, which if I cannot put away cleane (for I thinke there will a spice of it remaine in vs, as long as this flesh liueth) yet I promise you by the grace of God that I purpose not to yeld to it. God I hope wil neuer suffer it to beare rule in them that striue there against, & desire all the dregges of it vtterly to be driuen out of vs.

Weston.

I am glad to heare you say so, although in deed I thinke you do not so much esteeme it as others do.

Secondly, I would desire you that you wil put away singularity in your iudgement and opinions.*

Brad.

Syr God forbid that I should sticke to any singularity or priuate iudgement in Gods Religion. Hytherto I haue not desired it, neyther doe, nor mynde at any tyme to hold any other doctrine then is publick and catholick, vnderstanding catholicke as good men do: according to Gods word.

West.

Uery well: this is a good dayes worke, I hope to do you good: & therfore now thirdly I shall pray you to write Page 1620 me Capita of those thinges, wherupon you stand in the sacrament, and to send them to me betwixt this and Wednes'day next: vntill which time, yea vntil I come to you again be assured that you are without all perill of death. Of my infidelity,* warrant you I, therfore away with all dubitations. &c.

Brad.

Syr I will write to you the groundes I leane to in this matter. As for death, if it come welcome bee it, this which you require of me: shall be no great let to me therin.

West.

You know that S. Augustine was a Manichean yet was he cōuerted at the length: so haue I good hope of you.

Brad.

Syr because I will not flatter you: I woulde you should flatly know, that I am euen settled, in the Religion wherfore I am condemned.

West.

Yea, but if it be not the truth, & you see euident matter to the contrary, will you not then geue place.

Brad.

God forbid but that I should alwayes geue place to the truth.

West.

I would haue you to pray so.

Brad.

So I do, and that he will more and more confirme me in it, as I thanke God he hath done and doth.

West.

Yea but pray with a condition, if you be in it.

Brad.

No Syr, I cannot pray so, because I am settled and assured of his truth.

Well quoth Weston, as the learned Bishop aunswered S. Augustines mother, that though she was obstinate, yet the teares of such a mother could not but winne her sonne: so (quoth he) I hope your prayers (for then Bradfordes eyes dyd shewe that hee hadde wept in prayer) canne not but be heard of God, though not as you would yet, as best shall please God. Do you not, quoth he, remember the hystory thereof?

Brad.

Yea Syr (quoth Bradford) I thinke it be of Saynt Ambrose.

West.

No, that it is not. And here Westō would haue laid a wager, and begā to triumph, saying to Bradford: as you are ouersene herein, so are you in the other thinges.

Brad.

Well Syr, I will not contēd with you for the name. This (I remember) Saynt Augustine writeth in his confessions.

After this talke Weston begunne to tell M. Bradforde howe the people were by him procured to withstande the Queene.*

Whereunto Bradforde aunswering agayne, bade him hang him vp as a traytour, and a thefe, if euer he encouraged any to rebellion: whiche thing his Keeper and others that were there of the Priests, affirmed on his behalfe. So much talke there was to litle purpose at that time. Doctor Weston declared moreouer howe he had saued men going in the cart to be hanged, and such like.

The end was this, that Bradford should send vnto him, capita doctrinae of the supper, & after wednesday he woulde come vnto him agayne, and thus departed he after that he had dronken to him in beare and wine. I omit here talk of Oxford, of books of Germane writers, of the feare of death and such other talke which are to no purpose.

An other disputation or talke betwene Mayster Bradford and Doctour Pendleton.

*IN the meane time, whē Mayster Bradford had written his reasons and argumentes, & had sent them to Doctor Weston: in short space after about the 28. of Marche, there came to the Counter Doctour Pendleton, and with hym the foresayd M. Collier, sometime Warden of Manchester and Steuen Bech. After salutations Mayster Pendleton began to speak to Bradford, that he was sory for his trouble. And further (quoth he) after that I didde knowe you could be content to talke with me, I made the more speed, being as ready to doe thee good and pleasure thee that I can, as ye would wish.

Brad.

Syr, the maner how I was content to speake wyth you, was on this sorte: Mayster Bech was often in hande with me whom he shoulde bring vnto me, and named you amongst other: and I sayd that I had rather speake with you then with any of all the other. Nowe the cause why I so would, I will briefly tell you. I remēber that once you were (as farre as a man might iudge) of the Religion that I am of at this present,* and I remember that you haue set forth the same earnestly. Gladly therfore would I learn of you what thing it was that moued your conscience to alter, and gladly would I see what thing it is that you haue sene sithen, which you saw not before.

Pendleton.

Maister Bradford, I doe not know wherefore you are condemned.

Bradford.

Transubstantiation is the cause wherfore I am condemned, and because I denye that wicked men receyue Christes body: wherein I woulde desire you to shewe me what reasons, which before you knew not, did moue your conscience now to alter. For once (as I sayd) you were as I am in Religion.

Here mayster Pendleton halfe amazed, began to excuse himselfe if it would haue bene, as though he had not denied fully transubstantiation in deede, although I sayde (quoth he) that the word was not in Scripture,* and so hee made an endlesse tale of the thing that moued hym to alter: but (sayd he) I wil gather to you the places which moued me, and send you them. And here he desired Bradforde that hee might haue a cotype of that whiche he had sent to Mayster Weston: the which Bradford did promise him.

Syme reasoning also they had, whether euill men dyd receiue Christes body, Bradford denying and Pendleton affirming. Bradford sayd that they receiued not the spirit. Ergo, not the body: for it is no 〈◇〉 carkas. Hereto Bradford brought also S. Augustine, how Iudas receiued Panem Domini, and not Panem Dominum, & how that he muste be in Christs body, which must receiue the body of Christ. But Pendleton went about to put it away with idem, and not ad idem, and how that in Corpore Christi was to be vnderstand of all that be in the visible Church with Gods elect. Bradforde denyed this to be Saynt Augustines meaning, and sayd also that the allegation of idem▪ and not ad idem, could not make for that purpose. They talked more of Transubstantiation, Pendleton bringing forth Cyprian: Panis natura mutatur.* &c. And Bradforde sayde that in that place natura did not signify substaunce. As the nature of an herbe is not the substaunce of it: so the breade chaunged in nature is not to be taken for chaunged in substaunce: For now it is ordeined not for the foode of the body simply, but rather for the soule. Here also Bradford alleadged the sentence of Gelasius. Pendleton sayde, that he was a Pope. Yea sayd Bradford, but his faith is my fayth in the Sacrament, if ye would receiue it.

They reasoned also whether accidentia were res or no. If they be properly res, sayde Bradford, then are they substaunces: and if they be substances they are earthly,* & then are there earthly substaunces in the Sacramen as Irenaeus sayth, which must needes be bread. But Pendleton sayde that the colour was the earthly thing, and called it an accidentall substaunce.

I omitte the talke they had of my Lord of Canterbury of Peter Martyrs booke, of Pendletons Letter layde to Bradfordes charge when he was condemned, with other talke more of the Church: whether Dic Ecclesiae was spokē of the vniuersall Church, or of a particular (which Pēdleton at the length graunted to bee spoken of a particulare Church) also of vayne glory, which he willed Bradford to beware of, and such like talke: A litle before his departing Bradford sayd thus: Maister Doctor,* as I said to M. Weston the last day, so saye I vnto you agayne, that I am the same man in Religion agaynst Transubstantiation styll, which I was whē I came into prison: for hitherto I haue sene nothing in any poynt to infirme me. At which words Pendleton was something moued, and said that it was no Catholicke doctrine. Yes, quoth Bradford, and that wil I proue euen by the testimony of the Catholicke fathers vntill Concilium Lateranense, or thereabout. Thus Pendleton wēt his way, saying that he would come oftener to Bradford. God our father be with vs all, and geue vs the spirite of his truth for euer. Amen.

The same day in the afternoone, about fiue of the clock, came Mayster Weston to Bradford: and after gentle salutations, he desired the company euery man to depart, & so they two sat downe. And after that he had thanked Bradford for his writing vnto him, he pulled out of his bosome the same writing, which Bradford had sent him. The writing is this that foloweth.

Certayne reasons agaynst Transubstantiation gathered by Iohn Bradford, and geuen to Doctour Weston and others.

1. THat which is former (sayth Tertullian) is true: that whiche is latter is false.* But the doctrine of transubstantiation is a late doctrine: for it was not defined generally afore the Councel of Laterane, about 1215. yeares after Christes comming, vnder Pope Innocentius the thyrd of that name. For before that time it was free for all men to beleue it or not beleue it: as the Bishop of Duresme doth witnesse in his booke of the presence of Christ in his Supper lately put forth: Ergo the Doctrine of Transubstantiation is false.

2. That the words of Christes supper be figuratiue, the circūstāces of the scripture, the Analogy or proportiō of the sacramētes,* & the sentēces of all the holy fathers, which were & did write for the space 1000. yeares after Christes Ascension, do teach: wherevpon it foloweth, that there is no transubstantiation.

Page 16213. That the Lord gaue to his Disciples bread and called it his body, the very Scriptures do witnesse. For he gaue that & called it his body which he tooke in his handes, wheron he gaue thanks, which also he brake, & gaue to his Disciples, that is to say, bread, as the fathers, *Iraeneus, Tertullian, Origene, Cyprian, Epiphanius, Augustine, and all the residue which are of antiquity, doe affirme: but in as much as the substaunce of breade and wine is an other thing then the substance of the body & bloud of Christ, it plainly appeareth that there is no transubstantiation.

4. The bread is no more transubstantiate then the wine: but that the wine is not trāsubstāiate, S. Mathew & S. Mark do teach vs: for they witnes that Christ sayd that he would drinke no more of the fruit of the vine, which was not bloud but wine: and therfore it foloweth, that there is no transubstantiation. Chrysostome vpō Mathew and S. Cyprian do affirme this reason.

5. As the bread in the Lodes Supper is Christes naturall bodye, so is it his mysticall body: for the same spirit that spake of it: This is my body, *did say also: for we many are one bread, one body. &c. but now it is not the mysticall body by transubstantiation, and therfore it is not his naturall body by transubstantiation.

6. The wordes spoken ouer the cup in S. Luke and Paule, are not so mighty and effectuell as to transubstantiate it: For then it or that which is in it should be transubstantiate into the new Testament: therfore the wordes spoken ouer the bread are not so migh^ty as to make transubstantiation.

7. All that doctrine which agreeth with those Churches whiche be Apostolicke, mother Churches or originall churches, is to be counted for truth, in that it holdeth that which these Churches receiued of the Apostles, the Apostles of Christ, Christ of GOD. But it is manifest that the doctrine taught at this present of the church of Rome, concerning transubstantiation, doth not agree with the Apostolicke and mother Churches in Grece of Corinthus, *of Phillppos, Colossia, Thessalonica, Ephesus, which neuer taught transubstantiation: yea it agreeth not with the doctrine of the Church of Rome taught in times past. For Gelasius the Pope setting forth the doctrine which that sea did thē hold, doth manifestly confute the error of transubstantiation, and reproueth them of the sacriledge which deuide the mistery, and keepe from the Laity the cup: Therefore the doctrine of transubstantiation agreeth not with the truth.

This was the writing which Weston pulled out of his bosome: & yet before he began to read it, he shewed Bradford that he asked of his conuersatiō at Cābridge sithen his last being with him: and (quoth he) Mayster Bradford, because you are a man not geuen to the glory of the world, I will speake it before your face: Your life I haue learned was such there alwayes, as all men, euen the greatest enemyes you haue, can not but prayse it, and therefore I loue you much better then euer I did: but now I will reade ouer your argumentes, and so we will conferre them. Such they are, that a man may well perceiue you stand on cōscience, & therfore I am the more redy & glad to pity you. So he began to read the first: to the which he sayd, that though the word transubstantiatiō began but lately: yet the thyng alwayes was, and hath bene sithen Christes institution.

Brad.

I do not contend or hang vpon the worde onely, but vpon the thing which is as new as the word.

West.

Then went he to the seconde, and there brought out S. Augustine,* how that if an euill man goyng to the deuill did make his will, his sonne & heyre would not say his father did lye in it, or speak tropically: much more Christ going to God, did neuer lye or vse any figuratiue spech in his last wil and testament. Do you not remember this place of S. Augustine, sayd he?

Brad.

Yes Syr, but I remember not that S. Augustine hath those wordes tropicè or figuratiue, as you rehearse thē: for any man may speak a thing figuratiuely, and lye not: & so Christ did in his last Supper.

West.

After this he went to the thyrd, and brought forth Cyprian, howe that the nature of the bread is turned into flesh. Here (sayth he) my Lord of Caunterbury expoundeth nature for quality, by Gelasius: the which interpretatiō serueth for the answere of your third argument, y^t Christ called bread his body: that is, the quality, forme, & apperance of bread. And further the Scripture is wont to call things by the same names whiche they had before,* as Symon the Leaper: he was not so presētly, but because he had bene so.

Brad.

Cyprian wrote before Gelasius: therefore Cyprian must not expoūd Gelasius, but Gelasius, Cyprian: and so they both teach that bread remaineth stil. As for things hauing still the names they had, is no aunswere, except you could shew that this nowe were not breade, as easily as a man might haue known & sene then Symon to haue bene healed and cleare from his Leprosye.

West.

After this he went to the fourth, of the cup, the which he did not fully read, but digressed into a long talke of Cyprians Epistle De Aquarijs: also of S. Augustine, expounding the breaking of breade by Christ to his two Disciples going to Emaus, to be the Sacrament, with such other talk to no certaine purpose: and therefore Bradford prayed him, that in as much as he had written the reasons that stablished his fayth agaynst Transubstantiation,* so hee woulde likewise doe to him, that is, aunswere him by writing, and shew him moe reasons in writing to confirme Transubstantiation. Which Doctor Weston promised to do, & sayde that he would send or bring it to Bradford agayne within three dayes.

Thus when he had ouer read the argumentes, & here and there spokē litle to the purpose for the auoiding of thē, and Bradford had prayed him to geue him in writing hys aunsweres: then he began to tell Bradford how and what he had done for Grimoald, and how that Bradford neded not to feare any reproch or sclaunder he should suffer,* meaning belike, to haue Bradford secretly come to thē, as Grimoald did: for he subscribed.

Brad.

Maister Deane I would not gladly that you should conceiue of me that I passe of shame of men simply in thys matter: I rather would haue you to think of me,* as the very truth is, that hitherto as I haue not sene nor heard any thing to infirme my fayth agaynst Transubstantiation, so I am no lesse settled in it, then I was at my cōming hither. I loue to be playne with you, and to tell you at the first, as you shall finde at the last.

West.

In good fayth maister Bradford, I loue you the better for your playnnes: & do not think otherwise of me, but that you shall finde me playne in all my talke with you.

Here Weston began to aske Bradford of his imprisonment and condemnation: and so Bradford told him altoge|ther: how he had bene handled. Whereat Weston seemed to wonder: yea in playne wordes he sayd, that Bradford had bene handled otherwise thē he had geuē cause, & so shewed Bradford how that my Lord of Bath reported that he had deserued a Benefite at the Queenes hande, and at all the Counsell.

In this kinde of talke they spent an houre almost, and so as one weery, Bradford arose vp, and Weston called to the Keeper, and before him he bad Bradford be of good cōfort, and sayd that he was out of all perill of death.

Keeper.

Syr (quoth the keeper) but it is in euers mannes mouth that he shall dye to morow.

West.

Wherat Weston seemed halfe amazed, and sayde hee would go say Euēsong before the Queene,* & speake to her in his behalfe. But it is to be thought, that the queene had almost supped at that presēt? for it was past 6, of the clocke.

Brad.

Before the Keeper, Bradforde tolde Weston agayne that still he was one man: and euen as he was at the first, and till he should see matter to teach his conscience the cōtrary, he sayd he must needes so continue.

Keeper.

The keeper desired Bradford to harken to maister Doctors counsell, and prayd M. Doctour to be good vnto him: and so after they had dronke together, M. Doct. with most gentle wordes tooke his leaue for 3. dayes.

Now when he was gone, the Keeper tolde Bradford, that Mayster Doctour spake openly, how that he sawe no cause why they should burne him. Whiche sentence for the ambiguity of the meaning, made him somewhat sory least he had behaued himselfe in any thing, wherein he had gathe'ed any conformablenes to them in theyr doctrine whyche God knoweth, sayeth Bradforde, I neuer as yet did. God our father blesse vs, as his children, and keepe vs from all euill for euer. Amen.

¶An other talke or conference betwene M. Bradford, and Doctour Weston.

Vpon the fifth day of April came M. Doctor Weston to the Counter about two of the clocke in the afternoone,* who excused himselfe for being so long absent: partlye by sicknes, partly for that Doctour Pendleton tolde him that he would come vnto him, and partly for that (quoth he) I withstood certayne Monkes, whiche woulde haue come agayne into Westminster telling him moreouer howe that the Pope was dead, & also declared vnto him how he had spoken to the Queene in his behalfe, and howe that death was not neare vnto him.

Weston.

Last of all, he excused himselfe for not aunswering his argumentes agaynst Transubstantiation: because my comming to day (quoth he) was more by fortune then of purpose,

Brad.

I woulde gladly M. Doctor if it please you, see your aunsweres to my argumentes.*

West.

Why you haue remēbred some thing what I spake to you when I was last with you.

Brad.

No Syr. I neuer called them in maner to mynde, sythen that tyme, as well because I hoped you woulde Page 1622 haue written them: as also for that they seemed not to be so materiall.

West.

In good fayth I can not see any other or better way for you, then for to submit your self to the iudgement of the Church.

Brad.

Mary so will I Syr, if it so be by the church you vnderstand Christes Church.

West.

*Lo, you take vpon you to iudge the Church.

Brad

No sir that do I not: in taking vpon me to discerne I do not iudge the Church.

West.

Yes that you do, and make it inuisible.

Brad.

I do neither.

West.

Why, who can see your Church.

Brad.

Those Syr, that haue spirituall eies, wherwith they might haue discerned Christes visible conuersation here vpon earth.*

West.

Nay: Christes Church hath three tokens, that all mē may looke well vpon: namely, vnity, antiquity, & consent.

Brad.

These three, may be as wel in euil as in good, as wel in sin as in vertue, as well in the deuils church as in gods church: As for ensample, Idolatry amongst the Israelites had all those three. Chrysostome telleth plainely, as you well know, that the church is well known, Tantūmodo per scrip|turas, alonely by the scriptures.

West.

In good fayth, you make your Church inuisible whē you will haue it knowne alonely by the scriptures.

Brad.

No Sir the Scriptures doe playnely set forth to vs the church, that all mē may well enough therby know her, if they li•t to looke.

West.

The Church is like a Tower or towne vpon a hill, that all men may see.

Brad.

True Syr, all menne that be not blinde. Uisible enough is the church, but mens blindnes is great. Impute not therfore to the Church,* that which is to be imputed to mens blindnes.

West.

Where was your Church fourtye yeares agoe? or where is it now? except in a corner of Germany?

Brad.

Forsoothe Syr, the Church of Christ is dispersed, and not tyed to this or that place, but to the word of God: so that where it is, there is Gods Church, if it be truely taught.

West.

Loe, is not this to make the church inuisible? poynt me out a Realme a hundred yeres past, which mainteined your doctrine?

Brad.

Syr, if you will, or would wel marke the state of the Church before Christes cōming,* with it now (as S. Paule and Peter willeth vs) I thinke you woulde not looke for such shewes of the Church to be made, as to poynt it by Realmes. You know that in Helias time both in Israell, and els where, Gods Church was not poyntable: & therfore cryed he out that he was left alone.

West.

No mary, did not God say, that there was 7000. whiche had not bowed theyr knees to Baal? Loe then 7000. shew me seuen thowsande a hundred yeares agoe of your Religion.

Brad.

Syr, these 7000. were not knowne to men, for then Helias would not haue sayde, that he had bene left alone. And it is plain enough by that, which the text hath, namely that God saith, Reliqui mihi, I haue reserued to me. 7000. Marke that it sayth,* God had reserued to hymselfe, to his owne knowledge, as I doubt not but a hundreth yeres agoe God had his 7000. in his proper places, though men knew not therof.

West.

Well, Mayster Bradford, I will not make your case worse, then for transubstantiation, although I know that we agree not in other matters. And I pray you make you it your selfe not worse. If I can do you good, I will: hurt you I will not. I am no Prince, & therefore I cannot promise you life, except you will submit your selfe to the definition of the Church.

Brad.

Syr, so that you will define me your church, that vnder it you bring not in a false Church: you shall not see but that we shall soone be at a poynt.

West.

In good fayth M. Bradforde, I see no good will be done, & therefore I will wish you as much good as I can, and hereafter I will perchance come or send to you again, and so he sent for M. Weale, and departed.

Nowe after his departing, came the keeper M. Claydon, and Steuen Bech, and they were very hote with master Bradford, & spake vnto him in such sort that he should not looke but to haue them vtter enemies vnto him, notwithstanding the frendshippe they both had hytherto pretended. God be with vs, and what matter is it who be agaynst vs.

Among diuers which came to Mayster Bradforde in Prison, some to dispute and conferre, some to geue counsell, some to take comforte, and some to visite him, there was a certayne Gentlewomans seruaunt,*¹ whiche Gentlewoman had bene cruelly afflicted and miserably handled by her father and mother and all her kindred, in her fathers house, for not comming to the Masse, and like at length to haue bene pursued to death, had not the Lorde deliuered her out of her fathers house, beyng put from all that euer she had. This Gentlewomans seruaunt therefore being sent to Maister Bradford with recommendations, had this talke with him, which I thought here not to ouerslyp.

¶A Colloquy betwene M. Bradford and a Gentlewomans seruaunt, being sent to visite him in prison.

THIS seruant or messenger of the foresayd Gentlewomā comming to M. Bradford,*² and taking him by the hand sayd: God be thanked for you. How do you?

Brad.

Mayster Bradford answered: Well, I thanke God. For as men in sayling, which be neare to the shore or hauē where they would be, would be nearer: euen so the nearer I am to God, the nearer I would be.

Seruant.

Sir, I haue neuer sene you so strong & healthsom of body, as me thinke you be now, God be thanked for it.

Brad.

Why, quoth he, I haue geuen ouer all care & study, and onely doe I couet to bee talking with him, whome I haue alwayes studyed to be withall.

Seru.

Wel, God hath done much for you, since the time that I first knew you, and hath wrought wonderously in you to his glory.

Brad.

Truth it is, for he hath dealt fauourably with me, in that he hath not punished me according to my sinnes, but hath suffered me to liue, that I might seeke repentance.

Seru.

Truly we heare say, there is a rod made so greuous, out of the which I thinke no man shall plucke his head.

Brad.

Well, let all that be of Christes flocke, arme thēselues to suffer, for I thinke verely, God will not haue one of hys to escape vntouched, if hee loue him, let them seeke what meanes or wayes they can.

Seru.

We'l sir,* there goeth a talke of a Fryer that shoulde preach before the king, & should tell him, that he should be guilty of the innocent bloud that hath bene shed of late.

Brad.

Uerely, quoth Bradford, I had a booke within these two dayes of his writing, & therein he sayth, that it is not mest nor conuenient that the heretickes should liue: & ther^efore I haue maruell how that talke should rise, for I haue heard of it also, and I haue also talked with this Fryer (he is named Fryer Fonse) and with diuers other,* & I prayse God, they haue confirmed me: for they haue nothing to say but that which is most vayne.

Seru.

Syr, Father Cardmaker hath him commended vnto you.

Brad.

How doth he, how doth he?

Seru.

Well God be thanked.

Brad.

I am very glad therof: for in deed for my lord Chancellour did cast him in my teeth, but as Dauid sayth, God hath disappoynted him.

Seru.

Forsooth, Gods name be prayسد, he is very strong.

Brad.

And I trust, so are we. What els? our quarel is most iust: therefore let vs not be afrayd.

Seru.

My maystres hath her recommended vnto you.

Brad.

How doth she?

Seru.

Well, God be prayسد, but she hath bene sorer afflicted with her owne father and mother, then euer you were with your imprisonment, and yet God hath preserued her, I trust, to his glory.

Brad.

I pray you tell her, I read this day a godly historye, written by Basilius magnus,* of a vertuous woman whiche was a widdow, and was named Iuleddo. She had great landes, and many childrē, and nigh her dwelled a Cormorant, which for her vertuousnes, & godly lyuing had great indignitiō at her, & of very malice he took away her lands, so that she was cōstrained to go to the law with him: & in conclusion the matter came to the triall before the Iudge, who demaunded of this Tyrant why he wrongfully with held these lands frō this woman. He made answer & said: he might so do, for (sayth he) this womā is disobedient to y^e kings proceedings: for she wil in no wise worship his gods nor offer sacrifice vnto thē. Then the Iudge hearing that, sayd vnto her: Womā, if this be true, thou art not only like to loose thy land, but also thy life, vnles that thou worship our gods, and do sacrifice vnto them. This godly woman hearing that, stept me forth to the Iudge, & sayd: Is there no remedy, but either to worship your false gods, or els to loose my landes & life? then farewell sute, farewell landes, farewell childrē, farewell frendes, yea & farewell life too: and in respect of y^e true honor of the euerliuing God, farewell all. And with that saying did the Iudge cōmit her to pryson, Page 1623 and afterward she suffred most cruel death: and being brought to the place of execution, she exhorted all womē to be strong and constant. For (sayth she) ye were redeemed with as deare a price as men. For although ye were made of the rib of the man,* yet be you also of his flesh: so that also in the case & triall of your fayth towards God, ye ought to be as strong. And thus dyed shee constantly, not fearyng death. I pray you tell your Maistresse of this history.

Seru.

That shall I sir by Gods grace: for she told me that shee was with you and M. Saunders, and receiued your gentle counsell.

Brad.

We neuer gaue her other counsell but the trueth, & in witnes therof we haue & wil seale it with our blouds. For I thought this night that I had bene sent for, because at a 11. of the clocke there was such rapping at the dore.

Then answered a mayd, and sayd: why thē I perceiue you were afrayd.

Brad.

*Ye shall heare how fearefull I was. For I considered that I had not slept, and I thought to take a nap before I went: and after I was a sleepe, these men came into the next chamber, and sang, as it was tolde me, and yet for all my fearefulnes I heard thē not: therfore belike I was not afrayd, that slept so fast.

Seru.

Do you lacke any thing toward your necessity?

Brad.

Nothing but your prayers, & I trust I haue them, and you mine.

Seru.

I saw a priest come to you to day in the morning.

Brad.

Yea, he brought me a letter from a Fryer, and I am writing an answeare.

Seru.

Then we let you, therefore the liuing God be wyth you.

Brad.

And with you also, and blesse you.

Seru.

Amen, sayd we, and gaue him thanks, & departed.

*Thus still in prison continued Bradford, vntill the moneth of Iuly, in such labors & suffrings as he before alwayes had susteyned in prison. But when the time of hys determined death was come, he was sodēly conueyed out of the Counter where he was prisoner, in the night season to Newgate, as afore is declared, & frō thence he was caried the next morning to Smithfield, where he constantly abiding in the same truth of God, which before he had confessed, earnestly exhorting the people to repent & to return to Christ, & sweetly comforting the godly yong springall of 19. or 20. yeares old, which was burned with him, chearefully he ended his paynefull life, to liue with Christ.

¶Iohn Leafe burnt with M. Bradford.

*With whō also was burnt one Iohn Leafe an apprētice to Humfrey Gawdy Tallow Chaundlor, of the parish of Christs church in London, of the age of 19. yeres and aboue, borne at Kirkeby Moreside, in the Countye of Yorke: who vpō the friday next before Palme sonday was cōmitted to the Counter in Breadstreete, * by an Alderman of London, who had rule & charge of that warde or part of the City, where the sayd Leafe did dwell. After he cōmyng to examination before Boner, gaue a firme & Christian testimony of his doctrine & profession, answering to such articles as were objected to him by the sayd Bishop.

First, as touching his beliefe & fayth in the sayd sacrament of the aultar, * he answered, that after y^e words of consecration spoken by the priest ouer the bread & wine, there was not the very true & naturall body & bloud of Christ in substance: and further did hold and beleue, that the sayd sacramēt of the aultar, as it is now called, vsed, & beleued in this realme of Englād, is idolatrous & abhominable: & also sayd further, that he beleued, that after the words of cōsecration spoken by the Priest ouer the material bread and wine, there is not the selfe same substance of Christes body & bloud there cōteined, but bread & wine, as it was before: and further sayd, that he beleued, that when the priest deliuereth the said material bread & wine to the cōmunicants, he deliuereth but onely * material bread and wyne, and the communicants do receiue the same in remēbrance of Christes death and passion, and spiritually in fayth they receiue Christs body and bloud, but not vnder the formes of bread and wine: and also affirmed that he beleued auricular confession not to be necessary to be made vnto a priest, for it is no poynt of soule health, neither that the Priest hath anye authority geuen him by the Scripture, to absolue and remit any sinne.

Upon these his answeres and testimony of his fayth, he at that time being dismissed, was bid the Monday next, being the x. of Iune, to appere again in the said place, there and then to heare the sentence of his condemnatō: who so did. At what time the foresayd Bishop propounding the sayd articles again to him, as before, assaying by al maner of wayes, to reuoke him to his owne trade, that is, from truth to error, notwithstanding all his perswasīōs, threatens and promises, found him the same man still, so planted vpon the sure rocke of truth, that no wordes nor deedes of men could remoue him.

Then the bishop after many wordes to and fro, at last asked him, if he had bene M. Rogers scholler? * To whō the foresayd Iohn Leafe answered agayne, graunting him so to be: and that he the same Iohn did beleue in the doctrine of the sayd Rogers, and in the doctrine of Bishop Hooper, Cardmaker, and other of their opinion, which of late were burned for the testimony of Christ, and that he would dye in that doctrine that they dyed for: And after other replications agayne of the Bishop, mouing him to returne to the vnity of the Church, he with a great courage of spirite answered agayne in these words: My Lord quoth he, you cal mine opiniō heresy: it is the true light of the word of God: and agayne repeating the same, he professed that he would neuer forsake his stayed & well grounded opinion, while y^e breath should be in his body. Wherupon the Bishop being too weake, eyther to refute his sentence, or to remoue hys constancy, proceeded consequently to read the Popish sentence of cruell condemnatō, * wherby this godly & constant young man being cōmitted to the secular power of the shiriffes there present, was thē adiudged, & not long after suffered the same day with M. Bradford, confirming w^t hys death that which he had spoken and professed in his life.

It is reported of the said Iohn Leafe, by one that was in the Counter the same time, and saw the thing, * that after his examinations before the Bishop, when two bills were sent vnto him in the Coūter in Bredstreet, the one conteyning a recantation, the other his confessions, to knowe to which of them he would put to his hand, first hearyng the Byll of recantation read vnto him (because he coulde not read nor write hymselfe) that he refused. And when the other was read vnto him, which he well liked of, in stead of a pen he tooke a pinne, and so pricking his hand, sprinckled the bloud vpon the sayd bill, willing the reader thereof, to shew the Bishop, that he had sealed the same Bill with his bloud already.

The behauour of M. Iohn Bradford Preacher, and the young man that suffered with him in Smithfield, named Iohn Leafe, a Prentise, which both suffered for the testimony of Christ.

First, when they came to the stake in Smithfielde to bee burned, * M. Bradford lying prostrate on the one side of the stake, and the yoūg man Iohn Leafe on the other side, they lay flat on theyr faces, praying to thēselues the space of a minute of an houre. Then one of the Sheriffes sayde to M. Bradford: Arise and make an end: for the prease of the people is great.

At that word they both stode vp vpon their feete: and then M. Bradford tooke a fagot in his hand, and kissed it, and so likewise the stake. And when he had so done, he desired of the Sheriffes that his seruant might haue his rayment. For (sayde he) I haue nothing els to geue him: and besides that, he is a poore man. And the Shiriffe sayde, hee should haue it. And so forthwith M. Bradford did put off his rayment, and went to the stake: and holding vp hys handes and casting his countenance to heauen, he sayde thus: O England, England, repent thee of thy sinnes, repēt thee of thy sinnes. Beware of Idolatrye, * beware of false Antichristes take heede they do not deceiue you. And as he was speaking these wordes, the Sheriffe bade tye his hands, if he would not be quiet. O M. Sheriffe (sayd M. Bradford) I am quiet: God forgeue you this, Mayster Sheriffe. And one of the officers wich made the fire, hearing Mayster Bradford so speaking to the Shiriffe, sayde: If you haue no better learninge then that, you are but a foole, and were best to hold your peace. To the which wordes M. Bradford gaue no answe: but asked all the world forgeuenesse, and forgaued all the world, and prayed the people to pray for him, and turned hys head vnto the young man that suffered with him, and sayd: Bee of good comfort Brother, for we shall haue a mery supper with the Lorde thys night: and so spake no more wordes that any man did heare, but imbracing the Reedes, sayd thus: Strayt is the way, and narrow is the Gate that leadeth to eternall saluation,*and fewe there bee that finde it.

And thus they both ended theyr mortall liues, moste likest two Lambes, without any alteration of their countenance, beyng voyde of all feare, hoping to obtaine the price of the game that they had long runne at: to the which I beseeche Almightye God happily to conducte vs, thorow the merites of Iesus Christe our Lorde and Sauior. Amen.

☛The description of the burning of M. Iohn Bradford Preacher, and Iohn Leafe a Prentise.

TOuching M. Wodroffe the Sheriffe, mention is made a little before,* how churlishly here hee aunswered M. Bradford at the stake, not suffering him to speake, but cōmaunding his handes to be tyed. &c. The like extremity or worse, he vsed also before to M. Rogers: whereof ye haue heard before.

The sayd Wodroffe Sheriffe aboue mentioned, was ioyned in office with an other,* called Syr William Chester, for the yeare 1555. Betweene these two Sheriffes such difference there was of iudgement and Religion, that the one, that is, Maister Wodroffe, was woont commonly to laugh,* y^e other to shedde teares at the death of Christs people. And where as the other was woont to restrayne and to beate the people, whiche were desirous to take them by the handes that should be burned: the other Sheriffe contrariwise agayne with much sorrow and mildnesse behaued himselfe, which I wish here to be spoken & known to the commendation of him, although I doe not greatly know the partie.

Furthermore, here by the way to note the seuere punishmēt of Gods hand agaynst the sayde Wodroffe, as agaynst all other such cruell persecutours, so it happened, that within halfe a yeare after the burning of this blessed Martyr, the sayde Sheriffe was so stricken on the right side with such a paulsie, or stroke of Gods hand whatsoever it was, that for the space of eight yeares after, till hys dying day, hee was not able to turne himselfe in his bed, but as two men with a sheete were fayn to stirre him: and withall such an insaciable deuouring came vpon him, that it was monstrous to see. And thus continued he the space of eight yeares together.

¶In mortem Iohannis Bradfordi constantissimi Martyris.

*Discipulo nulli supra licet esse magistrum:

Quique Deo seruit, tristia multa feret.

Corripit omnipotens natum quem diligit omnem:

Ad coelum stricta est difficilisque via.

Has Bradforde tuo dum condis pictore voces:

Non hominum rigidas terribilesque minas,

Sed nec blanditias, non vim, nec vincula curas,

Tradis & accensae membra cremanda pyrae.

Here follow the letters of M. Bradford.

THis godly Bradford and heauenly martyr,* duryng the tyme of his imprisonment, wrote sondrye comfortable Treatises, and many godly Letters, of whiche, some hee wrote to the Citty of London, Cambridge, Walden, to Lankeshyre and Chesshyre, & diuers to his other priuate friendes. By the which foresayd Letters, to the intent it may appeare how godly this man occupied hys time being prisoner, what speciall zeale he bare to the state of christes Church, what care he had to performe his office, how earnestly he admonished all men, howe tenderly he comforted the heauy harted: how fruitfully he confirmed thē whom he had taught, I thought here good to place y^e same although to exhibite here all the letters that he wrote,* (being in number so many, that they are able to fill a booke) it cannot well be compassed, yet neuerthelesse we mynde to excerpt the principal of them, referring the reader for the residue, to the booke of Letters of the martyrs, where they may be found.

And first, for so much as yee heard in the storye before,* how the Earle of Darby complayned in the Parliament house, of certayne Letters written of Iohn Bradford out of prison, to Lancashyre, and also howe hee was charged both of the Bishop of Winchester, and of M. Allen wyth the same letters, to the intent the Reader more perfectly may vnderstand what letters they were, being written in deede to his mother, brethren, and sisters, out of the Tower, before his condemnation, we wil beginne first with the same letters: the copy with the contentes wherof is thys, as followeth.

¶A comfortable letter of M. Bradford to hys Mother, a godly matrone, dwelling in Manchester, and to hys brethren and sisters, and other of his frendes there.

OUR deare and sweete Sauioure Iesus Christ, whose prisoner at this present (prayed be his name therfore) I am, preserue and keepe you my good mother,* wyth my brothers and sisters, my Father Iohn Traues, Thomas Sorrocold, Laurence and Iames Bradshawe, with theyr wiues and families. &c. now and for euer. Amen.

I am at this present in prison sure enough for starring, to confirme that I haue preached vnto you: as I am ready (I thanke God) with my lyfe and bloud to seale the same, if god vouch me worthy of that honor. For good mother and brethren, it is a most speciall benefite of God, to Page 1625 suffer for his names sake and gospel, as now I doe: I hartily thanke him for it, and am sure that with him I shal be partaker of his glory, as Paule sayth? If we suffer with hym we shall raygne with him. Therefore be not faynt harted, but rather reioyce,* at the least for my sake which now am in y^e right and high way to heauen: for by many afflictions we must enter into the kingdome of heauen.* Now will God make knowne his children. When the winde doth not blow, then can not a man know the wheate from y^e chaffe: but when the blast commeth, then fleeth away the chaffe, but the wheate remayneth, and is so farre from being hurt that by the winde it is more clensed from the chaffe and knowne to be whea•e. Gold when it is cast into the fire, is the more precious: so are Gods children by the crosse of affliction.* Alwayes God beginneth his iudgement at hys house. Christ and the Apostles were in most miserie in the land of Iewry, but yet the whole land smarted for it after: so now Gods Children are first chastised in this worlde, that they should not be damned with the world: for surely great plagues of God hang ouer this Realme.

Ye all know there was neuer more knowledge of god and lesse godly liuing and true seruing of God. It was counted a foolishe thing to serue God truely,* and earnest prayer was not past vpon. Preaching was but a pastime. The Communion was counted too common. Fasting to subdue the fleshe, was farre out of vse. Almes was almost nothing. Malice, Couetousnes, and vncleannes, was cōmon euery where, with swearing, dronkenes, and idlenes. God therfore nowe is come, as you haue hearde mee preach, and because he will not damne vs with the world he beginneth to punishe vs: as me for my carnall liuinge. For as for my preaching, I am most certaine it is & was Gods trueth, and I trust to geue my life for it by Gods grace: But because I loued not the Gospell truely, but outwardly, therefore doth he thus punish me: nay rather in punishing blesseth me. And in deede I thanke him more of this prison,* then of any Parlour, yea then of anye pleasure that euer I had: for in it I finde God my most sweet good God alwayes. The flesh is punished, first to admonish vs nowe hartily to liue as we professe, secondlye, to certifie the wicked of their iust damnation, if they repent not.

Perchaunce you are weakened in that whiche I haue preached, because God doth not defend it (as you thinke) but suffereth the popish doctrine to come agayne and preuayle: but you must know, good mother, that God by this doth proue and try his children & people whether they wil vnfaynedly and simply hang on him & his worde.* So dyd he w^t the Israelites, bringing thē into a Desert after theyr comming out of Egypt, where (I meane the wildernes) was want of all thinges in comparison of that which they had in egipt. Christ, whē he came into this world, brought no worldly wealth nor quietnes with him, but rather war The world (sayth he) shall reioyce, but ye shall mourne & weepe but your weeping shalbe turned into ioy:and therefore happye are they that mourne and weep, for they shalbe comforted. They are marked then with Gods marke in their foreheades, and not with the beastes marke, I meane the popes shauen •rowne, who now with his shauelinges reioyce: but woe vnto them, for they shalbe cast down, they shal weep and mourne. The rich glutton had here his ioye and Lazarus sorowe, but afterwarde the time was chaunged. The end of carnall ioy is sorrow. Now let the whoremōger ioy with the dronkarde, swearer, couetous, malicious and blinde bussarde syr Iohn: for the Masse will not byte them, neither make them to blushe, as preaching woulde. Nowe may they doe what they will, come deuils to the Church and goe deuils home, for no man must find fault. And they are glad of this: now haue they their hartes desire, as the Sodomites had when Lothe was gone, but what followed? Forsooth when they cried peace, al shalbe wel, then came Gods vengeance, fire & brymstone frō heauen, and burnt vp euery mothers child: euen so deare mother will it do to our papistes.

Wherefore feare God: sticke to his word though all the world would swarue from it. Dye you must once, & when or how,* can you not tell. Dye therefore with Christ, suffer for seruing him truely and after his word: for sure may we be that of all deathes it is most to be desired to die for gods sake. This is the most safe kynde of dying: wee can not doubt but that wee shall goe to heauen, if wee dye for hys names sake. And that you shall dye for his names sake Gods word will warrant you, if you sticke to that which God by me hath taught you. You shal see that I speake as I thinke: for by Gods grace I will drincke before you of this cup, if I be put to it.

I doubt not but God wil geue me his grace, & strengthen me thereunto: pray that he would, and that I refuse it not. I am at a poynt euen when my Lord God will, to come to him. Death nor life, Prison nor pleasure (I trust in God) shalbe able to separte me from my Lorde God & his Gospell. In peace when no persecution was, then were you content and glad to heare mee, then did you beleue me and will you not do so now, seeing I speake that which I trust by Gods grace, if neede bee to verifie wyth my life? Good mother, I write before God to you, as I haue preached before him.

It is Gods truth I haue taught: It is that same infallible word whereof he sayd: Heauen and earth shall passe: but my word shall not passe The masse and such baggage as the false worshippers of God and enemies of Christes Crosse (the Papistes I say) haue brought in agayne,* to poyson the Church of God withall, displeaseth God highly, and is abhominable in his sight. Happy may he be whiche of conscience suffereth losse of life or goodes in dissalowing it. Come not at it. If God be God follow him: If y^e Masse be God: let them that will, see it, heare, or be present at it,* & go to the deuill with it. What is there as God ordayned? His supper was ordayned to be receiued of vs in the memoriall of his death, for the confirmation of our fayth, that his body was broken for vs, & his bloud shed for pardon of our sinnes: but in the masse there is no receiuing, but the p[•]iest keepeth all to himselfe alone. Christ sayth, Take eate: No, sayth the Priest: gape, peepe. There is a sacrificing, yea killing of Christ agayne as much as they may. There is Idolatry in worshipping the outward signe of bread & wyne, there is all in Latine, you cannot tell what he saith. To conclude, there is nothing as God ordeyned. Wherefore my good mother come not at it.

Oh, will some say, it will hinder you,* if you refuse to come to masse and to do as other do. But God wil further you, (be you assured) as you shall one day find: who hath promised to them that suffer hinderance or losse of anye thing in this world, his great blessing here, and in y^e world to come life euerlasting.

You shall bee counted an hereticke: but not of others then of hereticke, whose prayse is a disprayse.

You are not able to reason agaynst the Priestes: but God wil, that all they shall not be able to withstand you. No body wil do so but you onely: In deede no matter, for •ewe enter into the narrow gate which bringeth to saluation. Howbeit, you shall haue with you (I doubt not) Father Traues and other my brothers and sisters to go with you therein: but if they will not, I your sonne in God (I trust) shall not leaue you an inche, but go before you: pray that I may, & geue thanks for me. Reioyce in my suffering, for it is for your sakes to confirme the truth I haue taught. How soeuer you do, beware this letter come not abroad, but into father Traues his handes: * for if it should be knowne that I haue pen and inke in the prison, then would it be worse with me. Therefore to your selues keep this letter, commending me to God & his mercy in Christ Iesus, who make me worthy for his names sake, to geue my life for his Gospel and Church sake. Out of the Tower of London, the sixt day of October. 1553.

My name I write not for causes, you know it well enough: Like the letter neuer the worse. Commend me to all our good brethren and sisters in the Lord. Howsoever you do, be obedient to the higher powers, that is no point either in hand or tongue rebell, but rather if they cōmaund that which with good conscience you cānot obey, lay your head on the blocke, and suffer what soeuer they shall do or say. By pacience possesse your soules.

After the time that M. Bradford, was condemned, and sent to the Counter, it was purposed of his aduersaries, as ye heard before, that hee shoulde be had to Manchester where he was borne, and there be burned. Whereupon he writeth to the Cittye of London, thinking to take his last Vale of them in this letter.

¶To the Citie of London.

TO all that professe the Gospell and true doctrine of our Lord and Sauour Iesus Christ in the Cittie of London, * Iohn Bradford a most vnworthy seruaunt of y^e Lord now not onely in prison, but also excommunicated & condemned to be burned for the same true doctrine, wisheth mercy, grace, & peace with increase of al godly knowledge and pietie, from God the father of mercy, through the merites of oure alone and omnisufficient Redeemer Iesus Christ, by the operation of the holy spirite for euer. Amen.

My dearely beloued brethren in our Sauour Christ, although the tyme, I haue to liue is very little (for hourly I looke when I shoulde be had hence to be conueyed into Lankeshyre, there to be burned, and to render my lyfe by Page 1626 the prouidence of God, where I first receaued it by y^e same prouidence, and although the charge is great to keepe me from all things wherby I might signifie any thing to the world of my state: yet hauing, as now I haue, pen & inke, through Gods working, maugre the head of Satan and his souldiours, I thought good to write a shorte confession of my fayth, and thereto ioyne a little exhortation vnto you all, to liue according to your profession.

First, for my fayth, I do confesse and pray all the whole Congregation of Christ to beare witnesse with me of the same, that I do beleue constantly through the gift & goodnes of God, (for fayth is Gods onely gifte) all the 12. articles of the Symbole or Creede, commonly attributed to the collection of the Apostles. This my faythe I woulde gladly particularly declare and expound to the confirmation and comfort of the simple: but alas, by starts & stealth I write in maner that I write, and therefore I shall desire you all to take this breuitie in good part. And this fayth I holde, not because of the Creede it selfe, but because of the word of God, the which teacheth and confirmeth euery Article accordingly. This worde of God written by the Prophetes and Apostles, left and contayned in the Canonick bookes of the whole Bible, I do beleue to containe plentifully all thinges necessary to saluation, so that nothing (as necessary to saluation) ought to be added thereto and therefore the Church of Christ,* nor none of his congregation ought to be burdened with any other doctrine, thē which hereout hath his foundation and ground. In testimony of this fayth, I render and geue my life, being condemned as well for not acknowledging the Antichrist of Rome to be Christes vicar generall and supreme head of his Catholicke and vniuersall Church here or els wherevpon earth: as for denying the horrible and idolatrous doctrine of Transubstantiation, and Christes reall, corporall, and carnall presence in his supper, vnder the formes and accidences of bread and wine.

To beleue Christ our Sauour to be the head of hys Church, and kinges in their Realmes to be the supreme powers, to whom euery soule oweth obedience, and to beleue that in the supper of Christ (which the Sacramente of the aaltar, as the Papists call it, and vse it, doth vtterly ouerthrow) is a true and very presēce of whole Christ God and man to the fayth of the receiuer, but not to the stander by & looker vpon as it is a true & very presence of bread & wine to the senses of men: to beleue this (I saye) will not serue, and therefore as an herericke I am condemned, and shalbe burned: whereof I aske God hartily mercy that I do no more reioyce then I do, hauing so great cause as to be an instrument wherein it may please my deare Lorde God and Sauour to suffer.

For albeit mo manifold sinnes, euen sithen I came into prison, haue deserued at the handes of God, not onely this tēporal, but also eternall fire in hell, much more then my former sinful life, which y^e Lord pardō, for his Christes sake, as I knowe he of his mercy hath done, & neuer will lay mine iniquities to my charge, to condēnation, so great is his goodnes (praised therefore be his holy name) althogh (I say) my manifold and greeuous late sinnes haue deserued most iustly all the tyranny that mā or deuill can do vnto me,* and therefore I confesse that the Lorde is iust: & that his iudgements be true and deserued on my behalfe: yet y^e Bishoppes and Prelates do not persecute them in me, but Christ himselfe, his worde, his trueth, and Religion. And therefore I haue great cause, yea most great cause to reioice that euer I was borne, and hetherto kept of the Lord: that by my death, which is deserued for my sinnes, it pleaseth y^e heauenly father to glorifie his name, to testifie hys truth, to confirme his veritie,* to repugne his aduersaries. Oh good God and mercifull father, forgeue my great vnthākfulnes, especially herein.

And you my dearely beloued, for the Lord Iesu Christes sake, I humbly and hartily in his bowels & bloude do now for my last Vale and farewell in this present lyfe, beseeche you and euerye of you, that you will consider this worke of the Lord accordingly: First, by me to be admonished to beware of hipocrisie and carnall securitie: professe not the Gospell with tongue and lippes onely, but in hart & veritie:* frame and fashion your liues accordingly: beware Gods name be not euill spoken of, and the Gospell lesse regarded by your conuersation. God forgeue me that I haue not so hartily professed it as I shoulde haue done, but haue sought much my selfe therein. The Gospell is a new doctrine to the old man: it is new wyne, and therefore cannot be put in old bottels,* without more great hurt thē good wine to the bottels. If we will talke with y^e Lorde, we must put of our shoes and carnall affections: if wee will heare the voyce of the Lorde, we must wash our garmentes and be holy: if we will be Christes disciples, wee must deny our selues, take vp our crosse and follow Christ we cannot serue two maysters. If we seeke Christs kingdome, we must also seeke for the righteousnes thereof.* To this petition (Let thy kingdome come) we must ioyn, Thy will be done, done, on earth as it is in heauen. If wee will not be doers of the worde, but hearers of it onely, we sore deceiue our selues. If wee heare the gospell, and loue it not, we declare our selues to be but fooles, and builders vpon the sand. The Lordes spirite hateth fayning: deceitfulnes the Lord abhorreth: if we come to him, wee must beware that we come not with a double hart: for then may chance that God will aunswere vs according to the blocke which is in our heart, and so we shall deceiue our selues and others.

To fayth see y^t we couple a good conscience, least wee make a shipwracke.* To the Lord we must come with fear and reuerence. If we will be gospellers, we must be Christes: if we be Christes, we must crucifie our flesh with the lustes and concupiscences therof: if we wil be vnder grace sinne must not beare rule in vs. We may not come to the Lord, and draw nigh to him with our lips, and leaue our hartes els where, least the Lordes wrath waxe hot,* and he take from vs the good remayning. In no case can y^e kingdome of Christ approach to them that repent not. Therefore my dearely beloued, let vs repent and be hartily sory y^t we haue so carnally, so hypocritically, so couetously, so vaynegloriously professed the gospell. For all these I confesse my selfe to the glory of God, that he may couer mine offences in the day of iudgement. Let the anger & plagues of God, most iustly fallen vpon vs, be applyed to euery one of our desertes, that from the bottome of our hartes euery of vs may say: It is I Lord that haue sinned agaynst thee: it is my hipocrisie, my vaynglory, my couetousnes, vncleanes, carnalitie, securitie, idlenes, vnthankfulnes, selfeloue,* and such like, which haue deserued the taking away of our good king, of thy word and true religion, of thy good ministers by exile, prisonmēt, and death: it is my wickednes that cau'seth successe and increase of authoritie and peace to thine enemies. Oh be mercifull, be mercifull vnto vs.* Turne to vs agayne, O Lorde of hostes, & turne vs vnto thee: correct vs, but not in thy furie, least we be consumed in thyne anger: chastice vs not in thy wrathful displeasure: reprove vs not, but in the middest of thine anger remember thy mercy. For if thou marke what is done amisse, who shall be able to abide it? But with thee is mercifulnes, that thou mightest be worshipped. Oh then be mercifull vnto vs, y^t we might truely worship thee. Helpe vs, for the glorie of thy name: be mercifull vnto our sinnes, for they are great: O heale vs, and help vs for thine honor. Let not the wicked people say, where is their God. &c.

On this sort my right dearely beloued, let vs hartily bewayle our sinnes, repent vs of our former euil life, hartily and earnestly purpose to amēd our lyues in all things continually watch in prayer, diligently and reuerently attend, heare, and reade the holy scriptures, labour after our vocation to amend our brethren.* Let vs reprove the workes of darckenes. Let vs flee frō al Idolatrye. Let vs abhorre the Antichristiā and romish rotten seruice, detest the popishe Masse, abrenounce their Romishe God, prepare our selues to the crosse, be obedient to all that be in authoritie in all thinges that be not agaynst God and his word for then aunswere with the Apostles: It is more meete to obey God then man. Howbeit neuer for any thinge resiste,* or rise agaynst the magistrates, Auenge not your selues, but commit your cause to the Lord, to whome vengeance pertayneth, and he in his tyme will reward it. If you feele in your selues an hope and trust in God, that he will neuer tempt you aboue that he will make you able to beare,* be assured the Lord will be true to you: and you shall be able to beare all brundes. But if you want this hope, flee and get you hence rather then by your tarying Gods name should be dishonored.

In summe, cast your care on the Lorde, knowing for most certayne, that he is carefull for you: with him are all the heares of your head numbred, so that not one of them shall perish without his good pleasure and wille: muche more thē, nothing shall happē to your bodies, which shall not be profitable, how soeuer for a time it seeme otherwise to your sences. Hang on the prouidence of God,* not onely when you haue meanes to helpe you, but also when you haue no meanes, yea when all meanes be agaynst you. Geue him this honour, which of all other thinges he most chiefly requireth at your handes: namely beleue that you are his children through Christ, that he is your father and God through him, y^t he loueth you, pardoneth you al your offences, he is with you in trouble, and will be with you for euer. When you fall, he will put vnder his hande, you shall not lye still: before you cal vpon him, he heareth you: Page 1627 out of euill hee will finally bryng you, and deliuer you to his eternall ioy. Doubt not my dearly beloued hereof, doubt not (I say) this will God your father do for you in respect, not of your selues, but in respect of christ your Cap'tayne your Pastor, your keeper, out of whose hands none shalbe able to catch you,* in him be quiet, & oftē cōsider your dignitie, namely how that ye be Gods children, the saints of God, citizens of heauen, temples of the holy Ghost, the thrones of God, members of Christ, and Lordes ouer all.

Therefore be ashamed to think, speake, or do any thing that should be vnseemely for Gods children, Gods saynts Christes members.* &c. Marueile not though the deuill and the worlde hate you, though ye be persecuted here: for the seruaunt is not aboue his mayster. Couet not earthly ryches,* feare not the power of man, loue not this world, nor thinges that be in this world: but long for the Lord Iesus his comming, at whiche time youre bodies shall be made like vnto his glorious body, when he appeareth you shall be like vnto him: when your lyfe shall thus be reuealed, then shall ye appeare with him in glory.

In the meane season liue in hope hereof. Let the lyfe you lead be in the faith of the sonne of God: For the iust doth liue by fayth, which fayth fleeth from al euill, & followeth y^e word of God as a Lanterne to her feete and a light to her steppes: her eyes be aboue where Christ is, shee behouldeth not the thinges present, but rather thinges to come: she glorieth in affliction, she knoweth that the afflictions of this life are not like to be compared to the glory whiche God will reueale to vs,* and in vs. Of this glory GOD graunt vs here a liuely taste: then shall wee runne after the sent it sendeth forth. It wil make vs valiaunt men to take to vs the kingdome of God: whyther the Lorde of mercy bryng vs in hys good tyme, through Chryste oure Lorde, to whome with the father and the holy ghost, three persōs and one God, be al honour and glory, world without end. Amen.

My dearly beloued, I woulde gladly haue geuen here my body to haue bene burned for the confirmation of the true doctrine I haue taught here vnto you. But that my Countrey must haue. Therefore I pray you take in good part this signification of my good will towards euery of you. Impute the want herein to tyme and trouble. Pardon me mine offensiue and negligent behauiour when I was amongst you. With me repent, & labour to amend. Continue in the trueth whiche I haue truely taught vnto you by preaching in al places where I haue come, Gods name therefore be prayسد. Confesse Christ when you be called, whatsoever commeth therof, and the God of peace be with vs all. Amen.

This xi. of Februar. an. 1555.

Your brother in bondes for the Lordes sake, Iohn Bradford.

To the vniuersitie and towne of Cambridge.

TO all that loue the Lorde Iesus and his true doctrine, being in the vniuersitie and towne of Cambridge,* Iohn Bradford a most vnworthy seruaunt of the Lord, nowe not onely prisoned, but also condemned for the same true doctrine, wisheth, grace peace, and mercye, with increase of all godlines from God the father of all mercy, through the bloody passion of our Sauour Iesus Christ, by the liuely working of the holy spirite for euer. Amen.

Although I looke hourelly when I should be had to the stake (my right dearly beloued in the Lord, and although the charge ouer me is great and strayt: yet hauing by the prouidēce of God secretly pen and an ynke, I could not but something signifie vnto you my solicitude which I haue for you and euerye of you in the Lord, though not as I woulde, yet as I may. You haue often and openly heard the truth, (specialllye in this matter wherein I am condemned) disputed and preached, that it is needeles to do any more but onely to put you in remembraunce of the same: but hitherto haue you not heard it confirmed, and, as it were, sealed vp, as now you doe and shall heare by me, that is, by my death and burning. For albeit I haue deserued (through my vncleannes, hypocrisie, auarice, vainglory, idlenes, vnthankfulnes, and carnalitie, wherof I accuse my selfe, to my confusion before the world, that before God through Christ I might, as my assured hope is I shall, find mercy) eternall death, and hell fire, much more then this affliction and fire prepared for me: yet my dearly beloued, it is not these, or any of these thinges, wherfore the prelates do persecute me, but Gods verity and truth: yea euen christ him selfe is the onely cause and thing wherfore I nowe am condemned,* and shalbe burned as an hereticke, for because I will not graunt the Antichrist of Rome to be Christes vicar generall and supreme head of his church here, and euery where vppon earth, by Gods ordinaunce, and because I will not graunt suche corporall, reall, and carnall presence of Christes body & bloud in the sacrament, as doth transubstantiate the substaunce of bread and wine, and is receiued of the wicked,* yea of dogges & mise. Also I am excommunicated, and counted as a dead member of Christes Church, as a rotten braunche, and therefore shall be cast into the fire.

Therefore ye ought hartily to reioyce with me, and to geue thanks for me, that God the eternall father hath vouched safe our mother to bring vp any childe in whom it would please him to magnifie his holy name as hee doth,* and I hope for his mercye and truthe sake, will do in me, and by me. Oh, what such benefite vppon earth can it be, as that that which deserued deathe by reason of my sinnes, should be deliuered to a demonstration, a testification, and confirmation of Gods veritie and trueth? Thou my mother the Vniuersitie hast not onely had the truth of gods word playnely manifested vnto thee by reading, disputinge and preaching publickely and priuately: but now to make thee altogether excuselesse, and as it were, almost to sinne agaynst the holy Ghost, if thou put to thy helping hand with the romysh route to suppress the veritie, and set out the contrary, thou hast my lyfe and bloud as a zeale to confirme thee: if thou wilt be confirmed▪ or els to confound thee and beare witnes agaynst thee, if thou wilt take part with the prelates and Clergye,* which nowe fill vp the measure of their fathers which slew the Prophetes and Apostles, that all righteous bloud from Abell to Bradforde, sued vpon the earth, may be required at theyr handes.

Of this therefore I thought good before my death, as tyme and libertie woulde suffer me (for loue and duetye I beare vnto thee) to admonishe thee good mother, and my sister the Towne, that you would call to minde from whence you are fallen, and study to do the first workes. You know (if you wil these matters of the * Romish supremacy, and the Antichristian transubstantiation, wh•••by Christes supper is ouerthrowne, his priesthoode euacuat•, his sacrifice frustrate, the ministry of his word vnplaced, repentaunce repelled, fayth faynted, godlines extinguished, the Masse mayntayned, idolatry supported, and all impietie cherished: you know I say (if you will) that these opinions are not onely besides Gods word, but euen directly agaynst it, and therefore to take part with them, is to take part agaynst God, agaynst whome you cannot preuayle.

Therefore for the tender mercy of Christ, in his bowels and bloud I beseeche you, to take Christes collyrium and eye salve to annoynt your eyes, that you may see what you doe and haue done in admitting (as I heare you haue admitted, yea alas authorised, and by consent confirmed) the Romish rotten rags, whiche once you vtterly expelled. Oh be not canis reuersus ad vomitum, be not * Sus lota reuersa ad volutabrum coeni, Beware least Satan enter in with seuen other spirites, and then postrema shalbe worse then the first. It had bene better yee had neuer knowne the truth, then after knowledge to runne from it. Ah, woe to this world and the thinges therein,* which hath nowe so wrought with you. Oh that euer this dirt of the deuill shoulde daube vpp the eye of the Realme. For thou oh mother art as it were the eye of the Realme. If thou be light and geue shyne all the body shall fare the better: But if thou the light be darcknes, alas how great will the darckenes be? What is man whose breath is in his nostrels, that thou shouldest thus be afrayde of him?

Oh what is honour and life here? Bubbles. What is glorye in this worlde, but shame? Why art thou afrayde to carrye Christes Crosse? Wilt thou come into hys kingdome, and not drynke of his cup? Doest thou not know Rome to be Babilō? * doest thou not know that as the olde Babilon had the children of Iuda in captiuitie, so hath this Rome the true Iuda, that is the confessours of Christ? Doest thou not know, that as destruction happened vnto it, so shall it do vnto this (And trowest thou that God will not deliuer his people now when the time is come, as hee did the•. Hath not God commaunded hys people to come out from her• and wilt thou geue ensample to the whole Realme to runne vnto her• Hast thou forgotten the woe that Christ threatneh to offence geuers? Wilt thou not remember that it were better that a Mylstone were hanged about thy necke, and thou throwe into the sea, then that thou shouldest offend the little ones?

And alas, how hast thou offended? yea and howe doest thou still offend? * Wilt thou consider thinges according to the outward shew? Was not the Synagogue more seemely and like to be the true Church, then the simple flocke of Christes Disciples? Hath not the whore of Babilon more costly aray, and rich apparell externally to set forth her selfe, then the homely housewyfe of Christ? Where is the beautie of the kinges daughter the Church of Christ? without or within? Doth not Dauid saye wythin? Oh remēber that as they are happy which are not offended at christ so are they happy whiche are not offended at hys poore church. Can the Pope and his prelates meane honestly whiche make so much of the wife, and so little of the husband? The Church they magnifie, but Christ they contemne. If this Church were an honest woman (that is, Christes wife) except they woulde make much of her husband Christ and his worde, shee woulde not be made much of them.

When Christ and hys Apostles were vppon earth, who was Page 1628 more like to be the true Church, they, or the Prelates, Byshops, & Synagogue? If a man should haue followed custome vnitie, an^tiquitie, or the more part, shoulde not Christ and his companye haue bene cast out of the dores? Therefore bade Christ: Search the scriptures.* And, good mother, shall the seruauⁿt be aboue his master▪ shall we looke for other entertaynment at the handes of the world, then Christ and his deare Disciples found? who was taken in Noes tyme for the Church? Poore Noe and his familie, or others? Who was taken for Gods Church in Sodom? Lot, or others? And doth not Christ say: As it was than, so shall it goe now towards the comming of the sonne of man? What meaneth Christ when he sayth: Iniquitie shall haue the vpper hand? doth not he tell, that charitie shall waxe colde? And who seeth not a wonderfull great lacke of charitie in those, whiche woulde nowe be taken for Christes Church: All that feare GOD in thys Realme truely, can tell more of this then I can write.

Therefore deare mother, receiue some admonition of one of thy poore children, nowe goyng to be burned for the testimonye of Iesus. Come agayne to Gods truth: come out of Babilon: confesse Christ and his true doctrine: repent that whiche is past: make amendes by declaryng thy repentaunce by the fruites.* Remember the readings and preachinges of Gods Prophet and true Preacher M Bucer. Call to minde the threatninges of God, nowe something seene by the children Leauer and others. Let the exile of Leauer, Pilkinton, Grindall, Haddon, Horne, Scorye Ponet. &c. something awake thee. Let the imprisonmēt of thy deare sonnes, Cranmer, Ridley, and Latimer moue thee. Consider the Martyrdome of thy chickens, Rogers, Saunders, Taylor. And nowe cast not awaye the poore admonition of me goyng to be burned also, and to receiue the like crowne of glorye with my fellowes. Take to harte Gods calling by vs. Be not as Pharao was: for then will it happen vnto thee as it did vnto hym. What is that hardnes of hart. And what then? destructiō eternally both of body and soule. Ah therefore good mother awake, awake, repent, repent, buskle thy selfe, and make hast to turne to the Lord. For els it shalbe more easie for Sodome and Gomorra in the daye of iudgement then for thee. Oh harden not your hartes: Oh stop not your eares to day in hearyng Gods voyce, though it be by me a most vnworthy messenger. Oh feare the Lord, for his anger is begon to kindle. Euen now the axe is layd to the roote of the tree.

You know I prophecied truely to you before the Sweate came,* what would come, if you repēted not your carnall Gospelling. And now I tel you before I depart hence, that the eares of men will tingle to heare of the vengeance of God that will fall vpon you all, both Towne and Vniuersitie, if you repent, not, if you leaue not your Idolatrie, if you turne not speedely to the Lord, if you still be ashamed of Christes truth which you know.

Oh Perne repent, Oh Thomson repent, Oh you Doctors, Bachelers, & Maisters repent, Oh Maior, Aldermen, & Towne dwellers repent, repent, repent, that you may escape the nere vengeance of the Lord. Rent your hartes, & come apace, calling on the Lord. Let vs all say, Peccaumus, we haue all sinned, we haue done wickedly, we haue not hearkned to thy voyce O Lord. Deale not with vs after our desertes, but be mercifull to our iniquities, for they are great. Oh pardon our offenses. In thine anger remember thy mercy. Turne vs vnto thee, O Lord God of hostes, for the glory of thy names sake. Spare vs, and be mercifull vnto vs. Let not the wicked people say: where is now their God: Oh for thine owne sake, for thy names sake, deale mercifully with vs. Turne thy selfe vnto vs, and vs vnto thee, and we shall prayse thy name for euer.

If in this sort (my dearely beloued) in hart and mouth we come vnto our father, & prostrate our selues before the throne of his grace, then surely surely we shall finde mercie. Then shall the Lord loke merely vpon vs, for his mercy sake in Christ: then shall we heare him speake peace vnto his people.* For he is gracious & mercifull, of great pitie, & compassion: he can not be chiding for euer: his anger can not last long to the penitent. Though we weepe in the morning, yet at night we shall haue our sorow to cease. For he is exorable, and hath no pleasure in the death of a sinner: he rather would our conuersion and turning.

Oh turne you now, and conuert yet once agayne I humbly besech you, and then the kingdome of heauen shall draw nigh. The eye hath not seene, the eare hath not heard, nor the hart of man is able to conceiue the ioyes prepared for vs if we repent, amende our liues, and hartely turne to the Lord. But if we repent not,* but be as you were, and goe on forwardes with the wicked, following the fashion of the world, the Lord will leade you on with wicked doers, you shall perish in your wickednes, your bloud will be vpon your owne heades, your part shalbe with hypocrites, where shalbe weepyng & gnashyng of teeth, ye shalbe cast from the face of the Lord for euer and euer, eternall shame, sorrow, wo, and miserie shalbe both in body and soule to you world without end. Oh therefore right deare to me in the Lord, turne you turne you, repent you, repent you, amende, amende your liues, depart from euill, do good, follow peace and pursue it. Come out from Babilon, cast of the workes of darkenesse, put on Christ, confesse his truth, be not ashamed of his Gospell, prepare your selues to the Crosse, drinke of Gods cup before it come to the dregges: and then shall I with you and for you, reioyce in the day of Iudgement, which is at hand, and therefore prepare your selues thereto, I hartely beseche you. And thus I take my vale in aeternum with you in this present life, myne owne deare hartes in the Lord. The Lord of mercie be with vs all, and geue vs a ioyfull and sure meetyng in his kyngdome. Amen. Amen.

Out of prison the 11. of Februarie. Anno. 1555.

Your owne in the Lorde for euer, Iohn Bradford.

¶To Lankeshire and Cheshire.

TO all those that professe his name and true Religion of our sauour Iesus Christ in Lankeshyre and Chesshyre,* and specially abiding in Manchester and therabout Iohn Bradford a most vnworthy seruaunt of the Lorde, now not onely in boundes, but also condemned for y^e same true religion, wisheth mercy and grace, peace and increase of all godlines from God the father of all pitty, through y^e desertes of our Lord Iesus Christ, by the working of the most mighty and liuely spirite the comforter for euer. Amen.

I heard it reported credibly, my dearely beloued in the Lord, that my heauenly father hath thought it good to prouide, that as I haue preached his true doctrine and Gospell amongst you by worde: so I shall testifie & confirme the same by deede: That is, I shall with you leaue my life, whiche by hys prouidence. I first receaued there (for in Manchester was I borne) for a seale to the doctrine I haue taught with you, and amongst you so: so that if from henceforth you wauer in the same, you haue none excuse at all. I know the enemies of Christ, whiche exercise this crueltie vpon me (I speake in respect of myne offence which is none to themwardes) thinke by killing of me amongst you, to affray you and others, least they shoulde attempt to teach Christ truely, or beleue his doctrine hereafter. But I doubt not but my heauenly father will be my death, more confirme you in his truth for euer. And therefore I greatly reioyce to see sathan and his souldiours, sup'planted in their owne sapience, which is playne foolishnes amongst the wise indeede, that is, amongst such as haue heard Gods worde, and doe followe it: for they onely are counted wise of the wisdom of God our Sauour.

In deede if I should simply consider my life with that whiche it ought to haue bene,* and as God in his lawe requireth, then could I not but cry as I do. Iustus es domine & omnia iudicia tua vera. i. Righteous art thou O Lord, and all thy iudgemēts are true. For I haue much greeued thee, and transgressed thy holy preceptes not onely before my professing the Gospell, but sithen also: yea euen sithen my comming into prison. I do not excuse, but accuse my selfe before God and al his Church, that I haue greeuously offended my Lord God, I haue not loued his Gospell as I should haue done, I haue sought my selfe and not simply, and onely his glory and my brethrens commoditie, I haue bene to vnthankfull, secure, carnall, hipocriticall, vayneglorious. &c. All which my euils the Lord of mercy pardon me for his Christes sake, as I hope and certaynly beleue he hath done for his great mercy in Christ oure redeemer.

But when I consider the cause of my condemnation, I cannot but lament, that I doe no more reioyce then I doe. For it is Gods veritie and trueth:* So that the condemnation is not a condemnation of Bradford simply: but rather a condemnation of Christ and his trueth. Bradford is nothing els but an instrument, in whome Christe and his doctrine is condemned. And therefore my dearly beloued, reioyce, reioyce and geue thanks with me and for me, that euer God did vouchsafe so great a benefite to our countrey, as to choose the most vnworthye (I meane my selfe) to be one, in whome it would please him to suffer any kinde of affliction: muche more this violent kinde of death, whiche I perceiue is prepared for me with you for his sake. All glory and prayse be geuen vnto God our father, for his great exceeding mercy towards me, through Iesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

But perchaunce you will saye vnto me: what is the cause for the whiche you are condemned, we heare say that ye denye all presence of Christ in his holy Supper, and so make it a bare signe and common bread, and nothyng els. My dearly beloued, what is sayde of me, and what will Page 1629 be, I cannot tell. It is tolde me that Pendleton is gone doune to Preach with you, not as he once recanted (for you all knowe hee hath preached contrary to that hee was wont to preach afore I came amongst you) but to recant that which he hath recanted.* Howe hee will speake of me, and report before I come, when I am come, and when I am burned, I muche passe not, for he that is so vncertayne, and wil speake so often agaynst him selfe, I can not thinke hee will speake well of me, except it make for hys purpose and profite: but of this inough.

In deede the chiefe thing, which I am condemned for as an hereticke, is because I deny in the sacrament of the aultar (whiche is not Christes supper, but a playne peruerting of it, being vsed as the papistes now vse it) to be a reall, naturall, and corporall presence of Christes bodye and bloud, vnder the formes and accidentes of bread and wine, that is, because I deny transubstantiation, whiche is the darling of the Deuill, and daughter and heyre to Antichristes religion, whereby the Masse is mayntayned Christes supper peruerted, his sacrifice and Crosse imperfited, hys Priesthood destroyed, the ministry taken away repentaunce repelled, and all true godlynes abandoned. In the supper of our Lord or sacrament of Christes body and bloud, I confesse and beleue, that there is a true, and very presence of whole Christ God and man, to the fayth of the receiuer (but not of the stander by and looker on) as there is a verye true presence of bread and wine to the sences of him that is partaker thereof. This fayth, this doctrine, whiche consenteth with the worde of God, and with the true testimony of Christes Church (whiche the Popishe Church doth persecute will I not forsake, and therefore am I condemned as an hereticke, and shall be burned. But my dearely beloued, this trueth (whiche I haue taught, and you haue receiued, I beleued, and do beleue, and therein geue my life) I hope in God, shall neuer be burned, bound, nor ouercome: but shall triumphe haue victorie, and be at libertye, maugre the head of all Gods aduersaries. For there is no counsayle agaynst the Lord, nor no deuise of man can be able to defeate the veritie in anye other, then suche as be children of vnbeliefe, whiche haue no loue to the truth, and therefore are geuen vp to beleue lyes. Frō which plague the Lord of mercies deliuer you and all the realme, my deare harts in the Lord I humblie beseeche his mercy. Amen.

*And to the ende you might be deliuered from thys plague (right deare to me in the Lorde I shall for my fare well with you for euer in this present lyfe, hartely desire you all in the bowels and bloud of our most mercifull Sauour Iesus Christ, to attend vnto these things which I now shall shortly write vnto you, out of the holy scriptures of the Lord.

You knowe an heauy plague (or rather plagues) of God is fallen vpon vs, * in takyng away our good Kyng, Gods true Religion, Gods true Prophetes and Ministers. &c. And setting ouer vs, such as seeke not the Lorde after knowledge: whose endeouours GOD prospereth wonderfully, to the tryall of many, that his people may bothe better knowe themselues, * and be knownen. Nowe the cause hereof is our iniquities and greuous sinnes. We did not know the tyme of our visitation: we were vnthankfull vnto God: we contemned the Gospell, & carnally abused it, to serue our hipocrisie, our vaynglory our viciousnes, auarice, idlenes, securitie. &c. Long did y^e Lord linger, and tary to haue shewed mercy vppon vs, but we were euer longer the worse. Therefore most iustly hath God dealt with vs, and dealeth with vs: yea yet we may see, that his iustice is tempered with much mercy, whereto let vs attribute that we are not vtterly consumed. For if the Lord should deale with vs after our desertes, alas, howe coulde we abide it? In his anger therefore, seeyng hee doeth remember his mercye vnderdeserued (yea vnderdesired on our behalfe) let vs take occasion the more speedily to goe out to meete him, not with force of armes (for we are not so able to withstand hym, muche lesse to preuayle agaynst him) but to beseeche hym to mercifull vnto vs, and according to his wonted mercye to deale wyth vs.

*Let vs arise with Daud and saye: Ne intres in iudicium cum seruo tuo, &c. i. Enter not into iudgement O Lorde with thy seruaunt, for in thy sight no fleshe liuyng shalbe iustified. Let vs send Embassadors with the Senturion, * and saye: Lorde we are not worthye to come our selues vnto thee, speake the word and we shall haue peace. Let vs penitently with the Publicane loke downe on the earth, * knocke our hard hartes to burst them, and crye out: Oh GOD be mercifull vnto vs wretched sinners. Let vs with the lost Sonne returne and saye: O Father, we haue sinned agaynst heauen and earth, * and before thee we are vnworthy to be called thy children. Let vs I say do on this sorte, y^t is hartily repent vs of our former euill lyfe, & vnthankfull gospelling past, conuert and turne to God w^t our whole hartes, hoping in his great mercy thorough Christ, and hartily calling vppon his holy name, and then vndoubtedly we shall finde and feelee otherwyse then yet we feelee, both inwardly and outwardly. Inwardly we shall feelee peace of conscience betweene God and vs whiche peace passeth all vnderstanding, and outwardlye we shall feelee muche mittigation of these miseries, if not an vtter taking them away.

Therefore my dearely beloued in the Lorde, I youre poorest brother now departing to the Lord,* for my vale in aeternum for this present lyfe, praye you beseeche you, and euen from the verye bottome of my harte, for all the mercies of God in Christ shewed vnto you, most earnestly begge and craue of you out of prison (as often out of your Pulpies I haue done) that you wil repent you, leaue your wicked and euill life, be sorye for your offences, and turne to the Lorde, whose armes are wide open to receaue and embrace you, whose stretched out hande to strike to death, stayeth that he may shew mercy vpon you. For he is the Lord of mercy, and God of all comforte, hee will not the death of a sinner, but rather that yee shoulde returne, conuert and amend. He hath no pleasure in the destruction of men:* his long sufferyng draweth to repentaunce before the tyme of vengeance, and the day of wrath which is at hand, doth come.

Now is the axe layd to the roote of the tree, vtterly to destroy the impenitente.* Nowe is the fire gone out before the face of the Lorde, and who is able to quenche it? Oh therefore repent you, repent you. It is enough to haue liued as we haue done. It is inough to haue pleased the wanton Gospellers, the proude Protestantes, Hypocriticall and false Chrystians, as alas, wee haue done. Now the Lorde speaketh to vs in mercy and grace: Oh turne before hee speaketh in wrathe. Yet is there mercye with the Lorde, and plenteous redemption: yet hee hath not forgotten to shewe mercye to them that call vppon him. Oh then call vpon him, while he may be found. For hee is riche in mercy, and plentifull to all them that call vpon hym. So that hee that calleth on the name of the Lorde shalbe saued. If your sinnes be as redde as scarlet, the Lord sayeth, he will make them as white as snow. He hath sworne, and neuer will repent hym thereof, that he will neuer remember our iniquities, but as hee is good, faithfull and true, so will he be our God, and wee shall be his people: his law will he write in our hartes, & engraffe in our myndes, and neuer will he haue in mynde our vnrighteousnesse.

Therefore my deare hartes in the Lorde, turne you, turne you to y^e Lord your Father, to the Lord your Sauour, to the Lord your comforter. Oh why doe you stoppe your eares, and harden your harts •o day,* whē you heare hys voyce by me your poorest brot•••? Oh forget not how that the Lord hath shewed hymself true and me hys true preacher, by bringyng to passe th••lagues which at my mouth you ofte heard before they came to passe, specially when I entreated of Noes flood, and when I preached of the 22. chapter of Saint Mathews Gospell, on S. Steuens day the last tyme that I was with you. And nowe by me the Lord sendeth you worde (deare countrey men) that if you will go on forwards in your impenitency, carnalitie, hypocrisie, idolatry, couetousnesse, swearing, gluttony, dronkennesse, whoredome, &c. (Wherewith alas, alas our countrey floweth): if (I say) you will not turne and leaue of seyng me now burned amongst you, to assure you on all sides how God seeketh you,* and is sory to doe you hurt, to plague you, to destroy you, to take vengeance vpon you, oh your bloud wil be vpon your owne heades: you haue bene warned, and warned againe by me in preaching, by me in burning.

As I sayd therefore, I say agayne, my deare harts and dearlings in the Lord, turne you, turne you, repent you, repent you, cease from doying euill, study to do well,* away with idolatry, flye the Romish God and seruice, leaue of from swearing, cut of carnalitie, abandon auarice▪ driue away dronkennesse, flie from fornication and flattery, murther and malice, destroy deceitfulness, and cast away all the works of darkenes. Put on pitie and godlines, serue God after his word, and not after custome, vse your tongs to glorifie God by prayer, thankesgeuing and confession of his truth, &c. be spirituall, and by the spirit mortifie carnall affections, be sober, holy, true, louyng, gentle, mercyfull, and then shall the Lordes wrath cease, not for this our doyngs sake, but for his mercies sake. Goe to therefore Page 1630 good country men) take this counsell of the Lorde, by mee nowe sente vnto you, as the Lordes counsell, and not as mine, that in the daye of iudgement I maye reioyce wyth you, and for you: the which thing I hartely desire, and not to be a witnes agaynst you.* My bloud will crye for vengeaunce, as agaynst the Papistes Gods enemies (whome I beseech God if it be his will, hartely to forgeue, yea euen them which put me to death, and are the causers therof, for they know not what they do (so will my bloud cry for vengeaunce agaynst you (my dearly beloued in the Lord) if ye repent not,* amend not, and turne vnto the Lord.

Turne vnto the Lord yet once more, I hartely besech thee thou Manchester, thou Ashton vnderline, thou Bolton, Bury, Wigme, Lierpoole, Mottrine, Stepport, Winsley, Eccles, Priestwich, Middleton, Radcliffe, and thou City of Westchester, where I haue truely taught and preached the worde of GOD. Turne, I saye vnto you all, and to all the inhabitours there aboutes vnto the Lord our God and hee will turne vnto you, he will saye vnto his Aungell: It is enough, put vppe the sworde. The whiche thyng that he will doe, I humblye beseeche his goodnesse, for the precious bloudes sake of hys deare Sonne our Sauour Iesus Christ. Ah good brethren take in good parte these my last wordes vnto euery one of you. Pardon me myne offences and negligences in behaiour amongst you. The Lorde of mercye pardon vs all our offences, for our Sauour Iesus Christes sake, Amen. Out of Prison readye to come to you the eleuenth of February. Ann. 1555.

¶To the Towne of Walden.

*TO the faythfull and such as professe the true doctrine of our Sauour Iesus Christ, dwelling at Walden and thereaboutes, Iohn Bradford a most vnworthy seruaunt of the Lorde, nowe in bandes, and condemned for the same true doctrine, wyssheth grace, mercy, and peace, with the encrease of all godlynnesse in knowledge and liuing, from GOD the Father of all comforte, through the desertes of our alone and full redeemer Iesus Christ, by the mighty working of the most holy spirit, the comforter for euer. Amen.

When I remember how that by the prouidence and grace of God, I haue bene a man, by whome it hath pleased him through my ministry to call you to repentaunce, and amendment of life, something effectually, as it seemed, and to sowe amongst you his true doctrine and religion, least that by my affliction, & stormes now arisen to trye the faythfull, and to conforme them lyke to the Image of the sonne of GOD, into whose companie wee are called, you might be faint harted: I could not but out of prison secretly (for my keepers may not know that I haue penne & ynke) write vnto you a signification of the desire I haue, that you should not only be more cōfirmed in the doctrine I haue taught amongst you, which I take on my death, as I shall answere at the day of dome, I am perswaded to be Gods assured, infallible, and playne trueth:* but also should after your vocation auow the same by confession, profession and liuing. I haue not taught you (my dearly beloued in the Lord) fables, tales, or vntruthe, but I haue taught you the verity, as now by my bloud gladlye (praysed bee God therfore) I do seale the same.

In deed to confesse the truth vnto you, and to all the Church of Christ, I doe not thinke of my selfe, but that I haue moste iustly deserued, not onely this kinde but also all kindes of death, and that eternally,* for myne hypocrisy, vayneglory, vncleannesse, selfe loue, couetousnesse, idlenesse, vnthankfulnesse, and carnall professing of Gods holy Gospell, liuing therein not so purely, louyngly, and paynefully as I should haue done. The Lord of mercy for the bloud sake of Christ pardon me, as I hope, yea I certainly beleue he hath done for his holy names sake thorowe Christe. But my d•arely beloued, you and all the whole world may see, and easily perceiue, that the Prelates persecute in me an other thing then mine iniquities,* euen Christ himselfe, Christes verity and trueth, because I canne not, dare not, nor wyll not confesse Transubstantiation, and howe that wicked menne, ye Mise and Dogges eating the Sacrament, which they terme of the aultar, thereby ouerthrowing Christes holy Supper vtterly, do eate Christes naturall and reall body borne of the virgine Mary.

To beleue, and confesse as Gods worde teacheth, the primatiue Church beleued, and all the Catholicke and good holy Fathers taught fiue hundreth yeares at the least after Christ, that in the Supper of the Lord (which the Masse ouerthroweth, as it doth Christes Priesthooode, sacrifice, death and passion, the ministerye of his word, true •ayth repentance, and all godlines whole Christ God and man is present by grace, to the fayth of the receiuers, but not of the standers by, and lookers on, as bread and wyne is to theyr sences, will not serue: and therefore I am condemned & shall be burned out of hand as an hereticke. Wherefore I hartelye thanke my Lord God, that will and doth vouch me worthy to be an instrument, in whome he himselfe doeth suffer. For you see my affliction and death is not simply,* because I haue deserued no lesse, but muche more at his handes and iustice: but rather because I confesse his verity and trueth, and am not affrayd through his gift that to do, that you also might be confirmed in his truth. Therefore my dearely beloued. I hartely do pray you, and so many as vnfaynedly loue mee in God, to geue with mee and for mee most harty thanks to our heauenly Father, through our sweete Sauour Iesus Christ, for this his exceeding great mercy towards me and you also, that your fayth wauer not from the doctrine I haue taught, and ye haue receiued. For what can you desire more to assure your cōsciences, of the verity taught by your preachers, then theyr owne liues?

Goe to therefore my deare hartes in the Lord, wauer not in Christes religion truely taught you, and set forth in king Edwardes dayes. Neuer shall the enemies be able to burne it, to prison it, and keepe it in bondes. Vs they may prison,* they may bynde and burne, as they doe, and will doe, so long as shall please the Lord: but our cause, religion, and doctrine which we confesse, they shall neuer be able to vanquish and put away. Theyr Idolatry and Popish religion, shall neuer bee builde in the consciences of menne that loue Gods trueth. As for those that loue not Gods truth, that haue no pleasure to walke in the wayes of the Lord, in those I say the Deuill shall preuayle: For God will geue them strong illusion to beleue lyes. Therefore deare brethren and sisters in the Lord, I humbly beseech you, and pray you in the bowelles and bloud of our Lord and Sauour Iesu• Christ,* now goyng to the death for the testimony of Iesus, as oftētimes I haue done before this present out of your Pulpitte, that you woulde loue the Lordes trueth: loue (I saye) to loue it, and frame your liues thereafter. Alas, you know the cause of all these plagues fallen vp vs, and of the successe which Gods aduersaries haue dayly, is for our not louing Gods word.

You knowe how that we were but Gospellers in lippes, and not in life. We were carnall, concupiscentious, idle,* vnthankfull, vncleane, couetous, arrogant, dissemblers, crafty, subtle, malicious, false, backbiters. &c. and euen gluttoned with Gods word, yea, we lothed it,* as did the Israelites the Manna in the wildernes: and therefore as to them the Lordes wrath waxed hoat, so doth it vnto vs. So that there is no remedye, but that (for it is better late to turne, then neuer to turne) wee confesse our faultes, euen from the bottome of our hartes, & with harty repentaunce (which God worke in vs all for his mercyes sake) we runne vnto the Lord our God, which is exorable, mercifull, & sory for the euil poured out vpon vs, and crie out vnto him with Daniel saying: we haue sinned, we haue sinned grievously oh lord God, agaynst thy maiesty,* we haue heaped iniquitye vpon iniquity: the measure of our transgressions floweth ouer, so that iust is thy vengeance and wrath fallen vpon vs. For wee are very miserable, we haue contemned thy longe suffering, wee haue not harkened to thy voyce. When thou hast called vs by Preachers, we hardened our hartes, and therefore now deserue that they send thy curse hereupon to harden our hartes also, that we should henceforth haue eyes and see not, eares and heare▪ not, hartes and vnderstand not, leaste wee shoulde conuert and be saued. Oh be mercifull vnto vs: spare vs good Lord and all thy people, whom thou hast dearely bought. Let not thine enemies triumph altogether, and alwayes agaynst thee, for then will they be puffed vppe. Looke downe and beholde the pittifull complayntes of the poore: let the sorowefull sighing of the simple come in thy fighte, and bee not angry with vs for euer. Turne vs oh Lorde GOD of hostes vnto thee, and turne thee vnto vs, that thou mayest be iustified in thy sweete sentences, and ouercome whē thou are iudged, as now thou art of our aduersaries, For they say, where is theyr God? Can God deliuer them now? Canne theyr Gospell serue them? Oh Lord howe long? for the glorye of thy name, and for thy honors sake, in the bowels and bloud of Iesus Christ, we humbly beseech thee, come and help vs, for we are very miserable.

On this sort I say dearely beloued, let vs publickely and priuately bewayle our sinnes: but so that hereto we ioyne, ceasing from wilfulnesse & sinne of purpose, for els the Lord heareth not our prayers, as Deuid sayth. And in S. Iohn it is written:* The impenitent sinners God heareth not. Nowe, impenitent are they which purpose not to amend theyr liues. As for example: not only such which folow still theyr pleasures▪ vncleannes, carnality: but those also which for feare or fauor of men, doe agaynst theyr conscience to consent to the Romish ragges, and resort to the rotten Religion,* communicating in Seruice & ceremonies wyth the Papistes, thereby declaring themselves to loue more the worlde then God, to feare man more then Christ, to dread more the losse of temporall things, then of spirituall: in whom it is euident, the loue of God abideth not. For he that loueth the world, hath not Gods loue abiding in him sayth Saynt Iohn: therefore my deare hartes, and deare agayne in the Lord remember what you haue professed, Christes Religion and name, and the renuncyng of Page 1631 the Deuill, Sinne and the world.

Remember that before yee learned A. B. C. your lesson was Christes crosse. Forgette not that Christ will haue no Disciples, but such as will promise to deny thēselues▪ & take vp their crosse (marke,* take it vppe) and folowe him: and not the multitude, custome. &c. Consider for Gods sake, that if wee gather not with Christe, wee scatter abroad. What should it profite a man to winne the whole worlde, and loose his owne soule? We must not forget that this life is a wilderness, and not a Paradise: here is not our home, we are now in warrefare: we must needes fight, or els be taken prisoners. Of all thinges we haue in this life, we shall cary nothing with vs. If Christ be our Captayne, we must follow him as souldiours. If we keepe company with him in affliction, we shalbe sure of his society in glory. If we forsake not him, he will neuer forsake vs. If we confesse him, he will confesse vs: but if we deny him, he will deny vs. If we be ashamed of him he will bee ashamed of vs. Wherefore as he forsooke his father, and heauen, & all thinges to come to vs,* so let vs forsake all thinges and come to him, being sure and most certayne, that we shall not lose thereby. Your children shall finde and feele it double, yea treble, whatsoeuer you loose for the Lordes sake: and you shall finde and feele peace of conscience, and frēdship with God which is more worth then all the goodes of the world.

My dearely be loued, therefore for the Lordes sake, consider these thinges which now I write vnto you of loue, for my Vale, & last farewell for euer in this present life. Turne to the Lord: repent you your euill and vnthankfull life, declare repentaunce by the fruites: take time while you haue it: come to the Lord whiles he calleth you: run into his lappe whiles his armes be open to embrace you: seeke him whiles he may be found: call vpon him whiles time is conuenient: forsake and flie from all euill, both in religion,* and in the rest of your life and conuersation. Let your light so shine before men, that they maye see your woorkes, and prayse God in the day of his visitation. Oh come agayne, come agayne you straunge children, and I will receiue you sayeth the Lorde. Conuert and turne to me, and I will turne vnto you. Why? wyll ye needes perish? As sure as I liue (swareth the Lorde) I will not your death: turne therefore vnto me. Can a woman forgette the childe of her wombe? If she should, yet will I not forget you, saith the Lod your God. I am he, I am he which put away your sinnes for mine owne sake.

O then deare frendes, turne I saye vnto your dearest father. Cast not these his sweete and louing wordes to the grounde, and at your taylor, for the Lord watcheth on his word to performe it: which is in two sortes: to them that lay it vp in theyr hartes, and beleue it, will he pay all, and eternall ioy and comfort. But to thē that cast it at theyr backes, and will forget it, to them (I say) will he poure out indignation and eternall shame. Wherefore I hartely yet once more beseech and pray you, and euery of you, not to contemne this poore and simple exhortation, which nowe out of prison I make vnto you, or rather the Lord by me. Loth would I be a witnesse agaynst you in the last day: as of truth I must be, if ye repent not, if ye loue not Gods Gospell, yea, if ye loue it not.

Therefore to conclude, repent, loue Gods Gospell, liue in it all your conuersation so shall Gods name be prayسد, his plagues be mitigated, his people comforted, and his enemies ashamed. Graūt all this thou gracious lord god to euery one of vs for thy deare sonnes sake, our Sauour Iesus Christ: To whome with thee and the holy Ghost, be eternal glory for euer and euer. Amen.

The 12. of February. 1555.

By the bondman of the Lord, and your afflicted poore brother, Iohn Bradford.

To my louing brethren B. C. &c. their Wiues and whole families, I. Bradford.*

I Beseech the euerliuing God, to graunt you all, my good brethren and sisters,* the comfort of the holy spirit, and the continuall sense of his mercy in Christ our Lord, now and for euer amen.

The world my brethren semeth to haue the vpper hand, iniquity ouerfloweth, the trueth and verity seemeth to bee suppressed, and they which take parte therewith, are vniustly entreated: as they which loue the trueth lament to see and heare, as they doe. The cause of all this is Gods anger, and mercy: his anger, because we haue greuously sinned agaynst him: his mercy, because he here punisheth vs, and as a Father nourtereth vs. Wee haue bene vnthankfull for his word: We haue contemned his kyndenesse: * Wee haue bene negligent in prayer: We haue bene so carnall, couetous, licencious. &c. We haue not hastened to heauen warde, but rather to hellwarde. We were fallen almost into an open contempt of God, and all his good ordinaunces: so that of his iustice he coulde no longer forbear, but make vs feeble his anger: as now he hath done, in taking his worde and true seruice from vs, and permitted Sathan to serue vs with Antichristian religion, and that in such sort, that if we will not yelde to it, and seeme to allow in deede an outwarde facte, our bodyes are like to be layed in prison, and our goodes geuen we can not tell to whom.

This should we looke vpon as a signe of Gods anger, procured by our sinnes: which my good brethren, euery of vs should now call to our memories oftentimes, so particularly as we can, that wee might hartely lament them, * repent them, hate them, aske earnestly mercy for them, and submit our selues to beare in this li•e any kinde of punishment, which God will lay vpon vs for them. This should we do, in consideration of Gods anger in this time. Now his mercy in this time of wrath is seene, and should be sene in vs my dearly beloued, in this, that God doth vouchsafe to punish vs in this present life. If he should not haue punished vs, * do not you thinke that we would haue continued in the euilles we were in? Yes verely, we woulde haue bene worse, and haue gone forwardes in hardenyng our hartes by impenitency, and negligence of God & true godlines. And then if death had come, should not we haue perished both soule and body into eternall fire and perdition? Alas, what misery shoulde we haue fallen into, if God shoulde haue suffered vs to haue gone on forward in our euils? No greater signe of damnatiō there is, then to lie in euill and sinne vnpunished of God, as now the Papistes (my dearly beloued) are cast into Iezabels bed of security which of all plagues is the grieuousest plague that can be. They are bastards and not sonnes, for they are not vnder Gods rod of correction.

A great mercy it is therefore that GOD doth punish vs: For if he loued vs not, he would not punish vs. * Now doth he chastice vs, that we shoulde not be damned with the worlde. Nowe doth he nourtour vs, because he fauoureth vs. Now may we thinke our selues Gods house and children, because he beginneth his chastising at vs: Now calleth he vs to remember our sinnes past. Wherefore? that we might repent and aske mercy. And why? That he might forgeue vs, pardon vs, iustifye vs, and make vs his children, and so begin to make vs here lyke vnto Christ, that we might be lyke vnto hym elsewhere, euen in heauen where already wee are sette by fayth with Christ, and at his comming in very deede, we shall then most ioyfully enioy, when our sinnefull and vile bodyes shall be made like to Christes glorious body, accordynge to the power whereby he is able to make all thinges subiect to himselfe.

Therefore my brethren, let vs in respect hereof not lament, but land God, not to be sory, but be mery, not weep, but reioyce and be gladde, that God doth vouchsafe to offer vs his Crosse, * thereby to come to him to endlesse ioyes and comfortes. For if we suffer, we shall raigne, * if we confesse him before men, he will confesse vs before his father in heauen: if we be not ashamed of his Gospell now, * he wyll not be ashamed of vs in the last day, but will be glorified in vs, crowning vs with crownes of glorye and endlesse felicity: * For blessed are they that suffer persecution for righteousnesse sake, for theyrs is the kingdome of heauen: Be glad (say•h Peter) for the spirite of God resteth vpon you. After that you are a litle afflicted, God will comforte, * strengthen, and confirme you.* And therefore my good brethren, be not discouraged for Crosse, for prison, or losse of goodes, for confession of Christes Gospell and truth,* whiche ye haue beleued, and liuely was taught amongst you in the dayes of our late good Kyng, and most holy Prince Kyng Edward. This is most certayne, if you loose any thing for Christes fake, and for contemning the Antichristian seruice, set vppe agayne amongst vs: as you for your partes, euen in prison shall finde Gods great and riche mercy, farre passing all worldly wealth: so shall your wiues and children in this present life, finde and feelee Gods prouidence, more plentifully then tongue can tell. For he will shew mercifull kindenesse on thowsands of them that loue hym.* The good mannes seed shall not goe a begging his bread. You are good men, so many as suffer for Christes sake.

I truste you all, my dearely beloued,* wyll consyder this geare with your selues, & in the crosse see Gods mercy, which is more sweete, and to be set by, then life it selfe, muche more then anye Mucke or Pelfe of this worlde. This mercy of God shoulde make you merye and chearefull: for the afflictions of this life,* are not to bee compared to the ioyes of the lyfe prepared for you. You knowe the way to heauen is not the wide way of the worlde,* whiche windeth to the deuill, but it is a strayte waye which fewe walke in. For fewe liue Godlye in Christ Iesu,* fewe regarde the lyfe to come, fewe remember the daye of iudgement, Page 1632 few remember howe Christ will denye them before his father, that do deny him here, few consider that Christ will be ashamed of them in the last day, whiche are ashamed of his truth and true seruice, few cast their accountes, what wil be layed to theyr charge in the day of vengeance,* few regard the condemnation of theyr owne consciences, in doing that which inwardly they disalow, few loue god better then theyr goodes.

But I trust yet you are of this fewe, my dearely beloued, I trust you be of that little flocke, which shall enherite the kingdome of heauē, I trust you are the mourners and lamenters,* which shalbe comforted with comfort, whyche neuer shall be taken from you, if you nowe repent your former euilles, if nowe you striue agaynst the euilles that are in you, if now you continue to call vpon God, if nowe you defile not your bodyes with any Idolatrous seruice,* vsed in the Antichristian Churches, if you molest not the good spirite of God, which is geuen you as a gage of eternall redemption, a counseller and Mayster to lead you into all trueth, whiche good spirite I beseeche the Father of mercye to geue to vs all, for his deare sonnes sake Iesus Christ our Lorde: to whome I commend you all, and to the worde of his grace,* which is able to helpe you all, and saue you all that beleue it folow it, and serue GOD thereafter.

And of this I would ye were all certayne, that all the heares of your heads are numbred,* so that not one of them shall perishe, neither shall any man or deuill be able to attempt any thing, much lesse to do any thing to you, or any of you, before your heauenly father, which loueth you most tenderly, shall geue them leaue: and when he hath geuen them leaue, they shall go no further then he will, nor keepe you in trouble any longer then he will. Therefore cast on him all your care, for he is carefull for you. Onely study to please hym, and to keepe your consciences cleane, & your bodyes pure from the Idolatrous seruice, whiche nowe euery where is vsed, and GOD will maruellouslye and mercifully defend and comfort you: which thing he doe for his holy names sake in Christ our Lord. Amen.

To his dearely beloued in Christ, Erkinalde Rawlins, and his wife.*

GOD our deare and moste mercyfull Father thorough Christ,* be with you my good Brother and Sister, as with his children for euer, and in all thinges so guide you with his holy spirite, the leader of his people, as may bee to his glory, and your owne euerlasting ioy and comfort in him. Amen. Because I haue oftentimes receiued from either of you, comfort corporall (for the which I beseeche the Lorde, as to make me thankfull, so to recompence you both now & eternally) I can not but goe about (Lord help hereto for thy mercyes sake) to write some thing for your comfort spiritually.

My dearely beloued, looke not vpon these dayes and the afflictions of the same here with vs,* simplye as they seeme vnto you, that is, as dismall dayes, and dayes of Gods vengeaunce, but rather as lucky dayes, and dayes of Gods fatherlye kindenesse towards you, and suche as you be, that is, toward such as repent theyr sinnes, and euill life paste, and earnestly purpose to amende, walking not after the will of the world, and most part of men, for the preseruacion of theyr pelfe, whiche will they nill they, they shall leaue sooner or later, and to whome or howe it shall be vsed, they know not. In deede to suche as walke in theyr wickednesse, and winde on with the worlde, this tyme is a tyme of wrath and vengeaunce, and theyr beginning of sorrowe is but now, because they contemne the Phisicke of theyr father, whiche by this purging time and cleansing dayes, would worke theyr weale, whiche they will nor:* and because they will not haue Gods blessing, which both wayes he hath offered vnto them by prosperity and aduersity:* therefore it shall be kepte farre enough from them. As when the sicke man will no kinde of Phisicke at the handes of the Phisition, he is left alone, and so the malady encreaseth, and destroyeth him at the length. To such men in deed, these dayes are and should be dolefull dayes, dayes of woe and weeping, because theyr damnation draweth nigh.

But vnto such as be penitent, and are desirous to liue after the Lordes wil (among whom I do not onely count you, but as far as a man may iudge, I know ye are) vnto such I say,* this time is and should be comfortable. For first now your father chastiseth you and me for our sinnes: for the which if he would haue destroyed vs, then woulde hee haue letten vs alone, and left vs to our selues, in nothyng to take to hart his fatherly visitation, which here it pleaseth him to worke presently, because else where he wyll not remember our transgressions, as Paule writeth: He chastiseth vs in this world, least with the world we should perishe. Therefore my deare hartes, call to minde your sinnes to lament them,* and to aske mercye for them in hys sight, and withall vndoubtedly beleue to obteyne pardon and assured forgeuenesse of the same, for twise the Lord punisheth not for one thing.

So that I saye, first wee haue cause to reioyce for these dayes, because our father suffereth vs not to lye in Iesabels bed, sleeping in our owne sinnes and security, but as mindefull on vs, doth correct vs as his children. Whereby we may be certayne, that we be no bastardes, but children: for he chastiseth euery childe whom he receiueth.* So that they which are not partakers of his chastising, or that contemne it, declare themselues to be bastardes, and not children: as I know ye are, which as ye are chastised, so do ye take it to hart accordingly. And therefore be glad my deare hartes and folkes, knowing certaynelye euen by these visitatiōs of the Lord, that ye are his deare elect children, whose faultes your father doth visite with the rodde of correction, but his mercy will he neuer take away from vs. Amen.

Secondly, ye haue cause to reioyce for these dayes, because they are dayes of triall, wherein not onely ye your selues, but also the worlde shall knowe that ye be none of his, but the Lords dearelinges. Before these dayes came, Lord God, how many thought of them selues, they hadde bene in Gods bosome, and so were takē, and would be taken of the world? But now we see whose they are.* For to whome we obey, his seruauntes we are. If wee obey the world (which god forbid, and hitherto ye haue not done it) then are we the worldes: but if we obey God, then are we Gods. Which thing (I mean that ye are Gods) these dayes haue declared both to you, to me, & to all other that know you, better then euer we knew it. Therefore ye haue no cause to sorrow, but rather to sing, in seing your selues to be Gods babes, and in seying that all Gods children do so count you.

What though the world repine thereat? What though he kicke? What though he seek to trouble and molest you?_ My deare hartes, he doth but his kinde, he cannot loue the Lord, which liueth not in the Lorde, he can not brooke the childe, that hateth the Father, he canne not mind the seruaunt, that careth not for the Mayster. If ye were of the world, the world woulde loue you, ye should dwell quietly, there woulde be no grieffe, no molestation. If the Deuill dwelt in you (which the Lord forbid) he would not stirre vp his knightes to besiege your house, to snatch your goodes, or suffer his freendes to enter into your Hogges. But because Christ dwelleth in you (as he doth by fayth) therefore styreth he vp his first begotten sonne the worlde, to seeke how to disquiet you, to robbe you, to spoyle you, to destroy you: and perchaunce your deare Father, to trye, and to make knowne vnto you, and to the world, that ye are destinate to an other dwelling the• here on earth, to an other Citty then mannes eyes haue seene at any tyme: hath geuen, or will geue power to Sathan, and to the world, to take from you the thinges,* whiche he hath lent you, and by taking them awaye, to trye your fidelitie, obedience, and loue towards hym (for ye may not loue them aboue hym) as by geuyng that ye haue, and keeping it, he hath declared his loue towards you.

Sathan perchaunce telleth GOD (as he did of Iob) that ye loue GOD for your goodes sake. What now then, if the Lord do try you with Iob, shall geue him power on your goodes and body accordingly, should ye be dismaied? should ye dispayre? shoulde ye be faynt harted? shoulde ye not rather reioyce, as did the Apostles, that they were couēted worthy, to suffer any thing for the Lordes sake? Oh forget not the end that happened to Iob: for as it happened to him, so shall it happen vnto you. For GOD is the same God, and can not long forget to shew mercy, to them that look and long for it, as I know ye do, and I pray you so to do still. For the Lord loueth you, and neuer canne nor will forget to shewe, and poure out his mercy vpon you. After a little while that he hath afflicted & tryed you (sayth Peter) hee will visite, comfort and confirme you.* As to Iacob wrastling with the Aungell, at the length morning came, and the sonne arose: so deare hartes, doubtlesse it will happen vnto you. Howbeit do ye as Iob and Iacob did, that is (order and dispose your thinges that God hath lent you, as ye may and whiles ye haue time. Who knoweth whether God hath geuen you power this long euen to that end.

Page 1633Go to therefore, dispose your goodes, prepare your selues to tryall, that eyther ye maye stande to it like Goddes Champions, or els if ye feelee such infirmitye in your selues, that ye bee not able, geue place to violence, and goe where ye may with free and safe conscience serue the Lord. Thinke not this counsell to come by chaunce,* or fortune, but to come from the Lorde. Other Oracles wee may not looke for now. As God told Ioseph in a dreame by an Angell, that he should flye: so if you fele such infirmity in your selues, as should turne to Gods dishonor and your owne destruction withall: knowe that at this present I am as Gods Aungell, to admonish you to take tyme whyles yee haue it, and to see that in no case Gods name by you might be dishonored. Ioseph might haue objected the omission of his vocation, as perchaunce ye will do. But deare hartes, lette vocations and all thinges else geue place to Goddes name, and the sanctifying thereof.

This I speake, not as though I would not haue you rather to tary, und to stand to it: but I speake it in respecte of your infirmity, whiche if you feele to be so greate in you that ye are not certayne of this hope, that God will neuer tempt you aboue your ability: flye and get you hence, and know that thereby GOD will haue you tryed to your selues, and to others. For by it you shall know howe to take this world, and your home here is no home, but that ye looke for an other, and so geue occasion to others lesse to loue this worlde, and perchaunce to some to doubte of theyr Religion. Wherin though they be earnest, yet would they not loose so much, as ye do for your Religion, which ye do confirme to me and others, by your geuing place to violence.

Last of al, ye haue cause to reioyce ouer these our daies, because they bee the dayes of conformation, in the whiche and by whiche, GOD our heauenly Father maketh vs like vnto Christes Image here,* that we may be like vnto him elsewhere. For if that we suffer with him, then we shal reigne also with him: if we be buryed with him, then wee shall rise with him agayne, if that we company with hym in all troubles and afflictions, then we shall reioyce wyth him in glory: if we now sow with him in teares, we shall reape with him in gladnes: if we confesse him before men, he will confesse vs before his father in heauen: if wee take his parte, he will take ours: if wee loose ought for his names sake, he will geue vs all thynges for his truthes sake. So that we ought to reioyce and be glad: for it is not geuen to euery one, to suffer losse of cuntry, life, goodes, house. &c. for the Lordes sake. What can God the father do more vnto vs, thē to call vs into the camp with his sonne? What may Christ our Sauior do more for vs, thē to make vs his Warriours? What can the holy Ghost do to vs aboue this, to marke vs with the cognisaunce of the Lorde of hostes?

This cognisaunce of the Lorde, standeth not in forked cappes,* typpettes, shauen crownes, or such other baggage and Antichristian pelfe, but in suffering for the Lordes sake. The world shall hate you, sayth Christ. Loe, •here is the Cognisaunce and Badge of Goddes children: The world shall hate you. Reioyce therefore my dearely beloued, reioyce, that God doth thus vouchsafe to beginne to conforme you, and make you like to Christ. By the tryall of these dayes yee are occasioned more to repent, more to pray, more to contemn this world, more to desire life euerlasting, more to be holy (for holy is the end wherefore God doth afflict vs) and so to come to Gods companye. Whych thing because we can not doe, as long as this body is as it is, therefore by the dore of death we must enter with Christ into eternall life, and immortality of soule and body: whiche God of his mercy send shortly for our Sauior Iesus Christes sake. Amen.

¶To Maystres A. Worcup.

THE euerlasting peace of Christ be more and more liuely felte in our hartes,* by the operation of the holy ghost, now and for euer. Amen.

Although I knowe it bee more then needeth to write anye thing vnto you (good Sister) being, as I doubt not you be, diligently exercised in readinge of the Scriptures in meditating of the same, and in hartly prayer to GOD, for the helpe of his holy Spirite, to haue the sense and feeling, especially of the comfortes you reade in Gods sweete booke: yet hauinge such oportunitie, and knowing not whether hereafter, I shall euer haue the like (as this bringer can declare) I thought good in few wordes to take my farewell in writinge, because otherwise I canne not. And now me thinkes I haue doone it. For what else canne I, or shoulde I saye vnto you (my dearely beloued in the Lorde) but farewell? Farewell deare Sister, farewell: howbeit in the Lorde, our Lord (I say) farewell, * & so much the better, by howe muche in your selfe you fare euill, and shall fare euill.

When I speake of your selfe, I meane also this worlde, thys life, and all thinges properly perteyning to this life. In them, as you looke not for your welfare, so be not dismayed, when accordingly you shall not feele it. To the Lord our GOD, to the Lambe our Christ, which hath borne our sinnes on his backe, & is our Mediatour for euer, do I send you. In him looke for welfare, and that without all wauering, because of his owne goodnesse and truth, which our euilles and vntrueth can not take away: Not that therefore I would haue you to flatter your selfe in any euill or vnbeliefe, but that I woulde comfort you, that they should not dismay you. Yours is our Christ wholly, * yours I say he is, with all that euer he hath. Is not this welfare trow you▪ Mouſtaynes shall moue, and the earth shall fall before you finde it otherwise, say that liar Sathan what he list.

Therefore good Sister farewell, and be mery in the Lorde bee mery I say, for you haue good cause. If your welfare, ioy, and saluation hanged vpon any other thing then onely Gods mercy & truth, then might you well be sad, heauy, and stand in a doubt: but in that it hangeth onely vpon these two, tel Sathan he lyeth, * whē he would you to stand in a mammering, by causing you to caste your eyes (which onely in this case should be set on Christ your sweet Sauior) on your selfe. In some part in deede looke on your selfe, on your fayth, on your loue, obedience. &c. to wake you vp from security, to stirre you vp to diligence, in doing the thinges apperteyning to your vocation: but when you would be at peace with God, and haue true consolation in your conscience, altogether looke vpon the goodnes of God in Christ. Thinke on this commaundement which precedeth all other: that you must haue no other Gods but the Lord Iehouah, which is your Lord & God: the which he could not be, if that he did not pardon your sinnes in very deede. Remember that Christ commaundeth you to call him father for the same intent. And hereto call to minde all the benefites of God, hitherto shewed vpon you: and so shall you fele in very deede, that which I wish vnto you now, and pray you to wish vnto me. Farewell, or welfare in the Lord Iesus, with whom he graunt vs shortlye to meete as his children, for his name and mercies sake, to our eternall welfare. Amen.

¶To mine owne deare brother M. Laurence Saunders, prisoner in the Marshalsee.

MY good brother, I beseech our good and gracious Father, alwayes to cōtinue his gracious fauor & loue towards vs, & by vs, as by instruments of his grace, to work his glory &, the cōfusion of his aduersaries. * Ex ore infantium & lactentium fundet laudem ad destruendum inimicum. &c. Amen. 1. Out of the mouth of infantes and babes, he will shew forth his prayse to destroy the enemy. &c.

I haue perused your letters to my selfe, and haue read them to others. For aunswere whereof, if I should write what Doctor Taylor, and Mayster Philpot doe thinke, then must I say that they thinke, the Salt sent vnto vs by your * frende is vnseasonable. And in deede I thinke they both will declare it hartely, if they shoulde come before them. As forme, if you woulde knowe what I thinke (my good and most deare brother Laurence) because I am so sinnefull and so conspurcate (the Lord knoweth I lye not) with many greuous sinnes (which I hope are washed away Sanguine Christi nostri) I neither canne nor woulde bee consulted withall, but as a sypher in Agrime. How be it, to tell you how and what I minde, take this for a summe: I pray GOD in no case I may seeke my selfe, and in deede (I thank• GOD therefore) I purpose it not. Quod reliquum est Domino Deo meo committo, & spero in illum, quod ipse faciet iuxta hoc: Iacta in Dominum curam▪ &c. Omnis cura vestra coniecta sit in illum. &c. Reuela Domino viam tuam & spera. &c. Sperantem in Domino misericordia circundabit. i. That which remayneth, I commit to my Lord God: and I trust in him, that he will doe according to this: Cast thy care on the Lord. &c Cast all your care vpon him. &c. Reueale vnto the Lord thy way, and trust. &c. Who that trusteth in the Lord, mercy shall compasse him about. I didde not, nor do not knowe, but by your Letters, quod cras wee shall come, coram nobis. Mine owne heart, stick still to dabitur vobis. Fidelis enim est Dominus, dabit in tentatione euentum quo possumus sufferre. Nouit Dominus pios é tentatione •riperre. &c. O vtinam pius ego essem. Nouit Dominus in die tribulationis sperantes in se. &c. i. It shall be geuen you &c. For the Lorde is faythfull. He will in tentation make away that ye may be able to beare it. The Lord knoweth how to rid out of tentation the godly. &c. O woulde God I were godly. The Lord knoweth howe to deliuer out of tentation suche as trust in him. &c. I canne no• thinke that they will offer any kinde of indifferent, or meane conditiōs: for if we wil not adorare bestiā, we neuer shalbe deliuered, but agaynst theyr will, thinke I, God our father & gracious Lord, make perfecte the good he hath begunne in vs. Faciet mi•••ter, Page 1634 charissime frater, quem in intimis visceribus habeo ad conuiuēdum & commoriendum. O si tecum essem. Hee will doe it my brother, my deare brother, whom I haue in my inward bowels to liue and dye with. O if I were with you. Pray for me mine owne hart roote in the Lord.

For euer your owne, Iohn Bradford.

¶An other Letter to Mayster Laurence Saunders.

GODs sweete peace in Christ be with you, my good brother in the Lord Iesus,* and with al your concaptiues. Amen.

I was letted this morning from musing on that, whiche I was purposed to haue thought on by reason of you, agaynst whome I saw my selfe guilty of negligence, euen in this poynt that I would not write, I should say, that I had not written vnto you as yet: therefore out of hande in maner I prepared my selfe, to purge my selfe hereof, not that I will go about to excuse my faulte (for that were more to loade me) but by asking both GOD and you pardon, to get it no more layed to my charge. Now then as I was thus purposing, and partly doynge, commeth there one with a letter from you, for the which as I haue cause to thanke GOD and you (howbeit not so that you should thinke, I geue not the whole to God) so I see my selfe more blame worthy, for this long holding my peace. Howbeit good brother, in this I haue geuen a demonstration to you, to behold my negligence in all other thinges, and especially in praying for you,* and for the Church of GOD, which for my sinnes and hypocrisy (hypocrisye in deede euen in this writing, GOD deliuer me from it) haue deserued to be punished. Iust is God, for we haue deserued all kindes of plagues at his handes: but yet mercifull is he that will on thys wyse chastise vs wyth this world, ne cum mundo condemnemur. i. That we should not be condemned with the worlde. He might otherwyse haue punished vs, I meane, he might haue for other causes cast vs in prison, me especially, then for his Gospell and wordes sake. Praysed therefore be his name, whiche voucheth vs worthye this honour. Ah good GOD forgeue vs our sinnes, and worke by this thy fatherly correction on vs, on me especially, affectually to loue thee and thy Christ: and with ioyfulnesse vnto the end, to carry thy Crosse through thicke and thinne. Alwayes set before our eyes, not this gallowes on earth, if we will sticke to thee, but the gallowes in Hell if wee denye thee, and swarue from that we haue professed.

Ah good Brother, if I could alwaies haue GOD, his Maiestye, mercy, heauen, hell. &c. before mine eyes then should I obdurare, as Paul writeth of Moses. Heb. 11. Obdurauit inquit, perinde quasi vidisset eum qui est inuisibilis. i. He endured (sayth he) as he that saw him which is inuisible. Pray for me, as I know you doe, and geue thanks also, for In Domino spero: non nutabo Si ambulauero per vallem vmbrae mortis, non timbo quia tu Domine mecum es. &c. Amen. i. In the Lord I trust: I shall not wauer. If I walk by the valley of the shadowe of death, I will not feare, for thou art with me O Lorde. I thinke we shall be shortly called forth, for now legem habent, & secundum legem. &c. otherwise will they not reason with vs: and I thinke theyr shootanker will be, to haue vs to subscribe. The which thing if we doe though with this condition: (so farre as the thing subscribed to, repugneth not agaynst Gods worde) yet thys will be offensiue. Therefore let vs vadere planè and so sanè, I meane, let vs all confesse that we are no chaungelings, but reipsa are the same we were in religion, and therefore can not subscribe, except we wil dissemble both with God, our selues and the world. Haec tibi scribo frater mi charissime in Domino. Iam legam tuam Epistolā. i. These things I write to you deare brother in the Lord. Now I will read your Epistle. * Ah brother that I had practicam tecum scientiam in vite illa quam pingis: roga Dominum vt ita verè sentiam. Amen. i. The practical vnderstanding with you in that vine whiche you describe. Pray the Lorde that I may so thinke in deed. God make me thankfull for you. Salutant te omnes concaptiui & gratias Domino pro te agun: idem tu facies pro nobis & ores. vt. &c. i. All our felow prisoners salute you, & geue thanks to God for you. The same do you for vs, & pray that. &c.

Your brother in the Lord Iesus, to liue and dye with you, Iohn Bradford.

To my deare Fathers, D. Cranmer, D. Ridley, and D. Latimer.

IESus Emanuell. My deare fathers in the Lord, I beseech GOD our sweete Father through Christ, * to make perfect the good hee hath begonne in vs all. Amen.

I had thought that euery of your staues had stande nexte the dore, but now it is otherwise perceiued. Our deare Brother Rogers hath broken the ise valiauntly, and as this day (I thinke) or to morow at the vttermost, harty Hooper, sincere Saunders, and trusty Taylour end theyr course, and receiue theyr crowne. The nexte am I, whiche hourelly looke for the porter to open me the gates after them, to enter into the desired rest. GOD forgeue me mine vnthankfulnesse for this exceeding great mercy, that amongst so many thowsandes, it pleaseth his mercy to choose me to be one, in whome he will suffer. For although it be moste true, that iuste patior. i. I iustly suffer (for I haue bene a great hypocrite, and a greeuous synner, the Lorde pardon me, yea hee hath done it, he hath done it in deede) yet, hic autem quid mali fecit? i. What euill hath he done? Christ, whome the Prelates persecute, his verity which they hate in me, hath done no euill, nor deserueth death. Therefore ought I most hartely to reioyce of this dignation and tender kyndnesse of the Lord towardes me,* which vseth the remedy for my sinne as a testimoniall of hys Testament, to his glory, to my euerlasting comfort, to the edefying of his Church, and to the ouerthrowing of Antichrist and hys kingdome. O what am I Lorde, that thou shouldest thus magnifye me so vile a man and miser, as alwayes I haue bene? Is this thy wont to sende for suche a wretche and an hypocrite as I haue bene, in a fiery Charyot, as thou diddest for Helias? Oh deare Fathers, be thankfull for me, and pray for me, that I styll may be found worthy in whom the Lord would sanctify his holy name. And for your part, make you readye, for we are but your gentlemen hushers. Nuptiae agni paratae sunt, venite ad nuptias. 1. The mariage of the Lambe is prepared, come vnto the mariage. I now go to leaue my flesh there, where I receiued it.* I shall be cōueied thither, as Ignatius was at Rome, to Leopardis: by whose euill I hope to bee made better. God graunt, if it be his will that I aske, it may make them better by me. Amen.

For my farewell therfore, I write and send this vnto you, trusting shortly to see you where we shall neuer be separated. In the meane season I will not cease, as I haue done, to commende you to our father of heauen. And that you would so do by me, I most hartely praye euerye one of you. You knowe nowe I haue moste neede. But fidelis Deus, qui nunquam sinet nos tenta•i supra id quòd possumus. i. Faythfull is God, which will not suffer vs to be tempted aboue our strength. He neuer didde it hytherto, nor now, I am assured, he will neuer do. Amen. A dextris est mihi, non mouebor. Propter hoc laetabitur cor meum, quia non derelinquet animam meam in inferno, nec dabit me sanctum suum per gratiam in C•risto, videre corruptionem. E carcere raptim, expectens omni momento carnificem. i. He is on my righte hand, therefore I shall not fall. Wherefore my hart shall reioyce,* for he shall not leaue my soule in hell, neither shall suffer me his holy one by his grace in Christ, to see corruption. Out of prison in haste, looking for the Tormentour.

To the honourable Lord Russell, now Earle of Bedford, being then in trouble for the verity of Gods Gospell.*

THE euerlasting and most gracious God and Father of our Sauour Iesu Christ,*lesse your good Lordshippe with all maner of heauenlye blessinges in the same Chryst our onely comfort and hope. Amen.

Praysed be God our Father which hath vouched you worthy, as of fayth in his Christ, so of his Crosse for the same. Magnified be his holy name, who as he hath deliuered you from one crosse, so he hath made you willing (I trust) and ready to beare another whē he shall see his time to lay it vpon you: for these are the most singular giftes of God geuen as to few,* so to none els but to these few whiche are moste deare in his sight. Fayth is reckoned, and worthely, among the greatest gyftes of GOD, yea it is the greatest it selfe that we enioy, for by it, as we be iustified and made Gods childrē, so are we temples and possessours of the holy spirite, yea of Christ also. Eph. 4. And of the Father hymselfe. Iohn. 14. By fayth we driue the Deuill away▪ 1. Peter. 5. We ouercome the world. 1. Ioh. And are already Cittizens of heauen and fellowes wyth Goddes deare Sayntes. But who is able to reckon the riches that this fayth bringeth with her vnto the soule she sitteth vpon? No man or Aungell. And therefore (as I sayd) of all Gods giftes, she may be set in the top and haue the vpmost seate. The which thing if men considered (in that she commeth alonely from Goddes owne mercy seat, * by the hearing, not of Masse or Mattyns, Dyriges or such drasse, but of the worde of God in such a tounge as we canne and doe vnderstand) as they would be diligent and Page 1635 take greate heede for doying or seeying any thyng whiche might cast her downe (for then they fal also) so would they with no lesse care read and heare Goddes holy word, ioyning thereto most earnest and often prayer, aswell for the more and better vnderstanding, as for the louing, liuyng and confessing of the same, mauger the head of the deuill, the worlde, our fleshe, reason, goodes, possessions, carnall frends, wife, children, and very life here: if they should pull vs backe to harken to the voyce and counsell, for more quiet, sure, and longer vse of them.

Now, notwithstanding this excellency of fayth in that we read the Apostle to matche therewith, yea (as it were) to preferre suffering persecution for Christes sake, I trowe no man will be so fond as to thinke otherwise, but that I and all Goddes children haue cause to glorify and prayse God, whiche hath vouched you worthye so greate a blessing.  For though the reason or wisdom of the worlde thinke of the Crosse according to theyr reach and according to theyr present sence, and therefore flyeth from it as from a most great ignominye and shame: Yet Gods Scholers haue learned otherwise to thinke of the Crosse, that is the frame house in the which God frameth his children lyke to his sonne Christ: the Fornace that fineth Gods golde: the high way to Heauen: the Sute and Liury that Gods seruantes are serued withall: the earnest and beginning of all consolation and glory. For they (I meane Gods scholers, as your Lordshyp is, I trust) doe enter into Goddes sanctuary,  least theyr fecte slippe. They looke not as beastes do, on thinges present onely, but on thinges to come, and so haue they as present to fayth, the iudgemente and glorious comming of Christ, like as the wicked haue now theyr worldly wealth wherein they wallow and will wallowe till they tumble headlong into Hell, where are tormentes too terrible and endlesse.  Nowe they followe the Feende as the Beare doth the trayne of Honye and the Sowe the swillinges, till they be brought into the slaughter house, and then they know that theyr prosperitie hath brought them to perdition. Then crye they woe, woe. We went the wrong way: * wee counted these men (I meane such as you bee that suffer for Goddes sake losse of goodes, frendes and life, whome they shall see endued with riche robes of righteousnesse, crownes of most pure precious golde, and Palmes of conquest in the goodly glorious palace of the Lambe, where is eternall ioy, felicity, &c.) Wee counted (will they then say) these men but fooles and mad men, we tooke theyr conditions to be but curiosity. &c. But then will it be to late, then the time will be turned, laughing shal be turned into weeping, and weeping into reioysing, Read Sapien. 2.3.4.5.

Therefore (as before I haue sayd) great cause haue I to thanke God whiche hath vouched you worthy of thys most bountifull blessing: * mucche more then you haue cause (my good Lord) so to be, I meane thankfull. For looke vpon your vocation I pray you, and tell me how many noble menne, Earles sonnes, Lordes, Knightes, and menne of estimation hath God in this Realme of England dealt thus withall? I dare say you thinke not that you haue deserued this. Only Gods mercy in his christ hath wrought this on you, as he did in Ieremyes tyme on Abimelech, in Achabs time on Abdias, in Christes tyme on Ioseph of Arimathia, in the Apostles tyme on Sergius Paulus, and the Queene of Candaces Chamberlayne. Onely now be thankefull and continue, continue, continue (my good Lorde) continue to confesse Christ. Bee not ashamed of hym before men, for then will not he bee ashamed of you. Nowe will he trye you: sticke fast vnto him and he wyll sticke fast by you: he will be with you in trouble and deliuer you. But then must you cry vnto him, for so it proceedeth: * He cried vnto me and I heard him: I was with him in trouble. &c.

Remember Lottes wyfe whiche looked backe. Remēber Fraunces Spira. Remember that none is crowned but he that striueth lawfully. Remēber that all you haue, is at Christes commaundement. Remember he lost more for you then you canne lose for him. Remember you lose not that which is lost for his sake, * for you shall finde much more here and elsewhere. Remember you shall dye, and when, where, and howe, ye can not tell. Remember the death of sinners is most terrible. Remember the death of Gods Sayntes is precious in his sight. Remember the multitude goeth the wide waye whiche windeth to woe. Remember that the straight gate which leadeth to glorye hath but few traouellers. Remember, Christ biddeth you striue to enter in thereat. Remember, he that trusteth in the Lord shall receiue strength to stand agaynst all the assaultes of his enemies. Be certayn all the hearers of your head are numbred. Be certayne your good Father hath poynted boundes ouer the which the deuill dare not look. Commit your selfe to him: he is, hath bene, and will bee your Keeper. Cast your care on hym and he will care for you. Let Christ be your scope and marke to pricke at: let hym be your patron to worke by: let him be your ensample to folow: geue him as your hart so your hand, * as your minde so your tounge, as your fayth so your feete, and let his word be your candle to go before you in all matters of Religion. Blessed is he that walketh not to these Popish prayers, nor standeth at them nor sitteth at them: glorifye God in both soule and body. * He that gathereth not wyth Christ: scattereth abroad. Use prayer, looke for Gods help, which is at hand to them that aske and hope thereafter assuredly. In which prayer I hartely desire your Lordshyp to remember vs, who as we are goyng with you ryght gladly (God therefore be prayسد) so we looke to go before you, hoping that you will folow, if God so will, according to your dayly prayer: Thy will be done on earth. &c. The good spirite of God alwayes guide your Lordshippe vnto the end. Amen.

Your Lordships owne for euer, Iohn Bradford.

To M. Warcup and his Wyfe, Maistres Wilkenson and others of his godly frendes with theyr families.*

THE same peace our Sauour Christ left with his people, * which is not without warre with the world, almighty God woorke plentifully in your hartes now and for euer, Amen.

The tyme I perceiue is come, wherein the Lordes grounde will be knowne, I meane it will now shortly appeare who haue receiued Goddes Gospell into theyr hartes in deede, to the taking of good roote therein, for such will not for a litle heate or sunburning, wither, but stiffely will stand and grow on maugre the malice of all burning showers and tempestes. And for as much as (my beloued in the Lorde) I am perswaded of you, that ye be in deede the children of GOD, Gods good ground, whiche groweth and will grow on (by Goddes grace) bringyng foorth fruite to Goddes glory after your vocations, as occasion shall bee offered (burne the Sunne neuer so hoate) therefore I can not but so signify vnto you, and hartely pray you and euery one of you, accordinglye to goe on forwardes after your Mayster Christ, not sticking at the foule waye and stormye weather, whiche you are come into and are like so to doe, of this beyng most certayne, that the ende of your iourney shall be pleasaunt and ioy full in suche a perpetuall rest and blissefulnesse as can not but swallow vppe the showers that ye nowe feelee and are soused in, if ye often sette it before your eyes after Paules counsell in the latter ende of the 4. and beginning of the 5. chapter of the second Epistle to the Corinthians. Read it I pray you, and remember it often, as a Restoratiue to refreshe you, leaste ye faynt in the way.

And besides this, set before you also, that though the weather be foule and stormes grow apace, yet go not ye alone, but other your brothers and sisters pad the same path, as Saynt Peter telleth vs, and therefore company shoulde cause you to be the more couragious and chearefull. But if ye had no company at all to go presently with you, I pray you tell me, if euen from the beginning the best of Goddes frendes haue founde any fayrer weather and way to the place whether ye are goyng (I meane heauen) then ye nowe finde and are like to doe,* excepte ye wyll with the worldinges, which haue theyr portion in this life, <◇> still by the way til the stormes be ouerpast, and then eyther night will so approach that ye can not trauell, eyther the doores will be sparred before ye come, and so ye shall lodge without in wonderfull euill lodgings. Read Apocal. 22. Begin at Abel, & come from him to Noe, Abraham, Isaac, Iacob, Ioseph, the Patriarches, Moses, Daud, Daniell, and all the Sayntes in the olde testament, and tell me whether euer any of them found any fayrer way then ye now finde.

If the olde Testament will not serue,* I praye you come to the new, and beginne with Mary and Ioseph, and come from them to Zachary, Elizabeth, Iohn Baptist, and euery one of the Apostles and Euangelistes, and search whether they all founde anye other way into the Citty we trauallye towardes, then by many tribulations. Besides these, if ye shoulde call to remembraunce the primatiue Church, Lord GOD, ye shoulde see many to haue geuen chearefully theyr bodyes to most greuous tormentes, rather then they woulde be stopped in theyr iourney, that there is no day in the yere, but (I dare say) a thowsand was the fewest that with great ioy lost theyr homes here,* but in the Citty they went vnto, haue found other maner of homes then mans minde is able to conceiue. But if none of all these were, if ye had no company now to go with you, as ye haue me your poore brother and bondman of the Lord, with many other, I trust in GOD: if ye had none other of the Fathers, Patriarches, Kynges, Prophettes, Page 1636 Apostles Euangelistes, Martyrs, and other holy saincts and children of God, that in their iourney to heauenward, found as ye now finde and are lyke to finde if ye go on forward as I trust ye will: yet ye haue your Mayster and your Captayne Iesus Chryst, the deare dearlyng and onely begotten and beloued sonne of God,* in whome was all the fathers pleasure, ioy, & delectation ye haue him to goe before you, no fayrer waye but muche fouler, into this our Citty of Ierusalem. I neede not (I trust) to rehearse what manner of waye he found. Beginne at his birth, and till ye come at his buriall, yee shall finde that euery foote and stryde of his iourney, was no better, but much worse then yours is now.

Wherefore (my dearely beloued in the Lorde) be not so deintie as to looke for that at Gods handes your deare father, which the Fathers,* Patriarckes, Prophetes, Apostles, Euangelistes, Martyrs, Sainctes▪ and his owne sonne Iesus Christ dyd not finde Hetherto we haue had fayre way (I trow) and fayre weather also▪ now because we haue loytered by the waye, and not made the speede we shoulde haue done, our louing Lorde and sweete father hath ouercast the weather, and styrred vp stormes and tempestes, that we might with more hast runne out our race before night come, and the doores be sparred. The Deuill standeth now at euery Inne doore in his Citie and Countrey of this world crying vnto vs to tary and lodge in this or that place tyll the stormes be ouerpast: not that he woulde not haue vs wet to the skinne, but that the tyme might ouer passe vs to oure vtter destruction. Therefore beware of his entisementes. Cast not your eyes on thinges that be present, how this man doth, and howe that man doth: But cast your eyes on the gleue ye runne at, or els ye will lose the game. Ye know that he which runneth at the gleue, doth not looke on other that stande by, and go this waye or that way, but altogether hee looketh on the gleue, and on them that runne with him,* that those which be behynde ouertake hym not, and that he may ouertake them which be before: euen so shoulde we doe, leaue of looking on those which will not runne the race to heauen blisse by the pathe of persecution with vs, and cast our eyes on the ende of our race, and on them that goe before vs, that wee may ouertake them, and on them which come after vs, that we may prouoke them to come the faster after.

Hee that shooteth, will not cast his eyes in his shootyng on them that stand by,* or ryde by the wayes (I trowe) but rather at the marke he shooteth at, for els he were lyke to wyne the wrong way: Euen so my dearely beloued let your eyes be set on the marke ye shoote at, euen Christ Iesus, who for the ioye set before hym, did ioyfully cary his Crosse, contemning the shame and therefore he now sitteth on the right hande of the throne of God.* Let vs follow him, for this did he that wee shoulde not be faynhtarted. For we may be most assured, that if we suffer wyth him, we shall vndoubtedly raygne with hym, but if wee denye him, surely he will deny vs: for he that is ashamed of me (saythe Christ) and of my Gospell, in this faythles generation, I wyll be ashamed of him before the Angels of God in heaven. Oh howe heauy a sentence is this to all suche as knowe the Masse to bee an abhominable idoll,* full of idolatrye, blasphemye, and sacriledge agaynst God and his Christ (as vndoubtedly it is) and yet for feare of men, for losse of lyfe or goodes, yea, some for aduaūtage and gayne, will honest it with theyr presence, dissemblyng both with God and manne, as their owne harte and conscience doth accuse them? Better it were that such had neuer known the truth, then thus wittingly, and for the feare or fauoure of man, whose breath is in his nosethrels, to dissemble it, or rather (as in deede it is) to deny it. The end of such is like to be worse then their beginning. Such had neede to take heed of the two terrible places to the Hebrewes in the sixt and tenth Chapters,* least by so doying they fall therein. Let them beware they playe not wily begile themselues, as some doe, I feare me, whiche go to Masse, and because they worship not, nor kneele not, nor knocke not as others doe, but sit still in theyr pues, therefore they think they rather do good to others then hurte.

But (alas) if these men woulde loooke into their owne consciences, there shoulde they see they are very dissemblers and in seeking to deceiue others (for by this meanes the Magistrates thinke them of theyr sorte) they deceiue themselues. They think at the eleuation tyme, all mennes eyes are set vppon them, to marke howe they doe. They thinke others hearyng of suche men goyng to Masse, do see, o• enquire of theyr behauour there. Oh if there were in those men that are so present at the Masse, eyther loue to God, or to theyr brethren, then woulde they for the one or bothe, openly take Gods part, and admonish theyr people of their idolatry. They feare man more then hym, which hath power to cast both soule and bodye to hell fire: they halte on bothe knees: they serue two maysters. God haue mercy vppon suche and open theyr eyes with his eye salue, that they may see, that they which take no part with God, are agaynst God, and that they whiche gather not wyth Christ, doe scatter abroad. Oh that they woulde read what S. Iohn sayth, will be done to the fearefull.* The counsaile geuen to the Church of Laodicea, is good counsaile for suche.

But to returne to you agayne (dearely beloued) be not yee ashamed of Gods Gospell, It is the power of God to saluation, to all those that doe beleue it.* Be therefore partakers of the afflictions, as God shal make you able, knowyng for certayne, that he will neuer tempt you farther then hee will make you able to beare:.* and thinke it no small grace of God to suffer persecution for Gods truth, for the spirite of God resteth vpon you, and ye are happie, as one day yee shall see. Read 2. Thess. 1. Heb. 12. As the fire hurteth not gold but maketh it finer, so shall yee be more pure by suffering with Christ. 1. Pet 1. The flayle and wind hurteth not the wheat, but clenseth it frō the chaffe And ye dearly beloued are Gods wheate▪ feare not therefore the flayle, feare not the fanning winde, feare not the milstone, feare not the ouen,.* for all these make you more meete for the Lordes owne toothe. Sope, though it be blacke, soyleth not the clothe, but rather at the length maketh it more cleane: so doth the blacke Crosse helpe vs to more whitenes, if God strike with his battledore. Because ye are Gods sheepe, prepare your selues to the slaughter, alwayes knoing that in the sight of the Lord, our death shall be precious. The soules vnder the aulter looke for vs to fill vp their number:.* happy are we if God haue so appoynted vs. How soeuer it be (dearely beloued) cast your selues wholly vpon the Lord with whome all the heares of your heades are numbred, so that not one of them shall perish. Will we nill we, we must drinke Gods cuppe, if he haue appoynted it for vs. Drinke it willingly then,.* and at the first when it is full, least peraduenture if we linger, we shall drinke at the length of the dregges with the wicked, if at the beginning we drinke not with his children: for with thē his iudgement beginneth, and when he hath wrought his will on mount Syon, then will he visite the nations round about.

Submit your selues therefore vnder the mighty hande of the Lorde.* No man shall touche you without his knowledge When they touch you therfore, know it is your weale. God therby will worke to make you like vnto Christ here, that yee may be also like vnto him els where. Acknowledge your vnthankfulnes and sinne, and blesse God that correcteth you in the world,.* because ye shall not be damned with the world. Otherwise might he correct vs, then in making vs to suffer for righteousnes sake: but this he doth because we are not of the world Call vppon his name through Christ for his helpe, as hee commaundeth vs. Beleeue that he is mercifull to you, heareth you, and helpeth you:.* I am with him in trouble, and will deliuer him, sayth hee. Knowe that God hath appoynted boundes ouer the whiche the Deuill, and all the worlde shall not passe. If all thinges seeme to be agaynst you, yet say with Iob: If he will kill me, I will hope in hym. Read the 91. Psalme, and pray for me your poore brother, and fellow sufferer for Gods Gospelles sake: his name therefore be praysed, and of his mercy he make me & you worthy to suffer with good conscience, for his names sake Die once we must, and when we knowe not:.* happy are they whome God geueth to pay Natures debte: I meane to dye for his sake.

Here is not our home, therefore let vs accordingly consider thinges, alwayes hauing before our eyes the heauenly Ierusalem Heb. 12. Apoc. 21 22 the way thether to be by persecutions: the deare frendes of God, howe they haue gone it after the example of our Sauoure Iesus Christ, whose footestepes let vs followe euen to the gallows, if God so will, not doubting but that as he within three dayes rose agayne immortall: euen so wee shall doe in our tyme: that is, when the trumpe shall blow, and the Angell shall shoote, and the sonne of man shall appeare in the cloudes, with innumerable saintes and Aungels in maiestie and greate glory: then shall the dead arise, and we shall be caught vp into the cloudes to meete the Lorde, and so be alwayes with hym. Comfort your selues with these wordes, and praye for me for Gods sake.

E carcere. 19. Nouemb. 1553.

To sir Iames Hales Knight, then prisoner in the Counter in Bredstreate.*

THE God of mercy and father of all comfort, plentifully poure out vpon you and in you his mercye,* and wyth his consolations comforte and strengthen you to the end, for his and our Christes sake, Amen.

Although, right worshipfull sir, many causes myght moue me to be content, with crying for you to your God and my God, that he woulde geue you grace to perseu•re well, as he hath right notably begunne to the great glory of his name, and comfort of all suche as feare him, as lacke of learning, of familiaritie, yea, acquayntance (for I think I am vnknown to you, both by face and name) and other such like thinges: yet I cannot content my selfe, but presuming something to scribe vnto you, not that I thynke my scribling can do you good, but that I might declare my 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 and compassion, loue, and effection I beare towardses your maistership, which is contented, yea desirous Page 1637 with vs poore misers, and to confesse Christes Gospell, in these perilous times and dayes of tryall. Oh Lord God how good art thou, which doest thus gleane out grapes, I meane children for thy self, and brethren for Christ? Looke good M. Hales on your vocation: not many Iudges,* not many knightes, not myny landed men, not many riche men: and wealthye to •iue as you are, hath God chosen to suffer for his sake, as hee hath nowe done you. Certainly I dare say you thinke not so of your selfe, as though God were bound to preferre you, or had neede of you: but rather attribute this, as all good thinges, vnto his free mercy in Christ. Agayne, I dare say, that you being a wise man, doe iudge of thinges wisely, that is, concerning this your Crosse,* you iudge of it not after y^e world and people, which is magnus erro•is magister, nor after the iudgement of reason and worldly wisdom, which is foolishnesse to faythe, nor after the present sense, to the which non videtur gaudij sed molesti•e, i. it seemeth not to bee ioyous but greeuous, as Paule writeth: but after the worde of God, which reacheth youre Crosse to be, in respecte of your selfe betweene God and you,* Gods chastising and your fathers correction, nurture, schoole, tryall, pathway to heauen,* glory and felicitie, and the furnace to cōsume the drosse, and mortify the reliques of old Adam whiche yet remayne, yea euen the framehouse to fashyon you like to the dearest sayntes of God here, yea Christ to the Sonne of GOD, that elsewhere you might be like vnto him.

Now, concerning your crosse in respecte of the worlde betweene the world and you,* Gods word teacheth it to be a testimonial of Gods truth, of hys prouidence, of his power, of his iustice, of his wisdom, of his anger agaynst sinne, of his goodnes, of his iudgement, of your faith and religion: so that by it you are to the world, a witnes of god one of his testes that hee is true, he ruleth all thinges, hee is iuste, wise, and at the length will iudge the worlde, and cast the wicked into perdition, but the godly he wil take & receiue into his eternall habitation. I know you iudge of thinges after faythes fetchē, and the effectes or endes of thinges, and so you see aeternum pondus gloriae. i. An eterweight of glorye, whiche this Crosse shall bryng vnto you dum non spectas ea quae videntur,sed ea quae non videntur. i. While you looke not on thinges which are seene, but on the thinges which are not seene. Let the worldlinges way thinges, and looke vpon the affayres of men with theyr worldly and corporall eyes, as did many in subscription of the kinges last will, and therefore they did that, for the whiche, they beshrewed themselues: but let vs looke on thinges with other maner of eyes, as God be prayesd you did, in not doying that which you were desired, and driuē at to haue done. You then behelde thinges not as a man, but as a man of God, and so you do now in Religion, at y^e least hetherto you haue done, and that you might do so stil, I humbly beseeche and pray you, say with Dauid: Defecerunt oculi mei in eloquium tuum,*quando consolaberis me? i. Myne eyes fayle for thy word, saying: when wilt thou cōfort me? Though you be as vter in fumo. i. like a bottell in the smoke: (for I heare you want health) yet ne obliuiscaris iustificationes Dei. i. Do not forget the statutes of y^e Lord: but cry out, quot sunt dies serui tui• quando facies de persecutibus me iudicium? i. Howe many are the dayes o• thy seruauant? when wilt thou execute iudgement on them that persecute me? And bee certayne quòd Dominus veniens veniet & non tardabit.*Si moram fecerit, expecta illum. i. The Lord will surely come, and not stay: though he tary, wayt for him: for he is but ad momentum in ira sua, & vita in voluntate eius, Ad vesperam demorabitur fletus, & ad matutinum laetitia. i. He is but a while in his anger, but in his fauour is life, weepyng may abide at euening, but ioye commeth in y^e morning, Follow therfore Esayes counsayl: Abscondere ad modicum,ad momentum, donec pertranseat indignatio eius, i. Hide thy selfe for a very little while, vntil the indignation passe ouer, which is not indignatio in deede, but to our sense, and therfore in the 26. chapter of Esay God saith of his Church and people, that as hee keepeth night and day, so non est indignatio mihi. i. There is no anger in me, (sayth he.)

The mother sometime beateth the childe, but yet her hart melteth vpon it euen in the very beating,* and therefore she casteth the rodde into the fire, and culleth the child geueth it an apple, and dandleth it most motherly. And to say the trueth, the loue of mothers to their children is but a trace to trayne vs to beholde the loue of God towardes vs,* and therefore sayth he: can a mother forget the chylde of her wombe? As who say, no: but if she should so do, yet will not I forget thee, sayth the Lorde of hostes. Ah comfortable saying: I will not forget thee, sayth the Lord. In deede the children of God think oftentimes that God hath forgotten them, and therefore they cry: Ne abscondas faciem tuam a me. &c. i. Hide not thy face from me. &c. Ne derelinquas me Domine. &c. i. Leaue me not O Lorde. &c. Whereas in very trueth it is not so but to their present sense,* and therefore Dauid sayd: Ego dixi in excessu meo, proiectus sum a facie tua. i. I sayd in my agony, I was cleane cast away from thy face. But was it so? Naye verely. Reade his Psalme and you shall see.* So writeth he also in other places very often, especially in the person of Christ, as when he sayth: Deus meus, Deus meus, vt quid dereliquisti me. i. My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me? he sayth not, vt quid derelinquis? i. Why doest thou forsake me? or, derelinques? i. Why wilt thou forsake me? but, vt quid dereliquisti? Why hast thou forsaken me? Where in deede God had not lefte hym but that it was so to hys sense, & that thys Psalme telleth full well: which Psalme I pray you now and then reade, it is the 22. and thereto ioyne the 30. and the 116. with diuers other. The same we read in the Prophet Esay in his 40. chapter, where hee reprooueth Israell for saying, God had forgotten them. Nunquid nescis (sayth hee?) i. Knowest thou not? An non audiuisti? &c. i. Hast thou not heard? &c.*Qui sperant in Domino mutabunt fortitudinē. i. They that trust in the Lord shall renue theyr strength. And in his 54. chapter: Noli timere. &c. Ad punctum enim, in modico dereliqui te & in miserationibus magnis congregabo te. In momento indignationis obscondi faciem meam parumper à te, & in miserecordia sempiterna misertus sum tui, dixit redemptor tuus dominus. Nam istud erit mihi sicut aquae Noe. Vt enim iuraui ne porro aquae Noe pertransirent terram, sic iuraui vt non irascar tibi & non increpem te. Montes enim comouebuntur & colles contremiscent, miserecordia autem mea non recedet à te, & foedus pacis meae non mouebitur, dixit miserator tuus Dominus. i. Feare not. &c. For a little while I haue forsaken thee, but with great compassion will I gather thee. For a moment in mine anger I hyd my face from thee, for a little season: but in euerlastyng mercy haue I had compassion on thee, sayth the Lorde thy redeemer. For this is vnto me, as the waters of Noe. For as I haue sworne that the waters of Noe should no more goe ouer the earth, so haue I sworne that I would not be angry w^t thee, nor rebuke thee. For the mountaynes shal remoue, and hilles shall fall downe, but my mercye shall not departe from thee, neyther shall the couenaunte of my peace fall awaye, sayth the Lorde, that hath compassion on thee.

But the scriptures are full of suche sweete places to them that will portare iram domini & expectare salutem & auxilium eius. i. Beare the wrathe of the Lorde,* and waye for his health and helpe. As of all temptations this is the greatest, that God hathe forgotten, or will not helpe vs through the pykes, as they say: so of all seruices of God, this liketh hym y^e best, to hope assuredly on him & for hys helpe alwayes, whiche is adiutor in tribulationibus. i. An helper in tribulations,* and doth more gloriously shew his power by suche as be weake, and feeble themselues so. For quo infirmiores sumus, eo sumus in illo robustiores. Sic oculi domini. i. The weaker we are, the more stronge we are in hym. Thus the eyes of the Lord be on them that tremble and feare. Voluntatem eorum faciet: i. hee will accomlishe their desire: he is with them in their trouble, hee will deliuer them. Antequam clamauerint exaudit eos. i. before they cry, he heareth them, as all the scriptures teach vs. To the reading whereof and hartye prayer, I hartily commend you, beseechyng almighty God, that of his eternall mercies hee woulde make perfecte the good hee hathe begunne in you, and strengthen you to the ende, that you might haue no lesse hope, but much more, of hys helpe to your comforte nowe agaynst your enemies, then already he hathe geuen you agaynst. N. for not subscribing to the kinges will.

Be certayne, be certayne good M. Hales, that all the heares of your head your deare father hath numbred, so that one of them shall not pearishe: your name is written in the booke of lyfe. Therefore vpon God cast all your care whiche will comforte you with his eternall consolations, and make you able to goe through the fire (if neede bee) whiche is nothing to be compared to the fire where into our enemies shall fall and lye for euer: from the whiche the Lorde deliuer vs, though it be through temporall fire, which must be construed according to the ende and profite that commeth after it: so shall it then not muche deare vs to suffer it for our mayster Christes cause, the whiche the Lord graunt for his mercies sake. Amen.

From the kings Bench.

Your humble Iohn Bradford.

To my very friend in the Lord Doctor Hyll Phisition.

The God of mercy and father of all comforte, at this present and for euer engraffe in your harte the sense of his mercy in Christ,* and for the continuance of hys consolation, whiche cannot but enable you to carrie wyth ioye, whatsoeuer crosse he shall lay vpon you, Amen.

Hetherto I coulde haue no suche libertie as to wryte vnto you, as I thynke you knowe: but nowe in that throughe Gods prouidence I haue no suche restraynte, I cannot but somthing write, as well to purge me of this suspicion of vnthankfulnes towardes you as also to signifie my carefulnes for you in these perilous dayes, least you should waxe colde in Gods cause (whiche God forbid) or suffer the light of the Lord once kindled in your harte to be quenched, and so become as you were before, after the example of the worlde and of many othere, whiche woulde haue bene accompted otherwise in our dayes, and yet still beguile themselues, still would be so accompted, although by their outward lyfe they declare the contrary, in that they thinke it inough to keepe the harte pure, notwithstandinge that the outward man doth curie fauour.

In whiche doyng, as they deny God to be ielous, and therefore requireth the whole man as well body as soule, being bothe create, as to immortalitie and societie wyth hym, so redeemed by the blood of Iesus Christ, and now sanctified by the holy spirite to be the temple of GOD, and member of hys sonne, as (I say) by their parting stake to geue God the harte,* and the world the body, they deny God to be ielous (for els they woulde geue hym both, as the wyfe would doe to her husband whether he be ielous or noe, if shee bee honest,) so they playe the dissemblers with the Church of GOD by theyr facte, offending the godlye, whome eyther they prouoke to fall wyth them, or make more carelesse and consciencelesse if they be fallen, and occasionyng the wicked and obstinate to tryumphe against God, and the more vehemently to prosecute theyr malyce agaynst suche as will not defile themselues in bodye or soule with the Romyshe ragges now reuiued amongst vs. Because of thys, I meane least you my deare Mayster and brother in the Lorde, shoulde doe as many of our Gospellers doe for feare of man, whose breathe is in hys nostrels, and hath power but of the body,* not fearyng the Lord which hath power both of soule and body, and that not onely temporallye, but also eternally: I could not but write something vnto you, aswell because duty deserueth it (for many benefites I haue receiued of God by your handes, for the whiche hee rewarde you, for I cannot, as also because charitie and loue compelleth me: not that I thinke you haue anye neede (for as I may rather learne of you, so I doubt not but you haue hetherto kept your selfe vpriht from haltyng) but that I might both quyet my conscience callyng vpon me hereabout,* and signifie vnto you by some thyng my carefulnes for your soule, as payneful and often you haue done for my body.

Therefore I praye you call to minde that there bee but two maysters, two kindes of people, two wayes, and two mansion places. The maysters by Christe and Satan: the people be seruitures to eyther of these, the wayes be stryght and wyde: the mansions be Heauen and Hell, Agayne, consider that thys worlde is the place of tryall of Gods people and the deuils seruauntes for as the one will follow hys mayster what soeuer commeth of it, so will the other. For a tyme it is hard to discerne who pertayneth to God and who to the Deuill: as in the calme and peace,* who is a good shipman and warriour, and who is not. But as when the storme aryseth, the expert mariner is knowne, and as in warre the good souldiour is seene, so in affliction and the Crosse, easily Gods children are knowne from Sathans seruauntes: for then as the good seruaunt will followe his mayster, so will the godly followe theyr captayne, come what come will, where as the wicked and hipocrites will bid adewe, and desire lesse of Chrystes acquayntaunce. For whiche cause the Crosse is called a probation and tryall, because it tryeth who will goe wyth God and who will forsake hym.* And nowe in Englande wee see howe small a companye Christe hath in comparison of Sathans Souldiours. Let no manne deceiue hymselfe, for hee that gathereth not wyth Chryste, scattereth abroad. No man canne serue two maysters: the Lorde abhorreth double heartes: the luke warme, that is, such as are both hote and colde, hee spitteth out of hys mouthe. None that halte on bothe knees doth GOD take for hys seruauntes. The way of Chryste is the straye waye, and so straite, that as a few finde it and few walke in it, so no man can halte in it but must needs goe vpright: for as the straytnes will suffer no reeling to this side or that side: so if anye man halte, he is lyke to fall of the bridge into the pit of eternall perdition.

Striue therefore good mayster Doctour, nowe you haue founde it, to enter into it: and if you shoulde be called or pulled backe, looke not on this side or that side, or behynde you as Lots wyfe did: but strait forwardes on the end which is set before you (though it bee to come) as euen nowe present: lyke as you doe and will your pacientes to doe in purgations and other your ministrations,* to consider the effecte that will ensue, where through the bitternesse and lothsomnesse of the purgation is so ouercome, and the paynefulnes in abiding the woorkyng of that is minystred, is so eased, that it maketh the patient willyngly and ioyfullie to receaue that is to be receiued, althoughe it be neuer so vnpleasaunt: so (I saye) sette before you the ende of thys straye waye, and then doubtlesse, as Paule sayth, aeternum pondus gloriae pariet. i. It shall bryng with it an eternall weight of glory, whilest we looke not on the thinge whiche is seene, for that is temporall, but on the thyng whiche is not seene, whiche is eternall. So dothe the husbandman in plowing and tilling, set before hym the haruest tyme: so dothe the fisher consider the draught of hys nette, rather then the castyng in: so dothe the Marchaunt the returne of hys marchaundise: and so shoulde we in these stormye dayes set before vs not the losse of our goodes, libertye and verye lyfe, but the reapyng tyme, the commyng of oure Sauoure Christ to iudgement, the fire that shall burne the wicked and disobedient to GODS Gospell, the blaste of the Trumpe, the exceeding glory prepared for vs in heauen eternally, such as the eye hath not seene, the eare hath not heard, not the hart of man can conceaue. The more we lose here,* the greater ioye shall we haue there. The more we suffer, the greater triumphe. For corruptible drosse, wee shall finde incorruptible treasures: for golde, glorie: for siluer, solace without ende: for riches, robes royall: for earthly houses, eternall pallaces: myrthe without measure, pleasure without payne, felicitie endles: Summa we shall haue God the father, the sonne and the holie Ghost.

Oh happye place, oh that thys daye woulde come. Then shall the ende of the wicked be lamentable, then shall they receaue the iust rewarde of Gods vengeance, then shall they crye woe, woe, that euer they dyd as they haue done. Reade Sapien. 2.3.4.5. Read Mathew. 25. Read 1 Corinthians 15. 2. Corrinthians 5. and by faythe (which GOD increase in vs) consider the thing there sette foorth. And for youre comforte, reade Hebrewes 11. to see what fayth hath done, alwayes consideryng the way to heauen to be by many trybulations, and that all they which wyll lyue godlye in Christ Iesu, must suffer persecution. You knowe thys is oure Alphabet: He that will be my Disciple,* sayth Chryst must denye himselfe, and take vp hys Crosse and followe me not thys Byshop, nor that Doctour, not this Emperoure, nor that Kynge, but me, sayth Christ: For he that loueth father, mother, wyfe, children, or very life bettter then me, is not worthy of me.

Remember that the same Lorde saythe: Hee that will saue hys lyfe shall lose it. Comforte your selfe with thys,* that as the Deuils had no power ouer the Porkets or ouer Iobs goodes without Gods leaue, so shall they haue man ouer you. Remember also that all the heares of your head are numbred with God. The Deuill may make one beleue he will drowne hym, as the Sea in hys surges threatneth to the land: but as the Lorde hath appoynted boundes for the one, ouer the whiche hee can not passe: so hath he done for the other.

On God therefore cast your care, loue hym, serue hym after hys worde, feare hym, trust in hym, hope at hys hand for all helpe, and alwayes praye, lookyng for the Crosse, and whensoever it commeth, be assured the Lorde, as he is faythfull, so he will neuer tempte you further then hee will make you able to beare, but in the midst of the temptation will make suche an euasion, as shall be most to his glorie, and your eternall comforte. GOD for hys mercye in Christe with hys holye spirite endue you, comfort you, vnder the winges of hys mercye shadowe you, and as hys deare childe guyde you for euermore. To whose mercfull tuition, as I doe with my harty prayer commit you: so I doubt not but you pray for me also, & so I beseech you to doe still. My brother P. telleth me you woulde haue the last part of S. Hieromes woorkes, to haue the vse thereof for a fortnight. I cannot for these three dayes well forbear it, but yet on Thursday next I will send it you if God let me not, and vse me and that I haue, as your owne. The LORD for hys mercye in Chryste directe our wayes to hys glorie,

Out of prison

by yours to commaund Iohn Bradford.

¶To Mistres M. H a godly gentlewoman, comfortyng her in that common heauinesse and godly sorrowe: which the feelyng and sense of sinne worketh in Gods children.

I Humbly and hartily praye the euerlasting good God Page 1639 and Father of mercy,* to blesse and keepe your harte and minde in the knowledge and loue of his truthe, and of his Christ, through the inspiration and working of the holye spirite, Amen.

Although I haue no doubt, but that you prosper and goe forwardes dayly in the way of godlinesse, more and more drawing towards perfection, and haue no neede of anye thinge that I can write, yet because my desire is that you might be more feruent and perseuer to the ende, I coulde not but write something vnto you, beseeching you both often and diligently to call vnto your minde, as a meane to stirre you hereunto, yea as a thing which God most straitly requireth you to beleue, that you are beloued of God, and that he is your deare father, in, through, and for Christ and his deatnes sake. This loue and tender kindnes of God towards vs in Christe, is abundantly herein declared, and that he hath to y^e Godly work of creation of this world, made vs after his image, redeemed vs being lost, called vs into his Church, sealed vs with his marke and signe manuell of Baptisme, kept and conserued vs all the dayes of our lyfe, fed, nourished, defēded and most fatherly chastised vs, and now hath kindled in our hartes the sparckles of his •eare, fayth, loue, and knowledge of his Christ and truthe, and therefore wee lament because we lament no more our vnthankfulnes, our fraylnes, our diffidence and wauering in thinges, wherein we should be most certayne.

All these thinges wee shoulde vse as meanes to confirme our fayth of this, that God is our God and father & to assure vs that he loueth vs as our father in Christ: to this end (I say) we should vse the thinges before touched especially in that of all thinges GOD requireth thys faythe and fatherly perswasion of his fatherly goodnesse,* as his chieftest seruice. For before he aske anye thing of vs, he sayth: I am the Lorde thy God, geuing himselfe, and then all he hath to vs to be our owne. And this he doth in respect of himselfe, of his owne mercy and and truthe, and not in respect of vs, for then were grace no grace. In consideration whereof, when he sayth: Thou shalt haue none other Gods but me, thou shalt loue me with all thy harte. &c. though of duetie we are bound to accomlishe all that he requireth, and are culpable and giltie, if we doe not the same, yet he requireth not these thinges further of vs, then to make vs more in loue and more certayne of this his couenaunt, that he is our Lord and GOD. In certayntye wherof, as he hath geuē this whole world to serue to our neede and commoditie: so hath he geuen his sonne Chryst Iesus, and in Christe, hymselfe to be a pledge and gage: whereof the holy Ghost doth now and then geue vs some taste and sweete smell to our our eternall ioy.

Therefore (as I sayde) because God is your father in Christ, and requireth of you straitly to beleue it, geue your selfe to obedience, although you doe it not with suche feeling as you desire. First must faithe goe before, and then feeling will follow. If our imperfection, frayltie, and many euils shoulde be occasions whereby Sathan woulde haue vs to doubte, as muche as we canne, let vs abhorre that suggestion, as of all others most pernicious: for so in deede it is. For when we stande in a doubte, whether God be oure Father, we cannot be thankfull to God, we can not hartily pray or thinke anye thyng wee doe acceptable to God, we can not loue our neighbours and geue ouer our selues to care for them, and doe for them as we should do, and therefore Sathan is most subtile hereaboutes, knowing full well that if we doubt of Gods eternal mercies towards vs through Christ, we cannot please God, or do any thing as we should do to man. Continually casteth he into our memories our imperfectiō, frayltie, falles and offences, that we should doubte of Gods mercie, and fauour towards vs.

Therefore my good sister, wee must not be sluggishe herein,* but as Sathan laboureth to loosen our faythe: so must we labour to fasten it by thinking on the promyses and couenaunte of God in Christes bloude, namely that God is our God with all that euer hee hath: whiche couenaunte dependeth and hangeth vppon Gods own goodnes, mercy and trueth onely, and not on our obedience or worthines in any poynt, for then should we neuer be certayne. In deede God requireth of vs obedience and worthines, but not that thereby we might be his children and he our father,* but because he is our father and we his children through his owne goodnes in Christe, therefore requireth he fayth and obedience. Now if we want this obedience & worthines which he requireth, shuld we doubt whether he be our father? Nay, that were to make our obedience and worthines the cause, and so to put Christ out of place, for whose sake God is our father: But rather because he is our father, and we feel our selues to want such things as he requireth, we shuld be styrred vp to a shamefastnes and blushing, because we are not as we should be: and thereupon should we take occasion to go to our father in prayer on this maner:

Deare father, thou of thyne owne mercye in Iesus Chryst hast chosen me to be thy childe, and therefore thou wouldest I should be brought into thy Church and faythfull companie of thy children: wherein thou hast kept me hetherto,*thy name therfore be prayسد. Now I see my self to want fayth, hope, loue. &c. whiche thy children haue and thou requirest of me, wherthrough the deuill would haue me to doubt, yea vtterly to dispayre of thy fatherly goodnes, fauour and mercy. Therefore I come to thee as to my mercifull father through thy deare sonne Iesus Christ, and pray thee to helpe me good Lorde: helpe me, and geue me fayth hope, loue, &c. and graunt that thy holy spirite may be with me for euer, and more and more to assure me that thou art my father: that this mercifull couenaunt that thou madest with them respect of thy grace in Christ, and for Christ and not in respecte of any my worthines, is alwayes to me. &c.

On this sort (I say) you must pray and vse your cogitations, when Satan would haue you to doubte of saluation. He doth all he can to preuayle herein.* Do you al you can to preuayle herein agaynst hym. Though you feel not as you wold, yet doubt not, but hope beyond all hope, as Abraham did. For alwayes (as I sayd) goeth fayth before feelyng. As certayne as God is almighty, as certayne as God is mercifull, as certayne as God is true, as certayn as Iesus Christe was crucified, is risen, and sitteth on the right hand of the Father, as certayne as this is GODS commaundement: I am the Lord thy God. &c. so certayne ought you to be that God is your father. As you are boūd to haue no other Gods but hym, so are ye no lesse bound to beleue that God is your God. What profite shoulde 〈◇〉 be to you to beleue this to be true: I am the Lord thy God to others, if you shoulde not beleue that this is true to youre selfe? The deuill beleeueth on this sorte. And whatsoeuer it be that woulde moue you to doubte of this,* whether God be your God through Christ, that same cōmeth vndoubtedly of the deuill. Wherefore did God make you, but because he loued you? Might not he haue made you blind dumbe, deafe, lame, frantike. &c. Might not hee haue made you a Iew, a Turke, a Papist. &c? And why hath hee not done so? verily because hee loued you? And why dyd hee loue you? What was ther in you to moue him to loue you? Surely nothing moued him to loue you, and therefore to make you, and so hitherto to keep you, but his own goodnes in Christ.* Nowe then in that his goodnes in Chryste still remayneth as much as it was, that is, euen as great as hymself, for it cannot be lessened: how shuld it be but y^t he is your God and father? Beleue this, beleue this, my good sister, for God is no chaungeling: them whome hee loueth, he loueth to the end.

Cast therefore your selfe wholly vpon him, and think without all wauering, that you are Gods child, that you are a citizen of heauen, that you are the daughter of God, the temple of the holy Ghost. &c. If hereof you be assured as you ought to be, then shall your conscience be quieted, then shall you lament more & more that you want manye thinges which God loueth:* then shal you labour to be holy in soule and bodye: then shall you go about that Gods glory may shyne in all your wordes and works: then shal you not be afrayd what man can doe vnto you: then shall you haue such wisdom to answere your aduersaries, as shall serue to their shame, and your comfort: then shal you be certayn y^t no man can touch one heare of your head further then shall please your good father, to your euerlasting ioye: then shall you be moste certayne, that God as youre good father, will be more carefull for your Children, and make better prouision for them, if all you haue were gone then you can: then shall you (being assured I say of gods fauour towardes you) geue ouer your selfe wholly to help and care for others that be in neede: then shall you contemne this life, and desire to be at home with youre good and sweete father, then shall you laboure to mortifie all thinges that would spot eyther soule or bodye. All these thinges spryng out of thys certaine perswasion and faith, that God is our father, and we are his children by Christ Iesus. All thinges should help our fayth herein: but Sathan goeth about in all thinges to hinder vs.

Therefore let vs vse earnest and hartye prayer: let vs often remember thys couenaunt: I am the Lord thy God: let vs looke vpon Christ and hys precious bloud shed for the obsignation and confirmation of his couenaunt: * let vs remember all the free promises of the Gospell: let vs set before vs Gods benefites generally in making this worlde, in ruling it, in gouerning it, in callyng and keepyng hys Church. &c. let vs set before vs Gods benefites particularly, howe hee hath made his creatures after his image, Page 1640 howe hee made vs of perfecte lymmes, forme, beautye, memory, &c. how he hath made vs as Christians, and geuen vs a right iudgement in his religion: how he hath euer sithen we were b•rne, blessed, kept, nourished, and defended vs: how he hath often beaten, chastised, and fatherly corrected vs: how he hath spared vs & doth now spare vs, geuing vs tyme, space, place, grace. This if you doe & vse earnest prayer, and so flee from al things which might wound your conscience, geuing your selfe to diligence in your vocation, you shall finde at the length that (whiche God graunt to me with you) a sure certayntie of saluation, without all suche doubt as may trouble the peace of conscience, to your eternall ioye, and comforte. Amen. Amen.

Yours to vse in Christ, Iohn Bradford.

¶An other letter full of Godly comfort, written to the same person.

THE good spirite of God whiche guideth hys children, be with you my good sister in the Lorde, for euer. Amen.

Although, as I to you, so you vnto me in person are vnknownen, * yet to hym whome we desire to please, wee are not onelye in persons, but also in hartes knowne and thorowly seene: and therefore as for hys sake you woulde by that you sent, of me bee perceiued how that in God you beare to me a good will: so, that I to you might be seene in God to beare you the lyke, I sēd to you these fewe wordes in writing, wishing that in all your doinges and speache, yea euen in your very thoughtes, you woulde labour to feele that they are all present and open before the sight of God, be they good or bad. This cogitation often had in mind and prayer made to God for the working of his spirite, therby, as a meane, you shall at the length feele more comforte and commoditie, then any man can knowe, but such as be exercised ther in. Howbeit, this is to be added, that in thinking youre selfe, & all that you haue and doe, to be in the sight of God: this (I say) is to be added, * that you thinke hys sight is the fight, not onely of a Lorde, but rather of a father, which tendereth more your infirmities, then you can tender the infirmities of any your Children. Yea when in your self you see a motherly affection to your little one that is weake, let the same be vnto you a trace to trayn you to see the vnspeakable kinde affection of God your father towardses you.

And therefore vpon the consideration of your infirmities and naturall euils, which continually cleaue vnto vs, take occasion to goe to God, * as your father through Christe, and before hys mercifull harte, laye open your infirmities and euilles, with desire of pardon and helpe, after hys good will and pleasure, but in hys time, and not when you will, and by what meanes he will, not by that waye you woulde: in the meane season hange on hope of his fatherly goodnes, and surely you shall neuer be ashamed. For if a woman that is naturall, cannot finally forget the Childe of her wombe, be •ure God whiche is a father supernaturall, * cannot, nor will not forget you. Yea if a woman coulde be so forgetfull, yet God hymselfe sayth, he will not be so.

This opinion, yea rather certayne perswasion of God our father through Christe, see that you cherishe and by all meanes, as well by dilligent consideration of his benefites,* as of his louing corrections, whether they be inward or outward, see that you nourishe: knowyng for certayne, that as the deuill goeth about nothing so muche as to bring you in a doubte whether yee be Gods childe, or no: so what soeuer shall moue you to admitte that dubitation, be assured the same to come from the Deuill. If you feele in your selfe not onely the want of good thinges, but also plentye of euill, do not therefore doubte whether you be Gods childe in Christ, or no.

For if for your goodnes or ilnesse sake, which you feel or feele not,* ye should beleue or doubte, then shoulde you make Christe Iesus for whose sake onely God is your father, either nothyng, or els but halfe Christ.

But rather take occasion of your wants in good, and of your plenty in euill, to goe to God as to your father, and to praye to him, that in asmuch as he commaundeth you to beleue that he is your God and father: so he would geue you his good spirite, that you might feele the same, and liue as hys childe, to hys glorye: and cease not vpon such prayers to look for comfort Gods good tyme, still hoping the best, and reiecting all dubitation, and so all euill workes, words and cogitations, as the Lord shal enable you by hys good spirite and grace, which I beseeche hym to geue vnto you, my good sister, for euer. And further I pray you, that as hee hath made you to be an helper vnto your husband, so you would endeuour your selfe therein to shewe the same as well in soule as body: and begge grace of God, that your indeuour may be effectual to both your comfortes in Christ. Amen.

Iohn Bradford.

To my welbeloued in the Lord, VV. P.*

GRace and peace from God the father, through our Lorde Iesus Chryste. Amen.

Deare brother, God most iustly hath cast me downe into a dungeon, but much better then I deserue: wherein I see no man but my keeper, nor can see any except they borne to me So•ething in the earth my lodgyng is: which as an example and memoriall of my earthly affections (which God I trust will mortifie) and of my sepulchre, whereunto I trust my Lord God will bryng me in peace in hys good time. In the meane season hee geue me pacience, liuely hope, and his good spirite. I pray you praye for me, for the prayer of the godly, if it be effectuall,* worketh muche with God. I thanke God my common disease doth lesse trouble me, then when I was abroad, which doth teache me the merciful prouidence of God towards me. Vse true and harty prayer, and you shall perceiue GOD at length will declare himselfe to see, where now many thinke he sleepeth.

Out of the Tower,

by the Lordes prisoner, Iohn Bradford.

A letter whiche he wrote to a faythfull woman in her heauines and trouble: most comfortable for all those to read that are afflicted and broken harted for their sinnes.

GOD oure good father for hys mercies sake in Christe with his eternall consolation so comforte you,* as I de'sire to be comforted of him in my moste neede: Yea, he will comfort you, my deare sister, onely caste your care vppon hym, and he neuer can nor will forsake you. For his calling and giftes be suche, that he can neuer repente hym of them. Whome he loueth, he loueth to the end: none of his chosen can perishe.* Of whiche number I knowe you are my dearely beloued sister: God increase the fayth thereof dayly more and more in you, hee geue vnto you to hange wholly on hym and on his prouidence and protection. For who so dwelleth vnder * that secret thing, and help of the Lord, he shall be cocke sure for euermore. He that dwelleth I say: for if we be flitters and not dwellers: as was Loth a flitter from Segor, where God promised hym protection, if hee had dwelled there still, wee shall remoue to oure losse, as he did into the mountaynes.

Dwell therefore, that is, truste, and that finally vnto the ende, in the Lorde (my deare sister) and you shalbe as Mount Syon. As Mountaynes compasse Ierusalem: so dooth the Lorde all hys people. How then can hee forget you, whiche are as y^e apple of hys eye, for his dear sonnes sake. Ah deare heart, that I were now but one half houre with you, to be a Symon to helpe to cary your crosse with you. God sende you some good Symon to bee with you, and helpe you.

You complayne in your letters of the blyndenesse of your minde, and the troubles you feelee. My dearely beloued, God make you thankfull for that whiche God hathe geuen vnto you: he open your eyes to see what and howe great benefites you haue receiued, that you may be lesse couetous, or rather impacient, for so (I feare me) it should be called, and more thankfull. Haue not you receiued at his handes, sight to see your blindnesse, and thereto a desirous and seeking heart to see where he lyeth in the mydday, as his deare Spouse speaketh of her selfe in the Canticles? Oh Ioyce, my good Ioyce, what a gifte is thys? Many haue some sight, but none this sobbing and sighing none this seeking whiche you haue, I knowe, but such as he hath married vnto hym in his mercies. You are not content to kisse hys feete w^t the Magdalen, but you would be kissed euen with the kisse of his mouthe. Cant. 1. You would see his face with Moses, forgetting how he biddeth vs seeke hys face, Psalme. 27. yea, and that for euer. psalm 105. which signifieth no such sight as you desire, to bee in this present life, which would see God nowe face to face, where as he cannot be seene, but couered vnder something yea sometye in that whiche is (as you would say) cleane contrary to God: as to see his mercye in hys anger. In bringing vs to hell, fayth seethe hym bryng vs to heauen: in darkenesse it beholdeth brightnesse:* in hidyng hys face from vs, it beholdeth hys mery countenaunce. How dyd Iob see God, but as (you woulde saye) vnder Sathans clok? For who cast the fire frō heauen vpon hys goodes? Who ouerthrow hys house,* and styrred vp men to take away his cattell, but Sathan? And yet Iob pearce• thorough all these, and saw Gods worke saying: The Lorde hath geuen the Lord hath taken away. &c.

In reading of the Psalmes, how often doe you see that Dauid in the shadowe of death, sawe Gods sweete loue? And so (my dearely beloued) I see that you in your darknes and dimnesse, by fayth do see claritie and brightnesse: by fayth (I say) because fayth is of things absent, of things hoped for, of thinges which I appeale to your conscience, whether you desire not. And can you desire anye thinge Page 1641 which you know not? And is there of heauenly things any other true knowledge then by fayth?

Therefore, my deare hearte, be thankfull, for (before God I write it) you haue great cause. Ah my Ioyce, how happy is the state wherein you are?  Uerily you are euen in the blessed state of Gods children: for they mourne, and doe not you so? And that not for worldly weale, but for spirituall riches, fayth, hope, charitie. &c. Do you not hunger and thirst for righteousnes?  And I pray you sayth not Christ, who cannot lye, that happy are suche? How shuld God wipe away the teares from your eyes in heauen, if now on earth ye shed no teares? How coulde heauen be a place of rest, if on earth you did finde it? Howe coulde you desire to be at home, if in your iourney ye found no grieffe? How could you so often call vppon God, and talke wyth him, as I knowe you doe, if your enemy should sleepe all day long? How shoulde you elsewhere bee made like vnto Christ, I meane in ioye, if in sorrow you sobbed not with him? * If you will haue ioy & felicitie, you must first needes feelee sorrow and miserye. If you will goe to heauen, you must sayle by hell. If you will embrace Christ in his robes you must not thinke scorne of him in his ragges. If you will sit at Christes table in hys kingdome, you must first abide with him in his temptations. If you will drinke of his cup of glory, forsake not his cup of ignominye.

Can the head corner stone bee reiected, and the other more base stones in gods building be in this world set by? You are one of his liuely stones: be content therefore to be hewen and snagged at, that you might bee made more meete to be ioyned to your fellowes which suffer with you Satans snatches, the worldes woundes, contempte of conscience,  and freattes of the fleshe, where through they are enforced to cry, Oh wretches that we are, who shal deliuer vs? You are of Gods corne, feare not therefore the Flayle, the Fanne, Milstone, nor Ouen. You are one of Christes Lambes,  looke therefore to be fleeced, hayled at, and euen slayne.

If you were a market sheepe, you should go in more fatte and grassy pasture. If you were for the Fayre, you should be stalfed and want no weale:  but because you are for Gods owne occupying, therefore you must pasture on the bare Common. abiding the stormes and tempests that will fall. Happy and twise happy are you (my deare sister) that God now hayleth you whither you woulde not, that you might come whither you woulde. Suffer a little and be still. Let Satan rage agaynst you, let the worlde crye out, let your conscience accuse you, let the lawe loade you presse you downe, yet shall they not preuayle, for Christ is Emanuell,  that is, God with vs. If God be with vs, who can be agaynst vs? The Lorde is wyth you, youre Father cannot forgette you: your Spouse loueth you. If the waues and surges arise, * crye with Peter: Lorde I pearishe, and he will put out his hande and helpe you. Cast out youre anker of hope, and it will not cease for all the stormye surges, till it take holde on the rocke of Gods trueth and mercy.

*Thinke not that he whiche hath geuen you so manye thinges corporallye, as inductions of spirituall and heauenly mercies, and that without your desertes or desire, can deny you any spirituall comforte desiring it. For if hee geue to desire, he will geue you to haue and enioy y^e thing desired. The desire to haue, and the goyng about to aske, ought to certifie youre conscience, that they be hys earnest of the thing whiche you asking he will geue you, yea before you aske, and whilst you are about to aske hee will graunt the same (as Esay sayth) to hys glorye and your eternall consolation. Hee that spared not his owne sonne for you will not nor cannot thinke anye thinge to good for you, my hartily beloued.

If he had not chosen you, (as most certainly he hath) he would not haue so called you: * he would neuer haue iustified you: he would neuer haue so glorified you with hys gracious giftes, which I know, praysed be his name therfore: he would neuer haue so exercised your fayth with tēptations, as he hath done and doth: if (I saye) hee had not chosen you. * If he haue chosen you (as doubtlesse deare heart, he hath done in Christe, for in you I haue seene hys earnest, and before me and to me you coulde not deny it, I knowe both where and when) if I say, he haue chosen you then neither can you, nor euer shall you pearishe. For if you fall, he putteth vnder his hand: you shall not lye still: so carefull is Christ your keeper ouer you. Neuer was mother so mindefull ouer her chylde, as hee is ouer you. And hath not he alwayes bene so?

Speake woman, when did he finally forget you? And will he now trow you in your most neede doe otherwise, * you calling vpon him, and desiring to please hym? Ah my Ioyce, thinke you God to be mutable? Is he a chaungeling? Doth not he loue to the ende them whom he loueth? * Are not his giftes and calling suche, that he cannot repent him of them, for els were he no God. If you should perish, then wanted he power: for I am certayne his will towardes you, is not to be doubted of. Hath not the spirit which is the spirite of trueth, tolde you so? * And will you now harken with Eue to the lying spirite which woulde haue you now to despayre, (no he goeth more craftilye to worke, howbeit to that ende, if you should geue eare vnto it, which God forbid) but to doubt and stand in a mammering, and so shoulde you neuer truely loue God, but serue him of a seruile feare, least he shoulde cast you off for your vnworthines and vnthankfulnes: as though your thankfulnes or worthines were anye causes with God, why he hath chosen you, or will finally keepe you.

Ah myne owne deare harte, Christ onely, Christ only, and his mercy & truth. In him is the cause of your election. This Christ, this mercy * this truth of God remayneth for euer, is certayne for euer, I saye for euer. If an Aungel from heauen should tell you contrary, accursed be he. Your thankfulnes and worthines are fruites and effectes of your election, they are no causes. These fruites and effectes shalbe so much more fruitfull and effectual, by how much you wauer not.

Therefore (my dearely beloued) arise, and remember from whence you are fallen. * You haue a shepheard which neither slumbreth nor sleepeth: No man nor deuill can pul you out of his handes. Night and day he commaundeth his Aungels to keepe you. Haue you forgotten what I read to you out of the Psalme: * The Lorde is my shepheard I can want nothing? Do you not know that god sparred Noe in the Arke on the out side, so that hee coulde not get out? * So hath he done to you my good sister, so hath he done to you. Ten thousande shall fall on youre right hande, and twenty thousand on your left hand, yet no euill shal touch you. Say boldly therefore: * Many a tyme from my youth vpp they haue fought agaynst me, but they haue not preuayled, no, nor neuer shall preuayle, for the Lord is round about hys people. And who are the people of God, but such as hope in him? Happy are they that hope in the Lorde: and you are one of those, my deare heart, * for I am assured you haue hoped in the Lord: I haue your woordes to shewe moste manifestly, and I knowe they were written vnfaynedly. I neede not to say, that euen before God you haue simply confessed to me, and y^t oftentimes, no lesse. And once if you had this hope, as you doubtlesse had it, though now you seele it not, yet shall you feele it agayne: for the anger of the Lorde lasteth but a moment, but his mercy lasteth for euer. Tel me my deare heart, who hath so weakned you? * Surely not a perswasion which came from him that called you. For why should ye wauer? Why shoulde ye wauer, and be so heauy harted? Whome looke you on? On youre selfe? on your worthines? on your thankfulnes? on that whiche God requireth of you, as fayth, hope, loue, feare, ioy. &c. Thē can you not but wauer in deed: for what haue you as God requireth? Beleue you, hope you, loue you &c. as muche as ye shoulde doe? No, no, nor neuer can in this life. Ah my dearly beloued, haue you so soone forgotten y^t which euer should be had in memory? namely, that when you would & shoulde be certayne and quiet in conscience, then should your fayth burst throughout al things not onely that you haue in you, or els are in heauē, earth▪ or hell, vntill it come to Christ crucified, and the eternall sweete mercies and goodnes of God in Christ? Here here is the resting place, here is your Spouses bed: creepe into it, and in your armes of fayth embrace him, bewayle your weakenes, your vnworthines, your diffidēce. &c. and you shall see he will turne to you. What sayde I, you shall •ee• Nay I should haue sayd, You shall feelee hee will turne to you. You know that Moses, when he went to the mount to talke with God, he entred into a darck cloude, and Helias had his face couered when God passed by. Both these deare frendes of God, heard God, but they sawe him not, but you woulde be preferred before them. See nowe my deare hart, how couetous you are. Ah bee thankfull, bee thankfull. But God be prayسد youre couetousnesse is Moyses couetousnes. Well, with him you shalbe satisfied. But when? Forsooth, when he shall appeare. Here is not the time of seeing, but as it were in a glasse. Isaac was deceiued because he was not content with hearing onely.*

Therefore to make an end of these many words, wherwith I feare me I doe but trouble you from better exercises: in asmuch as you are in deede the childe of God electe in Christ before the beginning of all times: in as much as you are geuē to the custody of Christ, as one of Gods most precious iewels? in as much as Christ is faythfull, & hytherto hath all power, so y^t you shall neuer perish, no, on•Page 1642 heare of your head shall not be lost: I beseeche you, I pray you, I desire you, I craue at your hands with all my very heart, I aske of you with hand, penne, tongue, and minde, in Christ, through Christ, for Christ, for his name, bloude, mercies,* power, and truthe sake (my most entirely beloued sister) that you admit no doubting of Gods final mercies towards you, howe so euer you feelee your selfe: but complaine to God, and craue of him as of your tender and deare father, al things, and in that time which shalbe most oportune, you shall finde and feelee farre aboue that your heart or the heart of any creature can conceiue, to your eternall ioy. Amen, Amen, Amen.

The good spirit of God alwaies kepe vs as hys deare children: he comfort you, as I desire to be comforted (my dearely beloued) for euermore. Amen.

I breake vp thus abruptly, because our common prayer time calleth me. The peace of Christe dwell in both our hearts for euer. Amen.

As for the reporte of W. Po. if it be as you heare, you must prepare to beare it.* It is wrytten on heauens doore: Do wel, and heare euil. Be content therefore to heare what soeuer the enemy shall imagine to blot you withall. Gods holy spirite alwaies comfort and keepe you. Amen, Amen. This 8. of August, by him that in the Lord desireth to you as well and as much felicitie, as to his owne heart.

John Bradford.

Heere followeth an other letter of hys, wrytten to the good Lady Uane, wherein he resolueth certaine questions which shee demanded. This Lady Uane was a speciall Nourse,* and a great supporter, to her power, of the godly Saints, which were imprisoned in Queene Maries time. Unto whom, diuers Letters I haue both of M. Philpot, Carelesse, Traherne, Thomas Rose, and of other moe, wherein they render vnto her moste gratefull thanks for her exceeding goodnes extended towarde them, with theyr singulare commendation and testimonie also of her Christian zeale towarde Gods afflicted prisonners, and to the veritie of his Gospell. Shee departed of late at Holburne. Anno 1568. whose ende was more like a sleepe, then anye death:* so quietly and meekely shee deceased and departed hence in the Lord.

Amongest other which wrote vnto her, M. Bradforde also sent these letters to the said Lady: the tenour whereof heere followeth.

To my good Lady Vane.

THE true sense and sweete feeling of Gods eternal mercies in Christe Iesus, be euer more and more liuely wrought in your heart by the holy Ghost.* Amen.

I moste heartily thanke you (good Madame) for your comfortable Letters: and whereas you would be aduertised what were best to be done on your behalfe, concerning your three questions: the truth is, that the questions are neuer wel seene nor answered, vntill the thing wherof they arise, be well considered, I meane, vntill it be seene howe great an euill the thing is. If it be once in deede in your heart perceiued vpon probable & pithy places gathered out of Gods booke, that there was neuer thing vpon the earthe so greate, and so muche an aduersarie to Gods true Seruice, to Christes Death, Passion, Priesthood, Sacrifice, and kingdome, to the Ministerie of Gods woorde and sacraments, to the church of God, to repentance, faith, and all true godlines of life, as that is whereof the questions arise (as moste assuredly it is in deede) then can not a Christian heart, but so muche the more abhorre it, and all thyngs that in any poynt might seeme to allowe it, or any thing pertaining to y^e same, by how much it hath the name of Gods seruice.

Againe, your Ladiship doth knowe, that as all is to be discommended and auoided, which is folowed or fled from in respecte of oure selues, in respecte of auoiding Christes Crosse: so the ende of all oure doings shoulde be to Godwards, to his glory, to our neighbours, to edification and good example, wherof none can be geuen in allowing any of the three questiōs by you propounded. But because this which I write nowe is briefe, and needeth the more consideration or explication: as I doubte not of the one in you, so from me by Gods grace, you shall receiue y^e other shortly. For I haue already wrytten a little booke of it, whiche I will sende vnto you, in the whiche you shall haue youre questions fully answered and satisfied,* and therefore I omit to write any more hereaboutes presently: beseeching God our good Father to guide you as his deare childe w^t his spirite of wisdom, power, and comfort vnto eternall ly^e, that you may be strong, and reioyce in hym and wyth his Church, to carie Christes crosse, if hee shall so thinke it nede. 1. Peter 1. Which is a thing to be desired, wished and imbraced, if wee looked on thinges after the iudgement of Gods word, and tried them by that touchstone.

If you be accustomed to thinke on the breuitie, vanitie, and miserye of this life, and on the eternitie, truth, and felicity of euerlasting life: if you looke on things after their endes, and not after their present appearance onely: if you vse your selfe to set Gods presence, power, and mercy alwaies before your eies, to see them as God by euery creature woulde you shoulde: I doubt not but you shall finde suche strength and comforte in the Lorde, as you shall not be shaken with all the power of Satan. Gods mercye in Christ be with you, and his good spirit guide you for euer. Amen.

An other letter to the Lady Vane.

AS to mine owne soule, I wishe to your Ladishippe,* grace and mercy from God our deare father in Christe oure Lorde and Sauour.

I thanke God that something he hath eased you, and mitigated hys fatherly correction in vs both: I woulde to God hee had done so muche in the behalfe of the grieve of the body to you, as he hath done to mee. For as for the soule, I truste you feelee that which I pray God increase in you, I meane his fatherly loue, and graunt that I may with you feelee the same in suche degree as may please him: I will not say, as you feelee, least I should seeme to aske too much at one time. God doeth often much more plentifully visite with the sense of his mercy, them that humble them selues vnder his mighty hande, and are sore exercised (as you long haue bene) then others, whiche to the face of the worlde haue a more shewe and appearance.

Therefore I wish as I doe, and that not onely for mine owne commoditie, but also that I might occasion you to the consideration of the goodnesse of God, whiche I by your letters doe well esp•e, whych is in deede the hye waye, whereby as God encreaseth his giftes, so sheweth he more liuely his saluation. Psalme. 50.107. I haue receiued Gods blessing from you, the whiche I haue partly distributed vnto my three felowe prisonners, Maister Farrar, Maister Tailour, Maister Philpot, and the residue I will bestowe vppon foure poore soules whiche are imprisoned in the common Gayle, for Religion also. As for mine owne parte, if I hadde neede, I woulde haue serued my tourne also. But because I hadde not, nor (I thanke God) haue not, I haue bene and wil be your Almner in such sorte as I haue already aduertised you. God rewarde you, and geue you to finde it spiritually and corporally. Because otherwise I canne not talke with you, therefore on thys sort, as occasion and opportunitie will serue, I am ready to shewe my good will and desire of youre helpe and furtheraunce in the Lorde to euerlasting life, whereunto God bringe vs shortly, for his mercies sake. Amen.

Good Madame bee thankfull to God, as I hope you be: bee earnest in prayer, continue in reading and hearing Gods worde, and if Gods further Crosse come, as therein God doeth serue hys prouidence (for els it shall not come vnto you) so be certaine the same shall turne to your eternall ioy and comfort. Amen.

Ioohn Bradford.

To my deare friendes and brethren, R. and E. with their wiues and families.

THE comforte of Christe fealt commonly of his children in their Crosse for his sake,* the euerlasting God worke in both your heartes, my good brethren, and in the hearts of both your yokefelows, especially of good Mary my good sister in the Lord. Amen.

If I had not somthing heard of the hazard which you are in for the Gospels sake, if you continue the profession & confession therof, as I trust you do & wil do, and that vnto the ende, God enabling you, as hee will doubtlesse for hys mercies sake, if you hope in him (for this binedeth hym, as Dauid in Christes person witnesseth: Our Fathers hoped in thee, and thou deliueredst them. &c. Psal. 22.) yet by cōiectures I coulde not but suppose, (thoughe not so certainly) the time of your suffering and probation to be at hande. For now is the power of darknes fully come vpon this realme most iustly for o^r sinnes, and abusing the light lent vs of the Lorde, to the setting foorth of oure selues more then of Gods glory, y^t as wel we might be brought into the better knowledge of our euils, and so heartily repēt (which God graunt vs to doe) as also we might haue more feeling and sense of our sweete sauour Iesus Christ, by the humbling and delecting of vs, thereby to make vs, as more desirous of him, so him more sweet and pleasant vnto vs: the which thing the good spirite of God woorke sensibly in all oure hearts, for Gods holy names sake.

Page 1643For this cause I thoughte it my duetie, beyng now where I haue some libertye to write (the Lord be praised) and hearing of you as I heare: to doe that which I should haue done, if I had heard nothing at all: that is, to desire you to be of good cheare and comfort in the Lord (although in the worlde you see cause rather to the contrarye) and to goe on forewardes in the way of God whereinto you are entred, considering that the same cannot but so much more and more waxe strait to the outward man, by howe muche you drawe nearer to the ende of it: Euen as in the trauaile of a woman,* the nearer shee draweth to her deliuerie, the more her paines encrease: so it goeth with vs in y^e Lordes way, the nearer we drawe to our deliuerance by death to eternall felicitie.

Example whereof we haue, I will not say, in the holy Prophetes and Apostles of God, which when they were young, girded them selues, and went in manner whether they would,* but when they waxed olde, they went girded of others, whither they would not, concerning y^e outward man: but rather and moste liuely in our Sauour Iesus Christ, whose life & way was much more painfull to hym towardes the ende, then it was at the beginning. And no marueyle,* for Satan cane something abide a man to begin wel & set forewards, but rather then he should go on to the ende, he wil vomite his gorge, and cast flouds to ouerflow him, before he wil suffer that to come to passe.

Therefore as we should not be dismaide now at thys world,* as though some strange thyng were happened vnto vs, in that it is but as it was wont to be to the godly, in that the Deuill declareth him selfe after his olde woont, in that we haue professed no lesse but to forsake the world and the deuill as Gods very enemie, in that we learned no lesse at the first when we came to Gods schole, then to deny our selues, and take vp our crosse and folow our master, which leadeth vs none other way then he him selfe hath gone before vs: as (I say) we should not be dismaid: so we should with patience and ioy go forewards, if we set before vs as present, the time to come, like as the wife in her trauaile, doeth the deliuerance of her child, and as the saints of God did, but especially our sauour and paterne Iesus Christe: for the Apostle sayeth.* He set before him the ioye and glorye to come, and therfore contemned the shame & sorow of the crosse: so if we did, we shoulde finde at the length as they founde. For whome would it greeue which hath a long iourney to go, to go through a peece of foule way, if he knewe that after that the way should be moste pleasaunt, yea the iourney shoulde be ended,* and he at his resting place most happie?

Who will be afeard, or lothe to leaue a litle pelfe for a little time, if he knewe he should shortly after receiue most plentifull riches? Who will be vnwilling for a little while to forsake his wife, children, or frends. &c. when he knoweth he shall shortly after be associated vnto them inseparably, euen after his owne hearts desire? Who wil be sory to forsake this life, which can not but be moste certaine of eternall life? Who loueth the shadowe better then the bodye? Who can loue this life, but they that regarde not the life to come? Who can desire the drosse of this worlde but such as be ignoraunt of the treasures of the euerlasting ioy in heauen? * I meane, who is afeard to die, but suche as hope not to liue eternally? Christ hath promised pleasures, riches, ioye, * felicitie, and all good things to them that for hys sake lose any thing, or suffer any sorrowe. And is he not true? Howe can hee but be true, for guile was neuer founde in his mouth.

Alas then, why are we so slacke and slow, yea harde of heart to beleue him, promising vs thus plentifully eternal blisfulnes, and are so ready to beleue the worlde promising vs many things, and paying vs nothing? If we will currie fauour now and haue on bothe partes, then it promiseth vs peace, * quietnesse, and many thinges els. But howe doeth it pay this geare? or if it pay it, with what quietnesse of conscience? Or if so: howe long I pray you? Doe not we see before our eyes men to die shamefully, I meane, as Rebelles and other malefactours, which refuse to dye for Gods cause? What way is so sure a way to heauen, as to suffer in Christes cause? If there be anye waye on horsebacke to heauen, surely this is the way: By manye troubles (sayeth the Apostle) wee must enter into heauen. * All that will liue godly in Christ Iesu, must suffer persecution. For the world can not loue them that are of God: * the deuill can not loue hys ennemies: the worlde will loue none but hys owne: you are Christes, therefore looke for no loue heere. Should we looke for fire to quenche our thirste? And as soone shall Gods true seruants finde peace and fauour in Antichrists regiment.

Therefore my dearly beloued, be stout in the Lorde, and in the power of his might. Put on you his armour: stande in the libertie of Christe which you haue learned: reioyce that you may be counted woorthy to suffer any thyng for Gods cause: to all men thys is not geuen. Your rewarde is great in heauen, though in earth you find nothing. The iourney is almost past: you are almost in the hauen: halt on a pace I beseeche you, and merily ho•se vp your sailes. * Cast you selues on Christ, who careth for you. Kepe company with him now stil to the ende: he is faithfull and wil neuer leaue you, nor tempt you further then hee will make you able to beare: yea in the midst of the temptation hee will make an outscape. Nowe pray vnto him heartely, be thankfull of his indignation, reioyce in hope of the health you shall receiue, and be mindefull of vs which are in the vawarde, and by Gods grace trust in Christ to be made able to breake the Ise before you, that you followynge, may finde the way more easie. God graunte it may so be. Amen, Amen.

Out of prison by your brother in Christ, Iohn Bradford.

To Maistresse Wilkenson.

ALmighty God our most louing father increase in your heart (my good mother & deare maistresse in the Lord) his true knowledge and loue in Christe, * to y^e encouraging and comforting of your faith in these stormy dayes: as necessary vnto vs, so profitable if we per•iste vnto the ende, which thing God graunt to vs. Amen.

My righte dearely beloued, I knowe not what other thing to wryte vnto you, then to desire you to be thankfull vnto the Lord, in that amongst thee not many of your calling and state, it pleaseth him to geue you his rare blessing, I meane to keepe you from all the filthe wherewyth on^e Countrey is horribly defiled. Thys blessing assuredly is rare, as you see. But nowe if he shall blesse you with an other blessing which is more rare, I meane to cal you foorth as a Martyr, and a witnesse against this filth, I hope you will become double thankfull. For a greater token commonly we haue not to iudge of our election and saluation, next to Christe and faith in him, then the crosse, especiall ye when it is so glorious, as on this sorte to suffer any thing,* but chiefly losse of this life, which in deede is neuer founde til it be so lost: except the graine of wheate fall and be dead, it remaineth fruitlesse.

You know how that he which was rapt into the third heauen, and did knowe what he wrote, doeth say: That as the corne liueth not except it be dead, and cast into the earth,so truely oure bodies. And therefore the crosse shoulde so little feare vs, that euen death it selfe shoulde altogether be desired of vs, as the Tailour which putteth off oure ragges, and araieth vs with the Royall Roabes of immortalitie, incorruption, and glory. Great shame it shoulde be for vs, that all the whole creatures of God shoulde desire, yea, grone in their kinde for our libertie, and wee our selues to loath it: as doubtlesse we doe, if for the crosse, yea for death it selfe, we with ioy swallow not vp all sorrow that might let vs from following the Lordes calling, and obtaining the Lordes prouidence: whereby doubtles all crosses, and death it selfe doth come, and not by hap or chance. In consideration whereof (right deare Mother) that this prouidence stretcheth it selfe so vnto vs, and for vs, that euē the hair of our heads are numbred with God, not one of them to fall to our hurte: surely we declare our selues very faint in faith, if we receiue not such comfort, that we can willingly offer our selues to the Lord, and cast our whole care vpon his backe, honouring him with this honour, that he is and euer will be carefull for vs, and all we haue, as for hys deare children. Be therfore of good cheare euen in the midst of these miseries, be thankful to the Lord, and prepare your selfe for a further triall, which if God sende you, as I hope, so do you beleeeue, that God therein wil help & comfort you, and make you able to bear whatsoever shall happen. And thus much, hauing this oportunitie, I thoughte good to wryte, praying God our father to recompence into your bosome, all the good that euer you haue done, to mee especially, and to many others, both in this time of trouble, and alwaies heeretofore.

Your owne in the Lord, Iohn Bradford.

*An other letter wrytten to certaine godly persons,encouraging them to prepare them selues with patience to the crosse.

GRatious God and moste mercifull Father, for Iesus Christes sake thy dearely beloued sonne, graunte vs thy mercy, grace, wisdom, and holy spirite, to counsaile, comforte, and guide vs in al our cogitations, woordes, and woorkes, to thy glorye, and our euerlasting ioy and peace for euer. Amen.

Page 1644In my last letter you might perceiue my coniecturing to be no lesse towards you, then now I haue learned. But (my dearely beloued) I haue learned none other thyng, then before I haue told you would come to passe,* if ye cast not away that which ye haue learned. I do appeale to both your consciences, whether herein I speake trueth, as well of my telling (though not so often as I might and should, God forgeue mee) as also of your learning. Nowe God will trie you, to make others to learne by you, that whych ye haue learned by others: and by them which suffred thys day ye might learne, (if already yee had not learned) that life and honour is not to be set by more then Gods commandement.* They in no poynt for all y^t euer their ghostly fathers could do, hauing doctour Death to take their part, would consent or seeme to consent to the popish masse and papisticall God, otherwise then in y^e daies of our late king they had receiued. And this their faith they haue confessed with their deathes, to their great glorye, and all our comfortes, if we follow them: but to our confusion, if we starre backe from the same. Wherefore I beseeche you to consider it, as well to praise God for them, as to goe the same way with them, if God so will.

Consider not the things of this life, whyche is a verye prison to all Gods children: but the things of euerlasting life, which is our very home. But to the beholding of thys geare,* ye must open the eyes of your mind, of faith I shuld haue sayde, as Moses did, which set more by trouble wyth Gods people, then by the riches of Egypt, and Pharaos Court. Your house, home and goodes, yea life and all that euer yee haue, God hath geuen you as loue tokens, to admonish you of his loue, & to win your loue to him againe. Nowe will he trie your loue, whether ye set more by hym then by his tokens,* or no. If ye for his tokēs sake, that is, for your home, house, goods, yea life, will goe w^t the world, leas^t ye should loose them, then be assured your loue, as hee can not but espie it to be a strumpets loue,* so will he cast it away with the world. Remember that he which will saue his life, shall loose it, if Christ be true: but he which aduentureth, yea looseth his life for the Gospels sake, the same shalbe sure to finde it eternally. Do not ye knowe that the way to saluation is not the broade way, which manye run in, but the straight way, which fewe now walke in.

Before persecution came, men might partly haue stand in a doubt by the outward estate of the world with vs (although by Gods woorde it was plaine) whether was the high way,* (for there was as many that pretended the gospell, as poperie) but nowe the sunne is risen, & the winde bloweth, so that the corne which hathe not taken fast roote, can not nor will not abide: and therefore easily yee may see the straight way by the smal number that passeth thorowe it. Who will now aduenture their goods and life for Christes sake, whiche yet gaue his life for our sakes? Wee are now become Gergesites,* that would rather loose Christe, then our Porkets. A faithfull wife is neuer tried so to be, but when shee reiecteth and withstandeth woers. A faithfull Christian is then founde so to be, when hys faith is assaulted.

If wee be not able, I meane, if wee will not forsake this world for Gods glory and Gospels sake, trow ye that God will make vs able, or geue vs a will to forsake it for natures sake? Die ye must once, and leaue al ye haue (God knoweth how soone and when) will ye, or will ye not, and seeing perforce ye must do this, will ye not willingly now doe it for Gods sake?

If ye goe to Masse, and do as the most part doeth, then may ye liue at rest & quietly: but if ye deny to goe to it, then shall ye goe to prison, lose your goodes, leaue your children comfortles, yea lose your life also. But my dearly beloued, open the eyes of your faith, & see how short a thing this life is, euen a very shadow and smoke. Againe, see how intollerable the punishment of hel fire is, and that endles. Last of all, looke on the ioyes incomprehēible, which God hath prepared for all them worlde without ende, which loose eyther landes or goodes for his names sake.* And then doe ye reason thus: If we goe to Masse, the greatest enimie that Christe hath, though for a little time we shall liue in quiet, and leaue to our children that they may liue heereafter, yet shall we displease God, fall into his handes (which is horrible to hypocrites) and be in wonderful hazarde of falling from eternal ioy into eternal misery, first of soul, and then of body, with the Deuil and all Idolaters.

Againe, we shall wante peace of conscience, which surmounteth all the riches of the world: and for our children, who knoweth whether God will visite our Idolatrie on them in this life: yea our house and goods are in danger of loosing, as our liues be, through many casualties, & when God is angry with vs, he can send alwaies when he will, one meane or an other to take all from vs for our sinnes, and to cast vs into care for our owne sakes, which wil not come into some litle trouble for his sake.

On this sort reason with your selues, and then doubtlesse God will worke otherwise with you and in you, then ye are ware of. Where nowe ye thinke your selues vnable to abide persecutiō, be most assured, if so be ye purpose not to forsake God, that God will make you so able to beare his Crosse, that therein you shall reioyce. Faithful is God,* (sayth Paul) which wil not tempt you further then he wil make you able to beare, yea hee will geue you an outscape in the Crosse, which shalbe to your comfort. Thinke howe great a benefite it is, if God will vouche you worthy thys honour, to suffer losse of any thing for his sake. He myghte iustly cast most greeuous plagues vpon you, and yet now he will correct you with that rod wherby you shalbe made like to his Christe, that for euer ye may raigne wyth him. Suffer your selues therefore now to be made like to Christ, for els yee shall neuer be made like vnto him. The Deuill woulde gladly haue you nowe to ouerthrowe that which godly ye haue of long time professed. Oh howe woulde he triumph, if he could winne his purpose? Oh howe would the Papistes triumph against Gods gospell in you? Oh howe would you confirme them in their wicked Poperie? Oh how would the poore children of God be discomforted, if now ye should go to masse and other idolatrous seruice, and doe as the world doth?

Hath God deliuered you from y^e Sweate to serue hym so? Hath God myraculously restored you to healthe from your greeuous Agewes for suche a purpose? Hath God geuen you such blessings in this world and good things al the daies of your life hitherto, and nowe of equitie will ye not receiue at his hands, and for his sake, some euill? God forbid: I hope better of you. Use prayer, and cast your care vpon God: commit your children into his hands: geue to God your goods, bodies, and liues as he hath geuen them or rather sent them vnto you. Say wyth Iob: God hathe geuen, and God hathe taken away, hys name be praised for euer. Caste your care vppon hym (I saye) for hee is carefull for you:* and take it amongst the greatest blessings of God to suffer for his sake. I trust he hath kept you hitherto to that ende.

And I beseeche thee, O mercifull Father for Iesus Christes sake, that thou wouldest be mercifull vnto vs, comforte vs wyth thy grace, and strengthen vs in thy trueth, that in heart we may beleeeue, and in tongue boldly confesse thy Gospell, to thy glorye, and our eternall saluation. Amen. Pray for me, and I by Gods grace will doe the same for you.

Iohn Bradford.

An admonition to certaine professours of the Gospell, to beware they fall not from it in consenting to the Romish religion, by the example of other halting and double faced Gospellers.

THE peace of Christe whiche is the true effecte of Gods Gospell beleued (my dearly beloued) be more and more plentifully perceiued of you,* through the grace of our dere father, by the mighty working of the holy spirite our comforter. Amen.

Though I haue many lettes presently to hinder mee from wryting vnto you, yet being desired, I could not but something signifie my ready good will in this behalfe, so much as I may, when I can not so much as I would.

You heare and see howe Sathan bestirreth hym, raging as a roaring Lyon to deuoure vs. You see and feele partly what stormes he hath raised vp to drowne the poore Boate of Christe, I meane hys Church. You see howe terribly he traineth his souldiers to geue a fierce onset on vowe of Gods battaile. You see how he hath receyued power of God, to molest Gods children, and to beginne at hys house. By reason whereof consider two thinges: one, the cause on our behalfe: the other, what will be the sequele on straungers.

For the first, if we be not blind, we can not but wel see that our sinnes are the cause of all this miserie:* our sinnes I say, which I would that euery one of vs would applye to our selues after the example of Ionas and Daud, turning ouer the wallet, that other mens offences myght lie behinde, and our owne before. Not that I woulde excuse other men, whyche exteriorly haue walked muche more grossely then manye of you haue done: but that I woulde prouoke you all as my selfe to more hearty repentance and prayer. Let vs more and more encrease to knowe and lament our doubting of God, of his presence, power, anger, mercy. &c.

Page 1645Let vs better feele and hate our selfloue, securitie, negligence, vnthankfulness, vnbelief, impacience. &c. and then doubtlesse the crosse shall be lesse careful, yea it shalbe comfortable, and Christ moste deare and pleasaunt: death then shalbe desired,* as the dispatcher of vs ou• of al miserie, and entrance into eternall felicitie and ioye vnspeakeable: the whych is so much the more longed for, by howe muche we feele in dede the serpents bits wherwith he woundeth our heeles, that is, our outward Adam and senses. If we had, I say, a liuely and true feeling of his poyson, we could not but as reioyce ouer oure captaine y^t hath bruised hys head,* so be desirous to followe his example, that is, to geue our liues with him and for him, and so to fill vp his passions, that he might conquere and ouercome in vs and by vs, to his glory and comfort of his children.

Nowe the seconde (I meane the sequele, or that whych will folowe on the straungers) my dearly beloued, let vs well looke vpon. For if so be that God iustly doe thus geue to sathan and his seede, to vexe and molest Christe and hys penitent people: Oh what and how iustly may he and wil he geue to Sathan to intreate the rechlesse and impenitent sinners? If iudgement beginne thus at Gods house, what will followe on them that be wythout, if they repent not? Certainly for them is reserued the dregs of Gods cuppe, that is, brimstone, fire, and tempest intollerable. Now are they vnwillinge to drinke of Gods cuppe of afflictions which he offereth commō with his sonne Christ our Lord, least they shoulde lose their pigges with the Gergelites. They are vnwilling to come into the waye that bryngeth to heauen,* euen afflictions: they in their hearts crie, Let vs cast his yoke from vs: they walke two wayes, that is, they seeke to serue God & Mammon, which is vnpossible, they will not come nigh the straight way that bringeth to life: they open their eyes to beholde present things onely: they iudge of Religion after reason, and not after Gods word: they folowe the more part, and not the better: they professe God wyth their mouthes, but in their hearts they denye him, or els they would sanctifie him by seruing hym more then men: they parte stake with God, which woulde haue all, geuing part to the world, to the Romish rout, and Antichristian Idolatrie now set abroad amongst vs publikely: they will haue Christ, but none of his crosse, which will not be: they will be counted to liue godly in Christ, but yet they wil suffer no persecution: they loue this world, wherthrough the loue of God is driuen foorth of them: they sauour of those things that be of menne, and not that bee of God: Summa, they loue God in theyr lippes, but in theyr hearts, yea and in their deedes deny hym, as well by not repenting their euils past, as by continuing in euill stil, by doing as the world, the flesh and the deuill willeth, and yet still perchaunce they will pray or rather prate: Thy will be done in earth, which is generallye that euery one shoulde take vp his crosse and follow Christe. But thys is a harde saying: who is able to abide it? Therefore Christ must be praied to depart, least al their pigges be drowned. The deuill shall haue his dwelling againe in themselues, rather then in their pigges, and therefore to the Deuill shall they go, and dwel with him in eternall perdition and damnation, euen in hell fire a torment endlesse, and aboue all cogitations incomprehensible, if they repent not.

Wherefore by them (my dearely beloued) be admonyshed to remember your profession, howe that in Baptisme you made a solempne vowe to forsake the Deuill, the world. &c. You promised to fight vnder Christes standard. You learned Christes Crosse afore you begunne wyth A. B. C. Goe to then, pay your vowe to the Lorde: fighte lyke menne, and valiant menne vnder Christes standarde: take vp your Crosse and follow your maister, as your brethren M. Hoper, Rogers, Tailor, and Sanders haue done, and as nowe your brethren M. Cranmer, Latimer, Ridley, Farrar, Bradford, Haukes. &c. be ready to doe. The Ise is broken before you, therefore be not afraide, but be content to die for the Lorde. You haue no cause to wauer or doubt of the doctrine thus declared by the bloud of the pastours. Remember that Christ sayeth: He that will saue his life, shall lose it. And what should it profite you to winne the whole worlde, muche lesse a little quietnesse, your goodes. &c. and to lose your owne soules? Render to the Lord that he hath lent you, by such meanes as he would haue you render it, and not as you would. Forget not, Christes disciples must deny themselves, as well concerning their will, as concerning their wisdom. Haue in mind, that as it is no small mercy to beleue in the Lorde, so it is no small kindnesse of God towards you to suffer any thing, much more deathe for the Lorde. If they be blessed that die in the Lord, howe shall they be that die for the Lorde? Oh what a blessing is it to haue death due for our sinnes, diuerted into a demonstration and testification of the Lordes trueth? Oh that we had a little of Moises faith to looke vpon the ende of the Crosse, to looke vpon the rewarde, to see continually wyth Christe and hys people, greater riches then the riches of Egypt. Oh let vs pray that God would open our eyes to see his hi• Manna, heauenly Ierusalem, the congregation of the first borne, the melodie of the Saintes the tabernacle of God dwelling with men: then shuld we runne and become violent men, and so take the kingdome o• heauen as it were by force. God our father geue vs for hys Christes sake, to see a litle, what and howe great ioy he hath prepared for vs, he hath called vs vnto, & most assuredly geueth vs for his owne goodnes and truthe sake. Amen.

My dearely beloued, repent, be sober and watche in prayer, be obedient, and after your vocations shewe your obedience to the higher powers in all thinges that are not against Gods word, therein acknowledging y^e soueraigne power of the Lorde: howbeit, so that ye be no rebels or rebellers for no cause: but because wyth good conscience you can not obey, be pacient sufferers, and the glorie and good spirit of God shall dwel vppon vs. I pray you remember vs your afflicted brethren, being in the Lordes bondes for the testimonie of Christ, and abiding the gracious houre of our deare and most merciful father. The Lord for Christes sake, geue vs merry hearts to drinke lustely of his sweete cuppe, which daily we grone and sigh for, lamenting that the tyme is thus prolonged. The Lorde Iesus geue vs grace to be thankful, and to abide patiently the prouident houre of his most gracious good will. Amen. Amen.

From the Counter in the Poultrie.

Yours in Christ Iohn Bradford.

To my good brother Iohn Careles, prisoner in the kings Benche.

THE father of mercie and God of all comfort, visite vs with his eternall consolation, according to his great mercies in Iesus Christ our Sauour. Amen.*

My very deare brother, if I shall reporte the truthe vnto you, I can not but signifie that sithen I came into prisone, I neuer receaued so much consolation as I did by your last letter, the name of God be most heartely praised therefore. But if I shall reporte the trueth vnto you, and as I haue begonne, speake still the veritie, I must confesse that for mine vnthankefulnes to you wardes, and to God especially, I haue more neede of Gods mercifull tidinges, then I hadde euer heeretofore. Ah that Sathan enuieth vs so greatly. Ah that our Lorde woulde treade his head vnder our feete shortly. Ah that I mighte for euer, both my selfe beware, and be a godly example to you and others to beware of vnthankefulnesse. Good brother Careles,* we hadde more neede to take heede after a lightening, of a foile then before. God therefore is to be praised euen when he hideth, and that not of long, a chearefull countenaunce from vs, least we being not expert howe to vse it as we shoulde doe, doe hurt more oure selues thereby, so great is our ignoraunce and corruption. This my good brother & ryght deare to my very heart, I wryte vnto you as to one whom in the Lorde I embrace, and I thanke God that you doe me in like manner. God our father more and more geue vs both his good spirit, that as by faith we may fele our selues vnited vnto him in Christ, so by loue we may feele our selues linked in the same Christ one to an other, I to you, and you to me, we to al the children of God, and all the children of God to vs, Amen. Amen.

Commende me to our good brother Skelthrop, for whome I heartely praise my God,* which hath geuen him to see hys trueth at the length, and to geue place to it. I doubt not, but that he will be so heedie in all his conuersation, that hys olde acquaintaunce may euer thereby thinke them selues astray. Woe and woe againe shoulde be vnto vs, if we by our example should make menne to stumble at the trueth. Forgette not salutations in Christe, as you shall thinke good to Trewe, and hys fellowes. The Lorde hath his time (I hope) for them also, although we perchance thinke otherwise. A drop maketh the stone hollowe, not with once,* but wyth often dropping: so if with hearty praier for them and good example, you stil and drop vppon them as you can, you shall see Gods worke at the length. I beseeche God to make perfect all the good he hath begun in vs all, Amen. I desire you all to pray for me the most vnworthy prisoner of the Lorde.

Your brother Iohn Bradford.

To M. Iohn Hall and his wife, prisoners in Newgate for the testimonie of the Gospell.

ALmightye God oure heauenly Father through Iesus Christ, be w^t you both my dearely beloued, as with hys Page 1646 deare children for euer, & so he blesse you with his holy spirite, that you may in thys your crosse (for his cause doubtles) reioyce, and gladly take it vp to beare it so long as hee shall thinke good. I haue heard (my good brother & sister) how that god hath brought you both into his scholehouse, (whereas you were bothe purposed by his leaue to haue pla[•]ed the trewands) that thereby you might see his carefulnes & loue towarde you.* For if it be a token of a louing and careful father for his children, to preuent the purpose, and disappoynt the intent of his children, purposing to depart a while from the schoole for feare of beating, (whych thing they woulde not doe if they did as much consider the commodity of learning which there they might get): how should you take this worke of the Lorde preuenting your purpose, but as an euident signe of loue and fatherly carefulnes that he beareth towarde you? If he shoulde haue winked at your willes, then would you haue escaped beating: I meane the crosse, but then should you haue lost the commoditie of learning, which your father will now haue you to learne and feele, and therefore hath he sent to you his crosse. Hee I say, hath brought you where you be: and though your reason and wit wil tell you, it is by chance or fortune, or otherwise, yet (my dearely beloued) knowe for certaine that what so euer was the meane,* God your father was the worker heereof, and that for your weale, although otherwise your old Adam doth tel you, & you fele: yet I say of truth that your duty is to thinke of this crosse, that as it is of Gods sending, and commeth from him: so although your deserts be otherwise, it is of loue & fatherly affection for your weale and commodities sake.

What commodity is hereby, you wil perchance object. You are now kept in close prison you wil say: your family and children be without good ouerseers: your substance diminisheth by these meanes: pouertie will approche: and perchance more peari[•]s also, yea and losse of life too. These are no commodities but discommodities, and that no smal ones: so that iustly you would be glad to know what commoditie can come to you by this crosse, whereby commeth so great discommodities,

To these things I answer, that in deede it is true you •ay of your bodies, families, children, substance, pouertie, life. &c. Which things, if you would consider a while wyth inwarde eyes, as you beholde them with outwarde, then perhaps you should finde more ease.* Doe not you now by the inward sense perceiue that you must part frō all these and all other commodities in the worlde? Tell me then, haue not you this commoditie by your crosse, to learne to loath and leaue the worlde, and to long for and desire an other world, where is perpetuity? You ought of your own head and free will to haue (according to your profession in baptisme) forsaken the worlde and all earthly things, vsing the world, as though you vsed it not, Your hart only sette vpon your hurde in heauen,* or els you coulde neuer be Christes true disciples, that is be sauēd, and be where he is. And trowe you (my good heartes in the Lorde) trowe you I say, that this is no commoditie, by this crosse to be compelled hereto, that you might assuredly enioy with the Lord endles glory? Howe now doth God (as it were) fatherly pull you by the eares to remēber your former offences concerning these things & al other things, that repentance and remission might ensue? Howe doth God now compell you to call vpon him, and to be earnest in prayer? Are these no commodities? * Doth not the scripture say, that God doth correct vs in the worlde because we shall not be damned with the worlde? That God chasteneth euery one whome he loueth? that the ende of this correction shall be ioy and holinesse? Doeth not the Scripture saye, That they are happie that suffer for righteousnesse sake, as you now doe, that the glory and spirite of God is vpon them? that, as you are now made like vnto Christ in suffering, so shall you be made like him in rainging? Doeth not the Scripture say that you are now going the high and right way to heauen? that your suffering is Christes suffering? My dearly beloued, what greater commodities then these, can a godly heart desire?

Therefore ye are commaunded to reioyce and be glad when ye suffer, as now ye doe: for through the goodnesse of God, great shalbe your reward: Where? Forsooth on earth first for your children: for now they are in Gods mere and immediate protection. Neuer was father so careful for his children, as Gods is for yours presently. Gods blessing which is more woorth then all the world, you leaue in dede to your children. Though all your prouidence for thē shuld be pulled away: yet God is not poore, he hath promised to prouide for them moste fatherly. * Cast thy burthen vppon me (sayth he) and I will beare it. Do you therfore cast them and commend them vnto God your father, and doubt not that he will die in your dette. He neuer yet was found vnfaithfull, * and he wil not now begin with you. The good mans seede shal not go a begging his bread: for he wil shew mercy vpon thousands of the posterity of them that fea•e him. * Therefore as I sayd, Gods reward first vpon earth shalbe felt by your children euen corporally, and so also vpon you if God see it more for your cōmoditie, at the least inwardly you shal feele it by quietnes and comfort of conscience: and secondly after this life, you shal find it so plentifully, as the eye hath not seene, the eare hath not hard, the heart cannot conceiue how great & glorious Gods reward wil be vpon your bodies, much more vpon your soules. God open our eies to see and feele this in dede. Then shall we thinke the crosse which is a meane hereto, to be commodious. Then shal we thanke God that he would chastice vs. Then shal we say with Dauid: Happie am I that thou hast punished me, for before I went astray, but nowe I keepe thy lawes.

This that we may doe in dede my dearly beloued, let vs first know y^t our crosse commeth from God: Secondly, * that it cōmeth from God as a father, that is, to our weale and good. Therefore let vs thirdly cal to minde our sinnes and aske pardone. Whereto let vs fourthly looke for helpe certainly at Gods hand in his good time: helpe I •ay, such as shall make most to Gods glory, and to the comfort and commodity of our soules & bodies eternally. This if we certainly conceiue, then will there issue out of vs heartie thankes geuing, which God requireth as a most precious sacrifice. That we may all through Christ offer this, let vs vse earnest prayer to our God and deare father, who blesse vs, keepe vs, and comforte vs vnder his sweete crosse for euer. Amen. Amen.

My deare hearts, if I could any way comfort you, you should be sure therof, though my life lay thereon, but now I must do as I may, because I cannot as I would. Oh y^t it would please our deare father shortly to bring vs where we shoulde neuer depart, but enioy continually the blessed fruition of his heauenly presence: pray, pray, that it maye speedely come to passe, pray. To morrow I will send vnto you to know your estate, send me word what are the chieftest things they charge you withall. From the Counter.

By your brother in the Lord, Iohn Bradford.

¶To Maistresse Hall prisoner in Newgate and readye to make aunswer before her aduersaries.

OVr most mercifull God and father through Christ Iesus our Lord and Sauour be merciful vnto vs,* and make perfect the good he hath begon in vs vnto the end. Amen.

My deare Sister reioyce in the Lord, reioyce: be glad (I say) be mery and thankefull, not onely because Christ so commaundeth vs, but also because our state wherein we are presently, requireth no lesse, for we are the Lordes witnesses. God the father hath vouched safe to chose vs amongst many, to witnesse and testifie, that Christ his sonne is kyng, & that his word is true. Christ our Sauour for his loues sake towards vs, will haue vs to beare record that he is no vsurper nor deceiuer of the people, but gods Embassadour, Prophet, and Messias: so that of all dignities vpon earth▪ this is the highest. Greater honor had not his Prophets, Apostles,* nor dearest friends then to beare witnesse with Christ as we now do. The world followyng the counsaile of their Sire Sathan, would gladly condemne Christ and his veritie: but lo the Lord hath chosen vs to be his champions to let this. As stout soldiours therefore let vs stand to our maister, who is with vs and standeth on our right hand that we shall not be much mooued, if we hope and hang on his me•cy: he is so faythfull and true, that he wil neuer tempt vs further then he wil make vs able to beare.

Therefore be not carefull (for I heare say this day you shall be called forth) what you shall aunswer.* The Lord which is true and cannot lye, hath promised and will neuer faile nor forget it, that you shall haue both what and how to aunswer, so as shal make hys shameles aduersaries ashamed. Hang therefore on this promise of God, who is an helper at a pinch and a most present remedy to them that hope in him Neuer was it heard of or shall be, that any hoping in the Lord was put to foile.

Therefore as I sayd, I say agayne, Deare Sister be not only not carefull for your answeyng, but also be ioyfull for your cause. Confesse Christ and be not ashamed, and he will confesse you & neuer bee ashamed of you. Though losse of goodes and lyfe bee like here to ensue.* Yet if Christ be true (as hee is most true) it is otherwyse in deede: For he that looseth his lyfe (sayth he) winneth it, but he that saueth it, looseth it. Our sinnes haue deserued many deathes. Nowe if God so deale with vs that hee wyll make our deserued death a demonstratio• of his grace, a testimoniall of hys veritie, a confirmation of hys people, and ouerthrowe of hys aduersaries: What great cause haue wee to bee thankefull? Be thankefull therefore good Sister, bee thankefull. Reioyce and be mery in the Lord, be stoute in his cause & qua•ell, be not faynt harted, but runne out your race, and set your captaine Christ before your eyes. Beholde howe great your 〈1 page missing〉 Page 1648 a small congregation?

But be it so that Peter had as much geuen to him as they do affirme• Who yet will graunt that Peter had a patrimony geuen for his heires? He hath left (say the Papists) to his successors the selfe •ame right which he receyued.* Oh Lord God, then must hys successor be a Sathan: for hee receyued that title of Christ hymselfe. I would gladly haue the Papistes to shew me one place of succession mentioned in the Scriptures I am sure that whē Paule purposely painteth out the whole administration of the church, he neither maketh one head, nor any inheritable Primacie, & yet he is altogether in commendation of vnitie. After he hath made mention of one God the father▪ of one Christ, of one spirit, of one body of the Church, of one fayth, and of one Baptisme, then hee describeth the meane and maner how vnitie is to be kept: namely, because vnto euery pastour is grace geuen after the measure wherwith Christ hath endued them Where I pray you is now any title of Plenitudinis potestatis, of fulnesse of power? When he calleth home euery one vnto a certayne measure, why did he not forthwith say one Pope? Which thing he could not haue forgotten, if the thyng had bene as the Papists make it.

But let vs graunt that perpetuities of the Primacye in the church was established in Peter: I would gladly learne why the seat of the Primacy should be rather at Rome then elsewhere. Mary say they, because Peters chaire was at Rome. This is euen lyke to this, that because Moses the greatest Prophet, and Aaron the first Priest exercised their offices vnto their death in the deserte, therefore the principallest place of the Iewish Church, should bee in the wilderness. But graunt them their reason that it is good. What should Antioch claime? For Peters chaire was there also, wherin Paule gaue hym a checke, which was vnseemely and vnmanerly done of Paule, that would not geue place to his President and better.

No say the Papistes, Rome must haue this authoritie because Peter died there But what if a man should by probable coniectures shew, that it is but a fable, which is fained of Peters Bishoprike at Rome? Read how Paule doth salute very many priuate persons when he writeth to the Romaines. Three yeres after his Epistle made, he was brought to Rome prisoner. Luke telleth that he was receiued of the brethren,* and yet in all these, is no mention at all of Peter, which then by their stories was at Rome. Belike he was proud as the Pope and Prelates be, or els he woulde haue visited Paule. Paule beyng in prison in Rome, did write diuers Epistles, in which hee expresseth the names of many whiche were in comparison of Peter, but rascall personages, but of Peter he speaketh neuer a word Surely, if Peter had bene there, this silence of hym had bene suspicious.* In the 2. Epistle to Tim. Paule complaineth that no man was with hym in his defence, but al had left hym.* If Peter had bene then at Rome, as they write, then eyther Paule had belied hym, or Peter had played his Peters part. Luke. 23. In another place, how doth he blame all that were with h•m, only Timothy excepted? Therefore we may wel doubt whether Peter was at Rome B. as they prate: for all this tyme & long before, they say that Peter was bishop there.

But I will not stirre vp coles in this matter. If Rome bee the chiefe seate because Peter died there, why should not Antioch be the second? Why should not Iames & Iohn which were taken with Peter to be as pillars.* Why (I say) shoulde not their seates haue honor next to Peters seate? Is not this geare preposterous, that Alexandria where Marke (which was but one of the disciples) was bishop, should be preferred before Ephesus where Iohn the Euangelist taught and was bishop, and before Ierusalē, where not only Iames taught and died bishop, but also Christ Iesus our Lord & high priest for euer, by whom beyng Maister (I hope) honour should be geuen to his chaire,* more thē to the chaire of his Chaplaines.

I need to speake nothyng how that Paule telleth Peters Apostleship to concerne rather circumcision or the Iewes, & therefore properly pertaineth not to vs. Neither do I need to bring in Gregorius the first bishop of Rome, which was about the yere of our Lord.* 600. who plainly in his works doth write, that this title of Primacy, & to be head ouer all churches vnder Christ, is a title meete and agreyng only to Antichrist, and therfore he calleth it a prophane, a mischieuous and an horrible title. Whome should we beleeeue now, if we will neyther beleeeue Apostle nor Pope.

*If I should go about to tel how this name was first gotten by Phocas, I should be too long. I purpose God willing to set it forth at large in a worke which I haue begun of Antichrist, if God for his mercies sake geue me life to finish it. For this present therefore I shall desire your Ladyship to take this in good part. If they wil needs haue the B. of Rome to be acknowledged for the head of the Church, then will I vrge them that they shall geue vs a bishop. But they obtrude vnto vs a butcher rather, or a bitesheepe, then a Bishop. They brag of Peters succession, of Christes vicare, this is alwayes in theyr mouth. But alas, how can we call hym Christes Vicare that resisteth Christ, oppugneth his veritie, persecuteth hys people, and lyke a Prelate preferreth himselfe aboue God and man? How, or wherein doth the Pope and Christ agree? How supplieth hee Peters ministry, that boasteth of hys succession?

Therfore to beginne withall, which I will vse presently for a conclusion,* if the Papists will haue the B. of Rome supreme head of the Churche of Christ in earth, they must afore they attayne this, geue vs a Bishop in deed, and not in name. For whosoeuer he be that will make this the bond of vnitie, whatsoever the Bishop of Rome be, surely this must needes folow, that they do nothyng els but teach a most wicked defection, and departing from Christ.

But of this (if God lend me lyfe) I purpose to speake more at large hereafter. Now will I betake your Ladyship vnto the tuition of God our father, and Christ our onely head pastour & keeper, to whom see that you cleaue by true fayth which dependeth onely vpon the word of God, which if you doe follow as a lanterne to your feete, and a light to your steps, you shall thē auoyd darkenes, and the daungerous deepes whereinto the Papists are fallen by the iust iudgement of God, and seeke to bryng vs into the same dungeon with them, that the blynd following the blind they both mayfall into the ditch: out of the which God deliuer them accordyng to hys good will, and preserue vs for his names sake, that we beyng in his lyght, may continue therein, and walke in it whilst it is day: so shall the night neuer ouerpresse vs, wee goyng from lyght to lyght, from vertue to vertue, from fayth to fayth, from glory to glory, by the gouernaunce of Gods good spirite, which God our father geue vnto vs all for euer and euer. Amen.

Your brother in bondes for the testimonye of Iesus Christ, Ioh. Bradford.

Here followeth another letter of M. Bradford, to one Richard Hopkins, shiriffe sometimes of Couentry,* & yet beyng (as I heare say) alyue. This Hopkins whom M. Bradford commendeth so much in this letter, duryng the tyme of his shiri•ealtie, was detected and accused by certaine malignant aduersaries, of matter pertaing to religion. What matter it was, I am not yet certainly informed, vnles it were for sending and lendyng vnto a theefe being then in prison ready to be hanged, a certain English booke of scripture for his spirituall comfort.

Whereupon, or els vpon some such like matter, he being maliciously accused, was sent for and committed to the Fleete, and there endured a sufficient tyme, not wythout great perill of lyfe.

Notwithstanding, the sayd Hopkins beyng at length deliuered out of prison, followyng thys counsaile of M. Bradford, and mindyng to keepe his conscience pure from Idolatry, was driuen with his wife and 8. yong children, to auoyde the realme, and so leauyng all other worldly respects, with his great losse and dammage went into high Germany, where he contiued in the Citie of Basill, till the death of Queene Mary, being like a good Tobias, to his power a frendly helper, and a comfortable relieuer of other Englishe exiles there about him: Gods holy blessing so working with hym therefore, that in those far countries, neither he fell in any great decay, neither any one of all his houshold, during all that tyme there miscaried, but so many as he brought out, so many he recaried home againe, yea & that with aduantage, and gods plēty withall vpon him. Now the letter written to this Richard Hopkins by M. Bradford, is this.

¶A Letter to Maister Richard Hopkins, then Shiriffe of Couentry, and prisoner in the Fleete, for the faythfull and constant confessing of Gods holy Gospell.

DEarely beloued in the Lord, I wish vnto you, as vnto myne owne brother, yea as to myne owne hart roote,* Gods mercy & the feelyng of the same plentifully in Christ our sweete sauour, who gaue himselfe a raunsome for our sinnes, and price for our redemption, praysed therefore bee his holy name for euer and euer. Amen.

I will not go about to excuse my selfe for not sendyng vnto you hetherto, suffring for the Lordes sake as you do, to the comfort of mee and of all that loue you in the truth: but rather accuse my selfe both before God and you, desiring you of forgiuenesse, and with me to pray to God for pardon of this my vnkind forgetting you, and al other my sinnes, which I beseech the Lord in his mercy, to do away for his Christes sake. Amen.

Now to make amends to you ward, I would be glad if I could, but because I cannot, I shall hartily desire you to accept that will, and this which I shal now write vnto you, there after: I meane, after my will and not after the deed, to accept and take it. At this present my deare hart in the Lord, you are in a blessed state, although it seem otherwise to you, or rather vnto your olde Adam, the which I Page 1648 <1 page duplicate> Page 1649 dare now be so bold as to discern from you, because you would haue him not onely discerned, but also vtterly destroyed. For if God be true, then is his word true.

Nowe his worde pronounceth of your state that it is happy, therefore it must needes bee so. To prooue this I thinke it need not: for you know that the holy ghost saith, That they are happy which suffer for righteousnes sake, and that Gods glory and spirit resteth on them which suffer for consciēce to God. Now this you cannot but know, that this your suffering is for righteousnesse sake, and for conscience to Godwards, for els you might be out of trouble euē out of hand. I know in very deed that you haue felt and do feelee your vnthankfulnesse to God and other sinnes, to witnes to you, that you haue deserued this prisonment and lacke of libertie,* betwixt God and your selfe, and I would you so would confesse vnto God in your prayers, with petition for pardon and thanks geuing, for his correctyng you here. But you know that the Magistrates doe not persecute in you your sinnes, your vnthankfulnesse. &c. But they persecute in you Christ hymselfe, his righteousnesse, his veritie, and therefore happy be you that haue founde such fauor with God your father, as to accompt you worthy to suffer for his sake in the sight of man: surely you shall reioyce therefore one day with a ioy vnspeakeable, in the sight of man also.

You may thinke your selfe borne in a blessed time, that haue found this grace with God, to be a vessell of honour to suffer with his Saints, yea with his sonne. My beloued, God hath not done so with many. The Apostle saith: Not many noble,^{}not many riche, not many wise in the world, hath the Lord God chosen. Oh then what cause haue you to reioyce, that amongst the not many, he hath chosen you to be one? For that cause hath God placed you in your office, that therefore ye might the more see his speciall dignation and loue towards you. It had not bene so great a thyng for M. Hopkins to haue suffred as M. Hopkins, as it is for M. Hopkins also to suffer as M. Shiriffe. Oh happy day that you were made shiriffe, by the which as God in this world would promote you to a more honourable degree, so by suffering in this roome he hath exalted you in heauen, and in the sight of his church & children, to a much more excellent glory. When was it read, that a shiriffe of a citie hath suffred for the Lordes sake? Where read we of any Shiriffe that hath bene cast in prison for conscience to Godward? How could God haue delt more louingly w^t you, then herein he hath done? To the end of the worlde it shall be written for a memoriall to your prayse, that Rich. Hopkins shiriffe of Couentry, for conscience to do his office before God, was cast in the Fleete, and there kept prisoner a long tyme. Happy, & twise happy are you, if herefore you may geue your life. Neuer could you haue attayned to this promotion on this sort out of that office. How do you preach now, not onely to all men, but specially to magistrates in this realme? Who would euer haue thoght that you should haue bene the first magistrate that for christes sake should haue lost any thing?^{} As I sayd before, therfore I say againe, that your state is happy. Good brother, before God I write the truth vnto you, my conscience bearing me witnes, that you are in a most happy state with the Lord, and before his sight.

Be thankfull therefore, reioyce in your trouble, pray for pacience, perseuere to the ende, let paciēce haue her perfect worke.^{} If you want this wisdom and power, aske it of God, who will geue it to you in his good tyme. Hope still in him, yea if he should slay you, yet trust in hym wyth Iob, and you shall perceiue that the ende will be to finde him mercifull & full of compassion: for he will not breake promise with you, which hitherto did neuer so with any. He is with you in trouble, he heareth you callyng vppon hym, yea before you cal, your desires are not only known, but accepted through Christ. If now and then he hide hys face from you, it is but to prouoke your appetite, to make you the more to long for him. This is most true: He is a comming, and will come, he will not be long. But if for a tyme he seeme to tary, yet stand you still, and you shall see the wonderfull workes of the Lord. Oh beloued, wherefore should you be heauy? Is not Christ Emanuell, God with vs? Shall you not find that as he is true in saying: In the world you shall haue trouble:^{} so is he in saying: In mee you shall haue comfort? He doth not sweare only that trouble will come, but with all he sweareth that comfort shall ensue. And what comfort? such a comfort as the eye hath not seene, the eare hath not heard, nor the hart of man can conceiue. Oh great comfort: who shall haue this? Forsooth they that suffer for the Lord. And are not you one of them? Yea verily are you. Then (as I said) happy, happy, and happy againe are you my dearely beloued in the Lord. You now suffer with the Lord, surely you shall bee glorified with him. Call vpon God therefore in your trouble, and he will heare you, yea deliuer you in such sort, as most shall make both to his & your glory also. And in this calling, I hartily pray you to pray for me your fellow in affliction. Now we be both going in the high way to heauen, for by many afflictions must we enter in thether, whether God bring vs for his mercies sake, Amen.

Amen.

Your fellow in affliction, Iohn Bradford.

To my good Sister Maistresse Elizabeth Browne.

GOod sister, God our Father make perfect the good hee hath begun in you vnto the end.*

I am afrayde to write vnto you because you so ouercharge your selfe at all tymes, euen when so euer I doe but send to you commendations. I would bee more bold on you then many others, and therefore you might suspend so great tokens til I should write vnto you of my need: which thyng doubtlesse I would do if it vrged me. Deare sister, I see your vnfained loue to me wardes in God, and haue done of long time, the which I do recompence with the like, and will do by gods grace so long as I liue, & therefore I hope not to forget you, but in my poore prayers to haue you in remembraunce, as I hope you haue me.* Otherwyse I can do you no seruice, except it bee now and then by my writyng to let you from better exercise, where yet the end of my writyng is to excite and stir vp your hart more earnestly to go on forwards in your well begon enterprise. For you know none shalbe crowned, but such as striue lawfully, & none receiueth the gleue, but those that runne to the appointed marke.* None shall be saued but such as persist and continue to the very end.

Therefore (deare Sister) remember that we haue neede of patience, that when we haue done the good will of God, wee may receiue the promise. Patience and perseueraunce bee the proper notes whereby Gods children are knowne from counterfaites. They that perseuere not, were alwayes but hypocrites. Many make godly beginnings, yea their progresse seemeth meruailous but yet after in the end they fayle. These were neuer of vs say•h S. Iohn: for if they had bene of vs, they would haue continued vnto the very end.

Go to now therefore myne own beloued in the Lord:* as you haue well begun, and well gone forward, so well persist and happily end, and then all is yours. Though this be sharpe and sower, yet it is not tedious or long. Do all that euer you doe, simply for God, and as to God, so shall neuer vnkyndnesse nor any other thyng make you to leaue of from well doying, so long as you may do well. Accustome your selfe now to see God continually, that he may be all in all vnto you. In good thyngs behold his mercy, and apply it vnto your selfe. In euill thyngs and plagues beho•d hys iudgements, where through learne to feare hym. Beware of sinne, as the serpent of the soule which spoileth vs of all our o• nature and seemely apparel in Gods sight. Let Christ crucified be your booke to study on, and that both night and day▪ Marke your vocation, and be diligent in the workes thereof. Vse harty & earnest prayer, and that in spirit. In all thyngs geue thanks to God our father through Christ. Labour to haue here lyfe euerlastyng begun in you: for els it will not be elsewhere enioyed. Set Gods iudgement often before your eyes, that nowe examinyng your selfe, you may make diligent sute, and obtaine neuer to come into iudgement. Vncouer your euils to God, that he may couer thē. Beware of this Antichristian trash: defile not your selfe in soule or body therewith, but accomplish holynes in the feare of God, & beare no yoke with vnbeleeuers. Looke for the commyng of the Lord which is at hand: by earnest prayer and godly 〈...〉 it. God our father accomplish his good worke in you. Am•. Commend me to my good mother maistres Wilkinson, & to my very deare sister maistresse Warcuppe▪ I shall daily commend you all to God, and I pray you do the lyke for me.

Iohn Bradford.

¶To a friend of his, instructing hym how he should aunswer his aduersaries.

MY good brother, our mercifull God and deare Father through christ, opē your eyes effectually to see,* & your heart ardently to desire the euerlasting ioy which he hath prepared for his slaughter sheep, that is, for such as shrink not from his truth for any such stormes sake. Amen.

When you shall come before the Magistrates to geue an aunswer of the hope which is in you, do it with all reuerence and simplicity. And because you may be something afayrd by the power of the Maistrates & cruelty which they will threaten against you, I would you set before you the good father Moses to follow his example:* for hee set the inuisible God before his eyes of fayth, and with them looked vpon God and his glorious Maestie and power, as with his corporal eies he saw Pharao and all his fearefull Page 1650 terrors. So doe you my dearely beloued: let your inward eies geue such light vnto you, that as you know you ar▪ before the magistrates, so and much more, you & they also are present before the face of God, which will geue such wisdom to you, fearing him and seeking his prayse, as the enemies shall wonder at, and further, he will so order their harts and doyngs, that they shall, will they, •ill they, serue Gods prouidence towards you (which you can not auoyd though you would) as shall be most to his glory, and your euerlasting comfort.

Therefore my good brother, let your whole study bee onely to please God: put hym alwayes before your eies, for he is on your right hand lest you should be mooued, he is faithfull, and neuer will suffer you to be tempted aboue that hee will make you able to beare. Yea euery haire of your hed he hath numbred, so that one of them shal not perish without his good will, which cannot be, but bee good vnto you, in that he is become your father▪ through Christ, and therefore as he hath geuen you to beleue in hym (God increase this beliefe in vs all) so doth hee now graciously geue vnto you to suffer for his names sake: the which you ought with all thankfulness to receiue, in that you are made worthy to drinke of the self same cup, which not only the very sonnes of God haue dronke of before you, but euen the very natural sonne of God himself hath brought you good lucke. Oh he of his mercy make vs thankfull to pledge him agayne. Amen.

Because the chieftest matter they will trouble you and go about to deceiue you withall, is the Sacrament, not of Christes body and bloud,* but of the aulter (as they call it) thereby destroyeng the Sacrament which Christ instituted: I would you noted these two things: First, that the Sacrament of the aulter which the Priest offereth in the Masse, and eateth priuately with himselfe, is not the Sacrament of Christes body add bloud instituted by him, as Christes institution plainely written and set foorth in the scriptures, beyng compared to their vsing of it, playnely doth declare.

Againe, if they talke with you of Christes Sacrament instituted by him, whether it be Christes body or no: aunswer them, that as to the eyes of your reason, to your tast and corporall senses it is bread and wyne, and therefore the Scripture calleth it after the consecration so: euē so to the eyes, taste, and senses of your faith, which ascendeth to the right hand of God in heauen, where Christ sitteth, it is in very deed Christs body and bloud, which spiritually your soule feedeth on to euerlasting life in faith and by faith, euē as your body presently feedeth on the sacramentall bread and sacramentall wyne.

By this meanes as you shall not allow transubstantiation, nor none of their popish opinions: so shal you declare the Sacrament to be a matter of faith, and not of reason, as the Papistes make it. For they deny Gods omnipotencie, in that they say Christ is not there, if bread bee there: * but fayth looketh on the omnipotencie of God, ioined with this promise, and doubteth not but that Christ is able to geue that he promiseth vs spiritually by fayth, the bread still remaining in substāce, as wel as if the substance of bread were takē away: for Christ saith not in any place this is no bread. But of this geare God shal instruct you, if you hang on his promise, and pray for the power & wisdom of his spirit, which vn•oubtedly as you are bounde to looke for, praying for it, so he hath bound himselfe by his promise to geue it: the which thing graunt vnto vs both, and to all his people, for his names sake, thorough Christ our Lord, Amen.

Iohn Bradford.

¶To certaine godly men, whome he exhorteth to bee pacient vnder the crosse, and constant in the true doctrine which they had professed.

MY dearely beloued in the Lord, as in him I wish you well to fare, * so I pray God I and you may continue in his true seruice, that perpetually we may enioy the same welfare, as here in hope so in heauen in deed, and eternally.

You know this world is not your home, but a pilgrimage & place wherein God trieth hys children, and therefore as it knoweth you not, nor can know you: so I trust you know not it, that is, you allow it not, nor in any poynt will seeme so to doe, although by many you be occasioned thereto. For this hote sunne which now shineth, burneth so sore, that the corne which is sown vppon sande and stony ground, beginneth to wither: that is, many which before tymes were taken for hartie Gospellers, begin now for the feare of afflictions to relent, yea to turn to their vomite agayne, thereby declaryng that though they goe from amongst vs, yet were they neuer of vs▪ for els they would haue stil taried with vs, and neyther for gayne nor losse, haue left vs either in word or deed As for their hart (which vndoubtedly is double and therefore in danger to Gods curse) we haue as much with vs, as the Papists haue with them, * and more too by their own iudgement. For they playing wily beguile thēse•ues, thinke it enough inwardly to fauour the truth, though outwardly they curry fauour▪ What though with my body (say they) I doe this or that▪ God knoweth my hart is whole with hym.

Ah brother, if thy hart be whole with God, why doest not thou confesse & declare thy selfe accordingly by word and fact? Either that which thou sayest thou beleueest in thy heart is good or no. If it be good, why art thou ashamed of it? If it be euill, why doest thou keepe it in thy hart? Is not God able to defend thee, * aduenturyng thy selfe for hys cause? Or will hee not defend hys worshippers? Doth not the Scripture say that the eyes of the Lorde are on them that feare hym, and trust in his mercy? And whereto? Forsooth to deliuer their soules from death, and to feed them in the tyme of hunger.

If this be true (as it is most true) why are we afraid of death, as though God could not comfort or deliuer vs, or would not, contrary to his promise? Why are we afayrd of the losse of our goods, as though God would leaue them that feare hym, destitute of all good thyngs, and so do agaynst his most ample promises? Ah faith, faith, how few feelee thee now a daye? * Full tru•ly sayd Christ, that hee should scarsly finde fayth when he came, on earth. For if men beleued the•e promises, they would neuer do any thyng outwardly, which inwardly they disallow. No example of men, how many soeuer they bee, or how learned soeuer they be, can preuaile in this behalfe: for the paterne which wee must follow, is Christ himselfe, and not the more company or custome. His word is the lanterne to lighten our steppes, * and not learned men. Company and custome are to be considered accordyng to the thyng they allow. * Learned men are to be listened to and followed according to Gods lore and law, for els the more part goeth to the deuill. As custome causeth error and blindnes, so learnyng, if it be not accordyng to the light of Gods word, is poison, and learned men most pernicious. The Deuill is called Daemon for his cunnyng, and the children of this world are much wyser then the children of light in their generation: and I knowe the Deuill and his dearlyngs haue alwayes for the most part, * more helpes in this lyfe then Christes Church and her children. They (the deuill and his Synagogue I meane) haue custome, multitude vnitie, antiquitie, learnyng, power, riches, honour, * dignity & promotions plenty, as alwayes they haue had, and shal haue cōmonly and for the most part, vntill Christes commyng, muche more then the true church hath presently, heretofore hath had, or hereafter shall haue. For her glory, riches, and honour is not here, her triall, crosse, and warrefare is here.

And therefore (my deare hartes in the Lord) consider these thyngs accordingly. Consider what you be, not worldlyngs, * but Gods children. Consider where you be, not at home, but in a strange cuntry. Consider among whom ye are conuersant, euen in the midst of your enemies, and of a wicked generation, and then I trust you will not much muse at affliction. Which you cannot be without, beyng as you be, Gods children, * in a strange country, and in the midst of your enemies, except you would leaue your captaine Christ, and follow Sathan for the mucke of this mould, rest, and quietnes, which he may promise you, & you in deed thinke you shall receiue it by doyng as hee would haue you to do (my sweete hartes) hee is not able to pay that he promiseth. Peace and warre come from God, riches and pouertie, welth & wo. The Deuil hath no power but by Gods permission. If then God permit hym a little on your goods, body or lyfe, I pray you tell me what can much hurt you (as Peter sayth) you beyng followers of godlines? * Thinke you that God will not remember you in his tyme, as most shall be to your comfort? Can a woman forget the chyld of her wombe? And if she should, * yet will not I forget thee (sayth the Lord.) Looke vpon Abraham in hys exile & misery, looke vpon Iacob, Ioseph, Moses, Dauid, the Prophets, * Apostles, and all the godly from the beginning: and my good brethren, is not God the same God? Is he a chaungeling? You haue heard of the pacience of Iob, (sayth S Iames) and you haue seene the end how that God is mercifull, pacient and long suffering: euen so I say vnto you that you shall find accordingly, if so be you be pacient, that is, if so be you feare hym, * set his word before you, serue him thereafter, and if he lay his crosse on you, you beare it with pacience: the which you shall do when you consider it not according to the present sense, but accordyng to the end. Heb. 12. 2. Cor. 4.

Therefore I hartily besech you, & out of my bonds which I suffer for your sake, pray you (myne owne sweete harts in the Lord) that you would cleave in hart and humble obedience to the doctrine taught you by me, and many other my brethren. For wee haue taught you no fables nor tales of men, or our owne fantasies, but the very word of GOD, which we are ready with our lyues (God so inhabling vs, as we trust he will) to confirme, and by the sheading of our blouds in all patience and humble obedience to the superior powers, to testifie and seale vp, as well that you might be more certaine of the doctrine, as that you myght Page 1651 be ready to confesse the same before this wicked world, knowyng that if we confesse Christ and his truth before men, hee will confesse vs before his father in heauen: if so be we bee ashamed hereof for losse of lyfe friends or goods, he wil be ashamed of vs before his father, and his holy Angels in heauen.

Therefore take heede, for the Lordes sake take heed, take heed, and defile not your bodies or soules with this Romish and Antichristian religion set vp amongst vs agayne: but come away, come away, as the Angell crieth from amongst them in their idolatrous seruice, lest you be partakers of their iniquitie. Harken to your preachers as the Thessalonians did to Paule: that is, conferre their sayings with the scriptures, & if they sound not thereafter, the morning light shall not shyne vpon them.

*Vse much and hearty prayer for the spirite of wisdom, knowledge, humblenes, meekenes, sobrietie, and repentaunce: which we haue great need of, because our sinnes haue thus prouoked the Lordes anger against vs: but let vs beare his anger, and acknowledge our faultes with bitter teares, and sorowfull sighes, and doubtles he will be mercifull to vs after his wonted mercy. The which thyng he vouchsafe to do for his holy names sake, in Christ Iesu our Lord, to whome with the father and the holy ghost, be all honour, glory, prayse, and euerlastyng thanks from this tyme forth for euermore. Amen.

Out of prison by yours in the Lord to commaund. Iohn Bradford.

¶A letter to M. George Eaton.

ALmighty God our heauenly Father, recompence abundantly into your bosome (my dearly beloued) here and eternally,* the good which frō him by you I haue continually receiued sithen my comming into prison. Otherwyse can I neuer be able to requite your louing kindnesse here then by praying for you, and after this lyfe, by witnessing your fayth declared to me by your fruits, whē we shall come and appeare together before the throne of our Sauour Iesus Christ, whether (I thanke God) I am euen now a goyng, euer looking when officers wyll come, & satisfie the precept of the Prelates, wherof though I can not complayne, because I haue iustly deserved an hundreth thousand deaths at gods hands by reason of my sinnes, yet I may and must reioyce, because the Pr•lates do not persecute in me myne iniquities, but Christ Iesus & his veritie: so that they persecute not me, they hate not me, but they persecute Christ, they hate Christ.

And because they can do hym no hurt (for he sitteth in heauen,* and laugheth them and their deuises to scorne, as one day they shall feelee, therefore they turne their rage vpō his poore sheepe, as Herode their father did vpon the infants. Math. 2. Great cause therefore haue I to reioyce, that my dere Sauour Christ wil vouchsafe amongst many, to chuse me to be a vessel of grace to suffer in me (which haue deserued so often & iustly to suffer for my sinnes) that I might be most assured I shall be a vessell of honour, in whom he will be glorified.

Therefore (my right deare brother in the Lord) reioice with me, geue thanks for me, and cease not to pray, that God for his mercies sake would make perfect the good he hath begun in me. And as for the doctrine which I haue professed and preached, I do confesse vnto you in writing, as to the whole world I shortly shall by gods grace in suffering,* that it is the very true doctrine of Iesus Christ, of his Church, of his Prophets, Apostles and all good men: so that if an Angell should come from heauen and preach otherwise, the same were accursed.

Therefore wauer not (deare hart in the Lord) but be confirmed in it, and as your vocation requireth, whē God so will, confesse it, though it be perillous so to do. The end shall euidently shew an other maner of pleasure for so doynge, then tong can tell. Bee diligent in prayer, and watch therein. Use reuerent readyng of Gods worde. Set the shortnesse of this tyme before your eyes, and let not the eternitie that is to come, depart out of your memory. Practise in doing that you learne, by reading and hearing. Decline from euill, and pursue good. Remember them that be in bondes, especially for the Lordes cause, as members of your body, and fellow heires of grace. Forget not the afflictions of Syon, and the oppression of Ierusalem: and God our Father shall geue you hys continuall blessing thorough Christ our Lorde, who guide vs as hys deare children for euer, Amen. And thus I take my Vale and farewell with you (deare brother) for euer in this present lyfe, till wee shall meete in eternall blisse: whether our good God and Father bryng vs shortly, Amen. God blesse all your babes for euer, Amen.

Out of pryson this viij. of February.

Your afflicted brother for the Lordes cause. Iohn Bradford.

¶An other Letter to Maistresse Anne Warcuppe.

ALmighty God our heauenly father for his Christes sake, encrease in vs fayth,* by which we may more & more see what glory and honour is reposed and safely kept in heauen, for all thē that beleeeue with the hart, and confesse Christ & his truth wyth the mouth. Amen.

My dearely beloued, I remember that once heretofore I wrote vnto you a Vale or a farewell vpon coniecture: but now I write my farewell to you in this lyfe in deed, vpon certaine knowledge. My staffe standeth at the dore, I continually looke for the shiriffe to come for me, and I thanke God I am ready for him. Now goe I to practise that which I haue preached. Now am I climbing vp the hill, it wil cause me to puffe and blow before I come to the cliffe. The hill is steepe and high, my breath is short, and my strength is feeble: pray therefore to the Lord for me, that as I haue now thorough his goodnes, euen almost come to the toppe, I may by his grace, be strengthened, not to rest till I come where I should bee. Oh louing Lord, put out thy hand, and drawe me vnto thee: for no man commeth, but he whō the father draweth. See (my derely beloued) Gods louing mercy: he knoweth my short breath & great weakenes. As he sent for Helias in a firy chariot, so sendeth he for me: for by fire, my drosse must be purified, that I may bee fine gold in his sight. Oh vnthankfull wretch that I am: Lord do thou forgeue me myne vnthankfulnes. In deed I confesse (right deare to me in the Lord) that my sinnes haue deserued hell fire, much more then this fire. But loe, so louyng is my Lord,* that he conuerteth the remedy for my sins, the punishment for my transgressions, into a testimoniall of his truth, and a testification of his veritie, which the Prelates do persecute in me, & not my sinnes: therfore they persecute not me but Christ in me, which, I doubt not, will take my part vnto the very end. Amen.

Oh that I had so open an hart, as could so receiue as I should do, this great benefite and vnspeakeable dignitie, which God my father offreth to me. Now pray for me, my dearely beloued: pray for me that I neuer shrinke. I shall neuer shrinke I hope, I trust in the Lord I shall neuer shrinke: for he that alwayes hath taken my part, I am assured will not leaue me when I haue most neede, for his truth and mercies sake. Oh Lord help me: Into thy handes I commend me wholly. In the Lord is my trust, I care not what mā can do vnto me. Amen. My dearely beloued, say you Amen also, and come after if so God call you. Bee not ashamed of the Gospell of Christ, but keepe company with him still. He wyll neuer leaue you, but in the midst of temptation will geue you an outscape, to make you able to beare the brunt. Vse hearty prayer, reuerently read and heare Gods word, put it in practise, looke for the crosse, lift vp your heads, for your redemption draweth nye: know that the death of Gods saints is precious in his sight: Bee mery in the Lord, pray for the mitigation of Gods heauy displeasure vpon our countrey. God keepe vs for euer, God blesse vs with his spirituall blessings in Christ. And thus I bid you farewell for euer in this present lyfe. Pray for me, pray for me, for Gods sake, pray for me. God make perfect his good worke begun in me. Amen.

Out of prison this vij. of February.

Yours in the Lord. Iohn Bradford.

In the story of M. Bradford it was aboue rehearsed, how a certaine Gentlewoman beyng in trouble by her father and mother for not comming to Masse, sent her seruant to visite M. Bradford in prison. Who tendering the wofull case of the Gentlewoman, to the entent partly to confirme her with counsaile, partly to relieue her oppressed mynd with some comfort, directed this letter vnto her: the contents whereof are these.

¶To a certaine godly Gentlewoman, troubled and afflicted by her friends, for not comming to the Masse.

I Wish vnto you right worshipfull, and my dearely beloued sister in the Lord, as to my selfe,* the continual grace and comfort of Christ and of his holy word through the operation of the holy spirit, who strengthen your inward man with the strength of God, that you may continue to the end, in the faithful obedience of Gods gospel, whereto you are called, Amen.

I perceiued by your selfe the last day when you were with me, how that you are in the Scholehouse, and triall parlour of the Lord,* which to me is (as the least it should be) a great comfort, to see the number of gods elect by you encreased, which is in that state wherof God hath not called many, as Paule saith. And as it is a comfort to mee,* so should it be a confirmation vnto me, that the Lord for his faithfulness sake, will make perfect and finish the good hee hath begun in you to the end.

If then your crosse be to me a comfort or token of your Page 1652 election, and a confirmation of Gods continuall fauour (my •earely beloued): how much more ought it to bee so vnto you? Unto whom he hath not onely geuen to beleue but also to come into the trace of suffering for his sake, and that not commonly of common enemies,* but euen of your owne father, mother, and all your fr•ends, I meane kinsfolks as you told me. By which I see Christes wordes to be true: How that he came to geue his childrē such a peace with him, as the Deuill might not, nor may abide, & therfore stirreth vp father and mother,* sister and brother, rather then it should continue. But (my deare sister) if you cry with Daud to the Lord, and complaine to him: how that for conscience to him, your father and mother haue forsaken you, you shal heare him speake in your heart, that he hath receiued you, and by this would haue you to see, how that he maketh you here lyke to Christ,* that elsewhere in heauen you might be like vnto him whereof you ought to be most assured, knowing that in time, euen whē Christ shall appeare, you shalbe lyke vnto hym. For he wil make your body which now you defile not with Idolatrical seruice in goyng to Masse,* lyke vnto his owne glorious and immortall body, accordyng to the power whereby he is able to do all thyngs. He wil confesse you before his father, which doe not deny his veritie in worde nor deede before your father: he wil make you to raign with him, that now suffer for him and with him: he wil not leaue you comfortles, that seeke no comfort but at his hand, though for a little tyme you be afflicted, yet therein will hee comfort and strength you, and at the length make you to be mery with hym, in such ioy as is infinite and endlesse. He wil wipe al the teares from your eyes: he will embrace you as your deare husband: he will after he hath prooued you, crowne you with a crowne of glory and immortalitie, such as the hart of man shall neuer be able to conceiue in such sorte as the thyng is. He now beholdeth your stedfastnes, and st•iuyng to doe his good will: and shortly will hee shew you how stedfast he is, and will be ready to do your will, after that you haue fully resigned it to his will.

Pledge him in his cup of the crosse, & you shall pledge him in the cuppe of his glory. Desire to drinke it before it come to the dregs, whereof the wicked shall drinke, and all those that for feare of the crosse and pledging the Lord, doe walke with the wicked in betraying in fact and deed, that which their hart embraceth for veritie. The which thyng if you should do (which God forbid) then my deare Mistres and Sister in the Lord, you should not onely loose all that I haue before spoken, and much more infinitely of eternall ioy and glory, but also be a cast away, and partaker of gods most heauy displeasure in hell fire eternally: and so for a little ease, which you cannot tell how long it wyll last, to l•ose for euer and euer, all ease and comfort. For hee that gathereth not with me (sayth Christ,* as no Masse Gospel•er doth) scattere•h abroad. Accordyng to that we do in this body, we shall receyue, be it good or badde. If of our words we shall be iudged to condemnation or saluation:* much more then of our factes and deedes. You cannot be partaker of Gods religion and Antichrists seruice, wherof the Masse is most principall. You cannot be a member of Christes Church, and a member of the Popes Church. You must glorifie God not onely in soule and hart, but also in body and deede. You may not thinke that God requireth lesse of you his wyfe now, then your husband dyd of you. I• both hart and body your husband would haue, shall Christ haue lesse (trow you) which hath so bitterly & dearely bought it? If your husband could not admitte an excuse how your hart is his onely if he should haue taken your body in bed with another: do you thinke that Christ will allow your body at Masse, although your heart consent not to it?*

God esteemeth his children, not onely of their hartes, but of their pure hands and workes,* and therefore in Helias tyme, he counted none to be his seruants and people, but such as had not bowed their knees to Baall: as now he doth not in England accompt any other to be his derlings, which know the truth in hart, and deny it in theyr deeds, as do our Masse Gospellers.

We ought to desire aboue all thyngs the sanctifieng of Gods holy name, and the commying of his kingdom, and shall we then see his name blasphemed so horribly as it is at Masse, by making it a sacrifice propitiatorie, and setting forth a false Christ of the Priests and bakers makyng, to be worshipped as GOD,* and say nothing? The Iewes rent their clothes asunder in seeyng or hearing any thyng blasphemously done or spoken against God, and shall we yet come to Church where Masse is, and be mute? Paule and Barnabas rent their clothes to see the people of Lycaonia to offer sacrifice vnto them, and shall we see sacrifice and gods seruice done to an inanimate creature and be mumme? What thing helpeth more or so much Antichrists kingdom as doth the Masse?* And what destroyeth preachyng and the kyngdome of Christ vpon earth more then it doth? And how can we then say: Let thy kyngdome come, and go to Masse? How can we pray before God: Thy will be done on earth, when we will do our owne will, and the will of our father or friendes? How pray we: Deliuer vs from euill: which knowyng the Masse to be euill, do come to it?

But what goe I about to light a candle in the Noone day, that is, to tell you that we may not go to Masse, or to the congregation where it is, except it be to reprocue it, in that all men in so doying, do but dissemble both with God and man? And is dissembling now to be allowed? How lōg will men yet halt on both knees (saith God)? Halting (sayeth Paule) bringeth out of the way, that is to say, out of Christ, which is the way: so that he which is not in him shal wither away, and be cast into hell fire. For Christ will be ashamed of them before his father, which be now ashamed of his truth before this wicked generation.*

Therefore my good maistresse take good heed: for it had bene better for you neuer to haue knowen the truth, and there through to haue escaped from papisticall vncleanes, then now to returne to it, making eftsoones your mēbers, beyng members of righteousness, members of vnrighteousnesse, as you do, if you do but goe to the Church where Masse is. Be pure therefore, and keepe your selfe from all filth of the spirit, and of the flesh. Abstaine not onely from all euil, but from all appearance of euill.

And so the God of peace shall be with you, the glory of God shall gouerne you, the spirite of God shall sanctifie you, and be with you for euer, to keepe you from all euill, and to comfort you in all your distresse and trouble, which is but short if you consider the eternitie you shall enioy in glory and felicitie in the Lorde, which vndoubtedly you shall not fayle but inherite for euer, if so be you, as the elect chylde of God, put your trust in hys mercy, call vpon hys name vnfainedly, and yeld not ouer to the wicked world, but sticke still agaynst it vnto the ende. God for his holy names sake, which is properly the God of the Widowes, be your good and deare Father for euer, and helpe you alwayes as I my selfe would bee holpen at hys handes in all thynges, and especially in this hys owne cause, Amen, Amen.

Iohn Bradford.

¶To one by whome he had receyued much comfort and reliefe in his trouble and imprisonment.

The mercy of God in Christ peculiar to hys children,* be euermore felt of you, my derely beloued in the Lord, Amen.

When I consider with my selfe the benefites whiche God hath shewed vnto me by your meanes, if I had so good and thankfull a hart as I would I had, I could not with dry eies geue him thanks? for certainly they are very many and great. And now beyng yet still the Lords prisoner, I perceiue from him mo benefits by you. For y^e which I thinke my selfe so much bounde to you my good brother (although you were but the instrument by whome God wrought and blessed me) that I looke not to come out of your debt by any pleasure or seruice that I shall euer be able to do you in this lyfe. I shall hartily praye vnto God therefore to requite you the good you haue done to me for hys sake: for I know that which you haue done, you haue done it simply in respect of God & his word. He therefore geue you daily more and more to be cōfirmed in his truth and word, and so plentifully poure vpon you the riches of his holy spirit and heauenly treasures layd vp in store for you, that your corporall and earthly riches may be vsed of you as Sacraments and significations thereof: the more to desire the one, that is, the heauenly, & the lesse to esteeme the other, that is, the earthly. For Sathans sollicitation is, so to set before you the earthly, that therein and therby you should not haue accesse to the consideration of the heauenly, but as one bewitched should vtterly forget them, & altogether become a loue and worshipper of the earthlye Mammon, and so to fall to couetousnes,* and a desire to be rich, by that meanes to bring you into many noisome and hurtfull lustes: as now a dayes I heare of many whiche haue vtterly forsaken God and all his heauenly riches, for Antichrists pleasure, and the preseruing of theyr worldly pelfe, which they imagine to leaue to their posterity, wherof they are vncertaine, as they may be most certaine they leaue to them Gods wrath and vengeance, in his tyme to be sent by visitation, if they in tyme hartily repent not, & preuent not the same by earnest prayer. Wherein my good Page 1653 brother, if you be diligent, harty, and perseuere, I am sure God will preserue you from euill, and from yelding your selfe to do as the world now doth, by allowyng in bodily fact in the Romish seruice, that which the inward cogitation and mynd doth disallow. But if you be cold in prayer, and come into consideration of earthly & present things simply, then shall you fall into faithlesse follies and wounding of your conscience: from which God euermore preserue you with your good wife, and your babe Leonard & all your familie, to the which I wish the blessing of God now and for euer, through Christ our Lord, Amen.

I pray you geue thanks for me to your old bedfellow for his great friendship for your sake shewed to me when I was in the Tower.

John Bradford.

¶To a faithfull friend of his, and his wyfe, resolving their doubt why they ought not to come to auricular confession.

*The mercifull God, and father of our Sauour Iesus Christ, which loueth vs as a most deare Father, and hath put vppon hym towards vs the affection of a most tender mother towards her children, so that he can no lesse thinke vpon vs (although of our selues we be most vnworthy, and deserue nothyng lesse) then she can thinke on her onely begotten chyld in his distresse, yea if she should forget her childe, as some vnnaturall mother will do, yet will he neuer forget vs, although for a tyme he seme to sleepe that we might be occasioned to call loud and awake hym: thys good God keepe you, my deare brother * Nathanaell, and your good yokefellow, my hartily beloued Sister in the Lorde, in all thyngs now and for euer, to his glory and your eternal comfort: and also of his goodnes he graunt you both the feelyng of that hope, which vndoubtedly he hath layd vp in store for you both, farre passing the store and prouision, not onely which you haue made but all the world is able to make, as I trust already he hath wrought it in you, but I besech him to encrease it more & more and kindle in you a hartly longyng for the enioying of the same, the which once felt & had in deed, then the meanes by the which we come thereto, cannot be so greatly dread, as most men doe dread them, because either they want this feeling (I meane it of altogether) or els because the sense of this present tyme & things therein, are as a mist to the hidyng of those thyngs frō our sight, least we should run and embrace them by hartly prayer: the spirit wherof God graunt vs, and in deed we should attaine enough in this behalfe, if we continued therein.

For auricular confession, wherein you desire my aduise for your good yokefellow and family (my most deare brother) I am as ready to geue it, as you to desire it, yea more glad, for as much as halfe a suspicion was in me (at the least touching my deare sister your wyfe) of a lothyng of my aduise, that to much had bene geuen, where in deed I should lament my too little feedyng you spiritually, as both you out of prison and in prison haue fed me corporally. But as I alwayes thought of her, so I yet thinke that she is the chyld of God, whom God dearely loueth, and wil in his good tyme to her eternall comfort, geue her her hartes desire in sure feelyng and sensible beleuyng of this, which I would she had often in her mynd: namely, that hee is her God & father through Christ Iesus our deare Lord and Sauour. A greater seruice to God she cannot geue,* then to beleue this. If Sathan say she beleueueth not, to answer, not hym but the Lord, and to say, yea Lorde helpe my vnbeliefe, and encrease my poore fayth, which Sathan fayth is no fayth: make him a lyer Lord, as alwayes he hath bene, is, and shall be. Vndoubtedly, sooner or later God will graciously heare her grones, and keepe all her teares in his bottell, yea write them in his countyng booke, for he is a righteous God, and hath no pleasure in the death of his creature: he loueth mercy, he wil returne and shew her his mercy. he will cast all her sinnes and iniquities into the botome of the sea: and the longer that he tarieth (as he doth it but to prooue her) so the more liberally will he recompence her long lookyng, which no lesse pleaseth hym, then it grieueth now her outward Adam. For the mortification whereof, God vseth this crosse, and therefore if she desire to beare the same,* doubtles God will make her able to beare it: & in presumption of his goodnes and strength, let her cast her selfe wholly vpon him: for he is faithfull, and will assuredly confirme, and bring to a happy end that good which graciously he hath begun in her. The which thyng I desire hym to do for his owne glory & names sake. Amen. Amen.

*And now to the matter. Confession auricular, as it was first vsed and instituted (which was by the way of counsaile askyng) I take to be amongst those traditions which are indifferent, that is, neyther vnlawfull, nor necessarily bynding vs, except the offence of the weake could not be auoyded. But to consider it, as it is now vsed (I write to you but as I thinke, and what my mynd is, the which follow no further, then good men by Gods worde do allow it) to consider it I say, as it is now vsed, me thinkes it is plainly vnlawfull and wicked, and that for these causes.

First, because they make it a seruice of God & a thing which pleaseth God of it selfe, I will not say meritorious, this brynger my brother can tell you at large how great euill this is.

Secondly, because they make it of necessitie,* so that he or she that vseth it not, is not taken for a good Christian.

Thirdly, because it requireth of it selfe an impossibilitie, that is, the numbring and tellyng of all our sinnes, which no man perceiueth, much lesse can vtter.

Fourthly, because it establisheth and confirmeth, at the least alloweth praying to Saints, Precor Sanctam Mariam: you must say or the Priest for you.

Fifthly,* because it is very iniurious to the liberty of the Gospell, the which to affirme in example and fact, I take to be a good worke, and deare in Gods sight,

Sixtly, because (as it is vsed) it is a note, yea a very sinow of the Popish church: and therefore we should be so farre from allowyng the same, that we should thinke our selues happy to lose any thing in bearyng witnes there agaynst.

Seuenthy, because in stead of counsaile, thereat you should receiue poison, or if you refuse it vnder sir Iohns Benedicite, you should no lesse there be wound in the briers.

Eightly, because the end and purpose why we go thether, is for the auoidyng of the crosse, that is, for our owne cause, and not for Christes cause, or for our brethrens commoditie. For in that they make it so necessary a thyng, and a worshipping of God, it cannot but be agaynst Christ, and the freedome of hys Gospell: and the same thyng teacheth vs, that it is agaynst the commoditie of our brethren, which eyther be weake, eyther be strong, eyther be ignorant, either be obstinate. If they be weake by your resortyng to it, they be made more weake. If they be strong, you do what you can to infirme their strength If they be ignorant, therein you helpe to keepe them by your facte. If they bee obstinate, your resortyng to it cannot but rocke them a sleepe in their obstinate error of the necessitie of this rite and ceremony. These causes recited doe shew you what I thinke in this: but my thinkyng must no further bynd you then a mans thought should do, except the same be grounded vpon Gods worde which byndeth in deede, as I thinke they doe. I doubt not but you waying these causes, and especially two of the first and the last, if you pray to God for his spirite to direct you, and thereto aske the aduise of this my good brother and other godly learned men, I doubt not (I say) but you should be guided to do that which is best in gods sight, although in the sight of the world perhaps you should bee counted foolish and precise. But bee at a poynt with your selues as the disciples of Christ, which had forsaken themselues, to follow not your will, but Gods will, as you daily pray in the Lordes prayer.

The crosse of Christ bee willyng to cary, least you cary the crosse of the world, the flesh or the deuill.* One of these 4. crosses you must cary. Three of them bringeth to hell, and therefore the more part goeth that way, which is a broad way. Only the fourth bringeth to heauen, but few go that way, as wel because the way is straite, as also because few walke in it. Howbeit,* though it bee straite, it is but short, and the few are many, if you consider the godly, as the Patriarkes, Prophets, Apostles, Martyrs, Confessors and Christ Iesus, with all his gard and trayne. Thinke not scorne to come after them which are gone before you, and after them which now go before you, in whose number I trust I am apointed to be one, and I beseech you pray for me, that God would vouch me worthy that honour. Our sinnes deserue plagues, prison, and the losse of all that euer wee haue: therefore if God remooue our sinnes out of sight, and sende vs prison, or losse of goods and liuyng for his names sake, Oh how happy are we? My deare hearts in the Lord, consider this geare and bee assured that he which looseth any thyng for Christes sake, the same in his posteritie shall finde it here, and in heauen elsewhere. As for vnablenes to aunswer for your fayth: it shall be enough to will them to dispute with your teachers. Faith standeth not in disputyng. I thinke few if it came to disputing, could defend the godhead of Christ and many other articles: I speake it for the simple sorte. Pray for me. Lacke of paper maketh this end. Commend me to my good brother R. B. and my good sister his wyfe. I pray them to pray for me. I trust by this bearer to heare how you do.

Iohn Bradford.

¶Another letter to N. and his wyfe.

GOds mercy in Christ I wish you to feelee,* my dere brother, with my faithfull sister your wyfe, now and for euer, Amen.

Hauing this occasion, I could not but write something as wel to put my selfe in remembrance of my duty to godwards for you both, in thankfulness and praier, as to put you in remembrance of me and your duety towards God for me, in praying for me: for I dare not say in thankfulness for me: nor that I would haue you to geue no thāks to God for his wonderfull great and sweete mercies towards me, and vpon me in Christ his sonne: but because Page 1654 I haue not deserued it at either of your hands. For ye both know right wel, at least my cōscience doth accuse me, how that I haue not onely not exhorted & taught you, (as both my vocation and your deserts required) to walke worthy of that vocation which god hath made you worthy of, and with trēbling and feare to woorke out your saluation, that is, in the feare of God to geue your selues to great vigilācie in praier for the encrease of faith, and to a wary circumspection in all your conuersation, not onely in works and woords, but also in thoughts, because God is a searcher of the heart, and out of the heart it commeth, that defileth vs in Gods sight: I haue (I say) not onely not done thys, but also haue geuen you example of negligence in praier, watching, fasting, talking and doing, so that woe to me for geuing suche offence. Partly for this cause deare brother and sister, God hath cast me heere that I might repent me and turne to him, and that ye might also by this correction vpon me, be more diligent to redresse these things and others if they in your conscience doe accuse you.

My dearly beloued, heauy is Gods anger fallen vpon vs all: doulefull is this day. Nowe hath Antichrist all his power again.* Now is Christes gospel troden vnder fote. Now is Gods people a derision and pray for the wicked. Now is the greatest plague of al plagues fallen, the want of Gods word: and al these we haue, yea I alone haue iustly deserued. Oh that as I wryte (I alone) I could w^t Dauid▪ 1. Par. 21. and with Ionas in heart say so. But I doe not,* I do not I see not howe greuously I haue sinned, & howe great a misery is fallen for mine vnthankfulness for Gods worde, for mine hypocrisie in professing, preaching, hearing, and speaking of Gods word, for my not praying to God for the cōtinuance of it, for my not louing of it thoroughly as it requireth. &c. I will speake nothing of my manifest euils, for they are knowen to you wel enough.

Deare brother and sister, wyth me say yee the lyke for your owne partes, and with me ioyne your hearts, and let vs go to our heauenly father, and for his Christes sake beseeche him to be mercifull vnto vs, and to pardon vs: Oh good father it is we that haue deserued the taking away of thy woorde, it is we that haue deserued these thy iust plagues fallen vpon vs, we haue done amisse, we haue dealt vniustly wyth thy Gospell, we haue procured thy wrathe, and therfore iust art thou in punishing vs, iust art thou in plaging vs, for we are very miserable. But good Lord and deare father of mercy, whose iustice is such, that thou wilt not punish the poore soules of thys realme, which yet haue not thus sinned against thee, as wee haue done (for manye yet neuer heard thy woorde) for oure trespasses, and whose mercy is so great, that thou wilt put our iniquities out of thy remembraunce for thy Christes sake, if we repent and beleue: graunt vs we beseech thee, true repentance & faith, that we hauing obtained pardon for our sinnes, may thorough thy Christ get deliuerance from the tirannie of Antichrist now oppressing vs.

Oh good Father, whych haste sayde that the Scepter of the wicked should not long lie vpon and ouer the iust,*least they put foorth their handes to iniquitie also: make vs iust, we pray thee in Christes name, and cut a sunder the cordes of them that hate Sion: let not the wicked people say, wher is their God? Thou our God art in heauen, and doest whatsoeuer it pleaseth thee vpon earth.

Oh that thou wouldest in the meane whiles, before thou doe deliuer vs, that (I say) thou wouldest open our eyes to see all these plagues to come from thee, & all other that shall come, what so euer they be, publicke or priuate, that they come not by chance nor by fortune, but that they come euen from thy hande, and that iustly and mercifully: iustly because we haue & doe deserue them, not only by our birth poysons still sticking and working in vs, but also by our former euill life past, whiche by thys punishment and all other p•nishmentes, thou wouldest haue vs to call to our remembraunce and to set before vs, that thou mightest put them from before thee, where as they stand so long as they are not in oure remembraunce, to put them away by repentaunce. Mercifully oh Lord God doest thou punish, in that thou doest not correct to kill, but to amend, that we mighte repent our sinnes, aske mercye, obtaine it freely in Christe, and beginne to suffer for righteousnesse sake: to be part of thy house, whereat thy iudgement beginneth: to be partakers of the afflictions of thy Church, and thy Christ, that wee might be partakers of the glorye of the same: to weepe here, that we might reioyce else where: to be iudged in this world, that we might with thy Saintes iudge here after y^e worlde: to suffer with Christ, that we might raigne with him: to be like to Christe in shame, that we might be like to hym in glory: to receiue our euils here, y^t we might with poore Lazarus finde rest else where: rest (I saye) and such a rest as the eye hath not sene, the eare hath not heard, nor the heart of man is able to conceiue.

Oh that our eyes were open to see thys,* that the crosse commeth from thee to declare thy iustice & thy mercye, and hereto, that we might see howe short a time the time of suffering is: how long a time the time of reioysing is to them that suffer heere: but to them that will not, how longe and miserable a time is appoynted and prepared: a time withoute time in eternall woe and perdition, too horrible to be thought vpon. From the which keepe vs deare father, and geue more sight in soule to see thys geare, and how that all thy dearest children haue caried the crosse of greeuous affliction in this life: in whose cōpany do thou place vs, and such a crosse lay vpō vs as thou wilt make vs able to bear to thy glory and our saluation in Christ, for whose sake we pray thee to shorten the dayes of this our great misery fallen vppon vs most iustly, and in the meane season geue vs patience, repentaunce, faith, and thy eternall consolation. Amen. Amen. Amen.

And thus deare heartes I haue talked (me thinkes) a litle while w^t you, or rather we haue all talked wyth God. Oh that God would geue vs his spirit of grace and prayer. My dea•ly beloued, pray for it, as for your selues, so for me, and that God would vouchsafe to make me worthy to suffer with a good conscience for his names sake. Pray for me, and I shall do the like for you. This 20. of December, by him whome by this bringer ye shal learne. I praye you geue me commendations to all that loue me in the Lorde. Be mery in Christe, for one daye in heauen we shall meete and reioyce together for euermore. Amen.

To my good brother Augustine Barneher.

Mine owne good Augustine, the Lorde of mercye blesse thee my deare brother for euer.* I haue good hope that if you come late at night, I shall speake with you, but come as secretly as you can: Howbeit, in the meane season if you can, and as you can, learne what maister G. hath spoken to Doctor Storie and others. The cause of all this trouble both to my keeper and me, is thought to come by him. It is said that I shalbe burned in Smithfield, and that shortly. Domini voluntas fiat. Ecce ego Domine, mitte me. i. The Lordes will be done. Behold here I am Lord, send me. Ah mine owne sweete frend, I am now alone, leaste I shoulde make you and others worse. If I should liue, I would more warely vse the companye of Gods children, then euer I haue done. Iram Domini portabo, quoniam peccaui ei. i. I wil bear the Lords anger, because I haue sinned against him. Commēd me to my most deare Sister, for whome my heart bledeth, the Lorde comfort her, and strengthen her vnto the ende. I thinke I haue taken my leaue of her for euer in thys life, but in eternall life we shall most surely mete and praise the Lord continually. I haue now takē a more certaine aunswere of death, then euer I did: and yet not so certaine as I thinke I shoulde doe. I am nowe as a sheepe appoynted to the slaughter. Ah my God, the houre is come, glorifie thy most vnworthy childe, I haue glorified thee, sayeth this my sweete father, and I will glorifie thee, Amen. Ah mine owne bowels, praise God for me, and pray for mee: for I am his I hope: I hope hee will neuer forsake me, though I haue aboue all other moste deserued it. I am the most singular example of his mercye: praised be hys name therefore for euer. Cause Mistres Perpoint to learne of the Sheriffe Master Chester, what they purpose to doe with mee, and knowe if you can, whether there be any wryt foorth for me. Factus sum sicut nicticorax in domicilio, & passer solitarius in tecto. i. I am like to an Owle in the house,* and as a sparowe alone in the house toppe Ah my Augustine, howe long shall Gods enemies thus triumphe? I haue sent you this of the Baptisme of children to wryte out: when this is done, you shall haue other things. Pray, pray mine owne deare heart, on whome I am bolde. The keeper telleth me that it is death for any to speake with me, but yet I trust that I shall speake wyth you.

Iohn Bradford.

To these letters of M. Bradforde aboue specified, here is also adioyned an other Letter of the sayde Bradforde, wrytten to certaine of his faithfull friendes, woorthy of all Christians to be read: wherein is described a liuely comparison betweene the Olde man and the Newe: Also betweene the Law and the Gospell, containing much frutefull matter of diuinitie, necessary for Christian consciences to read and vnderstand.

A letter of M. Bradford, describing a comparison betweene the olde man and the newe. &c.

A Man that is regenerate and borne of God (the whiche thing that euery one of vs be,* our baptisme the Sacrament of regeneration doth require vnder paine of damnation, and therefore lette euery one of vs wyth the virgine Mary say: be it vnto me O Lord, according to thy word, according Page 1655 to thy Sacrament of baptisme, wherein thou hast declared our adoption: and let vs lament the doubting hereof in vs, striuing againste it, as we shalbe made able of the Lorde): a man, I say, that is regenerate, consisteth of two men (as a man may say) namely of the olde man, and o• the newe man.* The olde man is like to a mighty Giant, suche a one as was Goliath, •or his birth is now perfecte. But the newe man is like vnto a little childe, such a one as was Dauid, for his birth is not perfect vntill the day of hys generall resurrection.

The old man therfore is more stronger, lusty, and stirring then is the newe man,* because the birth of the newe man is but begun now, and the old man is perfectly born. And as the olde man is more stirring, lustye and stronger then the newe man: so is the nature of him cleane contrary to the nature of the newe man,* as being earthly and corrupt with Sathans seede, the nature of the newe man being heauenly and blessed with the celestiall seede of God. So that one man, in as much as he is corrupte wyth the seede of the Serpent, is an olde man: and in as much as he is blessed with the seede of God from aboue, he is a new man. And as, in as much as he is an old mā, he is a sinner and an enemy to God: so in as much as he is regenerat, he is righteous & holy, and a frend to God, the seede of God preseruing him from sinne, so that hee cannot sinne, as the seede of the Serpent, wherewith hee is corrupt euen from his conception, inclineth hym, yea enforceth him to sinne, and nothing els but to sinne: So that the best part in man before regeneration in Gods sight, is not onely an enemy but enmitie it selfe.

One man therefore, which is regenerate, well may be called alwayes iust, and alwaies sinneful: iust in respect of Gods seede, and hys regeneration: sinnefull in respecte of Sathans seede and his first birth. Betwixt these two men therfore, there is cōtinual conflict, and warre most deadly. The flesh and olde man by reason of his birth that is perfect, doth often for a time, preuaile againste the newe man (being but a child in comparison) and that in such sorte, as not onely other, but euen the children of God them selues thinke that they be nothing els but old, and that the spirite & seede of God is lost and gone away, where yet notwithstanding, the truth is otherwise, the spirite and the seede of God at the length appearing againe,* and dispelling away the clouds which couer the sonne of Gods seede from shyning as the cloudes in the aire do the corporall Sunne: so that sometimes a man cannot tel by any sense, that ther is any Sunne, the cloudes and windes so hiding it from our sight: Euen so our cecitie or blindnes, and corrupte affections do often shadow the sight of Gods sede in Gods children, as though they were plaine reprobates. Whereof it cōmeth, that they praying according to their sense, but not according to the truthe, desire of God to giue them agayne his spirite, as though they had lost it, and he had taken it away. Which thing God nor dothe in deede, although hee make vs to thinke so for a time: for alwayes hee holdeth hys hand vnder his children in their falles, that they lye not still as other doe which are not regenerate. And thys is the differēce betwixte Gods children which are generate and elect before all times in Christe, and the wicked cast awayes, that the elect lie not stil continually in theyr sinne, as doe the wicked, but at the length doe returne agayne by reason of Gods seede, which is in them hid as a sparkle of fire in the ashes: as we maye see in Peter, Daid, Paule, Mary Magdalene, and others. For these (I meane Gods children) God hath made all thinges in Christe Iesu, to whom he hath geuen this dignitie, that they should be hys inheritaunce and spouses.

Thys our inheritour Christe Iesus, God wyth God, light of lyght, coeternall and consubstantiall wyth the Father and wyth the holy Ghoste, to the ende that he myghte become our husbāde (because the husbāde and the wyfe must be one body and flesh) hath taken our nature vppon him, communicating with it and by it in his owne person, to vs all his children,* his diuine maiestie (as Peter sayth) and so is become flesh of our flesh, and bone of oure bones substantially:* as we are become flesh of his flesh, and bone of his bones spiritually, al that euer we haue pertaining to him, yea euē our sinnes: as al that euer he hath, pertaineth vnto vs, euen his whole glory. So that if Sathan should sommon vs to aunswere for oure dettes or sinnes, in that the wife is no sutable person but the husbād, we may well bid him enter his action against our husband Christe, and he will make him a sufficient aunswere.

For this ende (I meane that we might be coupled and married thus to Christe, and so be certaine of saluation, and at godly peace with God in our cōsciences) God hath geuen his holy worde, which hath two partes (as nowe the children of God do consist of two men): one part of Gods word being proper to the old man,* & the other part of gods word being proper to y^e new man. The part p^operly pertaining to the old man, is the lawe: the part properly pertaining to the new man, is the Gospell.

The lawe is a doctrine whych commaundeth and forbiddeth, requiring doing and auoiding. Under it therefore are contained all preceptes, threatnings, promises vppon conditions of our doing and auoiding. &c. The Gospell is a doctrine which alwayes offere^h and geueth, requiryng on our behalfe, not as of worthinesse or as a cause,* but as a certificate vnto vs, and therefore vnder it are contained al the free and sweete promises of God: as, I am the Lorde thy God. &c.

In those that bee of yeares of discretion, it requyreth faith, not as a cause, but as an instrument wherby we our selues may be certaine of our good husbāde Christ and of hys glory: and therefore when the conscience feeleth it sel^e disquieted for feare of Gods iudgement against sinne,* she may in no wise looke vpon the doctrine pertaining to the olde man, but on the doctrine onely that pertaineth to the new man, in it not looking for that which it requireth, that is faith, because we neuer beleue as we shoulde: but onely on it which it offereth, and whych it geueth, that is, on Gods grace and eternall mercye and peace in Christe. So shall she be in quiet, when she looketh for it altogether oute of her selfe, in Gods mercy in Christ Iesu: in whose lappe if shee lay her head wyth S. Iohn, then is she happy, and shall finde quietnesse in deede. When shee feeleth her selfe quiet, then (in Gods name) let her looke on the lawe, and vppon suche things as it requireth, thereby to bridle and keepe downe the olde Adam, to slaye that Goliath: from whom she must needes keepe the sweete promises, beyng the bed wherein her spouse and she meete and lie together. For as the wife will keepe her bed onely for her husbāde, although in other things she is contented to haue fellowshipe wyth others, as to speake, sitte, eate, drinke, goe. &c. so our consciences, which are Christes wiues, must needes keepe the bed, that is, Gods sweete promises, alonely for our selues and oure husbāde, there to meete together, to embrace and laugh together, and to be ioyfull together. If sinne, the lawe, the Deuill, or any thing would creepe into the bedde and lye there, then complaine to thy husbande Christe, and foorthwyth thou shalt see him play Phinees part. Thus my dearely beloued, I haue geuen you in few woordes, a summe of all the Diuinitie whyche a Christian conscience can not want.

A letter wrytten to his Mother, as a farewell, when he thought he should haue suffered shortly after.

THE Lord of life and sauour of the world Iesus Christe,* blesse you and comfort you, my good and deare mother, with his heauenly comforte, consolation, grace and spirite, nowe and for euer. Amen.

If I thought that daily, yea almost hourly you did not cry vpon God the father thorough Iesus Christ, that he would geue me his blessing, euen the blessing of his children: then wold I wryte more hereabouts. But for as much as herein I am certain you are diligent, and so I beseech you good Mother to continue: I thinke it good to wryte something, whereby this your crying mighte be furthered. Furthered it will be,* if those things which hinder it, be taken away. Among the which, in that I thinke my imprisonment is the greatest and chiefest, I will there about spende thys Letter, and that briefly lest it might encrease the let, as my good brother this bringer can tel you. You shall know therefore good mother, that for my body, though it be in an house, out of the whych I cā not come when I will, yet in that I haue cōformed my wil to gods will, I finde herein liberty enough, I thanke God. And for my lodging, bedding, meate, drinke, godly and learned company, bookes and all other necessities for mine ease, comfort, and commoditie, I am in much better case then I could wish, & Gods merciful prouidence heere is farre aboute my worthines. Worthines, quoth▪ Alas I am worthy of nothing but damnation.

But besides all this, for my soule I finde muche more commoditie. For God is my Father, I now perceauē: thorough Christ: therefore in prisonning me for his Gospell, he maketh mee like to the Image of his sonne Iesus Christ here, that when he commeth to iudgement, I might then be like vnto him, as my truste & hope is I shalbe. Nowe maketh he me like to his frendes the Prophetes, Apostles, the holy Martyrs and Confessours. Which of them did not suffer, at the least, imprisonment or banishment for hys Gospell and worde?

Nowe Mother, howe farre am I vnmeete to bee compared to them? I (I saye) whiche alwayes haue bene, and am so vile an hypocrite and greeuous a sinner? God myghte haue caused mee Page 1656 long before this time to haue bene cast into prisone as a theefe, a blasphemer, an vnclane liuer, and an hainous offender of the lawes of the Realme, but deare Mother, his mercy is so great vpon both you and all that loue me, that I should be cast into prison as none of these, or for anye suche vices: but onely for his Christes sake, for hys Gospels sake, for his Churches sake, that heereby, as I might learne to lament and bewail my ingratitude & sinnes: so I might reioyce in his mercye, be thankfull, looke for eternall ioy with Christ, for whose sake (praised be his name for it) I now suffer, and therefore should be mery and glad. And in deede good mother, so I am, as euer I was, yea neuer so mery and glad was I, as now I shoulde be, if I could gette you to be mery wyth me, to thanke God for me, & to pray on this sort: Ah good father which dost vouchsafe that my sonne being a greuous sinner in thy sight, shoulde finde this fauour with thee,* to be one of thy sonnes captaines and men of warre to fight and suffer for his Gospels sake, I thanke thee and pray thee in Christes name that thou wouldest forgeue him his sinnes and vnthankfulnessse, and make perfecte in him that good which thou hast begon: yea Lorde I praye thee make him worthy to suffer, not onely imprisonment, but euen very death for thy truth, religion, and Gospels sake. As Anna did applye and geue her first childe Samuel vnto thee▪ so doe I deare father, beseeching thee for Christes sake, to accept this my gifte, and geue my sonne Iohn Bradforde grace alwaies truely to serue thee and thy people, as Samuel did. Amen. Amen.

If on this sort good Mother, from your heart you wold pray, as I shoulde be the moste meriest man that euer was: so am I certaine the lettes of your praier for my imprisonmēt, would be taken away. Good Mother, therefore marke what I haue wrytten, and learne this Prayer by heart, to say it daily, and then I shall be merye, and you shall reioyce if that you continue, as I truste you doe, in Gods true Religion, euen the same I haue taught you, and my father Traues (I trust) wil putte you in remembraunce of: * my brother Roger also I trust doeth so daily. Goe to therefore and learne apace, Although the deuill cast diuers lettes in the waye. God, in whome you truste, will cast them awaye for hys Christes sake, if you will call vppon him: and neuer will he suffer you to be tempted aboue that he will make you able to beare. But howe you shoulde doe heerein, the other Letter which I haue wrytten herewith, shall teache you, which I woulde none should reade till my father Traues haue read it, & he wil geue you by Gods grace, some instructions.

Nowe therefore will I make an ende, praying you good Mother, to looke for no mo Letters: for if it were knowen that I haue penne and inke, and did wryte, then should I want all the foresayd commodities I haue spoken of concerning my body, and be cast into some dungeon in fetters of yron: which thing I know would greeue you, and therefore for Gods sake, see that these be burned when this little prayer in it, is copied out by my brother Roger: for perchaunce your house may be searched for such geare, when you thinke little of it, and looke for no moe, sweete Mother, till eyther God shall deliuer mee and sende mee oute, eyther you and I shall meete together in heauen, where we shall neuer part asunder. Amen.

I require you Elizabeth and Margarete my sisters, that you will feare God, vse Prayer, loue your husbandes, be obedient vnto them, * as God willeth you: bring vppe youre children in Gods feare: and be good housewiues, God blesse you both, wyth both your husbandes, my good brethren, whome to doe good, because I nowe can not, I will pray for them and you. Commende me to my sister Anne, mother Pike, T. Sorrocolde and his wife, R. Shalcrosse & his wife, R Bolton, I. Wild, M. Vicare, the Parson of Mottrom, Syr Laurence Hall, with all that loue, & (I trust) liue in the Gospel: and God turne Syr Thomas his heart, Amen. I will daily pray for him. I nede not to set my name, you know it wel inough.

Because you shoulde geue my Letters to my father Traues to bee burned, I haue wrytten heere a Prayer for you to learne to pray for me good mother, and an other for all your house in your euening Prayer to pray with my brother. These Praiers are written wyth mine owne hande: keepe them still, but the letters geue to father Traues to burne, and geue father Traues a copie of the latter Prayer.

An other Letter to his Mother, as hys last farewell vnto her in this world, a litle before he was burned.

GOds mercy and peace in Christ, be more and more perceiued of vs, * Amen.

My moste deare Mother, in the bowelles of Christe I heartely pray and beseeche you to be thankfull for me vnto God, which thus nowe taketh me vnto hymselfe, I dye not, my good mother, as a theefe, a murderer, an adulterer. &c. but I die as a witnesse of Christe, hys Gospell and veritie, which hetherto I haue confessed (I thanke God) as well by preaching, as by prisonement, and now euen presently I shall moste willingly confirme the same by fire. I knowlege that God moste iustly mighte take mee hence simply for my sinnes (which are many, great, & grievous: but the Lorde for his mercy in Christ, hath pardoned them all I hope): but nowe deare Mother, he taketh mee hence by this death, as a Confessour and witnesse, that the Religion taughte by Christe Iesu, the Prophetes,* and the Apostles, is Gods truth. The Prelates doe persecute in me Christ whome they hate, and hys trueth which they maye not abide, because theyr woorkes are euill, and maye not abide the truth and light, least men shoulde see theyr darkenesse. Therefore my good and moste deare Mother, geue thanks for me to God, that hee hath made the fruite of your wombe to be a witnesse of hys glory, & attend to the truthe (which I thanke God for it) I haue truely taughte out of the Pulpit of Manchester. Use often and continuall Prayer to God the Father through Christe. Hearken, as you may, to the scriptures: serue God after his word, and not after custome: beware of the Romish religion in England, defile not your selfe with it: carye Christes Crosse as he shall lay it vppon your backe: forgeue them that kil me: pray for them, for they knowe not what they doe: commit my cause to God our father: be mindefull of bothe youre daughters to helpe them as you can.

I send all my wrytings to you by my brother Roger, do with them as you will, because I cannot as I woulde, he can tell you more of my minde. I haue nothing to geue you, or to leaue behinde me for you: onely I pray God my father for his Christes sake, to blesse you and keepe you frō euil. He geue you pacience, he make you thankfull, as for me, so for your selfe, that wil take the fruit of your wombe to witnesse hys veritie: wherein I confesse to the whole world I die and depart thys life in hope of a much better: which I looke for at the hands of God my father thorough the merites of hys deare sonne Iesus Christ.

Thus my deare Mother, I take my last farewell of you in this life, beseeching the almighty and eternal father by Christ, to graunt vs to meete in the life to come, where we shall geue him continuall thanks and praise for euer and euer, Amen.

Out of prison the 24. of Iune. 1555.

Your sonne in the Lord, Iohn Bradford.

A letter sent wyth a supplication to Queene Mary, her Counsell, and the whole Parlament.

IN moste humble wise complaineth vnto your Maiestie and honours, a poore subiecte persecuted for the confession of Christes veritie:* the which veritie deserueth at your hands to be maintained and defended, as the thing, by the whiche you raigne and haue your honour and authorities. Although we that be professours, and thorough the grace of God, the constante confessours of the same, are (as it were) the outswEEPINGS of the worlde: yet (I say) the veritie it selfe is a thing not vnwoorthy for your eares to heare, for your eyes to see, and for youre handes to handle, help, & succor, according to that the Lorde hath made you able, and placed you where you are, for the same purpose. Your highnesse and honours ought to knowe, that there is no innocencie in woordes or deedes, where it is enoughe and suffiseth onely to accuse. It behoueth Kinges, Queenes, and all that be in authoritie, to knowe that in the administration of their kingdomes, they are Gods Ministers. It behoueth them to knowe,* that they are no Kinges but plaine Tyrannes, which raigne not to thys ende, that they may serue and set foorth Gods glory after true knowledge: and therefore it is required of them, that they woulde be wise, and suffer them selues to be taughte, to submit them selues to the Lords discipline, and to kisse their Soueraigne, least they pearish: as all those Potentates with their principalities and dominions can not long prosper but pearish in deede, if they and their kingdomes be not ruled with the Scepter of God, that is, wyth hys worde: which, who so honoureth not, honoureth not God, and they that honour not the Lorde, the Lord will not honour them,* but bring them into contempt, and at the lengthe take hys owne cause, whiche hee hath moste chieflie committed vnto them to care for, into hys owne handes, and so ouerthrowe them, and set vp his trueth gloriously: the people also pearishinge wyth the Princes, where the worde of Prophecie is wanting, muche more is suppressed, as it is now in this Realme of Englande: ouer which the eyes of the Lorde are sette to destroy it,* your highnesse and al your honours, if in time you looke not better to youre office and duties herein, and not suffer your selues to be slaues & hangmen to Antichriste and his Prelates, which haue broughte your highnesse and honours already to let Barrabas lose, and to hange vp Christ: as by the grace and helpe of God I shall make apparante, if first it would please your excellent maiestie and al your honors, to take to heart Gods doctrine, which rather through the malice of the Pharisies, I meane the Bishoppes and Prelates, then youre Page 1657 consciences, is oppressed: and not for our contemptible and execrable state in the sight of the world, to passe the lesse of it. For it (the doctrine I meane) is higher and of more honour and Maiestie, then all the whole worlde. It standeth inuincible aboue all power,* being not our doctrine, but the doctrine of the euerliuing God and of his Christ, whom the father hath ordained king, to haue dominion from sea to sea, and from the riuer vnto the endes of the worlde. And truely so doth he and will he raigne, that hee will shake all the whole earth with his yron and brasen power, with his golden and siluerie brightnesse, onely by the rod of hys mouth, to shi•ers, in such sorte, as though they were pottes of claie, according to that which the Prophetes doe wryte of the magnificence of hys kingdome. And thus much for the thyng, I meane the doctrine, and your duties to hearken, to propagate, and defend the same.

*But nowe will our aduersaries mainly crie out againste vs, because no man maye be admitted once to whist againste them, that wee pretende falsely the doctrine and worde of God, calling vs the most wicked contemners of it, and heretikes, Schismatikes traytours &c. All which their sayings, howe malicious and false they are, though I might make report to that which is written by those men whose workes they haue condemned, and all that retaine any of them, publikely by proclamation: yet here will I occasion your maiestie and honours by this my wryting, to see that it is farre otherwise then they report of vs. God our father, for his holy names sake, direct my penne to be his instrument to put into your eyes, eares, and hearts, that which most may make to hys glory, to the sauegarde of your soules and bodies, and preseruacion of the whole Realme. Amen.

John Bradford.

To certaine his frendes, N.S. and R.C.

*I Wish to you my good brethren, the same grace of God in Christe, which I wishe and pray the father of mercies to geue me for his holy names sake. Amen.

Your letter thoughe I haue not read my selfe, because I would not alienate my minde from conceiued things to wryte to others, yet I haue hearde the summe of it, that it is of Gods election: wherein I will briefly wryte to you my faith, and howe I thinke it good and meete for a Christian man to wade in it. I beleue, that man made after the Image of God, dyd fall from that blessed state, to the condemnation of him selfe and all hys posteritie. I beleue that Christ for man being thus fallen, did oppose him selfe to the iustice of God a Mediatour, paying the raunsome and price of redemption for Adame and his whole posteritie that refuse it not finally. * I beleue that all that beleue in Christ, I speake of such as be of yeares of discretion, are partakers of Christe and all hys merites. I beleue that faith, and to beleue in Christ (I speake not nowe of Faith that men haue by reason of myracles. Iohn 2.11. Actes 8. or by reason of earthly commoditie. Mathew 13. custome and authoritie of men, which is commonly seene, the hearts of them that so beleue, being not right and simple before God: but I speake of that faith which in deede is the true faith, * the iustifying and regenerating faith:) I beleue, I say, that this faith and beliefe in Christe, is the woorke and gift of God, geuen to none other then to those whych be the children of God, that is, to those whom God the Father before the beginning of the worlde hath predestinate in Christ vnto eternall life.

Thus doe I wade in Predestination, in suche sorte as God hath pa•ified and opened it. Though in God it be the firste, yet to vs it is last opened. And therefore I begin wyth creation, from whence I come to redemption, so to iustification, and so to election. On thys sorte I am sure, that warely and wisely a man maye walke in it easely by the light of Gods spirite, in and by his woorde, seeing this Faith not to be geuen to all men. 2. Thes. 3. but to suche as are borne of God, Predestinate before y^e world was made, after the purpose and good wil of God: which wil we may not call into disputation, but in trembling and feare submit our selues to it as to that whych can will none otherwise then that whych is holy, righte and good, howe farre soeuer otherwise it seeme to the iudgemēt of reason, which must needes be beaten downe to be more careful for Gods glory, then for mannes saluation, whyche dependeth onely thereon, as all Gods children full well see: for they seeke not the glory whych commeth of men, but the glory which commeth of God. Ieremie 9. Ihon 5. They knowe God to be a God whych doeth on earthe, not onely mercye, but also iudgement, which is hys Iustice and moste Iustice, althoughe oure foolishhe reason cannot see it. And in thys knowledge they glory and reioice, though others through vaine curiositie, grudge & murmure there againste. Thus brieflye I haue sente you my minde and meaning concerning this matter. Hereafter you shal haue (I thinke) your letter particularly answered by M. Philpot: as also if I haue time, and so you require it, I will doe.

Iohn Bradford.

Notes vpon the same Epistle, and to the matter of election appertaining.

AS touching the doctrine of Election (wherof thys letter of M. Bradforde, * and manye other his letters moe doe much intreate) three thinges must be considered.

1 Firste, what Gods election is, and what is the cause thereof.

2 Secondly, howe Gods election proceedeth in woorking our saluation.

3 Thirdly, to whome Gods election pertaineth, and howe a man may be certaine thereof.

Betweene Predestination and Election,* thys difference there is. Predestination is as well to the reprobate, as to the Elect. Election onely pertaineth to them that be saued.

Predestination, in that it respecteth the Reprobate, is called Reprobation: in that it respecteth the saued, is called Election, and is thus defined.

Predestination is the eternal decreement of God,* purposed before in him selfe, what shall befall on all men, eyther to saluation, or damnation.

Election is the free mercy & grace of God in his owne wil, through faith in Christ his sonne,* chusing and preferring to life, such as pleaseth him.

In thys definition of Election, firste goeth before (the mercy and grace of God) as the causes therof, whereby are excluded al woorkes of the lawe and merites of deseruing, whether they goe before faith, or come after. So was Iacob chosen, and Esau refused,* before either of them began to worke. &c.

Secondly, in that thys mercy and grace of God in this definition is said to be (free) thereby is to be noted the proceeding and woorking of God not to be bounde to any ordinarie place, or to any succession of chaire, nor to state and dignitie of persone, nor to worthinesse of bloude.* &c. but all goeth by the meere wil of his owne purpose, as it is written: Spiritus vbi vult, spirat. &c. And thus was the outward race and stocke of Abraham after flesh refused (whych seemed to haue the preeminence) and an other seede after the spirite raised vp to Abraham of the stones, that is, of the Gentiles. So was the outward Temple of Hierusalem and chaire of Moses, whyche seemed to be of price, forsaken, and Gods chaire aduanced in other nations. So was tall Saule refused, and little Dauid accepted: the riche, the proude, the wyse of this worlde reiected, and the woorde of saluation daily opened to the poore and miserable abiects: the hie mountaines caste vnder, and the lowe valleys exalted. &c.

Thirdly, where it is added (in his owne will) by thys falleth downe the free will & purpose of man,* with all hys actions, counsels, & strength of nature: according as it is written: Non est volentis, ne{que} currentis, sed miserentis Dei. &c. i. It is not in hym that willeth, nor in him that runneth, but in God that sheweth mercy. So we see how Israel rā long, & yet got nothing. The Gentiles vnneth begā to set out, and yet got the game. So they which came at the first houre did labor more, & yet they which came last, were rewarded with the first. Math. 20. The working will of the Pharisie seemed better:* but yet the Lords will was rather to iustifie the Publicane. Luke 18.* The elder sonne had a better wil to tary by his father, and so did in dede: and yet y^e fat Calfe was geuen to the yonger sonne that ran away. Luk. 15. Wherby we haue to vnderstand,* howe the matter goeth not by the will of man, but by the will of God, as it pleaseth hym to accept, according as it is wrytten:* Non ex voluntate carnis, ne{que} ex voluntate viri, sed ex

Deo nati sunt &c. i. Which are borne, not of the wil of the flesh, nor yet of the wil of man, but of God. Furthermore, as al then goeth by the will of God onely, and not by the wil of man: so againe here is to be noted, that this wil of God neuer goeth with out faith in Christ Iesus his sonne.

And therefore fourthly is this clause added in the definition (through faith in Christe his sonne.) Whych faith in Christ to vs ward maketh altogether. For first it certifieth vs of Gods election. As this Epistle of M. Bradforde doth wel expresse. For whosoeuer wil be certaine of hys election in God, let him first begin with his faith in Christ: which if he finde in him to stande firme, he may be sure and nothing doubt, but that he is one of the number of Gods Page 1658 elect. Secondly, the said faith and nothing els, is the onely cōdition and meanes wherupon Gods mercy, grace, election, vocation, and al Gods promises to saluation do stay, according to the woordes of S. Paule: *Si permanseritis in fide. &c. i. If ye abide in the faith. Colos. 1. Thirdly, this faith also is the immediate and nexte cause of oure Iustification simply, wythout any other condition annexed. For as the mercy of God, his grace, election, vocation, and other precedent causes doe saue and iustifie vs vppon condition, if we beleue in Christ: so this faith onely in Christe wythout condition, is the next and immediate cause which by Gods promise worketh our iustification: according as it is wrytten: Crede in Dominum Iesum, & saluus eris tu & domus tua. i. Beleeue in the Lorde Iesus, * and thou shalt be saued, thou and thy whole house. Actes. 16. And thus muche touching the definition of Election, wyth the causes thereof declared. Which you see nowe to be no merites nor woorkes of man▪ whether they go before, or come after faith, but onely the meere mercy of God through faith. For like as all they that be borne of Adam, doe taste of his malediction, though they tasted not his apple: so al they that be borne of Christ, (which is by faith) take part of the obedience of Christ, although they neuer did that obedience them selues, whyche was in hym. Rom. 5.

Nowe to the second consideration: let vs see likewise, how, * and in what order this election of God proceedeth in chusing and electing them which hee ordaineth to saluation: which order is this. In them that be chosen to life, first Gods mercy and free grace bringeth foorth election: Election worketh vocation or Gods holy calling, which vocation, thorowe hearing bringeth knowledge and faith of Christ, * Faith through promise obtaineth iustification, Iustification thorow hope waiteth for glorification.

Election is before time. Uocation and faith commeth in time. Iustification and glorification is wythout ende.

Election depending vppon Gods free grace and will, excludeth all mannes will, blinde fortune, chaunce, and all peraduentures.

Uocation standing vpon Gods election, excludeth all mans wisdom, cunning, learning, intention, power and presumption.

Faith in Christ proceeding by y^e gift of the holy Ghoste, and freely iustifying man by Gods promise, excludeth all other merites of men, all condition of deseruing, and all works of the law, both Gods law and mans law, with all other outward meanes what soeuer.

Iustification comming freely by Faith, standeth sure by promise, without doubt, feare, or wauering in this lyfe.

Glorification pertaining onely to the life to come, by hope is looked for.

Grace and mercy preuenteth.

Election ordaineth.

Vocation prepareth and receiueth the word, whereby commeth faith.

Faith iustifieth.

Iustification bringeth glory.

Election is the immediate and next cause of vocation.

Vocation (which is the working of Gods spirit by the woord) is the immediate and next cause of faith.

Faith is the immediate and next cause of iustification.

And this order and connexion of causes is diligētly to be obserued,* because of the Papistes, which haue miserably confounded and inuerted this doctrine, thus teaching, that almighty God so farre foorth as he foreseeh mans merites before to come, so doeth he dispense his election. Dominus pro vt cuiusque merita fore praeuidet, ita dispensat electionis gratiam. And againe, Nullis praecedentibus meritis Dominum rependere electionis gratiam, futuris tamen concedere: That is, That the Lorde recompenseth the grace of election, not to any merites preceeding: but yet graunteth the same to the merites which follow after: As though we had our election by our holinesse that followeth after, & not rather haue our holinesse by Gods election going before.

But we folowing the scripture, say otherwise, that the cause onely of Gods election,* is hys owne free mercy: and the cause only of our iustification is our faith in Christ, and nothing els. As for example: first, concerning Election, if the question be asked why was Abraham chosen, and not Nachor? Why was Iacob chosen, & not Esau? Why was Moses elected, and Pharaο hardened? Why Daud accepted, and Saule refused? Why fewe be chosen, and the moste forsaken? It can not be answered otherwise, but thus: because it was so the good will of God.

In like maner touching vocation and also faith, if the question be asked, why this vocation & gifte of faith was geuen to Cornelius the Gentil, and not to Tertullius the Iewe? Whye to the poore, to the babes, and little ones of this world, (of whom Christ speaketh: I thanke thee Father, which haste hidde this from the wise. &c. Mathew 11. Whye to the vnwise, the simple abiectes and outcastes in thys worlde? Of whome speaketh S. Paule. 1. Cor. 1. Yee see your calling, my brethren, howe not many of you. &c. Why to the sinners, and not to the iust? Why the beggers by the hye wayes were called, and the bidden gestes excluded? We can goe to no other cause, but to Gods purpose & election, and saye wyth Christe our Sauour: Quia pater sic complacitum est ante te. i. Yea father, for so it seemed good in thy sight. Luke 18.

And so for Iustification likewise, if the question be asked why the Publicane was iustified,* and not the Pharisey? Luke 18. Why Marie the sinner, and not Symon the inuiter? Luke 11. Why harlottes and Publicanes goe before the Scribes and Pharisees in the kingdom? Mat. 21. Why the sonne of the free woman was receiued, and the bond womans sonne being hys elder, reiected? Genes. 21. Why Israel whych so long sought for righteousnes, found it not: and the Gentiles whych sought not for it, found it? Rom. 9. Wee haue no other cause heereof to render, but to say wyth S. Paule, because they soughte for it by woorkes of the Lawe, and not by Faith: which faith as it commeth not by mans will (as the Papist falsly pretendeth) but only by the election and free gift of God: so it is only the immediate cause whereunto the promise of oure saluation is annexed, according as we read: And therefore of faith is the inheritaunce geuen, as after grace, that the promise might stande sure to euery seede. Rom. 4. Item in the same chap. Faith beleeuing in him which iustifieth the wicked, is imputed to righteousness.

And thus concerning the cause of our saluation, yee see howe faith in Christ, onely and immediately without any cōdition doth iustifie vs,* being so linked with Gods mercye and election, that where so euer election goeth before, there faith in Christ must needes folow after. And againe, whosoeuer beleeueth in Christ Iesu, through the vocation of God, he must needes be partaker of Gods election.

Whereuppon resulteth nowe the thirde note or consideration: whych is to consider, whether a man in this life may be certaine of his election. To answeere to which question, thys first is to be vnderstande:* that although oure election and vocation simplye in deede be knowen to God onely in hym selfe, à priore: yet notwithstanding it may be knowen to euery particular faithfull man, à posteriore,* that is, by meanes, which meanes is faith in Christ Iesus crucified. For so much as by hys faith in Christe, a man is iustified, and thereby made the childe of saluation, reason must needes lead the same to be then the childe of election, chosen of God vnto euerlasting life. For howe can a man be iustified, but he must needes be saued? and howe can a man be saued, but by consequence it foloweth, that he must also be elected?

And therefore of Election it is truely sayd: De electione iudicandum est à posteriore: that is to say,* wee must iudge of election by that which commeth after, that is, by oure faith and beliefe in Christ: which faith although in time it followeth after election, yet is it the proper and immediat cause assigned by the scripture, which not onely iustifieth vs, but also certifieth vs of thys election of God.

Whereunto likewise well agreeth thys present letter of M. Bradford, wherein he sayeth: Election, allbeit in God it be the first, yet to vs it is the last opened. And therefore beginning first (sayth he) wyth creation,* I come frō thence to the redemption and iustification by faith, and so to election. Not that faith is the cause efficient of election, being rather the effect thereof, but is to vs the cause certificatory, or the cause of our certification, wherby we are brought to the feeling and knowledge of our election in Christe. For all be it that election first be certaine in the knowledge of God: yet in our knowledge, Faith onely that wee haue in Christe, is the thyng that geueth to vs our certificate and comfort of thys election.

Wherefore, who soeuer desireth to be assured that he is one of the electe number of God, lette hym not clyme vp to heauen to knowe, but let hym descende into hym selfe, and there searche hys Faith in Christe the sonne of God: whyche if hee finde in hym not fained by the working of Gods holy spirite accordingly: thereupon let hym staye,* and so wrappe hym selfe wholly both body and soule vnder Gods generall promise, and cumber hys heade wyth no further speculations: knowing thys, that who so euer beleueth in him, shall not perish. Ihon. 3. shall not be confounded. Ro. 9. shal not see death. Ih. 8. shal not enter into iudgemēt. Ih. 5. shall haue euerlasting life. I•. 3.7. shall be saued. Mat. 28. Act. 16. shal haue remission of al his sinnes. Act. 10. shalbe iustified. Rom. 3. Ga. 2. shal haue flouds flowing oute of him of water of life. Iohn. 7. shall neuer die. Iohn 11. shalbe raised in the last day. Iohn 6▪ shal finde rest Page 1659 to hys soule, and shalbe refreshed. Math. 11.

Now then for so much as we see faith to be the ground wherupon depēdeth the whole cōdition of our iustifying, let vs discusse in like maner what is this faith whereof the scripture so much speaketh,* for the more plaine vnderstanding of the simple. For many kindes there be of faith: as a man maye beleuee euery thing that is true, yet not euery truth doeth saue, neither doth the beleueing of euery truth iustifie a man.* He y^t beeueeth that God created all things of nought, beleueth truely. He that beleueth that God is a iust God, that he is omnipotēt, that he is mercifull, that he is true of promise, beleueeth well and holdeth the truthe. So hee that beleueeth that God hath his election from the beginning, and that he also is one of the same electe & predestinate, hath a good beliefe, and thinketh wel: but yet this beliefe alone, except it be seasoned with an other thing, wil not serue to saluation: as it auailed not the olde Iewes, which so thought of them selues, and yet thinke to this day to be only Gods elect people.

*Onely the faithe whiche auaieth to saluation is that, whose obiect is the body and passion of Iesus Christe crucified. So that in the act of iustifying these two, fayth and Christ haue a mutual relation, and must alwaies concurre together, faith as the action which apprehendeth: Christe as the obiect which is apprehended.

For neither doeth the passion of Christe saue wythout faith,* neither doeth faith helpe, except it be in Christ: As we see the body of man sustained by bread & drinke, not except the same be receiued and conueied into the stomacke: and yet neither doeth y^e receiuing of euery thing sustaine mans body, except it be meate and drinke, whych haue power to geue nourishment. In like sort it is with faith: for neither doth the beleueing of euery thing saue, but onely faith in the bloud of Christ: neither again doth y^e same bloud of Christ profite vs, except by faith it be receiued. And as the sunne being the cause of all lighte, shineth not but to them onely which haue eyes to see: nor yet to them neither, vnlesse they will open their eyes to receiue the light: so the Passion of Christ is the efficient cause of saluation, but faith is the cōdition wherby the sayd passion is to vs effectuell.

*And that is the cause, why we say with the Scripture, that faith only iustifieth vs, not excluding thereby al other externe causes that goe before faith, as grace, mercy, election, vocation, the death of Christe. &c. all whiche be externe causes working our saluation through faith. But when we say that faith only iustifieth vs, the meaning thereof is thys: that of all internall actions, motions, or operations in man, geuen to him of God, there is none other that contenteth & pleaseth God, or standeth before hys iudgement, or can helpe any thing to the iustifying of man before him, but only this one action of faith in Iesus Christ the sonne of God.

For although the action of praying, fasting, almes, pacience, charity, repentance, the feare and loue of God be hie giftes in man, and not of man, geuen of God to man, yet be none of al these actions in man, imputed of God to saluation, but only this one action of faith in mā vpon Christ Iesus the sonne of God. Not that the action it selfe of beleeuing, as it is a qualitie in man, doeth so deserue, but because it taketh that dignitie of the obiect. For as I sayde, in the acte of iustifying, faith, as it is an action in man, is not to be considered alone, but must euer go with his obiecte, and taketh his vertue therof. Like as the looking vp of the olde Israelites did not of it selfe procure any healthe vnto them, but the promise made in the obiecte, which was the brasen serpent, whereupon they looked, gaue them healthe by their looking vp. Euen so after like sort are we saued by our faith and spirituall looking vp to the bodye of Christe crucified. Which faith to define is this:

To beleeeue Iesus Christe to be the sonne of the liuing God sent into thys worlde, by hys death to satisfie for oure sinnes, and so to receiue the same.

And thus much touching election and Faith, with the order and explication of the causes necessary to be considered in our saluation. Whereby may appeare howe farre the pretended catholikes do swarne from the right mind of the scriptures. For where the scriptures in declaring the causes of saluation, do send vs only to faith, as the onely condition whereby these causes haue their working, these catholikes do quite leaue out faith, and in stead thereof place in other conditions of doings, merites, wil workes, pardons, masses, and especially auricular confession, with penance and satisfaction for our sinnes. &c.

And besides these letters aboue specified of M. Iohn Bradforde, there hath come to our handes certaine other letters of his not long a goe, sent by a certaine olde frende of the sayd Iohn Bradforde vnto vs. Which letters beyng written of him in former times, before his trouble, as they haue not bene yet printed nor seene abroade, so I thought it not amisse, to communicate the same to the ch•istian reader, for the worthinesse of the matter, and the goodnesse of the man, which may redound I trust, to no small fruite to him, that with godly eyes shall aduise the same.

A letter of M. Bradford, to father Trauers Minister of Blackeley.

THE abundant grace and rich mercy of God in Christe our only sauour and high bishop, be increased in your heart, thorow the liuely woorker of all goodnesse, the holye spirite, vntill the day of the Lorde. &c.

I haue receiued youre two letters (good father Trauers) sithen y^t I did wryte any vnto you, whereof though honesty willeth to make an excuse, yet truth biddeth me otherwise, and sayeth it is better wyth shame to confesse the fault (for therein is, as a man mighte say, halfe a deseruing of pardon) then without shame to lie. I might haue written vnto you twise (notwythstanding in deede some businesse, wherein I haue some thing bene occupied) but yet I haue not. Nowe the cause is, because I woulde not. And why woulde I not? But because I coulde not, I meane because my canning is taken away by sinne, for my sinnes doe forbid goodnesse vnto me. In dede if my sinning were of infirmitie, there were good hope of recouerie of that, which I haue lost: But seeing, both willing and knowing I haue too much yeelded, and yet doe yeelde to my infirmities, iustly I doe deserue that, because I haue cast away, and reiected the woord of the Lord behinde my backe, that the Lord should reiecte me. And because I would not haue blessing, I am woorthye (as Dauid sayeth) that it be taken away from me. I haue nowe at length experience, that to bring a man foorth of Gods fauour, is sooner seene when a man hath receiued all things aboūdantly, then when nede or the crosse pincheth. Afore it pleased God to woorke the restitution (you know what I meane) and afore it pleased God to prouide for me, as he hath done, so that I can saye in nothing where any want is, as pertaining to my body: I was an other maner of man, then nowe I am, and yet Gods deserts haue otherwise bounden me: But the scripture is true, I haue aduanced my children,* and nourished them, but they haue contemned me, I haue fedde them that they were fatte and grosse, and they spurned agaynste me. Perchaunce you will aske me wherein. Oh father Trauers, I warrante you, this my stile in carnall, and not in spirituall wryting, doeth some thing shewe vnto you, but as for it, in comparison of other things is nothyng. For where the life of man is such, that either it paireth or amēdeth, as Paule sayeth: the outwarde man is corrupted day by day, and therefore except the inwarde man be renewed, the shoe goeth awrie: euery building in Christ, doth grow to a holy temple, as the wicked, on the contrary parte shall proceede to worsen. 2. Tim. 3.* I haue made a change farre otherwise in going backe, than I thinke by letters I can perswade you: wherein, will you say? For the first, seconde and thirde, and to be brief in all things: As for an example. Gods true feare is flowen away from me, loue to my brethren is exiled from me, faith is vtterly taken away. In stead wherof is distrust, & doubtfulnes bearing rule. Contempt of Gods honor, & of my brethrē raining, & in stead of true feare, an imagined feare, accordinge to my brayne holding the principalitie. For I extenuate sinne, and I do not consider that in sinne, which a Christian ought to consider: that sinne being not forgeuen, is such a thyng, for the which God casteth his creature away, as exāples not only of Saule, of Iudas, of the Israelites (which were beloued in deede, & yet for sinne are reiected) but also of others, on whome lately for my warning, God hath shewed the same, do admonish me. But it is but my pen which writes this, for the wicked, sayth Salomon, when they come into the depth of their sinnes, then they grow in securitye,* I am I cānot tel what, I feare, but it is but blindly, or els wold I awake otherwise then I do,* I feare me I say that I am intangled of the deuil, after his desire. Pray for me that the Lord would geue me repentance, that I may escape out of his snares. Alas the spirite of praier, which before I haue felt plentifully, is taken cleane away from me. The Lorde be mercifull vnto me. I am solde vnder sinne, I am the bondslaue of sinne, for whome I obey, his seruaunt I am. I am ashamed to speake ofte, no I shame not at all, for I haue forgot to blush, I haue geuen ouer to wepe. And truly I obey, I obey I say mine owne cōcupiscences: namely in eating, in drinking, in iangling and idlenesse, I will not speake of vaine glorie, enuie, disdaine, hypocrisie, desire of estimation, selfeloue, and who can tell all? Is thys the rewarde thou renderest to GOD, O Bradforde? Page 1660 It is true, yea to true, thou knowst it O Lord, for thy mercies sake pardon me. In your letters you touch me home, how that there is no mans hart, but that consideryng the ingratitude of this world, this belly cheere (wherein you euen take me by the nose) &c. his eyes would tumble out great gushes of teares. The Lord be praysed which worketh so in you, for it is with me, as with them of whō you complain. In deed it may be so again, but oh it is very vnlikely, for my ennies are becom old, & are made by custom more then familiar, for they are as it were conuerted into nature in mee. Yet I am not grieved therefore, although I cannot perswade my selfe that God will helpe mee. O Lord be merciful vnto me for thy Christes sake. This day I receiued the Lordes supper, but how I haue welcomed him, this night (which I haue spent in lasciuiousnesse, in wantonnes and in prodigalitie, obeying my flesh and belly) doth so declare, that what to say or write any more, I know not, sleepe doth aggrauate myne eyes, and to pray I am altogether vnapt. All this is come through the occasion of makyng this bringer a Supper in my chamber, the Lord pardon me, I trust no more to be so far ouerseen. But this I write not that the anger of god which I haue deserued, so feareth me, thou knowest it O Lord. But of this perchance too much.

For Gods sake praye for mee good Father Traues, and write vnto mee as you maye by your weakenesse, your letters do me good. By this which I haue now writen, you may consider more, touche me therefore home in your letters, and the Lord (I trust) shall, and wil reward you. If God lend me lyfe, of which I am most vnworthy, I will more trouble you with my letters thē I haue done, but beare with me, I do it not of any euill will, the Lorde I take to iudge, there is none whose company and talke I more desire then yours, I speake it before God. Prooue my Mothers mynd how she can beare it, if when I shall come downe I shal shew my selfe an other man outwardly, but alas fainedly, then before I haue done. Marrie when my commyng will be, I know not. In deede two thyngs mooue me sore, the one for my mothers cause, concernyng her better instruction, if the Lord would thereto vse me his instrument, the other is to talke with you, and eftsoones to trouble you, as I haue hetherto euer done, but alwayes to my profite. For Gods sake pray for me, for I had neuer so much neede.

This Sonday at night, followyng S. Andrewes day, at Pembroke hall.

The most miserable hard harted vnthankfull sinner. Iohn Bradford.

¶An other letter of M. Bradford to Sir Thomas Hall and Father Traues of Blakeley.

THE grace of God our most mercifull father, kepe your mynd and soule in Christ Iesu, who alone is our full sufficient Sauior, for in hym we be complete, being made through his death and one onely oblation made and offered by himselfe vppon the crosse the children of God & fellow heyres with hym of the celestiall kingdome which is the free gift of God, and commeth not of merites, but of the meere grace of God geuen to none that putteth any maner of hope or trust in any other thyng visible or inuisible, then in that oblation of sweete sauour which Christ himselfe did offer vpon good Friday (as we call it) which oblation is alway recent and new in the sight of God the father, and maketh intercession for vs: vs I mean, which thinke that onely sacrifice then offered, to be sufficient as it is, hath bene, and euer shall be for all the faythfull, by the which sacrifice (if we beleue) we haue free pardon of all our sinnes. To him therfore which was both the offerer & offering, be all honour and prayse, with the father and the holy ghost, blessed for euer, Amen.

Sir Thomas, the occasion of this my long silence, myne old friend Iohn Traues shal declare vnto you: vpō the knowledge whereof, I doubt not of your pardon. I haue sent vnto you an English and a Latine Testament both in one print and volume, the which though it be not so beautifull without as I could haue sent you, yet no lesse beautifull within, and more I thinke for your profite, and better for your eyes, your eyes I meane of the body. For vndoubtedly, it giueth light vnto the soule, if she bee not dead. Whereof, take this for an argument & a true prooffe, If your soule be not delited in it, if your soule do not hunger for it (I meane not the booke, but the doctrine in the booke) surely your soule is sore sicke: for as the body abhorring meate, is not well, euen so must the soule bee, for other meat hath she none. Christ whom you must beleue afore all men, affirmeth this to bee true in the 4. of Math. Not onely in bread, but in euery worde of God the soule doth lyue. Marke well he sayth not, one or two words, as an Epistle, or a Gospell, but he sayth, euery worde. Take heed, beleue Christ better then any man be he neuer so holy. For he that is of God (Ioh. 8.) heareth the worde of God. Will you haue a more plaine badge, whether you are the elect child of God or no, then this text. Christ saith, He that is of God, heareth the worde of God, but other word of God haue we none, then in the Canon of the Bible, and all things written therein, are written for our learnyng, (sayth Paule) whereby he prooueth, seyng that it is a learnyng, yea our lerning, that we must learne it. Therfore woe bee to all them which either perswade men, that there is other doctrine of like authoritie, or that dissuade men from embrasing this word, this word of God, or that thinke this word, especially the new Testament, is not aboue all other to be loued, to be red, to be chewed. This is the precious stone which in the Gospel Christ saith: When a man hath found, he selleth all that euer he hath, and buyeth it. Marke now how necessary and precious Christ maketh that which great learned men (nay deuils but no mē) thinke not necessary God helpe them. Christ bade his Disciples sell their coates and buy a sword, which is none other thyng then the word of God: for so S. Paule calleth it, the sword of the spirit. Nay, say our great learned men, (I lye, they haue said so, now they are ashamed) fetch fire and burne it.

This I say Sir Thomas to the intent no vngodly hypocrite should perswade you or dissuade you from reding the holy word of God the gospell of Iesus Christ. Follow you S. Paules lesson: Attend readyng, and the worde of God dwell in you. How much plentifully sayth he, and to what end, To feede the flocke of Christ euen as much as in you is, sayth Peter, not once a yeare or once a quarter as a Strawberry, but so much as in you is. This worde of God trieth all doctrine, for we ought to haue our conscience charged with nothyng as touching religion, except the worde of God in the Canon of the Bible set it out, I meane not onely in allegories, but euen in playne words. For no other foundation can any man lay, besides y^t which is layd. S. Paule sayth, the groundworke is layd alredy. Euen so sayth he to the Ephesians: We be his workmanship to do good workes, which God hath create that wee should walke in them. He sayth they were not to be made, but they are made already. What shall we thinke than in such works as mans wit hath founded, which yet seeme most holy, let Gods worde be iudge. Read the same diligently and reuerently with prayer (I meane not Latine seruice not vnderstoode, but with true hearty prayer) and marke what the law requireth, euen that which we cannot geue, the whole heart and more, if it were possible. But to this end, that we seyng our abominable vncleannes and inabilitie, might despaire in our selues, trembling at the iustice of God, and his anger which we continually procure, and so ampect Christ, in whome God the father is well pleased. Which Christ is the end of the law to iustifie all that beleueeth, and continue not in their popish ignorance, iustifieng themselues and treading Christes blood vnder their feete, denieng the Lord that bought them. All such be they neuer so well learned, neuer so holy, bee nothing but hypocrites, and playne Antichrists, which may not abide the sword of Gods mouth. For the trumpets of the army (I meane still Gods word) when they blow, the hye wals of Iericho, the figure of hypocrisie falleth down. Embrace therefore Gods holy worde, and be not onely a Reader, but a doer: for your callyng requireth you to be apt to teach such proud hypocriticall arrogant bablers, as I am now (which if I may vse this terme beshite Gods word) God forgeue me, and pray you for me, & geue

God thanks for me, that spareth me thus Luciferlike, not of a true zeale, but of a foolish bragging which prate of Gods holy word. I wot not what I do to confesse it. So it is. I haue sent to you other bookes which I pray you read, I haue written your name in them. The holy Ghost keepe you with your brother George, his wife and children, and with your brother Iames, &c. Sir Laurence, &c.

This 20. of March.

A very painted hypocrite Iohn Bradford. Yours in Christ for euer.

Pray for me, pray for me, geue God thanke for me, and take Iohn Traues help to read this letter written in hast.

If any thing but good bee chaunced to Iohn Traues (which God forbid) I pray you burne my letters out of hande.

¶An other letter of Maister Bradford, to father Traues.

Gratia misericordia & pax a Deo patre nostro, & Domino Iesu Christo Domino nostro.

IF myne heart were not altogether Adamantine, your kynd letters to me vnkynd miser, would cause me from the bottome of the same, to confesse myne ingratitude towards you vpon your behalfe anempst me so much deserued, but as I am to do, so shew I my selfe to write, and as I am vnable in the one, so am I foolish in the other, in all those vnkyndnesses, rudenes, &c. whereof you accuse your selfe. I am enforced to acknowledge my selfe most iustly condemned, not so fainedly by me confessed, as most truly by you experienced. In your letters as in a glasse, I may learne by you in deiecting your selfe, to espy my nakednes which tofore I thought clothed duplici vestitu, now onely but with fig leaues hypocritishly gilded, of which deiection wrought in you by the holy ghost, be not proude: For what haue you that ye haue not receiued? but be thankful to the Lord, not onely therefore, but also for those surges which you feelee now thorough the cares accompanieng marriages, now thorough education and bringing vp of your children and family, now thorough that crosse of the common accustomed trade of liuyng: for Multas tribulationes oportet ingredi regnum Dei. Through many tribulatiōs we must enter into the kingdome of heauen, ye they be the cognisances of Gods election. The letter Thau the instruments which worke suspiria aeternae vitae, & therefore to be embraced. Beleeue me it is y^e moste excellent gift of God a man to deiect and humble himselfe, and to feelee the crosses of Christ as crosses. But I most hypocriticall wretch, not worthy that this earth should beare me, am euen a goyng to bed with Iesabel, and such as commit fornication with her, which is afflictio maxima, Oh Lord helpe me and deliuer me for Iesus sake, annoynt myne eyes with ointmēt that I may see, oh geue me not ouer into a lewd mind and reprobate sense, but awake my sleeping soule y^t Christ may shine in me. You know the crosse, the fatherly crosse the louyng Lord hath layd vpon me, but I, but I am little or nothyng mooued therewith. I worke therein (yet not I but Gods spirit) not of a repentant faythfull mynde, but (I cannot tell how) of a slouthfull blynd retchlesse entent. Oh Lord forgeue me for saying so (it is thy gift) forgeue me myne vnthankfulnes for Iesus sake, and graunt mee as herein I blasphemed and dishonested thy holy name, so do thou by thy holy spirit glorifie by me the same. So be it, So be it.

Sithens my commyng to London, I was with M. Latymer, whose counsaile is as you shall heare, which I purpose by Gods grace to obey (if it be thy will oh Lord, fiat.) He willed me (as I haue done) to write to my maister who is in the countrey, and to shew hym that if within a certaine tyme which I appoynted xiiij. dayes, hee doe not go about to make restitution, that I will submitte my selfe to my L. Protector and the kings maiesties counsaile to confesse the fault and aske pardon. This lyfe is vncertayne and fraile, and when time is it must not be deferred. And what should it profite me to win the whole world, & to loose myne owne soule. If as I iustly haue deserued, I be put to death for it, Gods will be done. At the lest, slander, reproch, rebuke, losse of worldly frends, losse of liuing &c. shall ensue. What than? Lord thy will be done, thine I am, if death come, welcome be it, if slaunder, &c. Euen as thou wilt Lord▪ So be it. Onely graunt me a penitent louyng obedient hart, & of meere loue to go forwards herein, and not to shrinke, to stand and not to fall, y^t thy name onely be prayesd herein, Amen. Pray, pray for me, cry for me, and when you shall heare any thyng, comfort my mother, to whom for that this bringer hath not geuen me an houres warnyng of his departure, I haue not only written nothyng, but also haue thus pratted to you, who (as no man else would) I thinke you will beare with me. For as God knoweth, to whose grace I commit you & your bedfellow with all your children and familye. The shortnes of tyme, and this sayd bringers importaunce is onely the let I neither send you spectacles, the price of the Paraphrases, nor thanks for your cheese, as by the next that cōmeth▪ I will God willyng send the premisses to you, and a goodly Testament for Sir Thomas Hall which is at the bindyng. But be not acknowen that I haue now written to you, for so I haue prayed this bringer. God be with vs and pray for me, and abhorre not my rude scribling, which if it were as well written, as it is ment, woulde deserue pardon. Thus make I an ende, imputing to the hastines of this bringer all blame which you may lay vnto me. From the Temple this Sonday, immediately after M. Latimers famous Sermon, whiche this bringer as hee sayth did heare.

By your poorest friend, Iohn Bradford.

It shall not be long God willyng, but you shall both haue and heare from me. Keepe with you Melanctons Common places, for I haue an other.

¶Another letter of Maister Bradford, to father Traues.

GRace, mercy, and peace from God the father, through our Lord Iesus Christ, with encrease of all manner godly knowledge and liuing, bee with you and all your houshold, now and euer, Amen.

To excuse this my long silence, within v. or vj. dayes after my (like foolish) letters writtē to you by Ioh. M^sse it pleased God to send my M. hither to London, whome (as I lately tofore had aduertised by letters) I mooued, (you know wherein) and prayed him to discharge y^e same, or els I would submit my selfe, &c. Whereunto he answered, that if the bookes would declare it, he would satisfy, &c The bookes I shewed, whereupon he promised as much as I could aske. But beyng herein something more mooued then he had cause (God be prayesd therefore, which of his meere good pleasure wrought it) at tymes as I could, I desired to know how and in what tyme he would discharge vs both. He thinking me to be ouer curious herein, was not therewith contented, and hearyng me to alledge the vncertaintie of tyme, and the feare of Gods iustice (which oh gracious Lord graunt me to feele in deede as much as thou knowest good for me) he aunswered me to be scrupulous and of a superstitious conscience (for animalis homo non percipit ea quae sunt Dei) and plainely sayde further that I shold not know, nor (by these words) haue his head so vnder my girdle. And whē I shewed him that (God witnessed with me) I went about no suche thyng. He sayd that there was no godly conscience, seying he promised afore the face of God to discharge me, and to pay the thing, but it ought so to be quieted. And thus at dyuers & sundry tymes, moouing eftsoones to know of hym the way and tyme of discharging the debt, and hauyng none other aunsweres then tofore, I doubting worldly wisdom, (which vseth delayes) to raigne in hym with this Mammon (the which oh merciful God eradicate out of his hart mynd, and all others) I was somethyng more sharp, and told hym (non ego tamen sed gratia tua Domine) I would obey God more then man, the which hee lightly regardyng (as seemed) I departed and went to M. Latimer to haue had hym to haue brought me to my L. Protector (whose grace than was purposed shortly to take his iourney to visite the Ports) M. Latimer I say willed me to stay vntill his returne, which will be not long tofore Easter. In this meane tyme I bade my bedfellow my maisters sonne whom my M. had vsed as his instrument, to mooue mee carnally (for my M. discharged him of hys exhibitio, tellyng hym that he could not be able to keep eyther house or chyld, for I purposed to vndoe both hym and all hys (vntruly thou knowest good Lord) and bade hym to take that as a warnyng, that both he and his brethren should prouide for themselves as they could) I bade I say my sayde bedfellow to shew my M. (as of himself) my further purpose, which thyng when he knew, so mooued & feared him, that he began somethyng to relent, & then made faire promises, that looke what I would deuise, that would he do. I deuised, but my deuises pleased hym not. And thus, but not vainly I trust (as I now do with you, but I knowe your gentlenes which euer hath borne with me) I spented the tyme in which I haue bene silent to write, nay bable to you. And he departing out of Londō tofore I knew did send me word by an other of his said sonnes, not so giuen to the Gospell, and a lyfe accordyng as my bedfellow, and therefore more to be suspected (for though pietas non est suspiciosa, as I should thinke my selfe rather impius, yet Christ bade vs to be prudētes sicut serpentes) this other brother I say told me that my M. would do all thyngs onely his fame and abilitie preserued (& quid prodest totum mundum lucrari animae vero iacturam facere.) And with the sayd brother my M. sent me a little billet also, wherein he confessed that he was contented within 12. months to deliuer to my hands the whole money, which bill I thinking not so good as it might haue bene, haue deuised an other, and haue sent it downe to hym in the countrey, with request that he will seale and signe it. For thus M. Latymer thinketh sufficiēt, but as yet I heare not of it, doubting worldly wisdom, which was the whore that ouercame Sampson, y^t mooued Daudid to slay Urias, that brought wyse Page 1662 Salomon to idolatry, that crucified Christ, the which moued mee to perpetrate hoc facinus, the whiche worketh in my maisters hart, hauyng higher place there than Timor D[•]mini. What say I there, ye, ye, with me, it sitteth in the holy place (the Lord deliuer vs) doubtyng I say worldly wisdom, I remaine in that same state now for this matter (though in worse for my soule, which is more lamented, pray therfore I beseech you, pray with me and for me, that I may do so earnestly) than I was in at my last writyng vnto you. And as I than was purposed, so I doubt not (graunt it Lord) but that I shall perseuere, if in the meane season I shall not heare from my M. accordingly. Thus I haue (like my selfe) folishly, but truely declared vnto you in many babling wordes, which wit (if I had it) would haue shortly and briefly comprehended. Arrogant, nay Gods working vnthankfull wretch, my workyng in this matter, which is, and was, the onely cause (as I now do) I troubled you not afore, to the intent I might aduertise you some certaintie in this thyng. And though silence had bene much better then this foolish pratyng, yet your fatherly kyndnesse euer towards me in expectyng from you a correction, as I haue herein geuen cause, may thogh not to you, yet to me, be profitable. In hope whereof, I proceed in requiring you to continue your remembraunce of mee a most vnkynde wretche to God and you, in your prayers with the almighty mercyfull Lorde, that I maye more regard his will and pleasure herein, then all honour or shame in this lyfe. But I must confesse vnto you that my working in this matter is not of loue as I should do, nor of feare of Gods iustice (mine vnthankefulnes, myne vnthankfulnes, if nothyng else were, hath not only deserued it, but doth deserue more then euerlasting damnation, oh Lord bee mercifull to me) I doe not so repent it as I should do. Why say I So, as though this So were any thing, oh hypocritical wretch that I am. Alas father Traues (let me so call you) I am hard hearted, there was neuer any so obstinate, so vnkind, against so louing, so mercifull, so gracious, so good, so beneficiall a Lord, yea a father, as I wretch and most miserable sinner am. This I speak but not of humilitie, but of hypocrisie, yet I speake truely. I pray thee good father for Christes sake, I may thinke it truly as I write it, euen of arrogancy, so it is. Therefore pray and cry for me. Here be such goodly, godly, and learned Sermons, which these vncircumcised eares of myne heareth at the lest thrise a weeke, which were able (y^e great louyng mercy of God offered to me in them I meane) to burst any mans hart, to relent, to repent, to beleue, to loue and to feare that omnipotent gracious Lord: but my adamantine, obstinate, most vnkynde, ingrate, vnthankfull hart, hearing my Lord, which is Lord ouer all Lordes, so graciously, so louingly, vouchsafe by so many hys instruments, to speake, to call, to cry vnto me, now by hys law, now by his threats, now by his gospell, now by hys promises, now by all his creatures to come, to come euen to himselfe, but I hide me with Adam in the garden, I playe not onely Samuell running to Hely, but I play Ionas runnyng to the sea, and there I sleepe vppon the hatches tumbling in Iesabels bed, quod est afflictio maxima, vntill it please God to annoynt myne eyes collyrio, vntill it please hym to raise vp a tempest to turne and looke vpon me, as Luke sayth he did on Peter. For oh Lord it is thy gift, and commeth of thee and of thy mere grace it commeth not of man, it commeth not of works to repent, to beleue, to feare and to loue. Worke thou therfore in me for Iesus Christs sake which am thy creature and most vnthankfull hypocriticall seruauant, not when I will, nor as I wyll, but when thou wilt, euen that which may bee most to the glory of thy name, Amen. What should I write, nay why do I not plucke these same wordes and paper in pieces, for I write altogether of hypocrisie and arrogant presumption I will confesse it, (thou wicked spirite the Lord iudge thee) I will confesse it, it is most true Iohn Traues, I write it but onely, for it is not I, it is hypocrisie. Scientia (if I had it) inflaret, oh Lord graunt me thy grace, & leaue me not to myne owne judgement and reason. Hypocrisie, arrogancy, and obstinate securitie enuiron me, yet I feele them not, the Lord deliuer me. Pray, pray for me. Geue God thanks for me, Oh Lord, euen tua fiat voluntas, Unlocke this, myne hart thou which hast the key of Dauid, which openest onely, that I may desire to haue the desire of the glory of thy name, of repentaunce, fayth, &c. Pray for me and be thankfull for me, oh father Traues, and wryte to me. Your letters I desire more to see, then any mans liuyng. Let me haue them therfore as you may, but your prayer at all tymes, that God would open myne heart to feede and taste of these comfortable places of Scripture (which to me are locked) memento Iesum Christum resurrexisse ex mortuis. This text is a text of most comfort (as it is in deed, and when God will, I shal feede on it) Did Paul send to Tymothie to be his comfort in all places? For our saluation (this day of resurrection) is neerer now than when we beleueed. Therefore qui perseuerauerit saluus erit. For consummabitur praeuaricatio (sayth Daniel) finem accipiet peccatum delebitur iniquitas & adducetur iustitia sempiterna. Deus enim ipse veniet & saluabit nos. Veniens veniet, & non tardabit & quodcumque manifestatus fuerit vita nostra Christus tunc & nos manifestabimur cum illo in gloria. Semel enim oblatus est vt multorum peccata tolleret rursus absque peccato conspicietur ijs qui illum expectāt in salutē. Sic semper cum Domino erimus proinde consolemini vos inuicem mutuo sermonibus hijs. Oh Lord open myne eyes which see nothing of the great comforts in these thy most riche wordes, open myne eyes good Lord ne nunquā obdormiam in morte, Pray for me, and commend me to your good bedfellow, & omnibus in Christo fratribus osculo sancto. Thus I make an ende (for it is tyme you may say) and I pray you still watter sir Thomas Hal, vnto whom I haue sent a faire Testament both in English and Latine, if this bringer will cary it. And I haue herewith sent you a letter which first peruse and read, and when you haue so done, abhorre not me but my wickednes, & pray for me. And as you can see a meete tyme, seale it, and deliuer it to Sir Nicholas Wolston•ros by such pollicy as you can thinke by Gods grace through prayer. I confesse vnto you, God is my witnesse, to my knowlege, I neuer in my beyng in the country this Winter at any tyme called it to remembrance, the Lord forgeue me. I would by some occasion if any could be had, afore the deliury of the letter by some story or communication that he did know, that abhomination to be sinne, for I feare me he thinketh it to be no sinne. The Lord open our eyes and forgeue vs, Amen. The peace of God be with you, Amen.

From the Temple this 22. of March. 1547.

Yours in Christ, most bounden. Iohn Bradford.

I haue sent you three payre of good spectacles I trow and other such bookes as haue your name writtē in them, which take in good woorth and pray for me, & geue thanks for mee.

¶Another letter of Maister Bradford, to father Traues.

Gratia misericordia, & pax, &c.

MY chance is not by this bringer to haue any warning in manner of his farewell, so that I am constrayned tyme coarcting me, to write not so much of thyngs (which I will omitte) as my desire was. Concernyng the great matter you know of, it hath pleased god to bring it to this end, that I haue a bill of my M. hand, wherein he is bound to pay the summe afore Candlemas next commyng. This thinks M. Latimer to be sufficient. Therefore I pray you to geue that gracious Lord thanks, and thanks, & thanks vpon it for me a most wretched ingrate sinner, which haue also in other thyngs no lesse cause to prayse Gods name, As for that I haue and sustain my M. sore displeasure, the which hath brough me (God I should say through it) vnto a more contempt of worldly thyngs, through the sequestration of such his busines, as tofore I had ado withall. I call it a contempt, well, take the word euen as it is, hypocritically and vayne gloriously spoken: for the whiche fault amongst my others innumerable, I trust you remēber in your prayers, whereof I haue (I would I knew) how much neede. There is yet another thyng whereof I will aduertise you euen to this ende, that you might pray if it be Gods will, that as I trust shortly to beginne, so he may vouchsafe to confirme that he hath begun, as (if I be not deceyued) I beleuee it is his workyng. If the thyng seeme by Gods sprite in you that I presume, then for the Lords sake aduertise me: for I am much geuen to that disease, the Lord deliuer me. I haue mooued my M. therein already by letters, to see if I shall haue any liuyng of hym as hitherto I haue had, but I haue thereof no answer, nor as our naturall speech is any likelihood of any grant. Yet that I haue alredy I trust, be able for me for 3. yeres, you looke what my purpose meaneth, I am so long afore I come to it. Therefore I doe it, because my long bablyng should be lesse tedious. Now shall you haue it. If Gods will be (whereunto pray I may be obedient) I am mynded afore Midsomer to leaue London to goe to my booke at Cambridge, and if God shall geue me grace, to be a minister of his worde. Thus you haue of a •lie an Elephant. Well, take it in good part though you see my etiam non, and not etiam, etiam. A tumblyng stone gathereth no mosse, so therfore pray for me. Perchaunce I do foolishly to forsake Page 1663 so good a liuyng as I haue. I will say no more hereof, but pray for me. I trust as I said, for three yeres study, I haue sufficient, if my Maister take all from me: and when this is spent, God wil send more. I do not write this that you should thinke me to be in need of worldly helpe. And therfore as Friers were woont secretly to beg. No in y^e Lords name I require you not to take it so: for I had rather neuer send letter, afore I should be herein a crosse to you, for sufficit sua diei afflictio, we are more set by then many sparowes. But if my Mother, or Sir Thomas Hall murmure at it, or be offended with me, as you can, remedy it with your counsaile. Howbeit, as yet I will not write to them of it, vntill such tyme as I bee goyng. I am somethyng fickle mynded and vnconstant, therefore praye for me, that my hande beyng put to the plough (presumptuously spoken) I looke not backe. You may gather by my wordes in this letter the Herodicall heart whiche lyeth in mee.

I haue sent you a booke of Bucer agaynst Winchester in English, lately translated, which I neuer red, therefore I cannot prayse it. And as I call to remembraunce, I did send you with the other bookes moe then you receyued, at the least one of them I remember, which is called, The Common places or the Declaration of the fayth by Urbanus Rhegius. Aske for it, or send me worde in whome the default is, you haue it not. Hereafter, and that shortly by God grace, I will send you primitiae laborum meorum, a worke or two which I haue translated into English, so soone as they bee printed, which will bee afore Whitsontide. Pray for me good father Traues, and God send you health of soule and body, as I would myne owne or any mans liuyng. But yet to warne you of that you knowe not in wrytyng your letters to me, you hit me home, and geue mee that I looke for. You are deceyued and so is all that knoweth me, I neuer came to any poynt of mortification, therefore a little ticklyng sets me a flote, God help me, and geue God thanks for me, as all men bee most bounden. Thus when Iones beginne to write to you, I run as the Priest sayth Mattins, for I thinke I may bee bold on you. The holy Ghost preserue you, your wife and family, and perseuere his grace in you vnto the ende. I pray you pray for me a most (what should I call me) miserable and blasphemous sinner. The peace of God bee with vs. From the Temple this xij. of May, 1548.

Sir Thomas Hall hath deceyued mee, but hymselfe most. I desire to speake with hym, as this Winter it may chaunce if I discharge not my self of myne office to see him. Pray for hym and for me.

A very hypocrite, Iohn Bradford.

¶An other letter of Maister Bradford, to father Traues.

THE perseuerance of Gods grace, with the knowledge of his good will, encrease with you vnto the ende. To declare my selfe as I am a carnall man which vnderstandeth not the thyngs that be of the spirit. These my letters though I counterfeit and meddle amongst them the spirituall wordes as the Deuill did in hys temptations to Christ, will declare no lesse. For I beginne with carnall thyngs in effect, and no meruaile if I so ende, for how can a man gather figs of bryers. These wordes as they seeme so they are spoken for a cloke to make you thynke otherwyse, but father Traues you can not thinke so euil of me, as I am to the matter. This present day by Gods grace, I take my iourney towards Cambridge, where I praye God, and so earnestly pray you to pray for me, that I may circumspectly redeme this tyme which God hath appointed (to me vnknownen) to lend me: for alas, I haue spent most wickedly the tyme past, for the which I must account euen for euery haire bredth as they say: for God hath not geuen here tyme to sine. But if I considered this as I do nothyng lesse, custome of sinne and pleasing my selfe hath so hardened my hart) I should then come to the feelyng of my selfe, then should I hate sinne which I now loue, then should I feare Gods wrath, which I now contemne, thē should I cry out and wepe, and continually pray, as now I am as dry as a stone, as dumbe as a nayle, as far from p•aying, as he that neuer knew any tast of it. Which thing once I felte (thanks to the Lord) but now for myne vnthankfulnesse I am almost (but most worthily) depriued. I feare me God will take hys grace from me I am so vnthankfull. Alas, why do I lye in saying I feare me, nay God grant I may do so, for then should I pray and pray, but seyng I can not, speake you for me, pray for me, that the Lord would remember his old compassions towards me, for his mercies sake drawe me, ye compel me to serue, to feare, and to loue hym. Thus may you see how I presume, for myne entent was to haue bene a Minister of Gods worde, to haue bene hys instrument to cal from, as I haue called to sinne, but you see how that God punisheth myne arrogancy. Alas, what shall I doe. I am an vnprofitable and an idle member, I thought I shoulde haue bene therein profitable, but medice cura teipsum. How should I, or what should I doe? I cannot labour wyth my handes. Well, I trust God will geue mee grace and knowledge to translate nothyng I feare me, yea, I distrust me that I shall neuer be minister of Gods worde, yea, if arrogancy were not in me, how shuld I of all wretches the greatest, thinke me to looke to the highest rouse and vocation, that is vpon earth. Therefore eftsoones I desire you to pray for me, that Gods will may bee done in me whether I lyue or dye, so that hys name be honoured. My maister which was, hath denied me all his benefisēce, but I haue for this lyfe more then enough thanks bee to God. As this Winter I entend by Gods fauor to declare more vnto you. This booke which I haue sent, take it in good part, it is the first, I trust it shall not be the last God hath appoynted me to translate. The print is very false▪ I am sorry for it. I pray you be not offended at my babling in the Prologues, &c.

John Bradford.

I will lye God willyng this Sommer at Katherines hall in Cambridge, write to me.

¶Another letter of Maister Bradford, to father Traues.

The louyng kyndnes and abundant mercy of God the father, poured plentifully vpon all the faythfull, in the bloud of that meeke Lambe Iesus Christ our onely satisfaction and mediator, thorough the working of the most holy spirite, be encreased and perceiued in you daily more and more, to the glory of God, &c.

Because I stand both in doubt of the readyng and deliuerie of such letters as I write and send vnto you (derely beloued father Traues) I am constrained to leaue of such griefes and spirituall wantes, as thanks vnto the Lord I vnwillingly feelee, for the flesh as you knowe, loueth nothyng so much as securitie of all enemies most perillous, and not a little familiar with me, from the which, with vaine glory, hypocrisie, &c. and worldlines, the Lord deliuer me. I had not thought to haue writen thus much, but these I cannot keepe, but commit them to your prayers. And to the intent I would you should not thinke any ingratitude in me, as also that I might geue you occasion to write to me agayne, as heretofore I haue done, euen so doe I enterturbe & trouble you w^t my babling, but yet hauyng this cōmoditie, that I babble not so much as I was woont to do. The cause I haue declared, which had almost bene the cause I had not written at all. I did write vnto you from London when I came hither, sende mee word what letters you haue receiued, for from you I haue receiued but two, and both by Iohn Mosse, and in the latter I perceiued that the Lord had visited you with sickenes, his fatherly rod, whereby he declareth his loue vpon you, and that he careth for you vt in tempore supremo exultes nunc ad breue tempus afflictus quo exploratio fidei multo praeciosior auro quod perit & tamen probatur, &c Siquidem in hoc vocatus es vt cum Christo patiaris nam & illo glorificaberis. Certus enim sermo est si sufferimus & conregnabimus. You know that Christ etsi filius Dei erat tamen ex his quae pastus est didicit obedientiam. Patientia opus perfectum habeat vt sitis perfecti, & integri nulla{que} in parte diminuti, and dothe not patientia come of probatio, the one then you had, so that you were goyng a schoole to learne the other, with lerned what want you: the ende of all Gods proouing, is as Paule sayth, vt impartiat nobis sanctimoniam: igitur gratias age Deo patri qui idoneum te fecit ad participationem sortis sanctorum in lumine, &c. Nam qui te parumper afflixit idem instauret te fulciet roboret stabiliat. And the Lord knoweth how eripere pios è testatione, and that in tempore oportuno euen shortly, for haud tardat qui promisit nam modicum tempus & videbitis me veniens enim veniet non tardabit. Itaque qui consortes estis crucis Christi gaudete sayth Peter, vt in reuelatione quoque gloriae eius gaudeatis exultantes. O how doth my will ouer runne my wit. Why Bradford whom writest thou vnto? Thou shewest thy selfe. Thus father Traues you may see my rashnes to rable out the scriptures without purpose, ryme, or reason. I will not blot it out as I had thought to haue done, for that hereby you shall see my neede of your prayer. Well, I looke for a watchword from you. Write for Page 1664 Gods sake, and pray for me that I may be in somethyng profitable to the Lordes congregation, that I may bee no stumbling blocke, vt non confundantur in me qui illum expectant. Send me such counsaile as the Lordes spirite shall mooue you, how to study. My desire is in somethyng to be profitable if it were the Lordes will, for to be Minister verbi. Alas I am vnmeete, and my tyme, my tyme, yea the Lordes tyme, I haue hitherto euill, ye most wickedly mispent it, &c. Thus will I end. The Lord be with you, and your bedfellow, to whom haue me hartily commended, & to all your children and family, the which I beseeche the Lord to lighten his countenaunce ouer, and graunt you his peace, pray for me. I long for Winter to speake wyth you. Rescribe ora. Pray for mee.

This assumption daye in Katherines hall in Cambridge.

Yours with all I haue and can. Iohn Bradford.

¶Another letter of Maister Bradford, to father Traues.

ThE plentifull grace of God the father, through our only maister and Lord Iesus Christ, encrease in vs daily to the glory of his name, Amen.

Forasmuch as I haue often written to you good father Traues, and yet haue not once heard from you sithens Pentecost. I can not now bee so bolde either in writing much or often as I would haue bene: Howbeit, this I say, that I much meruaile, that I heare not from you: but not so, for I am so wretched a sinner, that the Lordes spirite I am certaine doth not mooue you to write to me, yet for Gods sake pray for me, and in the Lordes name I desire you geue thanks to God for me. And when it maye please God to mooue you write to me, thogh it be but two wordes, and counsaile me how to study the worde of lyfe, the ministerie whereof, I desire if it bee the Lordes pleasure to professe, and that I may doe it both in liuyng and learnyng, pray for me. Herus meus omnibus rebus suis me abdicauit & quae prius concesserat, iam soluere renuit, & mihi prorsus factus & inimicus. I know not when I shal see you in body, therefore let me heare from you. I write not this that you should thinke me in aegestate aut angustijs esse. No father, the Lord geueth me omnia affatim and will doe. I trust I shall shortly here haue a fellowship, I am so promised, and therefore I haue taken the degree of maister of Arte, which els I could not haue attained. If I get a fellowship, I shall not need de crastino sollicitum esse, as here after I shal more write to you by Gods grace. I pray you write againe, and often pray for me. In hast as appeareth, the 22. of October. Ne sciat mater mea quod herus meus adeo duriter mecum egit, &c.

Miserrimus peccator. Iohn Bradford.

Another letter of Maister Bradford to father Traues.

THE peace and plenteous mercy of God our heauenly father, in his Christ our onely Lord and Sauour, bee euer encreased in you by the holy spirit, qui efficit omnia in omnibus, Amen.

Father Traues though I might thinke my selfe more happy, if you would often write vnto me, yet because I ought to haue respect to your paynes, whiche nowe that olde man cannot so well sustaine as it might, I had rather loose my happines in y^t behalfe, then will your grief, forasmuch as it can be no happines vnto mee which turneth to your payne, yet because payne is not payneful when it is ioyned with gayne, I therefore desire you for Gods sake o pray often for me, for if I shall not be worthy of your praier, as the Lord who knoweth all thyngs doth right well see it, and so my conscience witnesseth, yet your good prayer shall returne into your owne bosome. And know this, that who so conuerteth a sinner by prayer, whether it bee by prayer, preaching, or writyng letters, &c. the same hath saued a soule. Use therefore, for Gods sake I aske it, that paynes whereunto is ioyned profite, I meane prayer to God for me a miserable and most wretched sinner, and as for the gayneslesse payne in writyng to me, vse it yet as you may, and surely God for whose sake you doe it, in that he will reward a cup of cold water, wil in some thing requite you. And I know certainly, that if you did see what spirituall profite I receyue by your letters, I am certayne you would not thinke all your labour lost. For Christes sake therefore begin agayne to write vnto me, and reprocue me sharply for my horrible vnthankfulnesse to GOD. You know how that God hath exonerated the loden consciēce of the great waighty burthen, for so I did write to you, yea the Lord hath in maner vnburthened me of the lesser burthen also: for I haue an as•uraunce of the payment of the same by Candlemas. Loe thus you see what a good God the Lord is vnto me. Oh father Traues geue thāks for me, and pray God to forgeue me my vnthankfulnesse. But what should I reherse the benefite of God towards me. Alas I cannot, I am to little for all his mercies, yea I am not onely vnthankfull, but I am to farre contumelious agaynst God. For where you know the Sonne, the Moone, and the seuen starres did forsake me,

& would not shine vpon me, you know what I meane per herum & heriles amicos, yet the Lord hath geuen me here in the Uniuersitie as good a liuyng as I would haue wished. For I am now a fellow of Pembroke hall, of the whiche I nor any other for me did euer make any sute: yea there was a contention betwixt the M. of Katherines hall, and the bishop of Rochester, who is M. of Pembroke hall, whether should haue me, sit hoc tibi dictum. Thus you may see the Lordes carefulnes for me. My fellowship here is woorth 7. pound a yere, for I haue allowed me 18. pence a weeke, and as good as xxxiiij. shillings foure pence a yeare in money, besides my Chamber, Launder, Barbour, &c. and I am bound to nothing but once or twise a yeare to keepe a Probleme. Thus you see what a good Lord, God is vnto me. But I pray you what do I now to God for all this, I will not speake of the great mercies he sheweth vpon my soule. Surely father Traues I haue cleaue forgottē God, I am all secure, idle, proud, hard harted, vtterly voyde of brotherly loue, I am enuious and disdaine others, I am a very starke hypocrite, not onely in my words and works, but euen in these my letters to you. I am all sensual without the true feare of God, an other manner of man then I haue bene sithens my call. Alas father Traues I wryte this to put my selfe in remembraunce, but I am wythout all sence, I do but only write it. For Gods sake praye for me which am onely in name a christian, in very deed a very worldlyng, & to say to you the very truth, a most worldling of all other. I pray you exhort my mother now & then with my sister Margaret to feare the Lord, and if my mother had not sold the Foxe furre which was in my fathers gown, I would she would send it me, she must haue your counsaile in a piece of cloth.

Yours for euer, I. Bradford.

Another letter of M. Bradford to father Traues.

THE selfe same mercy, grace and peace, which heretofore I haue felt plenteously, thogh now through myne vnthankfulnes & wilfull obedience, to the pleasure of thys outward man, I neither feele, neither can bee perswaded that I possesse, yea if I shall truly write, I in maner passe not vpon the same, so far am I fallen the Lord helpe me: the same mercy, &c. I say, I wish vnto you as I can with all encrease of godlines. Hipocritically with my pen and mouth, beseeching you in your earnest prayers to God to be an earnest suter vnto God for me whith am fallen into such a securitie, & euen an hardnes of hart, that neyther I sorow my state, neither with any grieve or feare of Gods abiectiō do write this: before the Lorde which knoweth the harts of all men I lye not. Consider for Christes sake, therefore good father Traues, my necessitie though I my selfe do it not, & pray for me, that God cast me not of as I deserue most iustly. For where I ought to haue well proceeded in Gods schoole, by reason of the tyme, I confesse it to my shame, I am so far gone back, as alas if shame were in me I might be ashamed to write it, but much more to write it, & to thinke it not, such is the reward of vnthankfulnes. For where God wrought the restitution of y^e great thing you know of, the which benefit should bynde me to all obedience. Alas father Traues I am to vnthankful, I find no will in hart (though by my writing it wil be hard to perswade you either to be thankfull, either to beginne a new life in all things to mortifie this outward man, and hartily to be well content to serue the lord in spirit & veritie, & withstand myne affections, & especially my beastly sensualitie in meat & drinke, wherewith I was troubled at my being with you, but now through my licentious obeying that affect, I am fallen so, that a whole legion of spirituum malorum possesseth me. The Lord whom I only with mouth (my hart stil abiding both in hardnes & wilfulnes) call vpon, deliuer me and helpe me. And for Gods sake geue you hartie thanks for the great benefite of restitution Pray to the Lord that at the length I may once returne to the obedience of his good will, Amen. I thanke you for your cheese, & so doth father Latymer as vnknowⁿ, for I did geue it him, & he saith he did neuer eate better cheese, and so I dare lay he did not. I thanke him I am as familier with him, as with you, yea God so mooueth hym Page 1665 against me, that his desire is to haue me come & dwel with him when so euer I will, and welcome. This doe I write yet ones more to occasion you to be thankfull for mee to y^t Lord, which by all meanes sheweth nothyng but most high loue to me. And I againe a very obstinate rebellion. Pray therefore for me in hast.

The sinnefull. I. Bradford.

¶William Minge.

*The next day after M. Bradford & I. Leafe did suffer in Smithfield, Wil. Minge priest died in prison, at Maid stone, being there in bonds for religion, & like to haue suffered also, if he had continued the fury of his aduersaries, whose nature was to spare & fauor none that fauored christes pure gospel: which W. Minge with as great constācy & boldnes, yelded vp his life in prison, as if it had pleased God to haue called him to suffer by the fire, as the other good and godly men had done at the stake, and as hee himselve was ready also so to doe, if it had pleased God to haue called him thereunto.

¶Iames Treuisam buried in the fields.

Vpon the 3. of Iuly, 1555. died one Iames Treuisam in the parish of s. Margaret in Lothbury,* vpon a sonday, who being impotent & lame, kept his bed, for he could not rise out of it a long time. This Treuisam had a seruāt one I. Smal, which red on the Bible, & as he was in reading, Berd the Promooter came to the house, & would needs go vp the staires, where he found 4, persons besides him and his wife: to wit, the yong mā that red, & two men & a woman. All which folkes, the said Berd the Promooter there being, apprehended, & caried to the Counter, where they remained about a fortnight, for all the frends they coulde make. Moreouer, the said Berd would haue had also Ia. the lame man himself to Newgate in a cart (& brought the cart to the dore) but for neighbors. Neuertheles the poore man was faine to put in two sureties for his forth cōming for he could not go out of his bed, being not only impotēt, but also very sick the same time. So within a few dais, the said Iames lying in extremes, the person of the church named M. Farthing, came to him & had communicatiō with him,* & agreed wel, & so departed. It hapned after y^e priest was come down into the street, there met him one Toller a Founder. Yea saith he, be ye agreed? I wil accuse you, for he denieth the sacrament of the altar. Upon that the person went to him againe, & then the priest & he could not agree. And so the parson went to the B. of London & tolde hym. The B. answered, that he should be burnt, and if he were dead, he should be buried in a ditch. And so when he dyed, the parson was against his wife as much as he could, neither would let her haue the coffine to put him in, nor any thing els, but was faine to beare him vpō a table to More field, & there was he buried. The same night the body was cast vp aboue the ground, & his sheet taken from hym, and he left naked. After this the owner of the field seyng hym, buried him agayne, & a fortnight after, the Sumner came to his graue, and summoned hym to appeare at Paules, before his Ordinary, to answer to such things as shold be layd against hym. But what more befel vpon him, I haue not certainly to say.

☛ The history of M. Iohn Bland, Preacher, and Martyr, constantly suffering for the Gospell of Iesus Christ.

THE 12. of Iuly, I. Bland, I. Frankesh, Nich. Sheterden, & Humfry Middleton, were al 4. burned at Cant. together,* for one cause, of the which number, Frankesh & Bland, were ministers, & preachers of the word of God. The one beyng parson of Adesham, the other the vicar of Roluindon. This M. Bland was a man so little borne for his owne commoditie, that no part of his life was separated from the common & publike vtilitie of all mē. For his first doyngs were there employed to the bringing vp of childrē in learnyng & vertue. Under whom were trayned diuers towardly yong men, which euen at this present do handsomly florish.* In the number of whō is D. Sands, a man of singuler learning & worthines, as may well besee me a scholer meet for such a scholemaister, whom I here gladly name, for his singuler gifts of vertue and erudition.

After this he comming to the ministry in the church of god, or rather being called thereto, was inflamed w^t incredible desire to profit the congregation, which may appere by this: that where as he was cast into Cant. prison for y^e preaching of the gospel, & deliuered once or twice frō thēce at the sute of his frends: yet would he needs preach the gospel againe, as soone as he was deliuered. Whereupon hee being the third time apprehēded,* when his frends yet once again would haue found the means to haue deliuered him if he would haue promised to abstaine from preachyng: he stood in it earnestly, that he would admit no such conditiō, notably wel expressing vnto vs the maner & exāple which we read in the apostle Paule: Who shal separate vs from the loue of Christ? tribulation, or anguish, or hunger, or nakednes, o^r daunger, or persecution, or the sword. &c. But to expresse the whole life & doings of this godly Martyr, seeing we haue his own testimony concerning the same: it shal be best to refer the reader to his own report, writing to his father of the whole discourse of his troubles, frō the beginnyng al^lmost to the latter ende, in order & maner as ye shal heare.

¶A discourse of the whole processe and doyngs of M. Bland, written and reported by himselfe to his father in his owne letter as followeth.

DERely beloued father in Christ Iesu, I thank you for your gētle letters. And to satisfy your mynd, as cōcernyng the troubles wherof you haue heard, these shal both declare vnto you all my vexations that haue chaunced me since ye were with me, and also since I receiued your last letters. God keepe you euer.

Your sonne, Iohn Bland.

Ffirst, the 3. of Sept. beyng Sondag, after seruice ended,* ere I had put of my surplice, Iohn Austen came to the table (commonly called the Lords table) & layed both hys hands vpon it, saying: Who set this here againe? Nowe they say they tooke y^e table downe the sonday before, which I knew not, neither do I know who set it vp again. The Clerke answered, that he knew not. Then Austen said, he is a knaue that set it here. I was then goyng downe the church, maruelling what he ment, and said: Good mā Austen, the Queenes highnes hath set forth a proclamation▪ that ye may mooue no sedition. And ere I could speake any more, he said, thou art a knaue. And I said, well goodman Austen, that I haue said, I haue said. By gods soule quoth he, thou art a very knaue. Then my clarke spake to hym, but what I am not sure. But he said, ye are both heretike knaues, & haue deceiued vs with this fashion too long▪ & if he say any seruice here again, I will lay the table on his face: & in that rage he with other tooke vp the table & layd it on a chest in the Chancel, & set the trestles by it. Wherefore I rode by & by to M. Isaac, & shewed him the cause, both how sediciously he had spoken, & performed it with a like deed. M. Isaac directed a warrant to the Constable or Bosholder, which was incontintly serued, so that he was brought before him the same night, & was bound by recognisance, with sureties, to appeare if he were called. But we agreed so well then, that it was neuer called for, the table was brought downe, and I was permitted, as before.

The 26. of Nouember being sonday, Rich. Austen and his brother Thomas came to the foresaid Table after the communion was done, & as I was goyng by them, Richard said vnto me, M. parson, we haue to speake to you. And I said, what is your wil? And he said, you know that you tooke down the tabernacle or seeling wherin the roode did hang, & such other things: we would know what recompence you will make vs. For the Queens proceedings are (as you know) that such must vp againe.

Quoth I, I know no such proceedings as yet: & as for all that I did, I did it by commandement.

No, said Tho. Austen, ye wil not know the Queenes proceedings.

Yes, said I, I refuse not to know them.

Then said Rich. ye are against the Queenes proceedings: for you say,* that there are abominable vses & diuelishnes in the masse.

Goodman Austen said I, if I so said, I wil say it again and God willing, stand to the prooue of it.

Maisters all quoth Rich. Austen, beare record of these words, and went his way.

Quoth Tho. Austen,* thou wilt as soone eat this booke as stand to them. No quoth I, not so soone. Tell vs quoth he, what that diuelishnes is, that is in the masse.

I haue often preached it vnto you said I, & ye haue not beleued it, nor borne it away, nor wil now neither, though I should tell you.

Thou quoth he hast told vs alwayes like an heretike, as thou art. Now ye lie goodmā Austen quoth I, by your leaue. Mary quoth he, thou liest. And I sayd, and you lye: for I haue taught you Christ and his truth.

Quoth he, thou art an heretike, and hast taught vs nothing but heresie: for thou canst say nothing that is true.

Page 1666 Yes, goodmā Austē, I cā say that God is in heauē, & ye wil say (I trow) y^t it is true, & so haue I taught you truly.

Quoth he, thou hast taught vs like an hereticke, & hast sayd, that there is no deuill in hell.

*Well sayd I, lie on: me think ye can say litle truth. Many other tauntes he gaue, too long to write. And at the last he sayd, ye pulled downe the aultar: will ye build it again? No (quoth I) except I be commaunded: for I was commaunded to do that I did.

Well, if you will not, sayde he, then will I. For I am Churchwarden.

I charge you, sayd I, that you do not, except you haue authority. I will, sayd he, not let for your charge. For wee will haue a masse here on sonday, and a preacher that shall proue thee an hereticke,* if thou dare abide his comming.

Yes, quoth I, God willing, I will abide & heare him: for sure I am, that he can not disproue any doctrine that I haue preached.

Yes quoth he, and that thou shalt heare, if thou run not away ere then.

No, good man Austen, I will not run away.

Mary, quoth he, I cannot tell: thou art as like, yea, as nay: with many other words, we came out of the Church dore, and so departed.

When the sonday came, I looked for our preacher, & at the time of morning prayer I sayd to the clerke: why do ye not ring: ye forget that we shal haue a sermon to day? No quoth he, M. Mils seruant hath bene here this morning, & sayd, his mayster hath letters frō my L. Chancelor, that he must go to Lōdō, & cā not come. That day I did preach to thē a sermō in his stead. Now haue they slaundered me that I had prepared a cōpany from diuers places to haue troubled him:* but they agreed not in theyr lye. For some sayd, I had them at Adesham, & that Richard Austen had knowledge, & sent for the kings Constable to see the peace kept, which is found a lye. Other sayd, I had thē lying in wayt for him betwene Canterbury & Adesham: other sayd I had thē in both places, y^t if the one mist, the other should not. God forgeue them all. Now vpon these two matters they crake, that they sent two bills of complaynt to y^e counsell. Wherefore by the counsell of frendes, I made this testimony, and sent it vp by mayster Wiseman.

¶The behauour of Iohn Bland Parson of Adesham in the County of Kent, the sonday, the 3. day of December last past, conteyning the wordes which he there spake vnto the people.

Whereas vpon certaine cōmunication had betwene y^e sayd parson & Rich. Austen, & Tho. Austē in the presēce of al y^t parish of Adeshā, the sōday before S. Andrewes day last, the said Austē thē declared, that the said parsō had taught there in times past great heresies, which to cōfoūd they would prepare a preacher agaynst the next sōday folowing, if so be the said parsō would abide, & not run away. Upon which rumor, diuers & sundry persons resorted out of the cōūtry vnto the sayd parish church, at the sayd same day appoynted, there to heare the preacher: and at the time in which y^e sermō ought to be made, no mā appereth there to preach. But it was reported vnto y^e parson, that y^e preacher appoynted, had vrgent busines, & could not come. So that the multitude being now come together, the same par^{son} perceiuing that y^e peoples expectation was defrauded, said: Forasmuch as you are come willingly to heare some good aduertisement of the preacher, which now can not be present, I thinke it not conuenient to permit you to depart w^tout some exhortatiō for your edifyng. And so further declaring that he had no licence to preach, said, that he would not meddle w^t any matter in cōtrouersy. And thē he began the Epistle of the day, desiring his audience to marke three or foure places in y^e same Epistle, which touched quietnes & loue one to an other: & there briefly reading the Epistle, he noted the same places, & so making an end thereof, desired al mē to depart quietly & in peace, as they did, without any maner of disturbance, or token of euill.

An other matter of trouble wrought agaynst Iohn Bland, as appeareth by his owne narration.

VPon the Innocents day, being the 28. day of Decemb. they had procured the priest of Stodmarsh to say them masse: he had nye made an end of mattins, ere I came: and when he had made an end of mattins, he sayd to me: mayster parsō, your neighbors haue desired me to say mattēs, and masse: I trust ye will not be agaynst the queenes proceedings. No, quoth I, I will offend none of the Queenes maiesties lawes, God willing. What say ye, quoth he, and made as he had not heard? And I spake y^e same wordes to him againe, with an hier voyce: but he woulde not heare, when all in the chaūcell heard: So I cryed the third tyme (that all in the Church heard) that I would not offend the Queenes lawes: and then he went to masse: and when he was reading the Epistle, I called the clerke vnto me, with the becking of my finger, and said vnto him: I pray you de'sire y^e priest, whē the Gospell is done, to tary a litle: I haue something to say to the people: and the Clerke did so.

And the priest came downe into the stall, where he sat: & I stood vp in the chancell dore, and spake to the people of the great goodnes of god, alwaies shewd vnto his people,* vnto the time of Christes cōming: and in him & his comming, what benefite they past, we present, & our successors haue: and among other benefites, I spake of the great and comfortable sacrament of his body and bloud. And after I had declared briefly the institution, the promise of life to the good, & damnation to the wicked▪ I spake of the breade & wine,* affirming them to be bread & wine alter the consecration, as yonder Masse booke doth, saying: Panem sanctū vitæ æternæ, & calicem salutis perpetuæ. &c. Holy bread of eternall life, and the cup of perpetuall saluatiō. So that like as our bodely mouthes eat the sacramental bread & wine, so doth the mouth of our soules (which is our fayth) eate Christes flew and bloud. And when I had made an ende of that, I spake of the misuse of the sacrament in the masse: so that I iudged it in that vse no sacrament, and shewed how Christ bade vs all eat & drinke: and one onely in the Masse eateth & drinketh, & the rest kneele, knocke, & worship: and after these thinges ended, as briefly as I coulede, I spake of the benefactors of the masse, & began to declare what mē made the Masse, and recited euery mans name, & the patche that he put to the masse: & ere I had rehearsed thē al, the church warden and the Bosholder his sonne in lawe violentlye came vpon me, and tooke my book from me, and pulled me downe, and thrust me into the Chaūcell, with an exceding rore and cry. Some cryed. Thou hereticke: some thou traitour: some thou rebell: and when euery man had sayd hys pleasure, and the rage was something past: be quiet good neighbors sayde I, and let me speake to you quietly. If I haue offended any law, I will make answeare before thē that are in authority to correct me. But they woulde not heare me, and pulled, one on this side, & an other on that, & began agayne.

Then Richard Austen sayd: Peace, Maysters, no more till Masse be done: and they ceased. Thē sayd I to y^e church wardē and the Bosholder, either holding me by the arme: Maysters, let me go into the Church yard till your Masse be done. No, quoth the Churchwarden, thou shalt tarye here till Masse be done. I will not, quoth I, but agaynst my wil. And they said: Thou shalt tary, for if thou go out, thou wilt run away. Then sayd I to the Bosholder: Laye me in the stocks, & then ye shall be sure of me, & turned my backe to the aultar. By that time Richard Austen had deuised what to do with me, and called to the Bosholder and the Churchwarden,* & bad them put me into a side Chappell, and shut the dore to me, & there they made me tary till masse was ended. When the masse was ended, they came into the chappel to me, and searched what I had about me, and found a dagger, and tooke it from me. Then sayd Tho. Austen Churchwarden, after manye brablings that they made with me: Thou keepest a wife here amongst vs agaynst Gods law and the Queenes. Ye lye, good man Austen, sayd I: it is not agaynst Gods law, nor, as I suppose agaynst the Queenes.

Thus they brought me out of the Church,* & wythout the dore they rayled on me, without pity or mercy: but anō the priest came out of the Church, and Ramsy that of late was Clarke, sayd vnto him: Syr, where dwell you? And therewith Thomas Austen tooke him by the arme, & sayde:* Come on sira, you are of his opinion, and took his daggar from him, & sayd, he should go with him. I am contēt, said he, and a litle mocked them in their enuious talke. By this time there came in at the Churche style one Iohn Gray of Wingham, seruauant to Iohn Smith,* and seing them hold Ramsy by the armes, said to him: How now Ramsy, haue you offended the Queenes lawes? No, quoth he, Then there is no transgression. Therewith Thomas Austen tooke him, & said: Ye are one of theyr opinion,* ye shall go to them for company, and tooke his daggar from him, & then demaunded what he did there? But after (I think) for very shame they let him go agayne. But they caried me and Ramsy to Canterbury, with 18. persōs weaponed. A sheet of paper will not holde the talke that we had that night w^t M. Hardes Iustice, M. Oxenden, M. Spilman, and M. Tutsam.

Page 1667The next day they made a Byll agaynst me, but it serued not theyr purpose: which was, that they woulde haue had me to prison. But Iames Chapman and Bartholmewe Ioyes were bounde in twentye poundes eyther of them for my appearaunce at the next general Sessions,* or in the meane time, to appeare, if I were sent for before the Queenes Maiesties Counsayle, or any other Cammissioners sent by the Queenes authoritye. And Ramsye was bound to the peace, and to be of good behaiour til the next Sessions. His sureties were Thomas Hogecking, and Si^lmon Barrat.

Now the 23. or 24. of February, Sir Thomas Finche knight, and M. Hardes sent for me and my sureties to M. Finches place, and tooke me from my sureties, and sent me to the Castle of Caunterbury, by sir Thomas Moyles cōmaundement (they sayd) where I lay ten weekes, & then was bailed, and bound to appere at the next Sessions holden at Canterbury: but after they chaunged it to be at Ashford on the Thursday in Whitson weeke, being the xix. of May: but in the meane time the matter was exhibited to the spirituall Court.

¶The first examination of M. Iohn Bland in the spirituall Court, before D. Harpsfield Archdeacon of Canterbury, and M. Collins Commissary.

THE xviiij. day of May, M. Harpsfield Archdeacon of Canterbury,* made the Maiors Sergeant to bring me before him and M. Collins Commissarye, into Christes Church, & they went with me into a chamber in the Su•fragan of Douers house. Thē the Archdeacō said: art thou a priest? And I sayd, I was one. And he sayd: Art thou any graduate of any vniuersity? And I sayd, Yea. What degree (sayd he) hast thou taken? The degree, quoth I, of a mayster of Art. The more pity quoth he, that thou shouldest behaue thy selfe as thou hast done. Thou hast bene a common preacher licenced, hast thou not? And I sayde, I haue bene so. Mary, quoth he, so I vnderstand.

What hast thou preached?

And I sayd, Gods word, to the edifying (I trust) of his people.

No, no, quoth he, to the destroying of theyr soules and thine both, excepte the mercy of God be all the greater. I pray thee, what hast thou preached? tell me.

I told you, quoth I, what I haue preached.

Nay but tell me, quoth he, what one matter hast thou, preached to the edifying of the people, as thou sayst? I will tell you no particular matter: for I perceiue you woulde haue some matter agaynst me.

No by my fayth quoth he, but y^e onely I would winne thee from heresies that thou art bewrapt in, and hast infected other withall.* For thou hast preached, as I am infourmed, that the blessed Sacrament of the Aultar is not the very body and bloud of Iesus Christ after the cōsecration. Tell me, hast thou not thus preached? and is not thys thine opinion?

Syr, quoth I, I perceiue (as I said) that ye seeke matter agaynst me. But seing that I am bound in the Sessiōs to my good behaiour for preaching, which may be broken with wordes, and well I know not with what wordes: and also both mine authority to preach, and my liuing are taken from me, I thinke I am not bound to make you an answer.

Collins.

M. Bland, do you not remember, that S. Peter biddeth you make aunswere to euery man that asketh you a reason of the fayth that is in you?

Bland.

*I know that, & am content so to aunswere as that text biddeth: but I knowe that mayster Archdeacon doth not aske me after that maner, but rather to bring me into trouble. Then they sayde, No: ye shall not be troubled for any thing that ye say here.

Bland.

I am content for knowledge sake to common with you in any matter, but not otherwise. And so they fell in reasoning more then the space of an houre, of the sacramēt, both agaynst me. At the last M. Collins sayde: M. Bland will ye come, and take in hande to aunswere suche matter on monday next, as shalbe layed to you?

Bland.

Syr, ye said I should not be troubled for any thing that should be sayd here for learnings sake.*
And they sayd, ye shall not, but it is for other matters.

Bland.

Syr, I am bound to appeare, as some tell me, on Thursday next, at Ashforde, I am in doubt whether I am or no: yet I haue purposed to be there, & so to goe to London to M. Wiseman, for an Obligatiō, that he hath, wherby I should receiue certayne mony to pay my debtes with all. Then sayd M. Archdeacon, I will write to M. Wiseman, that ye shall susteine no losse.

Bland.

That shall not neede: for I canne susteine no great losse, if I goe not. But I pray you to let me haue a longer day. No, quoth he.

Bland.

Syr, I cannot well come on monday.

Harps.

Wilt thou not come, when he so gently speaketh to thee, where he may commaund thee?*

Bland.

I do not deny to come, but I desire a longer day.

Harps.

* Thou shalt haue no other day: I charge thee to come on monday.

Bland.

Syr, I perceiue it shalbe for this, or like matters, will it please you, or maister Collins, for Gods sake, to cōferre scriptures priuately with me in this matter, seing ye say ye would so gladly win me?

Harps.

With all my hart will I take the paynes, & I will also borowe my Lorde of Douers Library, to haue what bookes thou wilt, and thus they departed.

Now the xvij. of May, at Ashford I could not be released, although I was called to the spirituall Court for y^e same matter, but was bound to appeare at the Sessions holden at Crambroke, the third day of Iuly.

¶An other appearaunce of M. Bland before the Archdeacon, and his felowes.

THE 21. day of Maye I appeared in the Chapter house, wher was a great multitude of people,* vnlooked for of me: & M. Archdeacō sayd thus to me. Ye are come here, according as ye were appointed: and the cause is, that it hath pleased the Quenes highnes, here to place me, to see gods holy word set forth, & to reforme those that are here fallē in to great & heinous errors, to the great displeasure of god, & the decay of Christes sacramēts,* & cōtrary to the fayth of y^e catholick church, wherof thou art notably knowne to be one, that is sore poysoned with the same, & hast infected & deceiued many with thy euil preaching, which if thou wilt renounce & come home agayn to the catholick church, both I and many other moe would be very glad: and I for my part shalbe right glad to shew you the fauour that lyeth in me, as I sayd vnto you when you were appoynted hither, because ye then refused to satisfy agayne the people that ye had deceiued. And wheras it is fayned by you, y^t I should openly dispute the matter with you this day,* although I did neither to intēd nor appoynt, yet I am cōtēt to dispute the matter with thee, if thou wylt not without disputatiō helpe to heale the soules that are brought to helwarde by thee? What sayst thou?

Bland.

I do protest before God & you all that neither is my conscience guilty of any error or heresy,* neither that I euer taught any error or heresy willingly. And where your mastership sayth, that I haue fayned an open disputatiō with you, it is not true, as I can thus approue: vpon saterday I was at Ugdens, & there M. Binghā laid it to my charge, that such an opē disputation as ye haue here offred, should be this day betwene you & me: wherat I much marueiled, & sayd to him,* that before that present I neuer hearde any such word: neither would I answeare nor dispute: & to this can master Uaghan, master Oxenden, master Seth of Ouerland, and master Ugden witnes: and further I sayd to them, that I neuer spake to you of any disputatiō, nor you to me. Now if your maystership haue any thing to say to me by the law, I will make answeare to it.

Harps.

Heare ye what he sayth? his conscience is cleare. I pray thee wheron groundest thou thy conscience: lette me heare what thy fayth is.

Bland.

I knowe not why ye should more aske me a reason of my fayth, then any other man in this open audience?

Harps.

Why thou heretick, art thou ashamed of thy faith? if it were a christē believe, thou nedest not to be ashamed of it.

Bland.

I am not ashamed of my faith.* For I beleue in god the father almighty, maker of heauen & earth, and in Iesus Christ his onely sonne our Lord. &c. withall the other articles of the Creed: and I do beleue all the holy scriptures of God to be most certayne and true.

Harps.

Wilt thou declare no more then this?

Bland.

No.

Harps.

Well, I will tell thee wheron I groūd my fayth▪ I do beleue & groūd my fayth & cōscience vpō all the articles of the Creed, & vpon all the holy scriptures, sacramentes,* & holy doctors of the church, & vpon all the generall coūcels that euer were since the apostles time. Loe hereupō groūd I my fayth: with many wordes moe, which I well remēber not. And when he coulde get no other answeere of me, thē I had sayd before, he called for a Scribe to make an act agaynst me. And after much cōmunicatiō I sayd: by what law and authority wil ye proceed agaynst me? M. Collins sayd: By the Canon law.

Bland.

I doubt whether it be in strength, or no.* Yet I pray you let me haue a Counsellor in the law, and I will make answeere according to the law.

Page 1668

Harps.

Why thou hereticke, thou wilt not confesse thy fayth to me, that haue authority to demaund it of thee, and yet I haue confessed my fayth to thee before all this audience. As cōcerning the blessed sacramēt of y^e aaltar, thou hast taught that after the consecration it is bread and wine and not the body and bloud of our Sauour Iesus Christ. How sayest thou?* hast thou not thus taught?

Bland.

Syr, as concerning this matter of the Sacramēt, when I was with you and mayster Collins, ye sayd then it was for other matters that I shoulde come hither for: and further, that ye would be content, at my desire, to con•erre scriptures with me, to see if ye coulde winne me: and ye sayd, ye woulde borowe my Lord of Douers Librarye, that I should haue what booke I would: and now ye require me thus to answere, cōtrary to your promise, ere any conference be had, & seek rather to bring me into trouble, then to winne me.

Harps.

I will, as God shall helpe me, doe the best to thee that I can, if thou wilt be any thing conformable: and I trust to dissolue al thy doubttes, if thou be willing to heare. And I also will desire these two worshipful men, my Lord of Douer, and mayster Collins to heare vs.

Bland.

No, ye shall pardon me of that: there shalbe no such witsesse. But when we agree, sette to our handes. Hereat made the people a noyse against me, for refusing y^e witnes: and here had we many moe wordes, then I can rehearse. But at the last I sayd: sir will ye geue me leaue to aske you one questiō? And he sayd, yea, with all my hart. For in that thou askest any thing, there is some hope that thou mayest be wonne.*

Bland.

Syr, when it pleased almighty God to send his angell vnto the virgine Mary to salute her, & sayd: Haile ful of grace. &c. came any substance from God our father into the virgins wombe to become man? whereat as well M. Archdeacon, as my Lord of Douer, and mayster Collins stayd. But my Lord spake the first, and sayd: the holy ghost came to her: and ere he had brought out his sentence, mayster Syriac Peters sayd: Virtus altissimi obumbravit. Truth, sayd mayster Archdeacon: it was the power of God, sent by the holy Ghost. They had forgotten, that genitus fuit ex substantia patris: Or els they perceiued wherunto this question tended:* and so both I and they left it: by what words I can not tell, but I sayd: sir, shall I aske one other? And he sayd, yea. Is there in the sacrament, after the consecration, Christes naturall body, with all the qualities of a naturall body, or no.

Harps.

Harke, sayd mayster Archdeacon: heare ye this hereticke? He thinkes it an absurdity to graunt all the quantities of Christes natural body to be in the sacrament. But it is no absurditye. For euen that naturall body that was borne of the virgin Mary, is glorified, and that same body is in the Sacrament after the consecration. But perceyue ye not the arrogancy of this hereticke, that will put me to answere him, and he will not aunswere me? he thought to put me to a pinche with his question: for I tell you it is a learned question.

Blad.

Syr, if ye be so muche discontented with me, I will say no more: yet I woulde all men hearde, that ye say the glorified body of Christ is in the Sacrament, after the consecration.

Harps.

*I may call thee grosse ignorant. Thou grosse ignoraunt, is not the same body glorified, that was borne of the virgin Mary? is it then any absurdity, to graunt that to be in the sacramēt? And whiles he spake many other words, I sayd to mayster Petit, that the Sacrament was instituted, deliuered, and receiued of his apostles, before Christes body was crucified: and it was crucified before it was glorified: which saying mayster Petit partly recited to maister Archdeacon.

Harps.

Thou art without all learning. Was not Christes body geuen to his Apostles, as in a glorified acte? and yet no incōuenience, although his naturall body was not crucified: for when he was borne of the virgin Mary without payne, was not that the acte of a glorified body? And whē he walked on the water, and when he came into the house to his apostles, the dores being shut fast, were not these actes of a glorified body?

Douer.

Then my Lorde of Douer helped him to a better place, and sayd: when Christ was in Mount Thabor, he was there glorified in his apostles sight.

Harps.

Ye say truth, my Lord, he was glorified in the sight of three of his apostles.

Bland.

*This me thinke is new doctrine.

Harps.

Well, seing he will by no other way be reformed, let the people come in and proue these matters agaynst hym. And therewith the Archdeacon brought forth a copy of the Byll of complaint that was put agaynst me at Christmas: and about that we talked a litle. And then Mayster Archdeacon rose vp, and said: see ye good people,* that know this matter, that ye come in, and proue it agaynst him. Wherevnto aunswere Thomas Austen: I pray you (sayde hee) let vs be no more troubled with him. And thē spake Iohn Austen, and Heath with one eie, and began to accuse me: but no aunswere they could haue of me, but do to me what ye can by lawe, and I will aunswere it. Then sayde Thomas Austen, Bland, ye were once abiured.

Bland.

Ye say not truely, goodman Austen, I was neuer abiured. Either, sayde he, ye were abiured, or els ye had the kinges pardon. Neither of both: ye speake this of malice: with many other brabbling woordes moe. Then M. Archdeacon departed, and le•t maister Collins to cōmaūd me to appeare the nexte day. Howbeit for certayne other vrgent businesse that I had, I did not appeare, but wrote a letter to M. Cōmissary, desiring him to respite the matter till my comming home agayne: and if he would not, I would be content to submitte my selfe to the lawe when I came home.

Now about the xxviij. day of Iune I came to mayster Commissary, to shewe him of my returne, and offered my selfe to satisfy the law, if it were proceeded agaynst me, before M. Cockes of Sturray, and Markes the Apparitor: but M. Commissary sayd gently, he had done nothing agaynst me.* And so appoynted me to appeare before hym the friday seuennight after. Nowe in the meane time was the Sessions holden at Crambroke, where I was bounde to appeare: and caryng suretye with me, to hee bounde agayne (for I looked for none other) did appeare the thyrd day of Iuly.*

And sir Iohn Baker sayde: Bland ye are, as we heare say, a Scot: where were ye borne and brought vp? And I sayd, I was borne in England. And he sayd, where? And I sayd, in Sedber, and brought vp by one Doct. Lupton, Prouost of Eton Colledge. Wel, said he, I know him wel. Remyne in your bond till after noone.

Then sayd sir Thomas Moyle, Ah Bland, thou art a stiffe harted felow. Thou wilt not obey the lawe, nor aunswere when thou art called. No will, quoth sir Iohn Baker? Mayster Shiriffe, take him to your warde: and the Bayliffe set me in the stockes, with other and woulde not heare me speake one word: & so we remayned in the gayle of Maidston, till a fourtnight before Michaelmas, or therabout: & then we were caried to Rochester to Assise holden there, where we were among the prisoners two dayes: & when we were called, & the Iudges of Assise asked our cau'ses, when my cause was rehearsed, M. Barrow Clarke of peace sayd, that I was an excommunicate person.

Then M. Roper of Linsted talked with the Iudges, but what, I am not able to say. But the Iudge of Assise sayd. Take them to Maidston agayne,* and bring them to the Session that shalbe holden nexte at the towne of Maldin: howbeit, the Shiriffe did not sende for vs, so that wee taryed at Maydstone till the Sessions holden at Grenewich the xvij. and xix. of Februarye, I and other beyng within the Barre amongst the felons, and yrons vpō our armes, were called out the latter day by the Gaoler & Bailiffes, and eased of our yrons, and caryed by them into the towne, to sir Iohn Baker, master Petit, maister Webbe, & other two, whom I know not.

¶An other examination of Mayster Bland before Syr Iohn Baker.

BAker.

Bland, wherfore were ye cast into prison?

Bland.

I can not well tell. Your maystership cast me in.

Baker.

Ye, but wherfore were ye in before that time?

Bland.

For an vniust complaynt put vpon me.

Baker.

What was the complaynt?

Band.

I told him as truely and briefly as I could.

Baker.

Let me see thy booke: and I tooke him a Latine Testament.

Baker.

Will ye go to the Church, and obey and followe the queenes procedings, and do as an honest man should do?

Bland.

I trust in God to do no otherwise but as an honest man should do.

Baker.

Will ye do as I sayd?

Bland.

Will it please your maystership to geue me leaue to aske you a question?*

Baker.

Yea.

Bland.

Syr, may a man doe any thing, that his conscience is not satisfied in to be good?

Baker.

Away, away, and threwe downe the Booke, and sayd: It is no Testament. And I sayd. Yes. And mayster Webbe tooke it vp, and sayde vnto me maruellous gently: mayster Bland, I knewe you when ye were not of this opinion. I would to God ye would reforme your self: with better wordes then I will write. And I sayde: If ye haue Page 1669 known me of an other opinion, then I am of now, it was for lacke of knowledge.

Baker.

Yea, sayest thou so? by S. Mary, and thou hold thee there, I wil geue sixe fagots to burne thee withall, or thou shouldest be vnburned,* Hence knaue, hence. And so were we reprimed into our place agayne, within the Barre. And at night when iudgement of felons, and all was done, we were called,* and the Iudge sayd to the Gaoler. Take thē with you, and deliuer them to the Ordinary, & if they wyll not be reformed, let them be deliuered to vs againe, & they shall haue iudgement & execution. And one of our company sayd: My Lord, if we be killed at your hands for Christes sake, we shall liue with him for euer.

An other appearaunce of M. Bland in the Spirituall Court.

Then came we to the Castle of Caunterbury, & there we remayned, till the second day of march, at which day we were brought into the Chapterhouse of Crechurch where were set the Suffragane of Canterbury,* mayster Collins, mayster Mylles, with other: and then went to them mayster Oxenden, mayster Petit, and mayster Webbe, maister Hardes Iustices. And whē I was called, mayster Webbe sayd: Here we present this man vnto you, as one vehemently suspect of heresy.

Bland.

And I sayde: Mayster Webbe, ye haue no cause to suspect me of heresy. I haue bene a prisoner this whole yere, and no matter proued agaynst me. I pray you wherfore I bene so long kept in prison?

Webbe.

Leaue your arrogant asking of questions, & aunswere to that that is layd to your charge.

Bland.

I do so: for I say you haue no cause to suspect me of heresy.*

Webbe.

Yes: ye denyed to Sir Iohn Baker, to be conformable to the Queenes proceedinges.

Bland.

Is it a iust cause to suspect me of heresy, for asking a question with leaue? So we had moe wordes there then I well remember.

Then stood vp mayster Petit, and sayd: Ye were cast in to prison, because ye fled away from your Ordinary.

Bland.

Then haue I had wrong. For I neuer fled, nor disobeyed mine Ordinary, nor did any thing contrary to the law. Let thē now say of I did: but they sayd nothing. And when I saw they held theyr peace, I sayd M. Commissary haue you bene y^e cause of this mine imprisōmēt? No, quoth he: ye know that when ye went from me, ye were appointed to appeare the friday after the Sessions. Here I was suffered to speake no more, but shut vp in a corner tyll my companions were likewise presented, and then wee were sent to Westgate into Prison, and were put in seuerall close holdes, that neuer one of vs could speake to an other, nor no mā was permitted to come to vs. We were foure times at this appearaunce.* But one they dispatched, by what meanes I can not tell: whose name was Cornewall a Tanner.

And thus hytherto passed the talke betweene Blande and the Iustices, and certayne Gentlemen of the shyre. Now foloweth the order of the reasoning betweene hym & the Clergy men before whome he was exmaind. But for as much as the chieftest doer and Iudge against him was the B. of Douer or Suffragan of Caunterbury called D. Richard Thornton, to the intent it may appere what litle trueth or constancye is in these catholicke persecuters, I thought here to exhibite by the way a certayne popish letter, written of a papist vnto him. Wherin is declared what a gospeller the sayd Rich. Thornton was in K. Ed. time, which now turning with the world sheweth himselfe such a bitter persecuter agaynst Gods seruants in Q. Maryes tyme. The copy of this letter here foloweth.

A copy of a popish letter written to the Byshop of Douer by one Thomas Goldwell a priest, declaring what a professour he was in king Edwardes tyme.

Right reuerende and my good Lorde, after my hartye thanks for your good chere at my last being with your Lordship, this shalbe to certify you, that as soone as I arriued with my Lords Grace, I gaue him your letters, but I had mucche woorke to obteyne any thing of him for you.* For there hath bene geuen very euill informations of you, and it hath bene sayd, that you haue concurred with al maner of euill proceedinges, the which hath these yeares past bene in England, as wel agaynst the holy sacrament of the aultar, and agaynst the supreme authority of Christs vicar in earth,* as with the vse of the abhominable late Communion, and with the mariage of priestes, as well religious, as secular: and that you haue geuen orders to (I can not tell how many) base, vnlearned, & euill disposed people, by reason of the which they haue taken vpon them to preach, and to doe much hurt in Kent. So that menne thinke that yet if any new mutation (the which God forbydde) should chaūce, you woulde be as ready to chaunge, as any other. And in deed it maketh me to feare the same, by reason that notwithstāding it hath pleased almighty God to prouide, y^t your absolution was sent vnto you (not looking, I dare say, for any such thing) of all manner of matters, past, yet your Lordship (more regarding y^e vanity of the world, thē the offēce of God, the which he onely knoweth how much it greeues me, for the due loue I beare vnto you) presumed to sing Masse in Pontificalibus, the holy dayes immediatlie folowing, and also to ministrare to childrē the sacrament of Confirmation, because that one (beyng a mēber of the Deuill) did somewhat comfort you so to do.

Oh my Lord, what honour should it haue bene both to God and your selfe, and also edefication to all good people, (though all worldly men & hereticks would therfore haue laught you to scorne) if you considering your great offences toward God, and his goodnesse agayne toward you, would like as you haue offēded in the face of the world, to the damnatiō of many, likewise haue shewed your self penitent in the face of the world, to the edefication of many▪ & not onely to haue celebrate for vanity Pontifical•ter, but also for a time to haue abstained for reuerence totaliter from the aultar, according to the old custome of the Church. The which I haue also seene obserued of some honest men, not being therto enioyned of any man. But that which is past can not be called agayne. And I thought it not my part to leaue your Lordship mine old frend and maister in y^e mire. Wherefore I ceased not to sollicite your cause with my Lordes Grace, till at the last I obtained of his Grace for your lordship all the faculties,* of the whiche I send you a cōpye here inclosed, partly for your owne consolation, & partlye for other, desiring your Lordship so to vse them to the honor of God, that there come to me thereof no rebuke: not publishing them to any person, but to such that you know will gladly receiue them. For hitherto there is neuer a bishop in England who hath graunted him so great authority concerning those the which be vnder his cure. Onely M. Archdeacon hath the like, & in one thing more greater then be these your Lordships. Wherefore your Lordshippe shall doe well to remit vnto him all such Priestes as haue cure of soule, whether they be beneficed men, or parish priestes. For he hath not onely authority to absolue them as you haue, but also to geue thē authority to absolue such as be vnderneath theyr cures. And thus I cōmit your Lordship to the protectiō of almighty God.

Written at Brussell the 16. of Iune. 1554.

Your Lordships beadman, Thomas Goldwell.

And thus much concerning the Bishop of Douer, by way of digression. Now to returne agayn to the examinations of M. Bland, let vs heare his own report of his answeres, as foloweth.

¶Here foloweth mine aunswere, as nighe as I can call to remembrance, euery word, and sentence: yet if any that was present can helpe to perfect it, I woulde bee glad. But yet this dare I say, that there is neuer one sentence, but it was openly spokē the ninth of march, in the Chapterhouse of Crechurch, in the presence of as many as they had chosen, the Maior of the City being called to be assistance, and all other shut out.

¶The answer of Mayster Bland in his appearaunce before the Commissary and other in the spirituall Court.

MAyster Collins sayd: maister Bland, ye know that ye are presēted vnto vs, as one suspected of heresy.* How say ye, be ye contented to reforme your selfe to the lawes of this Realme, and of the holy church?

Bland.

I denye that I am suspected iustly of heresy, and that ye hearde when I was presented, that I denied the suspition to be iust, but to defed the vniust punishmēt that I haue suffered: neither can ye approue that any occasion hath bene geuē by me, wherby any man should suspect me therein. But if you haue any lawe or authority to proceede agaynst me for any thing done for an whole yeare ago and more, I wyll aunswere to it.

Col.

Ye were conuented before maister Archdeacon & me, and matter of heresy layd to your charge.

Page 1670

Bland.

That matter was done and sayde a whole yeare agoe, and for that I haue bene in prison this yeare & more. If ye haue any thing agaynst me by any law, I desire you to let me know the lawe and the matter, and I will aunswere according to the lawe.

Then sayde my Lorde Suffragan: but that I am one of the Iudges, I would ryse, and stande by thee, and accuse thee to be a Sacramentarye, and bring witnesse to proue it: yea, and further, that thou hast called the Masse an abominable Idole.

Bland.

You (my Lorde) neuer hearde me saye so: But I hearde you once say,* that in your conscience ye had abhorred the Masse three yeares. Thou lyst (quoth he) I neuer sayde so.

Bland.

My Lord, if they might be heard, I can bring witnes to approue it, with the day, tyme, and place: & I once did heare M. Collins at a visitation in Wingham say, that Christ was a full satisfaction for all sinne present, past, and to come, contrary to that he sayth now.

And here we had moe wordes of this matter, which I let passe for lacke of good remembrance.

Maister Collins said, this is but a drift. You were better aunswere now: for els you shall to prison agayne, & be called on munday, & haue articles layd to you, & if ye then answere not directly, ye shalbe condemned pro confesso, & that will be worse for you.

Bland.

Syr, I doe not nowe, nor will not then denye to aunswere to any thing that ye can lay to my charge by the lawe: wherefore I trust ye will let me haue the benefite of the lawe.

Collins.

This is the lawe, that if ye be required of your Ordinary, Reddere rationem fidei, then may ye not deny it. And that we doe nowe.

Bland.

To that then I will aunswere. For I beleue in God the Father Almighty, maker of heauen and earth, and in Iesus Christe his onely sonne our Lorde, with all the other Articles of the same Creede: * And I beleue all the Articles conteyned bothe in the Creede called the Masse Creede, & in the Creede of Athanasius: And I doe beleue, that all the holy Scriptures, & all thinges therin conteyned, are most true.

Collins.

This will not serue you: ye must aunswere to all suche Articles in all these as shalbe layde to you, or asked of you.

Bland.

Let me know the law that it is in that force (without any iuste cause of suspition proued agaynst me) and I will aunswere.

Collins.

How say ye will ye aunswere.

Bland.

Syr, I haue answered you. Haue him away, sayd my Lord of Douer: he had better haue answered.

Bland.

My Lord, I am ready to aunswere, if ye haue any thing agaynst me by the lawe.

B. Douer.

Ye haue preached many heresyas in Adisham, where I am Parson now: and therefore yee muste make aunswere to them.

Bland.

Lay them to my charge by the lawe, & I will aunswere them, if ye can approue that I am bound to answere to y^t was done a yere & more ago: for if ye may do that, ye may also lay to my charge, & compell me to answere to all thinges done in all my lyfe I trowe.

Collins.

It is not a yeare agoe since you were before M. Archdeacon and me.

Bland.

It is truth, it is a yeare and tenne weekes since the words were spoken: & I haue bene a prisoner euer since, and haue bene at fiue Sessions,* and neuer coulde haue any cause tryed. Me thinke your charities should thinke it punishment enough, if I had bene guilty.

Collins.

All this will not serue you: you muste needes aunswere, and it will be better for you to aunswere nowe, then an other tyme. Will ye reforme your selfe, and goe to the Church, and worshippe Christe in the blessed Sacrament of the Aultar, & be obedient vnto all the Queenes Lawes?

Bland.

*I pray you wherefore am I brought hither?

Collins

To aunswere to such thinges as are demaunded of you.

Bland.

Syr, I thoughte ye had had some matters agaynst me by the lawe.

Collins.

Well, on munday at .ix. of the clocke ye shall see y^e law, and haue articles layd vnto you.

Then they had spyed Mayster Cox the Lawyer, and called him in, and sayde: Here is a Lawyer can tell you are bound by the lawe to aunswere: and he sayde, as they had sayde.

Collins.

Doe ye not beleeeue that after the consecration of the blessed Sacrament of the Aultar there remayneth no substance of bread, but the substaunce of Iesus Christ both God and man.

Bland.

Mayster Commissarye, I knowe not by any lawe why ye should aske me that question, more then any other man here. And after a little talke, my Lord of Douer asked me this question: Doest thou not beleeeue after y^e consecration, that it is the body of Christ? And I sayde, No,* I doe not so beleue: for the Scriptures do not teach me, y^t there should remayne the flesh of Christ, to eate as a man should eate mans flesh?

Then maister Glasier sayd, that was the opinion of y^e Capernaïtes: there is no man here of that opinion, and spake long of cutting of Christs body, as men cut flesh in the shambles.

Then Mayster Doctour Faucet sayde: Mayster Bland, for as muche as you and I were broughte vp both in one house, and borne both in one Parish, I would be as glad as any man aliue, to doe you good: but ye may not thus stand against the Church. For Christ sayth: Ye must humble your self, and take vp his Crosse, and follow him. And to humble your selfe in this place, is to be content, and not sticke to your owne iudgement, but to humble your selfe to the holy Church, which hath determined, y^t after the cōsecration, there remaineth no bread, but the naturall body and blood of Christ.

Bland.

Mayster Doctour, if ye take humbling of our selfe in that place, to admitte the determination of the Church, then muste we knowe by the Scriptures,* that the same Churche determined nothing but according to the Scriptures, as this is not: and therefore I doe not beleue any such transubstantiation, nor neuer will, god willing. Thē (quoth he I haue done with you: I will no more prey for you then for a dogge.

Then sayde M. Glasier: how thinke ye? Did Paule when he sayd: Is not the bread that we breake a partaking of the body of Christ? Did he say Bakers bread?

Bland.

Though he did not meane bakers bread,* that doth not proue that hee brake naturall and reall flesh.

Gla.

No by saint Mary, we say not soe, but we saye, it is the naturall body glorified, vnder the formes of bread and wyne.

Bland.

Then the apostles had it not as we haue: or els his glorified body was crucified for vs.

Gla.

Tush, ye do not vnderstande the Scriptures. For Christes body was euer glorified, in that it was so maruellously vnited to the Godhead: yea, and he shewed hys body diuers tymes glorified, as in the Mount Thabor. And when he walked on the water, we see he was light, and had no weight in hym. Was not that then a glorified body?

Bland.

Then belike Peters body was glorified: walking on the water was the deade of a glorified body: and the yron that Elizeus made to swim vpon the water.

Douer.

Tush, quoth my Lord of Douer, that was done by prayer. But they made such a noyse with laughing, that I heard no more what my Lord sayd.

Bland.

Maysters, I knowe that it auayleth vs nothyng to reason with you, no more then it booted you in the tyme of the Gospell. For then neyther the reason of Eckius, *Coclaeus, not yet of detection of the Deuilles sophistrye of my Lord Chauncellours doying, coulde take anye place. And it is knowne to some that be here, that somethyng I can say in them.

Douer.

No, you know Oecolampadius, Zuinglius, and such other.

Bland.

In deede my Lorde, I haue seene parte of theyr doynge.

Douer.

That is seene by thee to day.

Gla.

I was glad when I heard you say ye beleueed the catholicke Church: and now goe you from it?

Bland.

No that I doe not. *

Gla.

Ye know that Christ sayth: If thy brother haue offended thee, goe and reconcile him, betweene thee and him. If he heare thee not, take two or three with thee, that in the mouth of two or three witnesses, all thinges may be established. If he heare not then. Dic Ecclesiae: If he heare not the Church, take him as an heathen. I pray you, where could ye haue found this churche of yours fifty yeares ago?

Bland.

Ye knowe that the true church did not at all tymes flourish, but was wonderfully persecuted.*

Douer.

Then my Lorde cryed: No more, I commaunde you to holde your peace. Haue hym away, and bring in an other.

Collins.

Ye shall come agayne on Monday, at nyne of the clocke, and in the meane time ye shall haue whom ye wyll to conferre withall, your frend D. Faucet, or M. Glasier, if ye desire them.

Bland.

I will refuse to talke with no man: as for any conference Page 1671 of your part, it is but weake lawes, established as they are. But when there was no lawe, I did desire conference. And so for that time I departed.

The Monday after we were brought forth to the same place agayne: And then M. Collins began to speak to me: but after what maner, it is cleane out of my minde: but the end was, that I woulde reforme my selfe. But as I did before, I demaunded what they had to lay to my charge, & to see the law, which they sayd before, I should see.

Douer.

What needes that? we hau• enough agaynst you. For ye * denied to me the Transubstantiation in the Sacrament.

Bland.

I did refuse to aunswere, till ye promised that I should see the Law, whereby ye may compell me to aunswere.

Douer.

My Lord tooke the Scribes book, and read the answere that I made to D. Faucets reason, which I knewe not that they had written.

Bland.

My Lord, I made you no such aunswere when ye asked me. I take M. Collins and M. Glasier to witnes. Then they brought forth a Decretall, a booke of the bishop of Romes law, to bind me to answere, whiche my hart abhorred to looke vpon. The effecte was, that the Ordinarye had authority to examine,* and that they so examined, must needs aunswere. But I sayde, that it meened of suche as were iustly suspect, as I was not. And here we had muche communication. For I charged them with vniust imprisonment, which they could not auoyd.

*But M. Oxenden would haue helped them, and said, the Iustices put me in prison for a sermon sediously spokē, and for troubling a priest at masse.

Bland.

That is not true. For after I had bene 10. weekes in prison, I was bayled, till I was cast in agayne, (and as the Iustice sayd) for the disobeying mine Ordinary, which I neuer did.

Collins.

Will ye be content to conferre with some? It will be better for you: nowe we offer it you, because ye woulde not desire it.

Bland.

As I did not refuse before, no more will I nowe. But I did not perceyue before, but that one mighte haue come without any leaue asking, to conferre the scriptures: and therfore I looked that D. Faucet would haue come to me without desiring,* if any commodity to me had bene in conferēce: for though I was neuer able to do him good, yet once I was his tutor.

Collins.

A•e ye content to come to his Chamber at after noone?

Bland.

Syr, I am a Prisoner, and therefore it is meete that I obey,* and come whyther you will, and so departed. At this tyme wee were three. But they tooke an other to appeare before them the Tewesday seuennight after. And when he came, I knewe not what was done, but that I heare, they excōmunicated hym, and let him go. His name was Myller, a Clothyer.

¶Here foloweth a certayne confutation of M. Bland. agaynst false and manifest absurdities, graunted by M. Mylles, priest of Christes Church in Caunterbury.

MYlles.

*We say, that Christ is in or vnder the sacramēt really and corporally, which are the formes of bread & wyne, and that there is his body contained inuisibly, and the qualities which we do see, as whitenes and rōūdnes. be there without substance by Gods power, as quantitye and weight be there also by inuisible measure.

Bland.

This is your owne Diuinity, to make accidentes the Sacrament, and Christes reall body inuisibly conteyned in them, and so to destroy the Sacrament. And yet the Doctors saye: *Materia Sacramenti est panis & vinum. And GOD by his power woorkerh no myracles with Hoc est Corpus meum, so to chaunge the substaunce of breade and wine into hys bodye and blood, in that hee maketh accidentes to bee without theyr substaunce by inuisible measure. I am ashamed to see you so destroy Christes Sacrament, contrary to your owne Doctours, and trifle so with Gods worke.

Mylles.

To Christe is geuen all power in heauen and in earth,* so that by his omnipotent power of his Godhead he may be, and is where he listeth, and is in the Sacramente really and corporally without occupying of place: for a glo|rified body occupyeth on place.

Bland.

Marke your owne reason. All power is geuen to Christ, both in heauen and earth: by the omnipotent power of his Godhead he may be where he list, Ergo, hee is in the sacrament really and corporally, without occupying of place, I denye your argument: for it foloweth neyther of your Maior nor Minor. And first I woulde learne of you,* howe you know that Christ listeth to be present at euerye Priestes list. For if the Priest list not to say your Masse, thē Christ listeth not to be there.

Agayne ye say, all power is geuen vnto Christ both in heauen and in earth, so that that is the cause by your reason, that by the omnipotēt power of his Godhead, he may be where he list: and by that reason he had not the power of his Godhead, till he had his humayne body, and then he was not equall with the father in diuinity: for all power was not geuen to Christe, before the humanitye and the Godhead were knit together, neither was he Filius. Here is more daunger then ye are ware of: if ye would stand to it with iust Iudges.

Milles.

We eate Christes flesh and blood spiritually when wee receiue it with fayth and charitye. And wee also doe eate it corporally in the Sacrament: ane the body that we so receiue hath life. For the Godhead is annexed thereto. Which although it be receiued with the body of Christ, yet it is not inuisible after a grosse sort, and the flesh of Christe that we receiue is liuely, for it hath the spirite of God ioyned to it. And if a man be drunken, it is not by receiuinge of the blood of Christe, for it is contrary to the nature of Christes blood.* If he be drunken, it is by the qualities and quāities, without substance of blood.

Bland.

I am glad that you are so muche agaynst all men, to saye that Christes body is aliue in the Sacramente: it may fortune to bring you to the truth in time to come. Me thinke it is euill to keepe Christes body aliue in the Pixe, or els must ye graunt that he is aliue in receiuing, & dead in the Pixe. And ye say truth that it is * not the naturall receiuing of Christes bloud that maketh a man drunken:* for it is the nature of wine that doth that, which ye denye not.

And a more truth ye confesse then ye dyd thinke, when ye sayd: If a man be drunken, it is by the qualities and quantities, without the substaunce of bloud: for in deede bloud hath no such qualities with it: which is euident that there is no naturall bloud. If a man be drunken with wine consecrated, it must be a myracle, as I thinke you will haue it, that the sayde accidentes should be without theyr naturall substaunce, and worke all the operations of both substaunce and accidentes: and so it foloweth that a man may be drunken by myracle. The body that ye receiue, ye say, is aliue, because it is annexed to the Godhead, and the flesh that ye receiue is liuelye, because it hath the spirite of God ioyned to it.

This diuision is of your new inuentions to diuide the bodie and the flesh, the one aliue by the Godhead, the other liuely by Gods spirite, and both one Sacrament: ye make of it a thing so fantasticall, that ye imagine a body without flesh, and flesh without a body, as ye do qualities & quantities without substaunce, and a liuing body without qualities and quantities.

Milles.

If case so require, and there be a Godlye intent in the Minister to consecrate,* after the consecration thereof there is present the body and bloud of Christ, and no other substaunce, but accidentes without substaunce to a true beleuer.

Bland.

Ye graunt three absurdities, that in a Tunne of wine consecrate is nothinge but accidentes, and to encrease it withall, ye haue brought in two inconueniences: firste that it is not the worde of God that doth consecrate,* but the intent of the Priest must helpe to it: and if that lacke, ye seeme to graunt no consecration, though the Priest speake the word: and yet your Dotours say, that the wickednes of the Prieste minisheth not the sacrament.

And to an vnbeleuer ye seeme to say, that it is not the same that it is to the true beleuer: and then muste the beleuer haue some thing to do in the consecration. Incidit in scyllam qui vult vitare charibdim.

Mylles.

The substaunce of Christes bodye doth not fill the Mouses belly. For although he doth receiue the outward formes of bread and wine, yet hee doeth not receiue the substaunce inwardly, but without violation. And a Mouse doth not eate the bodye of Christ, to speake properly: for it doth not feede him spirituallye or corporallye as it doeth man, because hee doth not receiue it to any inducemente of immortality to the flesh.

Page 1672

Bland.

Yee make not your doctrine playne to be vnderstand: we must know howe a Mouse can recieue the substance inwardly and outwardly. Ye saye hee doth not receiue the substaunce inwardly: but without violation: *Ergo, with violation he receiueth the substaunce inwardly. Yee saye, that the Mouse cannot violate Christes bodye. But he violateth the substaunce that hee eateth. And this your proper speache doth importe as much, as that the Mouse should eate the sacrament to as great effecte▪ and the same thing, as doth the vnworthy receiuer. For if that be the cause that shee properly eateth not the body of Christ, because she doth not feede vppon it spiritually nor corporally, nor receiueth it to any inducement of immortality, as ye say: then it followeth, that the vnbeleuer and the * Mouse receiueth both one thinge. And yet it cannot be denied but the * Mouse will liue with consecrated bread, & then ye must graunt the absurditie, that a substaunce is nourished and fed onely with accidentes.

Milles.

Mens bodyes be fedde with Christes body, as with immortall meate, by reason of the Godhead annexed to eternal life: but mens bodyes bee corporally nourished with qualities and formes of bread and wine: * and we deny, that by the sacramentall eatyng any grosse humor turned into bloud, is made myraculously in the body.

Bland.

Where it can not bee denied that a man may liue, and naturally be nourished in his naturall body with the Sacramentall bread & wine consecrated: ye cannot auoyd that: but then yee turne to the spirituall worshipping of mans bodye, by Christes body and Godhead annexed whiche is nothing to put away the absurditie, that either a mans naturall body shoulde be fedde naturally with accidentes, or els to haue them chaunged into grosse humours. But ye say, mens bodyes be corporally noureshed with quallities and fourmes of bread and wyne: * and thē must ye needes graunt that qualities and quantities must be made substaunce in man. For ex eisdem sunt & nutriuntur mixta, or els is al that is the nutriment in man, acciden^l•es and no substaunce.

Milles.

If the forms of bread & wine be burned, or worms engendred, it is no derogation to the body of Christ, because the presence of his bodye ceaseth to be there, and no substaunce commeth agayne,

Bland.

*Ye graunt here that a substaunce may be made of accidentes, as ashes or woormes: but I thinke you will haue it by your myracles, and this I count more absurditie then y^e other, that Christes body should cease to be there and no substance to come agayne: for no worde in all the whole Bible seemes to serue you for the ceasing of hys presence, though we graunted you which we doe not, that it were there.

God almighty open your hart, if it be his will & pleasure, to see the truth. And if I thought not my death to be at hand, I would aunswere you to all the rest, in these and all other my doinges.

I submit my selfe to our saueour Iesus Christe and his holy word, desiring you in the bowels of Christ to do the same.

Your Oratour in the Lord, Iohn Bland.

¶The last appearaunce and examination of Mayster Bland.

Hitherto you haue heard the troublesome handelyng of this faythfull and blessed seruaunt of God, I. Bland, toste to and fro, from prison to prison, from Session to Session.* At last he was brought before the Bishop of Douer, the Commissarye, and the Archdeacon at Caunterbury, the thirteenth daye of Iune. The name of this Byshop was Richard Thorne-ton. The Commissary was Robert Collins: whome the Cardinall by his letters patent had substitute to his factor, before his comming ouer to Englande. The Archdeacon was Nicholas Harpsfield. Under these a great sorte of innocent Lambes of Christ were cruelly entreated and slayne at Caunterbury, amongst whome this foresayd Mayster Bland was one of the first:* who as it is sayd, being brought before the said Bishop and Colleagues, whiche were Iohn Frankeshe, Nicholas Sheterden, Thomas Thacker. Umfrey Middleton, William Coker, was examined of articles. To whome it was objected by the Commissarye, whether hee beleue that Christ is really in the sacrament, or no. &c. To this he aunswered, and sayd: that hee beleueed that Christ is in the sacrament, as he is in all other good bodies: so that he iudged not Christ to be really in the sacrament▪

Wherupon the day being Monday, he was bid to appeare agayne vpon Wednesday nexte,* and from thence he was deferred agayne to monday following, being the xx. Iune in the same Chapterhouse, then to heare further what should be done, in case he would not relent to theyr minde.

The whiche daye and place, he appearing, as before,* was required to saye his minde playnely and fully to the foresayd articles, being agayne repeated to him. Whiche articles commonly and in course they vse to object to their Examinates which he wrought before them, as here now followeth, and need not much hereafter, specially for that Countrey of Kent, to be repeated.

¶Articles ministred by Richard Byshop of Douer, to mayster Bland, and likewise to the rest followyng after him.

1. Firste, that thou arte of the Dioces of Caunterbury,* and so subiect to the iurisdiction of the Archbyshop there.
2. Item, that thou art a Christen man, and doest professe the lawes of God, and fayth of Christes Catholicke Church, and the determination of the same.
3. Item, that all Parsons which teach, preache, beleuee, affirme, holde, mayntayne, or saye within the Dioces of Caunterburye, otherwise then our holy mother y^e church doth, are excommunicate persons and heretickes, and as excommunicate and heretickes ought to be named, reputed, and taken.
4. Item, that thou, contrary to the Catholicke faith and determination of our mother holy Church, within the Dioces of Caunterbury, hast openly spokē, mayntayned, holden, affirmed, and beleued, and yet doest hold, maynteine, affirme, and beleue, that in the blessed Sacrament of the aaltar, vnder the fourmes of bread and wyne, there is not the very bodye and bloude of our Sauoure Iesus Christ in substaunce, but onely a token, signe and remembraunce thereof, and that the very body and bloud of christ is onely in heauen, and no where els.

5. Item, that thou contrary to the Catholicke fayth, and determination of our mother holye Church, hast wythin this Dioces of Caunterbury openly spoken, sayde, maintayned, holden, affirmed, and beleued, and yet doest holde, maynteine, affirme, and beleue, that it is agaynst Gods word, that the sacrament of Christes Church shoulde be ministred in an vnknowne tongue: and that no man safely and with a safe conscience, or without perill of sinne, receiueth any sacrament ministred in any tongue that he vn|derstandeth not.

6. Item, that thou, contrary to the Catholicke fayth of our mother holy Church, hast, and yet doest hold opinion, and say: that is against Gods word, that the sacrament of the aaltar shoulde be ministred in one kinde: and that no man may with a safe conscience so receiue it.

7, Item, that the premisses be true, and that there is a common fame vppon them within the Dyoces of Caunterbury.

The aunsweres of Mayster Bland to the foresayd Articles.

1. TO these articles M. Bland aunswearing agayne in order as they were objected to him,* sayth to the first graunting the same, that he was a priest, and of the Dyoces of Caunterbury.

2. To the second also he aunswered affirmatiuely.

3. Item, to thirde hee aunswereth, that the Article is true, meaning the Catholicke Church to bee Chrystes Church.

4. Item, in the fourth Article, as touching the first parte of the Article, he doth confesse, that he hath preached and taught it, as it is contayned in the same. And as touching the seconde parte of the article, he doth confesse, that he doth nowe also hold and say, as he preached and taught before.

5. Item, to the fift article he graunteth.

6. To the sixt, hee hath preached held and doth holde, as it is conteyned in the article.

7. Item, to the last article he graunteth the same. &c.

This done, and his aunsweres and confession taken, respite was geuen hym yet a few dayes to deliberate with himselfe. So the xxv. day of the sayde moneth of Iune hee Page 1673 making his appearing agayne in the sayd Chapterhouse, there openly and boldly withstoode the authoritie of the Pope, whereupon his sentence was read, and so he condemned and committed to the secular power. Touching the forme and tenor of the sentence,* because all theyr sentences, of course agree in one, read before in y^e historye of Maister Rogers.

¶The prayer of Maister Bland before his death.

THE Lorde Iesus, for whose loue I doe willingly leaue thys life,* and desire rather the bitter death of this crosse, wyth the losse of all earthly thinges, then to abide the blasphemye of thy holye name, or els to obey man in breaking thy Commaundements, thou seest, Oh Lord, that where as I might liue in worldly wealth to worship false Gods, and honoure thy enemye, I chose rather the tormentes of this body, and losse of this my life, and haue counted al thinges but vile, dust, and dung, that I might winne thee: Which death is more deare vnto me, then thousands of gold and siluer. Such loue, Oh Lorde hast thou layde vp in my brest, that I hunger for thee, as the Deere that is wounded desireth the soyle. Send thy holy comfort, O Lorde, to ayd, comfort, and strengthen this weake peece of earth, whiche is voyde of all strength of it selfe. Thou remembrest, O Lorde, that I am but dust and not able to doe any thing that is good. Therefore, O Lorde as thou of thy accustomed goodnes hast bidden me to this banket, and counted me worthy to drinke of thine owne cup amōgst thine elect: geue me strength against this element, that as it is to my sight most ••kesome and terrible, so to my minde it may be at thy commaundement, as an obedient seruauant, sweete and pleasaunt: and through the strength of thy holye spirite, I may passe through the strength of this fire into thy bosome, according vnto thy promise, and for this mortalitie, to receaue immortalitie, and for this corruptible, to put on incorruptible. Accept thys burnt offering and sacrifice, O Lorde, not for the sacrifice it selfe, but for thy deare sonnes sake my Sauour: for whose testimony I offer this free wil offering with all my hart and with al my soule. O heauenly father, forgeue me my sinnes, as I forgeue the whole world. O sweete Sauour, spread thy winges ouer me. O God, graunt me thy holy Ghost, through whose mercifull inspiration I am come hither. Conducte me vnto euerlasting lyfe. Lord into thy handes I commend my spirite: Lord Iesus receaue my soule. So be it.

¶The history of Iohn Frankesh, Humfrey Middleton, Nicholas Sheterden.

*HAuyng now passed ouer the examinations of Maister Bland, let vs further proceed to the rest of his felowes concaptiues, being ioyned the same time with him both in the like cause, and like affliction. The names of whome were Iohn Frankesh, Nicholas Sheterden, Humfrey Middleton, Thacker, and Cocker: of whome Thacker onely gaue back. The rest constātly standing to the truth, were altogether condemned by the Suffragan of Caunterburye, the 25. daye of Iune, the yeare aboue expressed. Touching whose examinations, I shall not need long to stand, for somuche as the articles ministred agaynst them, were all one: so in their aunsweres they little or nothyng disagreed, as hereafter (by the Lords help) you shal heare. In the meane time, because Nicholas Sheterden in his examinations had a little more large talke with the Archdeacon and the Commissary, I will first beginne with the same.

¶The first examination or reasoning of Nicholas Sheterden with M. Harpsfield Archdeacon, and M. Collins the Commissary, for the which they sent him to prison.

*First the Archdeacon and Commissary affirmed that the very wordes of Christ, when he sayd: This is my bodye, did chaunge the substaunce, without any other interpretation or spirituall meaning of the wordes.

Shet.

Then belike when Christ sayd: This cup is my bloud, the substaunce of his Cup was chaunged into hys bloud, without any other meaning, and so the cup was changed, and not the wine.

Arch.

Not so: for when Christ sayde: This cup is my bloud, be meant not the cup, but the wine in the cup.

Shet.

If Christ spake one thing, and meant an other, then the bare wordes did not chaunge the substaunce: but there must be a meaning sought as well of the bread, as of the cup.

Arch.

There must be a meaning sought of the cup otherwise then the words stand. But of the bread it must be vnderstand onely as it standeth, without any other meaning.

Shet.

Then do ye make one halfe of Christes institution a figure, or borrowed speache, and the other halfe a playne speach, and so ye deuide Christes supper.

Arch.

Christ meant the wyne, and not the cup, though he sayd: This cup is my bloud.

Shet.

Then shew me whether the words which the priestes doe speake ouer the cup, do chaunge the substaunce, or whether the minde of the priest doth it?

Arch.

The minde of the priest doth it, and not the words.

Shet.

If the minde of the prieste doth it, and not y^e words, if the Priest then doe minde hys harlot, or any other vaine thing, that thing so minded was there made, and so the people doe worship the priestes harlot in stead of Christes bloud: and agayne, none of the people can tell when it is Christes bloud, or when it is not, seeing the matter standeth in the minde of the Priest. For no man can tell what the priest meaneth, but himselfe: and so are they euer in daunger of committing idolatry.

Then was the Archdeacon somewhat moued, & sate hym downe, and sayde to the Commissarye? I pray you maister Commissary speake you to him an other while,* for they are vnreasonable and peruerse aunsweres, as euer I heard of. Then stode vp the Commissary, and sayd.

Commis.

Your argumentes is much agaynst your selfe: for ye graunt that the bread is a figure of Christes body▪ but the Cup can be no figure of his bloude, nor yet his verye bloud: and therefore Christ did not meane the cup, but the wine in the cup.

Shet.

My argument is not agaynst me at all: for I do not speake it to proue that the cup is his bloud, nor the figure of his bloud, but to proue that the bare wordes being spoken of the priest, do not chaunge the substaunce no more of the bread then they do chaunge the cup into bloud.

Commis.

It coulde not be spoken of the Cup, when hee sayde: This Cup is my bloud, but he meant the wyne in the cup.

Shet.

Then it remaineth for you to answere my question to the Archdeacon, that is, whether the minde of the priest when he speaketh ouer the cup, doth chaunge it into bloud or the bare wordes.

Commis.

Both together doth it, the wordes and y^e mind of the priest together: yea the intent and the wordes together doth it.

Shet.

If the wordes and intentes together doe chaunge the substaunce, yet must the cup be his bloud,* and not the wyne, for as much as the wordes are, This cup is my bloud, and the intent, ye say, was the wyne: or els the words take none effect, but the intent onely.

After, the Commissary in his chamber sayd, it was the intent of the priest before he went to masse, wythout the wordes: for the Priest did intend to doe as holy Church had ordayned, then the intent made the sacrament to take effect.

Shet.

If the Sacramentes take effect of the intent of the Priest, and not of Gods word, then manye Parishes hauing a Priest that intendeth not wel, are vtterly deceiued,* both in Baptising, and also worshipping that thing to be God, whiche is but bread, because for lacke of the priestes intente, the wordes doe take none effecte in it: so that by this, it is euer doubtfull whether they worship Christe, or bread, because it is doubtfull what the Priestes doe intende.

Commis.

Then the Commissary would proue to me, that Chrystes Manhood was in two places at one tyme,* by these woordes of Christ in Ioh. the thyrd Chapter, where he sayth, No man ascendeth vpp to heauen, but hee that came downe from heauen, that is to say, the sonne of man whiche is in heauen. By this he would proue, that Christe was then in heauen, and in earth also, naturally and bodily.

Shet.

This place and other must needes be vnderstand for the vnitie of persons, in that Christe was God & man, and yet the matter must be referred to the Godhead, or els ye must fall into great error.

Commis.

That is not so: for it was spoken of the manhoode of Christ, for as much as he sayth, the sonne of man whiche is in heauen.

Shet.

If yee will needes vnderstande it to be spoken of Christes manhoode,* then must ye fall into the error of the Anabaptistes, which deny that Christ took fleshe of y^e virgin Mary: for if there be no bodye ascended vpp, but that whiche came downe, where is then his incarnation? for then he brought his body downe with him.

Commis.

Loe how ye seeke an error in me, and yet see not how ye erre your selfe. For it cannot be spoken of the Godhead, except ye graunt that God is passible, for God cannot come downe because he is not passible.

Shet.

If that were a good argumente that God could not come down because he is not passible: then it might be said Page 1674 by the like argument, that God coulde not sit, and then heauen is not his seate, and then say as some do, that God hath no right hand for Christ to sit at.

Commis.

Then the Commissary affirmed playnly, that it was true, God hath no right hand in deede.

Shet.

Oh what a spoyle of Christes Religion will thys be, that because we cannot tell howe God came downe, therefore we shall say,* that he came not down at all, and because we cannot tell what maner of hand he hathe, to saye, that he hath no hand at all: and then he cannot reache the vtmost part of the sea. O miserie: at length it will come to passe, that God cannot sit, and then howe can heauen bee his seate, and if heauen be not his seate, then there is no heauen: and then at length I doubt ye wil say there is no God, or els no other God, but such as the heathens Gods are, which cannot goe nor feele.

Commis.

Why, doth not the scripture saye, that God is a spirite, and what hand can a spirite haue?

Shet.

Truth it is, God is a spirit, and therefore is worship'ped in spirit and truth, and as he is a spirite, so hath hee a spirituall power, so hathe hee a spirituall seate, a spirituall hand,* and a spirituall sword: which we shall feele if we go this way to worke, as we beginne. Because wee knowe not what hand God hath: therefore if we say he hath none then it may as well be sayd, there is no Christ.

Then the Commissary sayd, hee woulde talke no more w^t me, & so departed: and also the Commissarye was compelled to graunt, that Christes testament was broken, and his institution was chaunged from that hee left it: but hee sayd, they had power so to doe.

My first aunswearing, after their law was stablished.

BEcause I know ye will desire to heare from mee some certaintie o[•] my estate,* I was called before the Suffra|gā and seuen or eight of the chiefe priestes, & examined of certayne Articles, and then I required to see theyr Cōmission.

They shewed it to me, and sayde, There it is, and the Kinge and Queenes letters, also. Then I desired to haue it read: and so in readyng I perceaued, that on some notable suspition hee might examine vppon two articles: whether Chrystes reall presence were in the Sacrament, and whether the churche of England be of Christes Catholicke Church.

To that I aunswared, that I had bene a prisoner 3. quarters of a yeare, and as I thought wrongfully: reason would therefore that I should aunswaere to those thinges wherefore I was prisoner.*

Suff.

The Suffragan sayd, his Commission was I must aunswere directly, yea or nay.

Shet.

This Commission (sayde I) was not generall to examine whome he will, but on iust suspicion.

Suff:

He sayd: I was suspected, and presented to hym.

Shet.

Then I required that the accusation might be shewed.

Suff.

He sayd: he was not bound to shew it, but he commaunded me in the king and Queenes name, to aunswer directly.

Shet.

And I as a subiect do require of you iustice for that I haue done: I aske no fauour.

Suff.

He sayde I was suspected.

Shet.

I bad him proue that suspicion, or what cause he had to suspect.

Suff.

Thou was cast into prison for that cause.

Shet.

That was a pretty suspicion, because I had suffered imprisonment contrary to Gods law and the realme, that therefore I must now for a mendes be examined of suspition without cause, to hyde all the wrong done to me before. For when I was cast into prison, there was no law but I might speake as I did: therefore in that poynte I could be no more suspect, then you which preached y^e same yourself not long before.

Suff.

That was no matter to thee what I preached.

Shet.

*Well, yet in the king and Queenes name I must aunswere directly: and therefore I require as a subiecte, y^t ye do not extend beyond your Commission, but proue me suspect, more then you your selfe.

Milles.

Then sayd M. Milles, I had written to my mother and he did see the letter, wherin I perswaded my mother to my opinions.*

Shet.

In that I did but my duetye, to certifie her I was not prison for any euill. And that was before the lawe also, and therefore no more suspicion was in mee, then was in them which taught the like.

Mill.

Well, yee are required here to aunswere directlye, yea, or no.

Shet.

First then I require of you to proue this suspicion: and thus we tossed to and fro. At last the byshop sayde, hee himselfe did suspect me. I asked wherby?

Suff.

W•ll sayd he, I my selfe did suspect thee, and it is no matter wherby.

Shet.

But your Commission doth not serue you so to doe without iust suspicion.

Suff.

Well, yet did I suspect you.

Shet.

It is not meete for you to bee my accuser, and my Iudge also, for that was too much for one man. And thus manye woordes were multiplied, and they were muche greeued.

Milles.

If you were a Christian man you would not be ashamed of your fayth being required.

Shet.

I am not ashamed in deede, I thanke God,* & if any man do come to me, either to teache or to learne I would declare it, but for asmuch as I perceau you come neither to to teache nor to learne, I holde it beste to aunswere you.

Milles.

If you will not, then will we certifie the kinges Councell.

Sheter.

I am therewith content that you shoulde certifie y^t I had suffered thr•e quarters, prison wrongullye, and therefore I desire to be iustified or condemned, first for that I suffered suche imprisonment: and then I will not refuse to aunswere your articles, though there were a bushell of them. But to say that I woulde aunswere, whereby you shoulde heale all your wrong done to me agaynst the law of God and the realme, I will not.

Here much adoe there was to proue that hee hadde no wrong, and agayn, y^t it was not they that did it.* But hee sayde the Commissary was one of them, he aunswereth no it was the Archdeacon. He sayd, you sate wyth hym, and he asked youre counsell in it, and yet if it were hee, it was your Church, except the archdeacon and you be deuided one from an other. Well sayd they: will ye now deny that ye sayd then, and promise here to submit your selfe henceforth, and ye shalbe deliuered?

Shet.

I am not to much bound to you to graunt, any such promise:* and agayne you shall well know that I woulde not promise to goe crosse the streete for you: but if I did at any tyme offend your law, let me haue the punishment, I aske no fauour.

Then sayd they that it was obstinacie in hym that hee would not aunswere, and a token that his faythe was naught, seeing he was ashamed to vtter it.

Shet.

Nay sayd he, ye shal wel know I am not ashamed of my fayth: but because you do so greedely seeke bloude, I will aunswere onely to that you haue agaynst me.

Suffr.

Nay, you shall aunswere to the articles, or els bee condemned vpon suspicion.

Shet.

I am content with that, yet all men shall know that as ye suspect and can proue no cause, so shall ye condemne me without a matter, and then shall all men knowe yee seeke bloud, and not iustice.

Suffr.

No we seeke not thy bloud, but thy conuersion.

Shet.

That we shall see. For then shal you proue my peruersion first, before you condemne me on your owne suspicion without prooffe of the same: and by that I shal know whether you seeke bloud or no. Many other wordes were betweene them.

At last stept vp one Louels a Lawyer, whiche woulde proue his prisonment not to be wrong, but right,* by olde statutes of Edward the fourth, and Henry. &c. but at last hee was compelled to forsake those statutes from Michaelmas to Christmas, and then he sayd it was no wronge.

To this Nicholas sayde, if he coulde proue that men might wrongfully imprison before a law, and in y^e meane while make lawes, and thē vnder that hide the first wrōg then he sayd true, or els not.

Thus hee kepte the Bandogs at staues ende, not as thinking to escape them: but that I woulde see (sayde hee) the Foxes leape aboue the ground for my bloud if they can reach it (so it be the will of God:) yet we shal see them gape, and leape for it.

From Westgate in hast.

By yours Nicholas Sheterden.

Notes of Nicholas Sheterden agaynst the false worshippe and oblation of the Sacrament.

THE holy signe in steede of the thing signified, is serui•e seruitude as S. Augustine termeth it, when the breade in the sacrament is by common and solemne errour worshipped in steade of the fleshe assumed of the worde of God.

There was no mension of worshipping the creatures at the feast or first supper that Christ did celebrate:* therefore the saying of Christ concerning diuorce, may well be applied Page 1675 to them: it was not so from the beginning, nor shall be to the end.

The once made oblation of Christes is hereby derogate, when this sacramentall oblation and offeryng of thankesgeuing is beleued to be propiciatory, and that it purgeth the soule, as well of the liuing as of the dead, agaynst this saying to the Hebrues:*With one onely oblation he hath made perfect for euer those that are sanctified. Agayne, Where is remission, there is no more oblation for sinnes, making vs cleane by him.

This word (by hymselfe) hath a vehemencye and pyth, that driueth all Priestes frō authoritie to enterprise suche oblation, where as what he himselfe doth by himselfe, hee leaueth not for other to do. So seemeth our Purgatorye already past and done, not to come and remayning to be done.

His examination before the Byshop of Winchester then Lord Chauncellour.

I Was called into a Chamber before the L. Chauncellour the Suffragā,^{*} and other, Priestes I thinke for the moste part. He standing to the table called me to him, & because I saw the Cardinall was not there, I bowed my selfe and stode neare.

Then sayd hee, I haue sent for you, because I heare you are indyted of heresie: and being called before y^e Cōmissioners yee will nor aunswere not submit your selfe.

I sayd, if it like you, I did not refuse to aunswer: but I did playnely aunswere, that I had bene in prison long tyme, and reason it was that I shoulde be charged or discharged for y^t, & not to be examined of articles to hide my wrong imprisonment, neither did I know any inditemēt agaynst me. If there were any, it could not be iuste, for I was not abroad since the law was made.

Winchest.

Well, yet if suche suspition be of you, if you bee a Christian ye will declare that it is not true,^{*} and so purge your selfe.

Shet.

I thought it sufficient to answere to myne offences. &c. trusting that they would lay no such burden vpon me, whereby the wrong done to me might bee couered, but I would be proued to haue wrong or right.

Winch.

He sayd, if thou wilt declare thy selfe to y^e Church to be a Christian, thou shalt go, and then haue a writte of wrong imprisonment. &c.

Shet.

I sayd I was not minded to sue nowe, but require to haue right iustice: but to make a promise I wil not: but if I offend the law, then punish accordingly. For it might be that my conscience was not perswaded, nor woulde be in prison, seeing those things which I haue learned, were by Gods law openly taught and receaued by authoritie of the Realme. And he sayd, it was neuer receaued that I might speake agaynst the sacrament. I sayd agaynst some opinion of the sacrament it was openly taught.

Winch.

^{*}By no law, and that was notable to consider, y^t all that while God preserued that, so that no lawe coulde passe agaynst it.

Shet.

I sayd their law did not only perswade me, but this most: when they preached vnto vs, they tooke payne to set out the word of God in our tongue, so that we may read & iudge whether they say true or no, but now they take the light from vs, and woulde haue vs beleue it, because they say so, which is to me a great perswasion.

Winch.

It was not a few that coulde be your guide in vn'derstanding,* but the Doctors and all the whole Church: Now whome wouldest thou beleue? either the few, or the many?

Shet.

I did not beleue for the few, nor for the manye, but onely for that he bryngeth the word, and sheweth it to me to be so according to the processe thereof. &c.

Winch.

Well sayd he, then if the Arian come to thee with scripture, thou wilt beleue hym, if he shewe this texte: My father is greater then I.

Shet.

I aunsweared, no my Lorde, he must bring me also the contrarye places and proue them both true, where hee sayth: My father and I am one.

Winch.

Yea, sayd he, that is by charitie, as we be one with hym.

Shet.

I sayd, that glose would not stand with the rest of the scripture, where he sayd: I am the very same, that I say to you: He sayd the truth, and the truth was God. &c. wyth much such lyke. And here he made many wordes (but very gently) of the Sacrament: Likewise Christ sayd (quoth he) it was his body: yea that is to say) a figure of his body & how men did not consider the word was god, and God the word,* and so prouoked me with suche temptation: but I let hym alone, and sayd nothing.

So after many wordes he came to the Churches faith and comely orders of ceremonies and images. And then I ioyned to him agayne with the Commaundementes.

Winch.

He sayd that was done that no false thing shoulde be made, as the heathen would worship a Cat because she killed Myse.

Shet.

I sayd that it was playne that the lawe forbad not onely such, but euen to make an image of God to any maner of likenes.

Winch.

Where finde ye that?

Shet.

Forsoothe in the law where God gaue them y^e commaundementes, for hee sayd: Ye sawe no shape, *but hearde a voyce onely: and added a reason why: least they should after make images and marre themselues, so that God woulde not shew his shape, because they should haue no image of him which was the true God. &c.

Winch.

He sayd I made a goodly interpretation.

Shet.

I sayd no, it was the text.

Then was the Bible called for, and when it came, hee bad finde it, and I shoulde strayght be confounded with myne owne wordes: so that if there wer^e any grace wyth me: I would trust myne own wit no more: & when I looked, it was Latin.

Winch.

Why sayd he, ye can ye read 〈...〉 ▪

Shet.

No. then was the English Bi••e brought. He bad me finde it: and so I read it aloud, and then h^e sayde loe here thou mayst see: this is no more to forbid the image of God, then of any other beast, foule or fishe (the place was Deut. .4.) I said it did playnly forbid to make any of these to the Image of God, * because no man might know what shape he was of. Therefore might no man say of any Image, which is an image of God,

Winch.

Well yet by your leaue, so much as was seene we may, that is of Christ, of the holy ghost: and the father appeared to Daniel, like an old * man. &c.

Shet.

That is no prooffe that wee may make Images contrarye to the commaundement: for thoughte the holye Ghost appeared like a Doue, yet was he not like in shape, but in certayne quallities, and therefore when I sawe the Doue which is Gods creature, in deede I might remember the spirite to be simple and louing. &c. And with y^t he was somewhat moued, and sayd I had learned my lesson, and asked who taught me: with many wordes: and he said he would proue howe good and profitable Images were to teache the vnlearned. &c.

Shet.

At the last I sayd my Lorde, although I were able to make neuer so good a glose vpon the commaundements yet obedience is better then all our good intentes, & much adoe we had, at last he saw, he sayd, what I was, and how he had sent for me for charitie sake to talke with me, but now he would not medle, and sayd my wrong imprisonment could not excuse me, but I must cleare my selfe.

Sheter.

I sayd that was easie for me to doe. For I had not offended.

Winch.

He sayd I could not scape so: there I was deceyued.

Shet.

Well, then I am vnder the law &c?

Arch.

The archdeacon was there called in for me, and he layd to me,* that with such arrogancy and stoutnes as neuer was heard, I behaued my selfe before him, wheras he was minded with such mercy towarnes me &c. and many lyes he laid to me, that I was sent home til an other time: and I woulde not be contented but went out of y^e Church with such an outcry as was notable.

Shetter.

I declared, that he falsely herein reported me, & brought in the lawes then in the Realme, and y^e Queenes Proclamation, that none of her subiectes should be compelled till the law were to compell, and that I rehearsed y^e same in the Court for me, and I did vse him then (said I) as I vse your grace now, and no otherwise.

Winch.

He said, that I did not vse my selfe very wel now.

Shet.

I sayd, I had offerred my selfe to be bayled, and to conferre with them, when and where they would.

Winch.

He sayd, I should not conferre, but be obedient• I sayd let me goe and I will not desire to conferre neither: & when I offended, let them punish me, and so departed.

By your brother, Nicholas Sheterden prisoner for the truthe in Wes•ga•e.

The last examination with the condemnation of Mayster Bland, Iohn Frankesh,* Nicholas Shetterden Vmfrey Middleton.

AND thus much touching the particular, & seuerall examinations of Nicholas Shetterden, & of M. Bland. Now to touch somthing also of the other Martyrs, which the same time were examined,* and suffered with thē together, to witte, Umfrey Middleton of Ashford, and Iohn Frankesh Uirare of Roluynden in the Dyoces of Kent aboute Page 1676 mentioned, here first would be declared the Articles whiche publickely in their last examinations were iointly and seuerally ministred vnto them by the foresaid Thornton Byshop of Douer. But forasmuche as these articles being ordinary & of course, are already expressed in the story of M. Bland: as may appeare before. It shall not therfore be needefull, to make any new rehearsall thereof.

To these seuen articles then being propounded to the fiue persons aboute named, to wit, Iohn Frankesh, Iohn Bland, Nicholas Shetterden, Umfrey Middleton, and one Thacker, first aunswere Iohn Frankesh somewhat doubtfully, desiring further respite to be geuen him of 14. dayes to deliberate with himselfe. Whiche was graunted Maister Bland answered flattely and roundly, as before ye heard. Nicholas Sheterden, and Umfrey Middleton answered to the first, and second articles affirmatiuely. To the third concerning the Catholicke Church after a sorte they graunted. To the fourth and fift and sixt touching the reall presence, and the sacramēt to be ministred in the Latin tongue, and in one kind, they refused vtterly to sweare Sheterden sayd he would not aunswere thereto before the cause were determined why he was imprisoned, and so stil remayned prisoners, before the lawes of Parliament receiued. &c. Middleton added moreouer and confessed, that he beleued in hys owne God, saying, my liuyng God, & no dead God. &c. Thacker onely relented and was content to take penaunce.* Thus the foresayd foure vpon these aunsweres were condemned by the Byshop of Douer, the 25. day of Iune. an. 1555.

The burning of foure Martyrs.

And so being geuen to the seculer power, they were burned at Cant. the 12. of Iuly at two seuerall stakes,* but all in one fire together, where they in the sight of God and of his Aungels, and before men, like true souldiours of Iesus Christ, gaue a constant testimony to the truth of his holy Gospell.

The prayer of Nicholas Sheterden, before his death.

O Lord my God and Sauour, whiche art Lord in heauen and earth, maker of all things visible and inuisible, I am the creature and worke of thy handes: Lord God looke vpon me, and other thy people, which at this time are oppressed of the worldly minded for thy lawes sake: Yea lord thy law it self is now trodē vnder foote, and mens inuentions exalted aboue it, and for that cause do I, and many thy creatures refuse the glory, prayse, and commoditie of this life, and do chuse to suffer aduersitie, and to be banished: yea to be burnt with the bookes of thy worde, for the hopes sake that it is layd vp in store. For Lorde thou knowest if we would but seeme to please men in thinges contrary to thy word, we might by thy permission enioy these commodities that other do, as wife children, goodes, and frendes, which al I knowlege to be thy giftes, geuen to the end I should serue thee. And now Lord that the worlde will not suffer me to enioye them, except I offend thy lawes, behold I geue vnto thee my whole spirite soule and body, and loe, I leaue here all the pleasures of this life and doe nowe leaue the vse of them for the hope sake of eternall life purchased in Christes blood,* and promised to all them that fight on his side, and are content to suffer with hym for his truth when soeuer the world and the deuill shall persecute the same.

O father I doe not presume vnto thee:* in mine owne righteousnes: no, but onely in the merites of thy deare sonne my sauour For the whiche excellent gifte of saluation I cannot worthily prayse thee, neither is any sacrifice worthy, or to be accepted with thee, in comparison of oure bodyes mortified, and obedient vnto thy will, and now Lorde:* what soeuer rebellion hathe bene, or is found in my members, agaynst thy will, yet do I here geue vnto thee my body to the death, rather then I will vse anye straunge worshipping, whiche I beseech the accept at my hande for a pure sacrifice: let this torment be to me the last enemy destroyed, euen death, the ende of misery, and the beginning of all ioy, peace, and solace: and when the tyme of resurrection commeth, then let me enioy agayne these members then glorified, which now be spoyled and consumed by the fire. O Lord Iesu receaue my spirite into thy handes, Amen.

Letters of Nicholas Shetterden, and first a letter to his mother.

AFter my humble and bounden duety remembred, welbeloued Mother,* this shalbe to wishe you increase of grace and and godly wisdom, that yee may see and perceiue the craftye bewitching of Sathan our mortal enemy, which as I haue diuers times declared vnto you, doth not openly shewe himselfe in hys owne likenes, but vnder colour of deuotion deceiue them that keep not a dilligent eye vpon him,* but hauing confidence in mans traditions and customes of the worlde, leauing the commaundementes of God, and Testament of his Sonne Christ Iesus our Lord, doe grow more into superstition & hipocrisie, then into wisdom and true holynesse. For this is most true, that Sathan the enemy of soules, dothe by his ministers make many beleue, that those thinges whiche they compell vs vnto for theyr bellyes sake, haue many godly significations, although they be most contrary to Gods will, as doubtlesse they be, euen as did the serpent in Paradise to our first mother Eue. What (sayd he) hath God commaunded yee shall not eate of all the trees in the Garden? The woman sayd of the fruites of the trees in the Garden we may eate: but of the tree in the midst of the Garden, sayd God, see ye eate not, least ye dye.* Euē so our Ministers now a dayes say: hath God commaunded ye shall not make you anye Image or likenes of any thing? Yea forsoothe. Tush say they, what harme can they doe? May we not remember God the better whē we see his Image or Picture? For they are good bookes for the lay men: but in deed they be better for the priestes, because they receiue the offeringes.

And looke howe truely the promise of the serpent was kepte with Eue, so is the perswasion of our Priests found true to vs.* For as Adam and Eue did become like God in knowing good and euill, so are we in remembring God by hys Image. For Adams eyes were so open, that he lost both innocencye and righteousnes, and was become most miserable of all creatures: and euen so we remember Christ so well by Images, that we forget his commaundements, and count his Testament confirmed in his bloud for starke madnesse or heresie: so miserably haue wee remembred him, that of all people we are most blinde.* and this doth followe vpon our presumption, when wee remember God by breking of hys law, and therefore surely except we repent shortly, God wil remember vs in his wrath, & reward vs with his plagues: as sure as there is a God it will come to passe.

But I know the craftines of them herein (I thanke God) whiche wil say: Where went he to schoole? Is he wiser then our great Doctours that studied all their life? And loe, they saye that it is good hay, although we smell it musty our selues, yet must we beleue it is sweete, and then pay them well for theyr so saying, and all is safe. But I might saye agayne: What sir, be ye wiser then Christ, and God hys father, or the holy Ghost? What wiser then the Prophetes, and the holy Apostles, and all the holye Martyrs? I pray you sir, where had you your high learning? It is higher thē God (being in heauen) is able to teache, or haue ye set it lower in hell then euer Christ durst to venter? For it is some straunge learning belike, that Christ nor his Apostles could neuer attaine to the knowledge of it. But vayne men are neuer without some shift: For peradventure they will not be ashamed to saye, that Christ cōming on his fathers message, did forget half his errād by the way. For I dare say, the greater halfe of theyr ceremonyes were neuer commaunded by Christ: Yea I doubt it would bee hard to finde one in the Churche perfectly as hee left: so Romishly hath Antichrist turned the church vpsidedown for lukers sake.

Beloued Mother, as I oftentimes sayde vnto you, euen so now I beseeche you from my very hart roote in Christ, to consider Page 1677 your owne soules health is offered you, doe not cast it off: we haue not long time here. Why should we deceiue our selues either for ease of our fleshe, or for the winning of this worldes treasure? I know that some will say to you, why should wee condemne our fathers that liued thus? God forbid that wee shoulde condemne any that did according to their knowledge But let vs take heede that they condemne not vs: for if they had hearde the word as we haue, and had bene warned as wee haue, it is to bee thought that they would more thankfully haue receaued it thē we do:* yea they were more faythfull in that they knewe, then many now are. Therefore they shall be our condemnation, if wee doe not embrace this grace offered vs. And surely looke how many of them God will accept and saue, those shall wee neuer see, nor haue any part among them: for our disobedience is more great then their ignoraunce. Wherefore if we will meete our fathers in blisse and ioye, let vs not refuse his mercye offered more largely to vs, then to them, euen according to Christes promise, which sayd, after such great ignoraunce, as to seek hym from country to country, and finde him not. Yet shall the Gospel (sayth he) be preached in all the world, and then shall the ende come.

And now let vs knowe the time of our visitation, and not turne backe agayne, seeing we are once deliuered: for surely God will not beare it at our handes to turne backward.* Oh remember Lots life God must needes punish out of hand our shamefull backesliding, eyther with induration and hardnes of hart, so that they shall persecute his Church and true seruauntes, or els reward it with open vengeance and plagues. And therefore good mother, accept this my simple letter as a fruite of my loue & obedience to you. Would God we might be so knitte in fayth & trust in Gods word and promises here in this lyfe, as wee myght together enioye the blisse and consolation of eternall lyfe: which I desire and seeke aboue all worldly treasure, as ye partly know. If I would seeke the good will of men contrarye to my conscience, I could make some my frendes, whiche now peradventure are ielous ouer me amisse.* But I thanke God, let them waye the matter betweene God and theyr consciences, and they haue no iust cause so to do: neuerthesse I would they would yet refrain and put theyr matter and myne into the euen ballaunce of gods most holy worde, there to be wayed by the mynde of the holye Ghost, expressed vnto vs by the holy Patriarckes, and Prophetes and by Iesus Christ our onely Sauour and Mediatour, and by his holy Apostles: and then I doubt not, but our matter shall be ended with peace, and ioyfulnes of hart, whiche God graunt vs for his mercies sake. Amen.

Your owne childe Nicholas Shetterden prisoner for the trueth in Westgate. 1555.

A letter to his brother VWater Sheterden,

*I Wishe you healthe in Christe, true knowledge of hys word & a faithful obedient hart vnto y^e same. It is shew^ded me my brother, y^t yee willed me by a letter made to a frend of yours, to perswade with me, that I shoulde be ruled by mine Uncle, which saith he wil bestow his goods very largely vpon me, If I shoulde not stand to highe in mine own conceipt. But my good brother, I trust ye doe not iudge so euill of me, that I should haue a fayth to sell for money. For though he or you were able to geue me the treasure of the whole countrey, yet I thanke my Lorde God, I do iudge it but an heape of dongue, in respecte of y^e treasure hid wⁱn: yet I do esteme a buckle of your shoe, if it come with good wil. And for to be counselled and ruled by him or you, or any other my frends: I do not, neither haue refused it, if they require no more of me then my power, & that which belongeth to mortall men. But if they require of me any thing which pertayneth to God onely, there is neither high nor low, frend nor foe, I trust in God, shall get it of me, nor yet the Aungels in heauen.

For though I be not learned (as the vayne men of the world call learning) yet I thanke my Lorde God,* I haue learned out of Gods booke, to know God from his creatures, and to know Christ from hys sacramentes, and to put a difference betweene the merites of Christes Passion and hys Supper, & a difference betwene y^e water of Baptisme, and the holy Ghost, and not to mixe and mingle all thinges confusely together, so that if one aske me a question or a reason of my fayth, I must say thus, I beleue as holy Church beleueeth: if he aske me what is the order of that fayth, I should be so ignoraunt that I could not discern God from his creatures, nor Christ from his sacramentes. If I should so monstrously vtter my faythe, that I were not able to iudge betweene Christes byrth and his buriall, nor which were first, of his mortification, and hys glorification, who would beleue that my faith wer sound?

For some affirme that Christ did not geue to his Apostles a mortall and a passible bodye, but an immortall & glorified body, so that he should haue a glorified bodye before his death & so his glorification was before hys resurrection: and that he was risen before he was crucified, and crucified before hys Baptisme, and then they may as well say, he was Baptised before his Byrth, and borne before hee was conceiued, and conceiued before he was promised & that were euen right Antichrist to turne al things backward, & then say: Oh ye must beleue, for God is almighty he can do all things &c. Truth it is that God is almighty in deede,* and yet I may not beleuee thinges contrarye to hys word, that Christes body was glorified before he dyed: for Gods omnipotency doth not stand in thinges contrary to hys will, but in performyng his will at his pleasure in tyme, Neither doth he require of vs to iudge or beleue of his almighty power, that he hath made the ende of the world to come, before the beginning, or yet the fruit to come before y^e blossome, & yet is he neuertheles almighty.

But if peradventure yee shall thinke with youre selfe, Why, they are learned:* it were maruell but they shoulde know what is the trueth, as well as other whiche neuer kept no such study. &c. To that I answere, that if they had studied Gods word the author of truth, as they haue done Logicke, and Duns, with the Legend of lyes, they shuld haue bene as expert in the truth, as they be now in balde reasons. But thus hath God fulfilled his promise, y^t suche should be deluded with lyes, which would not beleue nor walke in his truth.

And agayne: this is a good cause to make vs thynke surely, that thys was the cause that God gaue them ouer at the first to erreure, after the Apostles time by litle & litle, as they grewe in sinne. For seeing wee had hys trueth now among vs a few yeares, because we did not obey vn^{to} it, we see what a sodayne chaunge God hathe brought vpon vs for our sinnes sake. And why shuld not we think that this and such lyke disobedience was the cause y^t God tooke his word from all Christendome at the first, and cast a darkenes vpon them that would not walke in his light.* For it is euident enough to see how lyke theyr doynges be to Christes and hys Apostles, and that seene, eyther wee must iudge Christes doings very slender, and theirs good or els that in deede they be the very Antichristes, whiche should come and turne all thinges out of frame. Thus I haue bene bold to trouble you, which I trust shall not bee altogether in vayne. Pray for me, as I doe for you.

Your brother Nicholas Shetterden, prisoner for the truth in Westgate.

An other letter to hys brother.

GOd, whiche is the geuer of all goodnes, and that freely for hys loue to vs (not onely without our desertes, but contrary to the same) graunt you my brother suche encrease of Godlye knowledge and loue vnto the vertues thereunto belonging,* as may geue you such a tast in heavenly things that all treasures of earthly thinges may sauoure to you, as in deede they are, moste vayne and vncertayne, so shall ye neuer take them for no better then they be. Yea, whether God take them from vs, or geue them vnto vs, we shall know our selues neither richer nor poorer before God: But if we lay vp in our hartes the treasure of his word we shall not onely enriche our selues agaynst the tyme of neede, but also arme oure selues agaynst the battell with weapons and harnes, whiche is inuincible, and clothe oure selues agaynst the maryage: For beholde, the Lorde hath called vs of long tyme to the feast, and blowne the trumpet to prepare the battell.* Let vs know the tyme of our visitation, least the Lord sittynge on his mount bewayle our destruction, which he desireth not, but because he is iust to punishe such as continue in sinne, euen as he is mercifull to forgeue the repentaunt that turne in tyme: for so is God that cannot deny hymselfe.

Let vs therfore in this day, while it is called to day, heare his voyce, and not harden your hartes by resistance of hys will, least he sweare in hys wrath, that we shall not enter into hys rest. Let vs count that sufficient, that wee haue spent the tyme past (as S. Peter sayth) after the will of the Gentiles, in eatyng and drynking, chamberyng and wantonnesse, and in abhominable Idolatrye &c. And now let vs assay a new lyfe and trade our members in vertue an other while, least peradventure wee might run past any returne in the contrary. But if we now returne and laye hand of his worde in deede and veritie, as wee haue long tyme done in talke and libertie, then wil God heape vpon vs such certificate of conscience, as shall kindle our consolation in hym, so that all treasure shall be dounge,* to that excellent knowledge of our Sauour. Deare brother, my harts desire and prayer to God is, that we may together enioy the blisse of eternall inheritance by one spirituall regeneration and new byrth, as we are ioyned by nature. But alacke, the way and meane thereunto hath bene much neglected of me (I will not say of you) for I had rather ye should accuse your selfe: for no doubt the best of vs both hat•e not sought for wisdom in Gods worde, as some in the worlde Page 1678 whom we knowe, haue sought for money: therefore they shall be our Iudges, if we do not learne by them: yea the very Emmet, as S•lomon saith, doth teach vs to prouide for the time to come: for •hee prouideth in Sommer against Winter.*

This is the best token I haue for you now, which thoughte it be simple, yet shal it declare partly my hearts desire to you ward, which is euen as mine owne soule.* Let nothing dismay you▪ for my cause: but be ye sure I shall haue victorie in the truthe, which truth is stronger then kings,* wine, or women. For as Zorobabel sayeth: Wine is vnrighteous, the king is vnrighteous, women are vnrighteous, yea al the children of men are vnrighteous, but the truthe endureth, and is alwaies strong, and conquereth for euer without end: Therefore this is to desire you & all other my frends that wish me good, to pray that God will alwaies keepe me in his truthe as he hath begonne, which prayer if it be of such a minde as laboureth to depart from euill, shall be to me the greatest pleasu•e vnder heauen. For I desire nothing in comparison of Gods truthe I thanke him of his mercy, which so hath wrought, for I take it as a sure seale of the endlesse ioy which shall hereafter followe: which God bring vs vnto, when his will and pleasure is, Amen.

An other Letter of Nicholas Shetterden to his mother.

O My good mother, whom I loue with reuerence in the Lord,* and according to my duety, I desire your fauourable blessing, and forgeuenes of al my misdeds towards you. Oh my good mother, in fewe wordes I wish you the same salutation, which I hope my selfe to feelee, and partly tast of before this come to you to reade: And in the resurrection, I verely beleeeue to haue it more perfectly in body and soule ioyned together for euer: and in that daye God graunt you to see my face with ioy: but deare mother then beware of that greate Idolatrie and blasphemous Masse. O lette not that be your God, whiche mice and wormes can deuoure.* Beholde I call heauen and earth to recorde, that it is no God, yea the fire that consumeth it, and the moystenesse that causeth it to moulde, and I take Christes Testament to witnesse, that it is none of his ordinaunces, but a meere inuention of men, and a snare to catche innocents bloud: and now that God hath shewed it vnto you, be warned in time: O geue ouer olde customes, & become new in y^e truth. What state soeuer your fathers be in, leaue that to God: * and let vs followe the counsell of his woorde. Deare mother, imbrace it with heartye affection, reade it wyth obedience, lette it be your pastime, but yet caste of all carnall affections, and loue of worldly things: so shall we meete in ioy at the last day, or els I bid you farewell for euermore: Oh, farewell my friendes and louers all, God graunt me to see your faces in ioy. Amen.

From Westgatethe 11. of Iuly. 1555.

Your childe wrytten with his hande, and sealed with his bloude, Nicholas Shetterden being appoynted to be slaine.

The copie of a letter wrytten to his wife.

I Wrote vnto you as one y^t longed more to heare of your healthe, * then of all worldly treasure, willing you to entreate Esau the elder brother by nature gently, geuing to him his own, yea, and offer him one of the droues, and say they be Jacobs, and are sent for a present to my Lorde Esau, but he wil not take it. &c. Now my beloued ye knowe the blessing of oure father is, that the elder shall serue the younger, & wisdom our mother hath taught vs the same, and I know ye do complaine of your * seruaunt the flesh, that he is rebellious, diobedient, and vntoward: vnruely and crookedly ye thinke he doth his seruice: but yet behold, how shall ye plead your cause before an indifferent iudge: for if it be true that his seruice be not according to hys duetie, as it is many times found in seruaunts: yet (I say) can you shewe your cause to no indifferent iudge, but hee shall obiect against you that he is not kept like a seruant, but he lacketh both meat and drinke, and other necessities meete and due for a seruaunt: so shall ye take more shame of your own complaint, then remedy or vantage against your seruant, and it shalbe a cloke for him to hide all his rebellion and vntoward seruice, because ye haue misused him.

And therefore my sentence is, that yee patiently beare with him in small faultes, and amende your owne greate faultes, as oppression, crueltie and couetousnes, requiring more then a seruaunt can do, specially being tired wyth labour, famined wyth hunger, and lamed with stripes. And these things amended, if hee doe hys seruice negligently, (as no doubt sometime he wil) yet then ye may boldly correct him with discretion, & sometime if he do not hys taske, ye may make hym go to bed supperlesse: but yet beate hym not with durable strokes, neither withholde hys meate in due time, and pinche him not by the belly continually, but * let him haue some thing to ioy in: onely watch hym, and keepe him from doing of harm. Though he be but a stranger in the life that is in God: yet be good to straungers for we are all straungers in darkenesse, and captiues in sinne, as well soule and spirite, being in Egypt, as now the flesh is yet vn baptised with the terrible red Sea of deathe, and remember that one lawe abideth for the stranger, I meane one reward abideth both bodye and soule in the lande of euerlasting rest. And therefore intreat him gently, and deale with him iustly now: * for the time will come that the yoke of bondage shall be taken from his necke, and he shall be a fellow heire with your yonger brother.

Circumcise him therefore, but doe not misuse hym, nor keepe him from hys owne, but deale mercifully wyth the straunger, that he may saye: Oh of what vnderstanding heart is this people, who hath God? Or where is God so nigh as to these? God make you wise and politike in hart, victorious in fieldes of this world, to rule the nations with a rodde: but kill not the Gabaonites wyth whome peace is taken: but lette them drawe water, and hew woode,* but geue them their meate and drinke due for labourers, and be glad because your disease is so remedied: for it is better and easier for a thirstie labouring man to drinke, then for a drunken man to tell a sober tale. Yea, it is a token that yee haue earnestly followed your labour, and not kepte companie with drunkardes and belly Gods: and therefore be glad I say, yea and glad againe: for great is your rewarde in heauen: yea blessed shall they be, that in this your zeale shall meete you, and withdrawe your hande from reuenging your selfe vppon that churlish Naball: which thing I hope to doe nowe with these sweete reasons, and frailes of Figges, I being of one house with your seruauant Naball. I dare say to you, that churlishnesse is hys name: but reuenge not, for the Lorde shal do it in his due time. Farewell mine owne heart.

Yours in bondes at Westgate. Nicholas Shetterden.

The next day after the condemnation of these foresayd, which was the 26. day of Iulye, were also condemned for the same Articles W. Coker, W. Hopper of Cambroke, Henry Laurence, Richarde Wright of Ashforde, W. Stere of Ashforde. But because the execution of these Martyrs pertaineth not to thys moneth, more shall be sayde (the Lorde willing) of them, when we come to the moneth folowing of August.

Nicholas Hall, and Christopher Waide, Martyrs.

THE same moneth of Iuly next after the suffering of the Kentishmen aboue named,* followed the death & Martyrdome of Nicholas Hall Brickelayer, and Christopher Waid of Dartford, which both were condemned by Maurice Bishoppe of Rochester, about the last daye of the moneth of Iune. The sixe Articles ministred to them, were of the same ordinarie course and effecte, wyth the Articles of the other Martyrs before specified, pag. 1582. the brief sum whereof were these.

A briefe summe of their Articles.

1. Firste, that they were Christen men, and professed the Catholicke determinations of oure Mother holye Church.*
2. That they which maintein or hold, otherwise then our holy mother the Catholicke Church doth, are heretickes.
3. That they haue and mainteine, that in the Sacrament of the aultare, vnder the formes of breade and wine, is not very body and bloude of Christe. And that the sayde verye bodye of Christe is verely in heauen onely, and not in the Sacrament.
4. Item, that they haue and do holde and mainteine, that the Masse, as it is nowe vsed in the Catholicke Church, is nought and abhominable.

5. Item, that they haue bene and be amongst the people of that Iurisdiction vehemently suspected vppon the premisses, and thereupon indicted. &c.

The aunsweres.

TO these Articles they aunswared, as commonly other vsed to doe, which stand with Christ and his truthe against these pretended Catholickes,* and their sinister doctrine. Page 1679 Firste graunting them selues Christen men, and acknowledging the determinations of the holy Church, that is, of the congregation or bodye of Christe: saue that Halle denyed to call the Catholicke and Apostolicke Church hys mother,* because he founde not this worde (mother) in the Scripture.

To the second they graunted. To the thirde Article as touching the very bodye and bloude of Christe to be vnder the formes of bread and wine in substance they woulde not graunt, only affirming y^e very body of him to be in heauen & in the sacrament to be a token or remēbrance of Christes death: Nicholas Halle adding moreouer, and saying, that wheras before he held the Sacrament to be but only a token or remembraunce of Christes death, now he sayd, that there is neither token nor remembrance,* because it is now misused and cleane tourned from Christes Institution. &c. And cōcerning the masse in the 4. article, to be abhominable, Christopher Waid with the other answered, y^t as they had confessed before, so would they now not goe from that they had said. To the 5. article, for y^e peoples suspition they made no great accompt nor sticking to graunt to the same.

And thus much concerning the articles and answeres of these good men.* Which being receiued, immediately sentence of condemnation was pronounced by the said Maurice the B. against them, the cōpye of which sentence, as it runneth muche what after the common course in condemning all other like seruants of Christ, so the same being examplified before in the story of M. Rogers, pag. 5453. shall not greatly neede heere againe to be repeated, but rather may be referred ouer to the place aboue noted. Nicholas Hall was burned at Rochester about the 19. day of Iuly.

*Furthermore, with the foresayd Hall and Waid, in the same moneth of Iuly: three other moe were condemned by Maurice bishop aforenamed, whose names were Ioane Beach widow, Ihon Harpoll of Rochester and Margery Polley. Of which Margerie Polley, touching her examination and condemnation here foloweth in storie.

The condemnation and Martyrdome of Margerie Polley.

MArgerie Polley widowe, wife sometime of Richarde Polley of Pepingberie, was accused and brought before the said Maurice Bish. of Rochester,* about the beginning of the moneth of Iune. Which Bishop according to the Pontificall solemnitie of that Church, rising vp out of the chaire of his maiestie, in the high swelling stile after his ordinary fashion to dash the seely poore woman, beginneth in these woordes.

We Maurice by the sufferance of God bishop of Rochester, proceeding of our meere office in a cause of heresie, against thee Margery Polley, of the parish of Pepingbery of our Diocesse and

The Martyrdome of Margery Polley.

*Jurisdiction of Rochester, do lay and object against thee all & singular these articles insuing. To the which, and to euery parcell of them, we require of thee a true, full, and plaine aunswere, by vertue of thine othe thereupon to be geuen &c.

Thus the oth first being ministred,* & the articles commenced against her, whiche Articles were the same ministred to Nicholas Hall and Waid before, she so framed hee answeres againe, especially answering to the 3. and 4. Article, that shee neither allowed the deitie of theyr Sacrament, nor the absurdity of their masse. For the which, sentence was read against her about the beginning of Iune, and she condemned for the same. But because her death folowed not vpon the same, we wil therfore defer the tractation therof to the due place and time, first setting downe in order of historie, the execution of Christopher Waid abo•e mentioned.

The execution and Martyrdome of Christopher Waide.

CHristopher Waide of Darford, in the Countie of Kent, Linnen weauer, was condemned by Maurice byshop of Rochester, and appoynted to be burned at Darforde aforesayde. At the day appoynted for his execution, which was in the moneth of Iuly, there was betimes in the morning carryed oute of the Towne in a Carte, a Stake, and therewith many bundles of Reedes, to a place a quarter of a mile out of the Towne, called the Brymthe, into a Grauell pitte thereby, the common place of the execution of felons. Thither also was brought a loade of Broome fagot, with other fagots and talwood. Unto which place resorted the people of the Countrey in great number, and there taried his comming. In so much that thither came dyuers Fruiterers wyth horse loades of Cherries, and sold them. About x. of the clocke commeth riding the Sheriffe, wyth a greate manye of other Gentlemen and their retinue, appoynted to assist him therein, and with them Waide riding pinioned, and by him one Margerie Polly of Tunbridge, both singing of a Psalme: whyche Margerie, as soone as she espied a farre off the multitude gathered aboute y^e place where she shoulde suffer, waiting his comming, she sayde vnto hym very loude and chearefully: You maye reioyce Waide, to see suche a companie gathered to celebrate youre marriage this day.

And so passing by the place, whych ioyned harde to the hye way, they were caried streighte downe to the Towne, where shee was kepte vntill the Sheriffe returned from Waids execution. And Waid being made ready, and stripped out of his clothes in an Inne, had broughte vnto hym a faire long white Shirte from hys wife, which being put on, and hee pinioned, was led vppe on foote againe to the foresayde place. And comming straite to the stake, tooke it in hys armes, embracing it, and kissed it, setting hys backe vnto it, and standing in a pitche Barrell, which was taken from the Beacon, being hard by: then a Smith brought a hoope of yron, and wyth two staples made him fast to the stake vnder hys armes.

As soone as hee was thus setteled, hee spake wyth hys handes and eyes lifted vp to heauen, wyth a chearefull and loude voyce, the laste verse of the lxxxvi. Psalme: Shewe some good token vppon me, O Lord, that they which hate me, may see it, and be ashamed, because thou Lord hast helped me, and comforted me. Neare vnto the stake was a litle hill, vpon the top wherof were pitched vp foure sta•es quadrangle wise, with a couering round about like a pulpit, into the which place, as Wade was thus praying at y^e stake, entred a Frier wyth a booke in his hand, whō when Wade espied, he cried earnestly vnto y^e people, to take hede of the doctrine of the whore of Babilon, exhorting them to imbrace the doctrine of the gospel preached in K. Edward his daies. Whom the sheriffe, thus speaking to the people, often interrupted, saying, be quiet Wade, and die paciētly, I am (sayde hee) I thanke God, quiet, Maister Sheriffe, and so trust to die. All this while the Frier stode still looking ouer the couerlet, as though he woulde haue vttered somewhat: but Wade very mightily admonished y^e people to beware of that doctrine: whiche when the Frier perceiued, whether he were amased, or coulde haue no audience of the people, withdrewe himselfe oute of the place immediately wythoute speaking anye woorde, and went awaye downe to the Towne. Then the Reedes being sette about hym, he pulled them and imbraced them in his armes, alwayes with his handes (making a hole against his face, that his voyce might be heard, which they perceiuing that were hys tormentours, alwaye caste fagottes at the same hole, whych notwithstanding he still as he coulde put off, Page 1680 his face, being hurte with the ende of a fagotte cast thereat. Then sire being putte vnto him, he cried vnto God often, Lorde Iesus receiue my soule: wythout any token or signe of impacience in the fire, till at lengthe, after the fire was once throughly kindled, he was hearde no man speake, still holding hys handes vp ouer hys head together towards heauen, euen when he was dead and altogether rosted, as though they had bene stayed vppon wyth a proppe standing vnder them.

Thys signe did God shewe vppon hym, whereby his very ennemies might perceiue, that God had according to hys prayer, shewed such a token vppon hym, euen to their shame and confusion. And this was the order of this godly Martyrs execution, thys was his ende. Whereby God seemed to confound and strike with the spirit of dumbnes, the Frier that Locuste which was risen vp to haue spoken against hym: and also no lesse woonderfully sustained those handes which he lifted vp to him for cōfort in his torment.

The apprehension, examination, condemnation, and burning of Diricke Caruer, and Iohn Launder, who suffered martyrdome for the testimonie of Christes Gospel.

The 22. day of this moneth of Iuly, was burned at Lewes, within the Countie of Sussex, one Diricke Caruer, late of the parish of Brighthamsted in the same Countie. And the next day (being the 23. day of the same moneth) was also burned at Steuing, an other named Ihon Lander, late of Godstone, in the Countie of Surrey. Whych 2. men were (w^t others) about the ende of the moneth of October. An. 1554. apprehended by Edwarde Gage Gentleman, as they were at prayer within the dwelling house of the said Diricke: and by him were sent vp vnto the Queenes Counsaile. Who, after examination, sent them as prisoners to Newgate, there to attende the leisure of Boner Bishop of London. From whence (vpon the Bishops receipte of a letter from the Lorde Marques of Winchester now Lord Treasurer) they were brought by the keeper of the prison, the 8. of Iune next after, into the bishops chamber at his house in Lōdon: and there (being examined vpon diuers poynts of religion) they made their seuerall confessions, subscribing and signing them with theyr owne hands. Which being read, the Bishop objected vnto them certaine other Articles, causing them to sweare truely and directly to aunswere thereunto: whiche Articles they confessed to be true, referring them selues chiefly to theyr former confessions.

This done, after long perswasions and faire exhortations, they were demaunded whether they would stand to their aunsweres. To whom Launder sayde: I will neuer goe from these answeres, so long as I liue. The other also confirmed the same, and therfore they were commanded to appeare againe before the Bishoppe in the Consistorie at Paules, the 10. day of the same moneth nexte followynge. Which articles and confessions, wyth the afore mencioned letter do here ensue.

A letter sent from the Marques of Winchester, Lord Treasurer, vnto Boner B. of London, touching the examination of the said prisoners.

After my right hartly commendations to your good Lordship, I shall not forget your liuerie of blacke against this time: no more I shall maister Deane,* to whom I wrote to make the sermon, who must now assuredly do it: for my L. of Chichester cannot attend it. To whom I haue geuen like knowledge by my letter now sent, and your Lordshippe must commaund the Sextens of youre church to be in readines for ringing in the time of seruice. And if ye be not furnished with blacke apparell for the aultar, and for the Priest, Deacon, and Subdeacon, I must haue knowledge therof, that it be taken of the Queenes stuffe, whereof I pray you let me be aduertised.

And ye haue sent Bradford to Newgate, as a man determined of heresie before you: but as I perceiue ye haue not sent me a Significauit, and therfore you must send me one that I may procede with him, and that shal I do, assone as I am answered of you.

There be diuers like prisonners that came from Sussex, that be not yet examined before you, lying nowe in Newgate, whych must be examined by you,* since they be come to London, and so I pray you they may be, and I certified of your proceedings, that I may follow, which I shall doe, thanking your Lordship heartely for my Conies, trusting to recōpence your Lordship again shortly with twise as many.

From my house this 7 of Iune. 1555.

Your louing friend, Winchester.

The Confession of Diricke Caruer, before Boner Bishop of London.

Dricke Caruer bearebrewer of Brighthamsted,* in the countie of Sussex, where he hathe dwelled by the space of 8. or 9. yeares, borne in the village of Dilson by Stockome in the land of Luke, 40. yeres of age, or thereabout, and nowe prisoner in Newgate, where he hath remained and continued at the Counsailes commaundement, since Alhollowne day last past, being examined concerning hys faith and beliefe in the sacrament of the altar,* sayeth that he hath & doth beleue, that the very substance of the body and bloud of Christ is not in the sayd Sacrament, & that there is no other substaunce remaining in the said sacrament after the woordes spoken by the Priest, but onely the substance of bread and wine.

Item, being examined concerning the Masse in Latin now vsed in the church of England,* he beleueth that there is no sacrifice in the sayde Masse, and that there is in it no saluation for a christian man, except it should be said in the mother tounge, that he might vnderstand it: and cōcerning the ceremonies of the Church, he sayth and beleueeth, that they be not profitable to a Christian man.

Item,* being examined concerning auriculare confession, he answeareth: that he hath and doth beleue, that it is necessary to goe to a good Priest for good counsaile, but the absolution of the Priest, laying his hand vppon any mans head as is nowe vsed, is nothing profitable to a Christian mans saluation. And further he sayth, that he hath not ben confessed, nor receiued the sacrament of the aulter, since the coronation of the Queene that now is.

Item, concerning the faith & religion, now taught, setfoorth & beleued in the church of England, he answeareth and beleueth, that the faith and doctrine nowe taught, setfoorth, and vsed in the sayd Church of Englande, is not agreable to Gods word. And furthermore he sayth,* that bishop Hooper, Cardmaker, Rogers, & other of their opinion, which were of late burned, were good christian men, & did preach the true doctrine of Christ, as he beleueeth: and sayth that they did shed theyr bloude in the same doctrine, which was by the power of God, as he sayth & beleueeth.

And further being examined saith, y^t since the Quenes coronation, he hath had the Bible and Psalter in English red in his house at Brighthamsted diuers times, and likewise since hys comming into Newgate, but the Keeper hearing thereof, did take them awaye: and sayeth also that about a twelue moneth now past, he had the English procession sayd in his house, with other English praier.* And further sayeth, that Thomas Iueson, Iohn Launder, and William Ueisey, being prisoners with hym in Newgate, were taken with this examinat in his house at Brighthāsted, as they were hearing of the gospel, then read in English, a litle before Alhollowne day last past, and brought to the Court: and being examined thereuppon by the Counsaile, were committed by them to prison in Newgate.

The confession of Iohn Launder, before Boner bishop of London.

IOhn Launder husbandman, of the Parish of Godstone, in the Countie of Surrey, of the age of xxv. yeres,* borne at Godstone aforesayde, being examined, doth confesse and say, that about two dayes next before Allhollon•ide nowe last past, this Examinee and one Diricke Caruer, Thomas Iueson, William Ueisie, with diuers other persons, to the number of twelue, (being all together in their prayers, and saying the seruice in English, set foorth in the time of King Edward the sixte, in the house of the sayde Diricke, situate at Brighthamsted in Sussex) were apprehended by one maister Edward Gage, and by him sent vppe hether to London, to the Kinge and Queenes Counsaile, and by them (vpon his examination) committed to Newgate, where he with his said other felowes hath euer since remained in prison.

And further being examined, he doeth confesse and say, that the occasion of his comming to the sayde Brighthamsted,* was vpon certaine busines there to be sped for his father: and so being there, and hearing that the saide Diricke was a man that did much fauour the Gospel, this Examinee did resorte to his house and companie, whome before that time hee did neuer see or know and by reason of that hys resorte, hee was apprehended as before: And further doth confesse and beleue, that there is heere in earth, one whole and vniuersall Catholicke Church, whereof the members he dispersed through the world, and doth beleue also, that the same Church doeth set foorth and teache onely two Sacraments: videlicet, the Sacrament of Baptisme,* and the Sacrament of the Supper of our Lord. And who Page 1681 soeuer doth teach or vse any more

Sacraments, or yet any ceremonies, he doth not beleue that they be of the Catholicke Church, but doth abhorre them from the bottome of his heart: And doth further say and beleue, that all the seruice,* sacrifices and ceremonies, now vsed in thys Realme of England (yea, & in all other partes of the world, whych ben vsed after the same maner) be erroneous and naught, & contrary to Christes institution, and the determination of Christes Catholicke church, whereof he beleueth, that he him selfe is a member.

Also hee doeth confesse and beleue, that in the Sacrament,* nowe called the sacrament of the aultar, there is not really, and truly, contained vnder the formes of bread and wine, the very naturall body and bloude of Christe in substaunce: but his beliefe and faith therein is as followeth, Videlicet, that when he doth receiue the material bread and wine, he doeth receiue the same in a remembrance of Christes death and passion, and so receiuing it, he doth eate and drinke Christes body and bloude by faith, and none other wayes, as he beleueth.

And moreouer he doth confesse, say, and beleue, that the Masse now vsed in the Realme of Englande,* or els where in all Christendome, is nought and abhominable, and directly against Gods worde, and his Catholicke Church: and that there is nothing sayd or vsed in it good or profitable. For he saith, that albeit the gloria in excelsis, the Creede, Sanctus, Pater noster, Agnus, and other partes of the Masse, bene of themselves good and profitable, yet the same being vsed amongst other things that be naught and superfluous in the Masse, the same good things do become nought also, as he beleueth.

*Also he doth beleue and confesse that Auriculare confession is not necessary to be made to any Priest, or to anye other creature, but euery persone oughte to acknowledge & confesse hys sinnes onely to God: and also that no person hath any authority to absolue any man frō his sinnes: and also beleueth that the right and true way (according to the Scripture) after a man hath fallen from grace to sinne, to arise to Christe againe, is to be sorie for his offences, & to doe the same, or the like no more: and not to make any auricular confession of them to the priest, either to take absolution for them at the Priests handes. All whyche hys sayde opinions, hee hath beleued by the space of these seuen or eight yeares past, and in that time, hath diuers and many times openly argued and defendeth the same, as hee sayeth. &c.

Articles objected by Boner Bishop of London, against Diricke Caruer, and Iohn Launder.

1. Firste, I doe object against you, and euery of you, that yee and euery of you,* beinge within the sayde prisone of Newgate, and within this sayde Citie of London, are of my iurisdiction (being Bishoppe of London) and subiecte vnto the same, offending and trespassing wythin the sayd prison and Citie, in matters of Religion, and concerning the Catholicke faith and beliefe of the Church in any wise.

2. Item, I doe object against you and euery of you, that yee and euery of you,* since your first comming and entring into the sayde prisone, and during your abode there, bothe there, and in sundry places wythin this Citie and Dioces of London, haue holden, maintained, and defended sundry opinions against the Sacraments of the Church, especially against the Sacrament of penance, and also against the Sacrament of the aultar.

3. Item, I do likewise object that yee, and euery of you, in all or in some of the said places,* haue (as concerning the sacrament of the aultar) holden, mainteined, and defended, to the best of your power, that in the sayde sacrament of the aultar there is not the very substaunce of the body & bloud of our Sauour Christ, but that in the Sacrament there is onely the substaunce of naturall breade and wine, and no other substaunce.

*4. Item, I do likewise object that you and euery of you, in all or some of the said places: haue concerning the masse in Latine now vused in the Church, and the sacrifice of the same, holden, maintained and likewise defended, that the sayde Masse is not good or profitable, and that there is no sacrifice in the same.

*5. Item, I do likewise object, that you and euery of you, in all, or some of the places, haue concerning y^e ceremonies of the Church, holden, mainteined, and likewise defended, that the saide ceremonies are not profitable to a Christian man, but hurtfull and euill.

*6. Item, I do likewise object, that you and euery of you, in all, or some of the sayd places, haue concerning the Sacrament of penance, holden, mainteined, and likewise defended, that auricular confession (being a part thereof, albeit it may be made vnto a good Priest for counsaile, yet the absolution of the Priest, laying hys hand vpon any mans heade, and doing as is now vsually done in the Church, is nothing profitable to any mans saluation, & that therefore yee neither haue bene confessed to the Priest, after the vsuall maner of the Church, nor yet receiued the sayd Sacrament of the aultar since the coronation of the Queenes Maiestie, whyche is more then the space of one yeare and a halfe.

7. Item, I do likewise object,* that ye and euery of you in all or some of the sayd places concerning the faith and religion now taught, set foorth, vused and beleued in the church of this Realme of Englande, and the doctrine of the same, haue holden, beleueed and sayde, that it is not agreeable to Gods woord, but cleane contrary to the same.

8. Item, I do likewise object, that ye and euery of you, in all, or some of the sayd places, haue beleueed, spoken, & sayd,* and to your power, vpholden, mainteined & sayd that byshop Hooper, Cardmaker, Rogers, and others of theyr opinion, which of late wythin this realme were burnt for heresie, were good Christian men, in speaking and holding against the said Sacrament of the aultar, and that they did preache nothing, but the true doctrine of Christe, shedding their bloud for the maintenance of the sayd doctrine.

9. Item, I do likewise object, that yee and euerye of you, haue earnestly laboured and traueiled to the best and vttermost of your power,* to haue vp againe the English seruice, and the Communion in all poyntes, as was vused in the latter daies of king Edward the sixt, here in this realm of Englande.

10. Item, I do likewise objecte, that ye, and euery of you haue thought and doe thinke, firmly and stedfastly,* and so haue and do beleuee, that the faith, religion, & doctrine, setfoorth in the 〈...〉 of the foresaid king Edward, was in all poyntes 〈...〉 godly, containing in it the true Faith and Religio• 〈...〉, in euery part.

11. Item, 〈...〉 likewise object and say, that ye, and euery of you, (for your misbelief, offence, transgression,* and misbehauour in the premisses, and for that also that you wold not come to your seuerall parish churches, and heare your diuine seruice there, as other Christian people did, and do: but absent your selfe from the same, and haue your priuate seruice in your houses, especiallye in the house of Diricke Caruer) were sent vp vnto the King and Queenes Maiesties priuie counsaile, and by them or some of them, sente afterward vnto the prison of Newgate aforesayd, hauing thereby their authoritie, remained as prisoners, during all the time ye haue bene there.

12. Item, I do likewise object and say, that I the sayd byshop of London,* was commaunded by the authority of the sayd Counsaile, to make processe against you, and euery of you, so that it was not my procuring or searching, that yee should be commaunded or called before me in this matter of heresie, but partly your owne demerites, and partly the sayde commandement enforced me to cal and send for you, to make aunswere heerein, and heereof to shewe you the sayde letters.

Their answeres to the Articles.

Vpon Monday, being the sayd tenth day of Iune, these two persons (with others) were brought by the keeper vnto the bishops Consistorie (as it was before commaunded) at one of the clocke in the after noone, where the Byshop first beginning with the sayde Diricke Caruer, caused his confession with the Articles and Aunsweres, to be openly read vnto him (which order he kept at the condemnation of euery prisoner) asking hym whether he would stand to the same. To whom the sayd Diricke answered, that he would: for your doctrine (quoth hee) is poyson and Sorcerie. If Christe were heere, you would put him to a woorse death, then he was put to before.

You say, that you can make a God: ye can make a pudding as well.* Your Ceremonies in the Church be beggery and poyson. And farther I say, that auricular confession is contrary to Gods word, and very poyson: wyth diuers other such woordes.

The Bishop seeing this constancie, & that neyther hys accustomed flatteries, nor yet his cruell threatnings could once moue this good man to encline to their idolatry, pronounced his vsuall and general blessing, as well towards this Diricke, as also vpon the sayde Iohn Launder (although seuerally). Who (after the like manner of processe vsd with him) remained in the same constancie, as dyd the other, and therefore were both deliuered vnto the sheriffes, who were there present, but afterwards were conueyed to Page 1682 the places aboue named, & there moste ioyfully gaue their houses to bee burned in the fire, and their soules into the handes of Almighty God, by Iesus Christ, who hath assured them to a better hope of life.

*This Diricke was a man, whome the Lorde had blessed as well with temporall riches, as with hys spirituall treasures: which riches yet were no clogge or let vnto hys true professing of Christe, (the Lord by his grace so woorking in him:) of the which, there was such hauocke made, by the greedye raueners of that time, that hys poore wyfe and children had little or none thereof. During his imprisonment, although he was well stricken in yeares (and as it were, past the time of learning) yet he so spent his time, that being at hys firste apprehension vtterly ignoraunt of any letter of the booke, he coule before his death read perfectly any Printed English. Whose diligence and zeale is worthy no small commendation, and therefore I thought it good not to lette it passe ouer in silence, for the good encouragement and example of others.

Moreouer, at his comming into the towne of Lewes to be burned, the people called vpon him, beseeching God to strengthen him in the faith of Iesus Christe.* Hee thanked them, and prayed vnto God, that of hys mercye hee woulde strengthen them in the lyke Faith. And when hee came to the signe of the Starre, the people drew neare vnto hym, where the Sheriffe sayde that he had founde him a faithfull man in all hys aunsweres. And as he came to the stake, hee kneeled downe and made hys prayers, and the Sheriffe made haste.

Then hys Booke was throwne into the barrell, and when he had stript him selfe (as a ioyfull member of God) he went into the barrell him selfe.* And as soone as euer hee came in, he tooke vp the booke and threw it among the people, and then the Sheriffe commaunded in the Kynge and Queenes name, in paine of death, to throw in the booke againe. And immediately, that faithful member spake with a ioyfull voyce, saying:

Deare brethren and sisterne, witnes to you all, that I am come to seale with my bloude Christes Gospell, for because I know that it is true: it is not vnknown vnto all you, but that it hath bene truly preached heere in Lewes, and in all places of Englande, and nowe it is not. And for because that I wil not deny heere Gods Gospel,* and be obedient to mans lawes, I am condemned to die. Dear brethren and sisterne, as many of you as doe beleue vpon the Father, the Sonne, and the holy Ghoste, vnto euerlasting life, see you do the woorkes appertaining to the same. And as many of you as doe beleue vpon the Pope of Rome, or any of his lawes, which he sets foorth in these daies, you do beleue to your vtter condēnation, and except the great mercy of God, you shall burne in hell perpetually.

Immediately the Sheriffe spake vnto hym, and sayde, if thou doest not beleue on the Pope thou art damned body and soule.* And further the Sheriffe sayde vnto hym: speake to thy God, that he maye deliuer thee nowe, or else * to strike me downe to the example of thys people: but this faythfull member sayde, the Lorde forgeue you youre sayinges.

And then spake hee againe to all the people there present, with a loude voyce, saying: deare brethren,* and all you whom I haue offended in woordes or in deede, I aske you for the Lordes sake to forgeue mee, and I heartely forgeue all you, which haue offended me in thought, word, or dede. And he sayd further in his praier, Oh Lord my God, thou hast wrytten: Hee that wil not forsake wife, children house,* and all that euer he hath, and take vp thy crosse and folow thee, is not woorthy of thee. But thou Lorde knowest that I haue forsaken all, to come vnto thee: Lord haue mercy vpon me, for vnto thee I commend my spirit: and my soule doth reioyce in thee. These were the last wordes of that Faythfull member of Christe, before the fire was put to hym.

And afterward that the fire came to him, he cried: Oh Lorde haue mercy vpon me, and spronge vp in the fire, calling vppon the name of Iesus, and so ended.

Thomas Iueson, Martyr.

AT Chichester,* about the same moneth was burned one Thomas Iueson of Godstone in the Countie of Surrey, Carpenter, whose apprehension, examination, and condemnation, (for as much as it was at one time, and in one forme with Diricke Caruer, and Iohn Launder) I doe here omit, referring the reader to their hystorie & processe before mentioned, sauing onely this his seuerall confession, and priuate answers made before B. Boner at hys last examination in the Consistorie, I thought not to pretermit: who being examined vppon the foresayd Articles, answered as followeth.

The aunsweres of Thomas Iueson, to the obiections of Boner bishop of London, in a chamber at his house, in the moneth of Iuly.

1. First, that he beleued, that there is but one Catholike,* vniuersall and whole Church of Christ thorough the whole worlde, which hath and holdeth the true faith, and all the necessarye Articles of Christen beliefe, & all the Sacraments of Christe, with the true vse and administration of the same.
2. Item, that he is necessarily bounden to beleue & geue credite, in all the sayd faith, Articles of the beliefe, religion, and the Sacraments of Christe, and the administration of the same.
3. Item, that that faith, religion, and administration of Sacraments, which now is beleued, vsed, taught, and set forth in this our church of England, is not agreeing wyth the truth and faith of Christ, nor with the faith of the sayde Catholicke and vniuersall Church of Christ.
4. Item, concerning the Sacrament of the aaltar, he beleueth, that it is a very Idol, and detestable before God, as it is now ministred.
5. Item, that the Masse is nought, and not of the institution of Christ, but y^t it is of mans inuention: and demaunded whether any thing vsed in the Masse be good, he sayde that he would answere no further.
6. Item, that hee had not receiued the Sacrament of the aaltar, since it hath ben ministred as now it is in England neither was confessed at any time within this seuen yeres, nor he hath not heard Masse by the same space.
7. Item, that auricular confession is not necessarye to be made to a priest, for that he cānot forgeue, nor absolue him from sinnes.
8. Item, concerning the Sacrament of Baptisme, that it is a signe and token of Christe, as circumcision was, and none otherwise, and he beleueth that his sinnes are * not washed away thereby, but his body onely washed: for his sinnes be washed away onely by Christes blood.

9. Item, that there be in the Catholike Church of Christ, onely two Sacraments, that is to saye, the Sacrament of Baptisme, and the Sacrament of the Supper of the Lord, and no more, whiche are not rightlye vsed at this presente time in Englande, and therefore be vnprofitable.

10. Item, he beleueth, that all the ceremonies,* nowe vsed in this Church of England, are vaine, superfluous, superstitious, and nought.

Furthermore the saide Iueson being earnestly trauailed wythall to recant, sayde in this wise: I woulde not recant and forsake my opinion and belief, for all the goods in London. I do appeale to Gods mercy,* and wilbe none of your Church, nor submit my selfe to the same: and that I haue sayde, I will say againe. And if there came an Aungell from heauen, to teache mee anye other Doctrine then Page 1683

The Martyrdome of Thomas Iueson.

* that which I am in now, I would not beleue him. Which aunswere thus made, he was condemned as an hereticke, and wyth the same persons was committed to the secular power, (as they terme it) and at the place aboue mentioned was burned: perseuering stil in his constant faith vnto the ende.

Iohn Aleworth.

IN the latter ende of thys moneth of Iulye, Iohn Aleworth dyed in prison,* at the Towne of Reading, beyng there in bondes for the cause and testimonie of the truthe of the Lordes Gospel. Whom although the Catholicke Prelates (according to their vsuall solemnitie) did exclude out of their Catholicke buriall, yet we see no cause why to exclude him out of the number of Christes holy martyrs and heires of his holy kingdome.

Iames Abbes, a Martyr of blessed memorie, suffering for the true cause of Christes Gospel.

AMong many that trauailed in these troublesome daies to keepe a good conscience, there was one Iames Abbes a young man, whych throughe compulsion of the tyrannie then vsed, was enforced to haue his part wyth hys brethren in wandring and going from place to place, to auoide the pearill of apprehendinge. But when time came that the Lorde had an other woorke to doe for hym, he was caught by the handes of wicked men, and broughte before the B. of Norwiche, D. Hopton. Who examining him of his Religion, and charging him therewyth very sore, both with threatens and faire speache,* at the laste the sayde poore Iames did yelde, and relented to their naughty perswasions, although hys conscience consented not thereto.

Nowe when he was dismissed, and shoulde goe from the Bishop,* the Bishop calling hym againe, gaue hym a peece of money, either fourty pence or twentie pence, whether I knowe not: which when the sayd Iames had receiued, and was gone from the Bishop, his conscience began to rob,* and inwardly to accuse hys facte, howe hee had displeased the Lorde by consenting to their beastly illusions, In which combate wyth himselfe (being pitiously vexed) he went immediately to the Bishop againe, & there threw hym his sayd money which he had receiued at hys hande,* and sayd, it repented him that euer he gaue hys consent to their wicked perswasions, and that he gaue his consent in taking of hys money.

Now this being done, the bishop wyth his chaplains did labour a fresh to winne him againe:* but in vayne, for the sayd Iames Abbes would not yeelde for none of them all, although he had plaid Peter before through infirmitie, but stode manfully in hys masters quarel to the ende, and abode the force of the fire, to the consuming of his body into ashes, which tyrannie of burning was done in Berie the 2. day of August. An. 1555.

A discourse of the apprehension, examination, and condemnation of Iohn Denly Gentleman, Iohn Newman, and Patrike Pachingham, Martyred for the testimonie of Christes Gospell.

IN the middest of this tempestuous rage of malignaunt aduersaries,* persecuting and destroying the poore •ocke of Christe, many there were, which thought they were no spirituall mē, yet thought to help forward, for their parts, & as one would say, to heape vp mo coales to this furious flame of persecution, whether of a blind zeale, or of a parasiticall flattery I knowe not. Amongest whiche, one was Edmonde Tyrell Esquier, and at that time a Iustice of peace wythin the Countie of Essex, an assister (as it seemeth) to the cruell murtherers of Gods Saintes. Who as he came from the burning & death of certaine godly Martyrs, met with M. Iohn Denly gentleman, and one Iohn Newman (both of Maidstone in Kent) trauailing vpon the way, and goyng to visite suche their godly frendes, as then they had in the sayde Countie of Essex. And vpon the sight of them as he yet braggeth, first vpon suspition apprehended, and searched them: and at last, finding the confessions of their faith in wryting about thē, sent thē vp vnto the Queenes Commissioners, directinge also vnto one of the same Commissioners, these hys fauourable Letters in theyr behalfe. The copie whereof heere may appeare as followeth.

A copie of Edmund Tyrels leter, to one of the Queenes Commissioners.

S^rIr, with moste harty commendations vnto you, these shal be to aduertise you,* that I haue receiued a letter from Sir Nicholas Hare and you, and other of the King & Queenes Maiesties commissioners, by a seruaunt of the King and Queenes, called Iohn Failles, for certaine businesse, about S. Osythes, the which I could not immediately goe about, for that I had receiued a letter from the Counsell, to assist the Sheriffe for the execution of the heretickes, the one at Raileigh, and the other at Rocheford, the which was done vpon Tuesday last.

And as I came homeward, I met wyth two menne: Euen as I sawe them, I suspected them, and then I did examine them, and search them, and I did finde about them certaine letters,* whych I haue sent you, and also a certaine wrytinge in paper, what their faith was. And they confessed to mee that they had forsaken and fled out of their country for Religions sake: and sithen they haue bene in many countreis, by their confession, whiche I haue sente you: for the which I thought it good (for that they came from London, and that there might be more hadde of them, then I yet haue vnderstand) to sende them to you, whereby you and others of the King and Queenes Commissioners there, might trie them, so that their lewdnesse might be throughly knowen: for I thinke these haue caused many to trouble their consciences. So thys hath bene some let to me, wherefore I coulde not go about these matters expressed in your letters: but to morrow no one I entende by Gods grace to accomplish your letters, with as much diligence as I may. And this the holy Trinitie haue you euer in his keeping, I beseeche you to be so good maister, to discharge these pore men that bring these prisonners vp assone as may be. And thus moste hartly farewell, from Raimesdon parke, the 12. day of Iune. 1555.

By your assured to commaund, Edmund Tyrel.

For so much as in this letter mētion is made of a certaine wryting in paper founde about them of their Faith, what this wrytinge was, and what were the contentes of it, the copie thereof heere ensueth.

¶Certayne notes collected and gathered oute of the Scriptures, by Iohn Denley Gentleman, with a confession of his faith, touching the Sacrament of Christes body & bloud, found about him ready wrytten, at his apprehension.

Christe is in the Sacrament, as hee is where two or three are gathered together in his name.

The difference of doctrine betweene the Faithfull & the Papistes concerning the Sacramente is: * that the Papistes say, that Christ is corporally vnder or in the formes of bread and wine: but the faithfull say, that Christe is not there neither corporally, nor spiritually: but in them that worthely eate and drinke the breade and wine, he is spiritually, but not corporally.

For figuratiuely he is in the breade and wine, and spiritually hee is in them that woorthely eate and drynke the breade and wine: but really, carnally, * and corporally he is onely in heauen, from whence hee shall come to iudge the quicke and the dead.

¶My beliefe in the Sacrament of the blessed body and bloud of my Sauour Iesus Christ.

*AS concernyng the Sacrament of the body and bloude of our Sauour Iesus Christ, my beliefe is this, that the bread and wyne is appointed vnto a Sacrament: and that after thanks be geuen to God the father, then it doth represent vnto me the very body and bloud of our sauour Iesus Christ: not that the bread is the body, or the wyne the bloud, but that I in faith do see that blessed body of our sauour broken on the crosse, & his precious bloud plenteously shed for the redemption of my sinnes. * Also in faith I heare hym call vs vnto him, saying: Come vnto me all you that labour and are laden, and I wil refresh you. Esay. 55. a. b. Mat. 11. &c. In faith I come vnto him, & I am refreshed, so that I beleue that all that do come vnto the table of the Lord in this frith, * feare and loue, beyng sorry for their offences, intending earnestly to lead a godly conuersatiō in this vale of misery, do receiue the fruit of the death of Christ, which fruit is our saluation.

I do vnderstand [spiritually] that as the outward mā doth eate the material bread which comforteth the body, so doth the inward man (thorough fayth) eate the bodye of Christ, beleeuynge that as the breade is broken, so was Christes body broken on the Crosse for our sinnes, which comforteth our soules vnto lyfe euerlastyng: and signifieng thereby, that euen as that bread was deuided among them, so should his body and fruit of hys passion be distributed vnto as many as beleueed hys wordes. But the bread broken and eaten in the Supper, monisheth & putteth vs in remembrance of hys death, and so exciteth vs to thankesgeuyng, to laud and prayse God for the benefits of our redemption.

And thus we there haue Christ present, in the inward eye and sight of our faith we eate his body, and drinke his bloud, that is, we beleue surely that his body was crucified for our sinnes, and his bloud shed for our saluation.

Christes body and bloud is not conteyned in the Sacramentall▪ bread and wyne as the papists haue sayd,* & as some yet doe say, as ye read in these scriptures folowing: first read in S. Math. 9. Luk. 5. Math. 24. and 26. Marke 16. Luk. 24. Iohn 13. Luke 23. in the ende, Iohn 14.15.16.17. Acts 1.3.7.9. Rom. 8. Psalm. 8. 1. Cor. 10.11. Exod. 12. Col. 1.3. Ephe. 1.4. Phil. 2. 1. Thes. 1.4. Heb. 1.5.8.9.10.12. 1. Pet. 3. Psal. 11.47.103.10.

Christes materiall body is not in all places, as these Scriptures do testifie hereafter.

*First, reade Saint Mathew the last, Marke the last, Luke the last, Iohn 11.20.21. These places of the Scripture do plainly declare, that his body that was borne of the Uirgin Mary, cannot be in mo places then one, & that is in heauen on the right hand of God, and not in the Sacrament, nor in all places, as the Papists haue affirmed, and yet do affirme.

*Therefore who so euer they bee that doe worship the creatures of bread and wyne, doe commit Idolatrye, and make abominable Idols of them, and take the glory from God, and geue it to his creatures, which is contrary to the mynd of God, as these scriptures hereafter do testify, first in Exodus 20.22.23.24. Leuit. 19. Deut. 4.6.32. Psal. 80. Esay. 45. Mal. 2. Mathew. 4. Luke 4. Actes, 14. Reuel. 14. Psalm. 98. 1. Corinthe. 8. Ephes. 4. 1. Tim. 2. 1. Ioh. 5. Reuel. 19.22.

John Denley.

Now to returne to the Commissioners againe, they receiuyng these prisoners afore mentioned, after they saw they could little preuaile by their owne perswasions, sent them vnto B. Boner to be handled after his fatherly and charitable discretion. Which how discrete & fauourably it was, as well the history of others, as also the sequele of this doth manifestly declare. For the 28. day of Iune then next folowyng, he caused the sayd Denly & Newmā, with one Patrike Pakingham, to bee brought into his chāber within his house or pallace, there examinyng them vpon their confessions (which Tyrrell had founde about them) obiecing also vnto them certayne other Articles of hys owne. The which they all aunswered in effect one thing, although Denly answered more largely then the others, & therefore I thought it enough only to manifest his, as sufficient, & in no part differing from the others, except that Pachingham had one Article of no great force obieced to hym, which the rest had not.

This done, the B. vsed with them his accustomed perswasions, to the which M. Denly said: God saue me from your counsaile, & keepe me in the mynde that I am in, for that you count heresy, I take to be the truth: * & thereupon they were commanded to appeare in the bishops Consistory the 5. of Iuly then next commyng in the after noone, where these Articles were objected against them.

¶The Articles objected by Edmond Boner, Bishop of London, against Iohn Denley, Iohn Newman, and Patrike Pachingham, ioyntly and seuerally, the xxviij. of Iune. 1555.

Ffirst, that the said N. now is of the dioces of London, & of the iurisdiction of the B. of London. *

Secondly, that the sayd N. hath not beleueed, nor doth beleuee that there is any Catholike Church of Christ here in earth.

Thirdly, that the said N. had not beleueed, nor doth beleue, that this church of England is any part or member of the said catholike church.

Fourthly, the sayd N. hath beleueed, * and doth so beleue that the Masse now vsed in this Realme of England, is naught, and full of Idolatry and euill, and playne against Gods word, and therefore he the sayd N. hath not heard it nor will not heare it.

Fiftly, that the sayd N. hath beleueed, & doth so beleue, * that auricular confession vsed now in this realme of England, is not good, but contrary to Gods word.

Sixtly, that the sayd N. hath beleueed, * and doth so beleue, that absolution giuen by the priest hearing confessiō, is not good, nor allowable by Gods word, but contrary to the same.

Seuenthly, that the sayd N. hath beleueed, * and doth so beleue, that christenyng of childrēn, as it is vsed in y^e church of England, is not good, nor allowable by Gods worde, but against it: likewise confirming of children, geuyng of orders, saying of Mattens & Euensong, annoyntyng or enelyng of sicke persons, makyng of holy bread and holy water, with the rest of the Church.

Eightly, that the sayd N. hath beleueed, and doth so beleue, that there are but two Sacraments in Christes Catholike church, that is to say, the sacrament of Baptisme, & the Sacrament of the aultar.

Ninthly, that the sayd N. hath beleueed, & doth so beleue, that for as much as Christ is ascended vp into heauē, therefore the very body of Christ is not in the Sacrament of the aultar.

Tenthly, * that thou Patrike Pachingham now beyng of the age of 21. at the least, beyng within the house of the B. of London at Paules, and by him brought to the great Chappell to heare Masse there, the sayd 23. day of Iune, the yeare of our Lord, 1555. diddest vnreuerently stande in the sayd Chappell, hauyng thy cap on thy head all the Masse whyle, and diddest also refuse to receyue holy water and holy bread at the Priestes handes, there contemnyng and despising both the Masse, and the said holy water and holy bread.

¶The aunswer of Iohn Denley and the rest, to the Articles obiected.

TO the first Article, I answer, it is very true.*

To the second Article I answer, that it is not true: for I beleue the holy Catholike Church which is builded vpon the foundation of the Prophetes & Apostles,* Christ beyng the head, which holy Church is the Congregation of the faythfull people, dispersed through the whole world the which Church doth preach Gods worde truely,* and doth also minister the two Sacramentes, that is to saye, Baptisme, and the supper of the Lord, accordyng to hys blessed word.

To the third Article I aunswer, that I do beleue that this Church of England,* vsing the fayth & religion which is now vsed, is no part or member of the foresaid holy Catholike church, but is the church of Antichrist the Bish. of Rome beyng the head thereof: for it is playne, that they haue altered the testament of God, & set vp a testament of their own deuising, full of blasphemy & lies: for Christes testament is, that he would haue all things done to the edifieng of the people, as it appeareth when hee taught thē to pray, Math. 6. & also it appeareth by S. Paul, 1. Cor. 14. for he sayth: That hee that prophesieth, speaketh vnto men, for their edifieng for their exhortation, and for their comfort: hee that speaketh with the tong, profiteth hymselfe: he that prophesieth, edifieth the congregation.

Also he sayth: Euen so likewyse when ye speak with tongs except ye speake words that haue signification,*how shall it bee vnderstand what is spoken? for ye shall but speake in the aire, that is as much to say, in vayne. Also he sayth: Thou verely geuest thanks well, but the other is not edified, I thanke my God, I Page 1685 speake with tongs more then ye all, yet had I rather in the congregation to speake fiue words with vnderstandyng, to the information of other, then ten thousand words with the tong. Also he sayth: Let all thyngs be done to edification.

*Also it is written in the Psalme, 46. For God is kyng of all the earth: O sing praises vnto hym with vnderstandyng, &c. So it doth appeare that this Church of England now vsed, is not builded vppon Christ, if S. Pauls wordes be true, and also the Psalmes: therefore this Church is not builded vpon the prophets, apostles, nor Christ, as I haue declared before.

*To this 4. Article I answer, and I do beleue (as I haue aforesayd) that the masse now vsed in this realme of England, is naught and abhominable, idolatry and blasphemy against Gods word: for Christ in his holy supper instituted the Sacramentes of bread and wine, to be eaten together in remembraunce of his death till he come, & not to haue them worshipped, and make an Idoll of them: for GOD will not be worshipped in his creatures, but wee ought to geue him prayes for his cretures, which he hath created for vs. For he sayth in the second commandement: Thou shalt not make to thy selfe any grauen image,*nor the lykenes of any thing that is in heauen aboue, or in the earth beneth, thou shalt not bow down to them nor worship them. So it appeareth by this commaundement, that wee ought not to worship the Sacrament of bread and wyne, for it is playn idolatry, for he sayth: No similitude, therefore Thou shalt not bow downe to them nor worship them. I pray you what doe you call kneelyng downe, holdyng vp the handes, knockyng of the breast, puttyng of the cap, and makyng curtesie, with other like superstition? You would make men to be so blynd, that this is no worshipping.

*Peradventure you will object and say, you do not worship the bread & the wyne, but Christes body whiche was borne of the Uirgin Mary, conteyned vnder the forme of bread and wyne. But that is a very lye: for Christes body that was borne of the Uirgin Mary, is in heauen, if saint Paules words be true, as vndoubtedly they are: for hee sayth in the x. of the Hebrues: *But this man, after hee hath offered one sacrifice for sinnes, is set down for euer on the right hand of God, and from henceforth tarieth till hys foes bee made hys footestool.

*Also in the 9. chap. he sayth: For Christ is not entered into holy places that are made with hands, which are similitudes of true thyngs, but is entred into very heauen, for to appeare nowe in the sight of God for vs, * &c. Also Phil. 3. But our conuersation is in heauen, from whence we looke for the Sauour, euen the Lord Iesus Christ, * &c. Thes. 1. For they themselues shew of you, what maner of entring in we had vnto you, and how ye turned to God from Images, for to serue the liuyng God, and for to look for his sonne from heauen, * whom he raysed from death, euen Iesus, which deliuered vs from the wrath to come, &c. Also Iohn 16. I went out from the father, and came into the world. Again, I leaue the world, and go to the father. &c. Iohn. 17. Now I am not in the world, and they are in the world, and I come to thee. And these places of the Scripture with other mo, proueth plainly to them that haue eares to heare, that Christes body that was borne of the Uirgin Mary, is in heauen, and not in the Sacramentall bread and wyne, and therefore it is idolatry to worship them, &c.

*To this fift Article I aunswer, that I do beleue as I haue aforesayd, that auricular confession is not good, as it is now vsed. Touching my sinnes wherein I haue offended God, I must seeke to hym for remission therof, for our Sauour Christ sayth in the xj. of S. Mathew: Come vnto me all ye that labour and are laden, * I will ease you, &c. The riotous sonne, Luke. xv. sayth: I will arise and go to my Father and will say to him, * Father, I haue sinned agaynst heauen and before thee, and am no more worthy to bee called thy sonne, &c. Psal. 31. * I sayd, I will knowledge myne offences, and accuse my selfe vnto the Lord, and so thou forgauest me the wickednesse of my sinne. &c. Iob. 13. But I will reprove myne own wayes in hys sight: * He shal make me whole, and there may no hypocrite come before hym. Syrach. 34. sayth: Who can be censed of the vncleane? * And there was but one of the x. Lepers that were censed, that came to Christ to geue hym thanks. He asked for the other ix. But if I haue offended my neighbour, I must reconcile my self to my neighbour: * and if I be a notorious sinner, after the first & second admonition, it ought to be declared to the congregation, and the Minister of the congregation hath power by the word to excommunicate me, and I am to bee taken as a Heathen person, not for a day, or xl. dayes, but vnto such tyme as I do openly in the congregation knowledge my fault, then the minister hath power by the word, to preach to me or them the remission of our sins in the blood of Iesus Christ, as it is written in the 13. of the Acts of the Apostles, Math. 18. Other confession I know none.

To this 6. Article, I the sayd Iohn Denley haue aunswered in the fift. &c.

To this 7. Article I answer, that as touchyng the sacrament of Baptisme, which is the christenyng of childrē, as it is altered and chaunged: * for S. Iohn Baptist vsed nothyng, but the preachyng of the word and the water, as it doth appeare, whē Christ required to be baptised of him and others also which came to Iohn to be baptised, as it appeareth Math. 3. Mark. 1. Luke. 3. and Act. 8. the chamberlaine sayd: See here is water,*what letteth me to be baptised? It appereth here that Phillip had preached vnto him, for he sayd, here is water. We do not read that hee asked for any creame, or oile, not for spettle, nor coniured water, nor coniured waxe, nor yet crysome, nor salt: for it semeth that Phillip had preached no such thyngs to hym, for he would as wel haue asked for them as for water: & the water was not coniured, but euen as it was afore. Also Act. x. Thē answered Peter:*Can any man forbid water that these shold not be baptised▪ &c. Actes. 16. And Paule and Silas preached vnto hym the word of the Lord, and to all that were in his house: & he took them the same houre of the night, and washed their wounds, & so was he baptised, and al they of his houshold straight way. Where ye see nothyng but preachyng the word & the water. The lyke also is to be sayd of the rest of the ceremonies of your Church.

To the 8. Article I answer shortly,* that there bee Sacraments no mo but two, Baptisme and the Sacrament of the body & bloud of Christ, except ye will make the rainbow a sacrament: for there is no sacramēt but hath a promise annexed vnto it.

To the 9. Article I doe aunswer you, that ye haue my mynd written alredy. For it was found about me whē I was taken, and also ye know my mynd in the 4. Article, plainly expressed concernyng the bodily presence: for christes body is in heauen, & will not be conteyned in so small a piece of breade. And as the wordes which Christ spake are true in deede, so must they also bee vnderstanded by other of the Scriptures, whiche Christ spake hymselfe, and also the Apostles after hym. And thus I make an ende, &c.

By me Iohn Denley.

The first day of the month of Iuly, the sayd thre prisoners were brought into the Consistory in Paules church, where he proceded against them after his vsual forme and maner of law, reading first their confessions, articles and answers, and then tempting them, sometyme with fayre promises, other whiles with threatnyngs, which were alwayes his chieftest argumentes and reasons to perswade withall. In the end, seeyng their vnmoueable constancye, vpon the 5. of Iuly he condemned them as heretikes, and gaue them vnto the shiriffes of London, as to his commō executioners, who kept them vntill they were commāded by writ to send them to their seuerall places of sufferyng:

[illustration]

The Martyrdome of Maister Iohn Denley.

*Page 1686 which was for M. Denley, Uxbridge: where the 8. day of August he was burned. And beyng set in the fire wyth the burnyng flame about hym, he sang in it a Psalme.

Then cruell D. Story beyng there present, commanded one of the tormentors to hurle a fagot at hym,* whereupon beyng hurt therewith vpon the face that hee bled agayne, he left his singyng and clapt both his hands on his face. Truly, quoth D. Story to him that hurled the fagot, thou hast mard a good old song.

The sayd Iohn Denley beyng yet still in the flame of the fire, put his hands abroad, and sang againe, yelding at the last his spirit into the hands of God through his sonne Iesus Christ.

*After the Martyrdome of M. Denley at Uxbridge, which was the 8. of August, suffered also not long after, Patrike Pachingham at the same towne of Uxbridge, about the 28. of the sayd moneth. This Pachingham was charged of Boner (as ye heard in the x. article before) for hys behaiour shewed in the Bishops chappell: who at y^e masse tyme there stāding, would not put of his cap, which was taken for an haynous offence. The said Pachingham also beyng much laboured by Boner to recant, protested in these wordes to the B. that the church which he beleueed, was no catholike church, but was the church of Sathan, & therfore he would neuer turne to it, &c.

Furthermore, as touching the other which was Ioh. Newman Pewterer, dwellyng at Maidstone in Kent, he was burned the last of August at Saffron Walden in the Countie of Essex, whose examinatioⁿ and confession of his fayth and beliefe, for the which he was cruelly burnt and persecuted, here vnder followeth.

¶The examination of Iohn Newman Martyr.

Iohn Newman first was apprehended in Kent, dwellyng in the towne of Maidstone, and there was examined before Doctor Thornton Suffragane, and others, at Tenterden. From thence he was brought to Boner, and there condemned with M. Denley and Pachingham, and burned at Saffron Walden, as is before storied. But because his examination and aunsweres before the Suffragan came not then to my hands, I thought here in this place to bestow them, rather then they should vtterly bee suppressed. And first what his answer was by wrytyng to the said Suffragan, after his apprehension, you shal heare by the tenor of hys owne wordes, as follow.

*IT may please you to vnderstand, that for the space of all the tyme of kyng Edwards raigne, we were diligently instructed with continuall Sermons made by suche men, whose fayth, wisdom, learning & vertuous liuyng, was commended vnto all men, vnder the kyngs hand & seale, and vnder the hands of the whole Counsaile. These men taught diligently a long tyme, perswadyng vs by the allegations of Gods worde, that there was no Transubstantiation, nor corporall presence in the sacrament. Their doctrine was not beleueed of vs sodainly, but by their cōtinuall preaching, and also by our continuall prayer vnto God that we might neuer bee deceiued: but if it were true, that God would encline our heartes vnto it: and if it were not true, that we myght neuer beleuee it. We waied that they laboured with Gods worde, and wee asked the aduise of our friends: neyther could we finde that they preached false doctrine. We considered also, as wee dyd learne, that the Kyngs grace and hys Counsaile, and the most part of the whole Realme, beleueed as they taught, because no man preached the contrarye. Also wee knowe that the Preachers were commaunded by the Kyng and lawes of the Realme, to preach vnto vs such doctrine, as was to the authority of Gods worde, agreeable and no other. And by their diligent setting foorth of it, by the kings commaundement, and the whole consent of the whole Counsaile, and by the authoritie of the Parliament, wee embrased it, and receyued it, as a verie infallible truth taught vnto vs for the space of seuen yeares. Wherefore, vntill such tyme as our consciences are otherwyse taught and instructed by Gods worde, we cannot with safeguard of our consciences, take it, as many suppose at this tyme. And we trust in God that the Queenes mercifull hyghnesse, neither yet her most honourable Counsaile will in a matter of fayth vse compulsion, nor violence, because fayth is the gift of God, and commeth not of man, neither of mans laws, neither at suche tyme as men require it, but at such tyme as God geueth it.

¶The examination and answers of Iohn Newman Martyr, before D. Thornton and others.

First, one of the Doctors, or one of the Bench,* either the Archdeacon, or Fauced, or some other, whose name I. Newman doth not expres, beginneth asking in this wise.

Doctor.

How say ye to this? This is my body which is geuen for you.

New.

It is a figuratiue speach, one thing spoken, & another ment, as Christ sayth: I am a vine, I am am a dore, I am a stone. &c. Is he therfore a material stone, a vine, or a dore?

Doct.

This is no figuratiue speech. For he sayth: This is my body which is geuen for you, and so sayth he not of the stone, vyne, or doore: but that is a figuratiue speech.

New.

Christ saith, this cup is the newe Testament in my bloud. If ye wil haue it so ment, then let them take & eat the cup.*

Doct.

Nay, that is not so ment, for it is a common phrase of speech among our selues: we say to our friend, drynke a cup of drinke, & yet we ment he should drinke the drinke in the cup.

New.

Why if we will haue the one so vnderstand, ye must so vnderstand the other.

Doct.

Nay, it is a common vse of speech, to say drinke a cup of ale, or beere? And therfore it is no figuratiue speech.

New.

The often vsing of a thyng doth not make that thing otherwise then it is:* but wheresoeuer one thyng is spoken, and an other ment, it is a figuratiue speech.

Doct.

Well, we will not stand here about. How say ye by the reall presence? Is not Christs naturall body there that was borne of the Uirgin Mary?

New.

No, I do not so beleue, neyther can I so beleue: for the soule of man doth not feed vpon natural things as the body doth.

Doct.

Why, how then doth he feed?

New.

I thinke the soule of man doth feed as the angels in heauen, whose feedyng is only the pleasure, ioy, felicity, & delectation that they haue of God: and so the soule of mā doth feed and eat, through fayth, the body of Christ.

Collins.

Yea, but if the body doe not feede vppon naturall thyngs, the soule cannot continue with the body: * therefore the body must needs feed vpon naturall things, that both may lyue together.

New.

I grant it to be true: but yet the soule doth lyue otherwise then the body which doth perish: therefore naturall thyngs do but feede the body onely. I pray you what did Iudas receiue at the Supper?

Coll.

Marry, Iudas did receyue the very body of Christ, but it was to hys damnation.

New.

Why? was the deuill entred into hym before. Thē he had both the deuill and Christ in hym at one tyme.

Coll.

Nay, the deuil did enter into hym afterward.

New.

Yea, and before to, what doe ye thinke? * Had he but one deuill. Nay I thinke he had rather a legion of deuils at the latter end.

Coll.

Well, put case it be so, what say you to that?

New.

Mary, if Christ and the deuill were both in Iudas at once, I pray you how did they two agree together?

Coll.

We grant they were both in Iudas at that tyme: for Christ may be where the deuill is, if he will, but the deuill cannot be where Christ is, except it please Christ.

New.

Christ wil not be in an vncleane person that hath the deuill.

Thorn.

Why, will ye not beleue that Christ was in hel, and ye will grant that the deuill is there: * and so might he be in Iudas, and if it pleased hym.

New.

Christ would not suffer Mary Magdalene to touch hym, which sought hym at hys graue, and did loue hym entirely: much lesse he will suffer an vngodly man to receyue hym into his vncleane body.

Thorn.

Yes, seing God may do all things, he may do what he list, and be where he will: And doth not the Psalm say: he is in hell, and in all places. Why should wee then doubt of his beyng there?

New.

Though his Godhead be in all places, yet that is not sufficient to prooue that his humanitie is in all places.

Thornt.

No, do you not beleue that God is omnipotent, & may do all thyngs?

New.

I do beleue that God is almighty, & may do all that he will do.

Thornt.

Nay, but and if he be omnipotent,* he may doe all thyngs, and there is nothyng vnpossible for hym to do.

New.

I know God is almighty, and can do all that he wil but he cannot make his sonne a lyer, he cannot deny himself, nor he cannot restore virginity once violated & defiled.

Thornt.

What is that to your purpose. God doth not defile virginity: we speake but of thyngs that God doth.

New.

Why,* will ye haue the humanity of Christ in all places, as the deitie is?

Page 1687

Thornt.

Yea, he is in all places, as the deitie is, if it please hym.

New.

I wil promise you that semeth to me a very great heresie: for heauen and earth are not able to containe the diuine power of God, for it is in all places, as here and in euery place: & yet ye wil say, that wheresoeuer the deitie is, there is also the humanitie, and so ye wil make him no body, but a fantasticall body, and not a body in deed.

Thornt.

Nay, we do not say he is in all places as the deitie is, but if it please him he may be in all places w^t the deitie.

New.

I promise you that it semeth to me as great an heresie as euer I heard in my life: and I dare not grant it, lest I should deny Christ to bee a very man, and that were agaynst all the scriptures.

Thornt.

*Tush, what shall we stand reasoning with him? I dare say he doth not beleue, that Christ came out of his mo'ther, not openyng the matrice. Do you beleue that Christ rose from death and came through the stone?

New.

I doe beleue that Christ rose from beath: but I doe not beleue that he came through the stone, neither doth the Scripture so say.

Thornt.

Loe, how say you, hee doth not beleue that Christ came through the stone: & if he doth not beleue this, howe shall he beleue the other? If he could beleue this, it were easie for hym to beleue the other.

New.

*The scripture doth not say he went through y^e stone, but it sayth the angels of God came downe and rolled away the stone, & for feare of him, the keepers be came euen as dead men.

Thornt.

A foole, foole, that was because that women should see that he was risen agayne from death.

New.

Well, the scripture maketh as much for me as it doth for you, and more too.

Thornt.

Well, let vs not stād any longer about him. Back agayne to the reall presence. How say ye, is the bodye of Christ really in the sacrament, or no?

New.

I haue answered you already.

Thornt.

Wel, do ye not beleue that he is there really?

New.

No, I beleeeue it not.

Thornt.

Well, will ye stand to it?

New.

I must deeds stand to it, til I be perswaded by a further truth.

Thornt.

Nay, ye will not be perswaded, but stande to your owne opinion.

New.

Nay I stand not to myne owne opinion, GOD I take to witnes, but only to the Scriptures of God, & that can all those that stand here witnes with me, and nothing but the Scriptures: and I take God to witnes, that I do nothing of presumption, but that that I do, is only my cōscience, & if there be a further truth, hen I see, except it appeare a truth to me, I cannot receiue it as a truth. And seing faith is the gift of God, & commeth not of man, for it is not you that can geue me faith, nor no man els, therefore I trust ye wil beare the more w^t me, seing it must be wrought by God, & when it shal please God to open a further truth to me, I shal receiue it with all my hart and embrace it.

¶ Thornton had many other questions which I did not beare away: but as I do vnderstand, these are the chieftest: as for taunts, foolish, & vnlearned, he lacked none. Prayse God for his gifts, and God increase in vs strength.

The Arguments of Iohn Newman.

- *If the body of Christ were really and bodily in the sacrament, then whosoeuer receiued the Sacrament, receiued also the body.
- The wicked receiuyng the Sacrament, receiue not the body of Christ.
- Ergo, the body of Christ is not really in the sacrament.

Argument.

- Ca- They which eate the flesh, and drinke the bloude of Christ, dwell in hym. and he in them.
- mes- The wicked dwell not in Christ, nor he in them.
- tres. Ergo, the wicked eate not the flesh, nor drinke y^e bloud of Christ.

Argument.

- Ca- They that haue Christ dwelling in them, bring forth much fruit. Iohn. 15. He that dwelleth in me, and I in hym, bringeth forth much fruit. &c.

- mes- The wicked bryng forth no fruit of goodnes.
- tres. Ergo, they haue not Christes body dwelling in them.

Argument.

- Da- Where remembrance is of a thing, there is imported the absence thereof.*
- ti- Remembrance of Christes body is in the sacrament: Do this in remembraunce of me &c.
- si Ergo, Christes body there is imported to be absent.

Mary they wil say, we see hym not with our outward eies, but he is commended vnder the forme of bread and wyne, and that that we see, is nothing but a qualitie or an accidence. But let them shew me a qualitie or an accidence without a substance, & I wil beleue them. And thus much concernyng Newmans examinations and arguments.

The fayth of Iohn Newman dwelling at Maydstone in Kent, who was by occupation a Peuterer.

The Lord is the protector of my lyfe. The iust shall lyue by fayth, and if he withdrawe hymselfe,*my soule shall haue no pleasure in hym.

MY fayth is, that there is one God which is wythout beginnyng and without endyng.* This God created al things visible and inuisible. And after that he had made both heauen and earth with all other creatures, hee made man, & set him in the place which he had prepared for him, which place he called Eden: he gaue to Adam hys commandements & precepts, and sayd, when so euer thou doest the thyng which I forbid, thou shalt surely die y^e death: yet did man for all this, disobey God his creator, & after his sinne he fled from God, hid hymselfe, & was in a miserable desperate case. But God seeing mā in this miserable estate,* because he & all his posteritie should not continue in deth, promised Adā that the womans seed shold breake the serpens head, wherby is ment y^t the son of God shold become man, & destroy the deuill. Which by his subtile perswasions had deceiued Adam. Then did Adā by fayth take hold of gods promise, and became the seruāt of righteousnes through the fayth which he had in the promise of y^e womans seed. So did Abel, Seth, Henoch, & Noe, with faithful Abraham, Isaac, & Iacob, and the rest of the faythfull vntil Christes tyme, as S. Paul sayth: they did all eate of one spirituall meat, & did all drinke of one maner of spirituall drinke. They did drinke of that spirituall rocke that followed thē, which rocke was Christ that saueth vs.* And when the tyme was ful come, God sent his sonne made of a woman, that is, he tooke flesh of the virgin Mary, & became man, not the shadow of a man, nor a fantasticall mā,* as some falsly faine, but a very natural man in all points, sinne onely excepted, which God & man is Christ the promised womans seed. This Christ was here conuersant among men, for the space of 30. yeres & more,* and when the tyme was come, that he should goe to hys father, he gaue vnto vs the mistery of our redemption, that we thorough fayth should eate his body, and drinke hys bloud, that we myght feed on hym through fayth to the end of the world. After this Christ offred vp hys body on the crosse,* to pacify his father, & to deliuer vs from the thraldome of the deuill, in the which we were, through sinne original & actuall. And with that one sacrifice of his body once offered on the crosse,* hee hath made perfect for euer all them that are sanctified. He descended into hell, the third day he rose agayne from death, & was conuersant at certaine tymes w^t his disciples, for the space of 40. dayes after, he rose from death. Then in the sight of all his disciples he ascended into heauen, & as hys disciples stood lookyng vppward,* & beholding hym how he went into heauen, two men stood by them in white apparell, which also sayd: ye men of Galilie, why stand ye gasing vp into heauen? This same Iesus which is taken vp from you into heauen, shall so come euen as ye haue seene hym goe into heauen,* S. Peter also sayth, that the heauens must receiue hym, vntill the tyme that all thynges whith God hath spoken by the mouth of all hys prophets since the world began, be restored again, which is the latter day, when he shall come to iudge the quicke and the dead. I do beleeeue in the holy ghost, which is the spirite of God, proceeding from the father and the sonne, which holy spirit is one God with them. I beleeeue that there is an holy church, which is the company of the faythfull & elect people of God, dispersed abroad throughout all the world,* which holy church or congregation doth not looke for Christ here, nor Christ there, neither in the desert, nor in the secret places, whereof Christ warneth vs, but as S. Paule sayth, in heauen: where he sitteth on the right hand of GOD the father,* they set their affection on thyngs that are aboue, and not on thyngs which are on earth. For they are dead concerning the thynges of this world, and their lyfe is hid with Christ in God: and when Christ which is their lyfe shall shew hymselfe, then shall they also appeare with hym in glory. I beleeeue that there is a communion of saints, euen y^e fellowship of the faythfull people which are dispersed abroad throughout all the whole world, and are of one mynde: they followe Christ their head, they loue one another as Christ loued them, & are knit together in one, euen in Christ, which Church, or Page 1688 congregation hath forgeuenes of sinnes thorough Christ, and shall enter without spotte before the face of God into his glory. For as Christ being their head, hath entred pure and cleane, so they entering by hym, shall be lyke hym in glory. And I am certaine and sure that all they which doe dye, shall rise agayne and receiue their bodies. In thē shal they see Christ come in his glory, to iudge the quicke and the dead. At whose commyng all men shall appeare and geue a reckoning of their doyngs: he shall separte y^e good from the bad, he shall say to thē which are hys elect: come ye blessed of my father, inherite the kingdome prepared for you frō the beginning: but to the other that haue always resisted his will, he shall say: depart from me ye cursed into euerlastyng fire, which is prepared for the deuill and his aungels.

Thus haue I briefly declared my fayth, which were no fayth at all if I were in doubt of it. This fayth therefore, I desire God to encrease in mee. Prayse God for his gyftes.

☛ And thus haue you the Martyrdome with the confession of this blessed man and witnes of the Lords truth, who for that, gaue his lyfe as is before declared.

*Likewise Richard Hooke about the same season, & for the same matter gaue his like at Chichester.

¶ The examinations, aunswers, and condemnation of William Coker, William Hopper, Henry Laurence, Rich. Colliar, Rich. Wright, William Stere, before the Byshop of Douer, and Harpsfield Archdeacon of Caunterbury.

Mention was made a little before in the story of M. Bland,* and Nich. Sheterden, of certaine other Kentish men, who beyng the same tyme with them called forth and examined by Thornton Bish. of Douer, N. Harpsfield, Rich. Faucet, and Rob. Collins: yet notwithstanding, because the condemnation and execution of thē was differred a little longer, till the latter end of the moneth of Aug. commyng therfore now to the tyme of their suffryng, we will briefly touch some part of their examinations and aunswers, as we find them in the Registers. The names of these were Wil. Coker, Wil. Hopper, Henry Laurence, Rich. Colliar, Rich. Wright, W. Stere. What the articles objected to M. Bland and them were, ye heard before. To the which Articles they answered for themselves seuerally in effect as followeth.

*First Wil. Coker sayd, he would aunswer no otherwise then he had already answered: & beyng offered to haue longer respite of 6. dayes after, he refused to take it. and so vpon the same sentēce of condemnation, was read against hym, the 11. of Iuly.

*Wil. Hopper first seemed to graunt to the fayth & determination of the Catholike church: after callyng hymselfe better to mynd, constantly stickyng to the truth, he was condemned the next weeke after, the 16. of Iuly.

Henry Laurence examined the sayd 16. of Iuly, & partly differred to the 2. of August,* aunswered to the Articles objected against hym: first, denying auricular confession, and that he had not, nor would receiue the Sacrament, because (sayth he) the order of the holy Scriptures is changed in the order of the Sacrament.*

Moreouer, the sayd Laurence was charged for not puttyng of his cap when the Suffragan made mention of the sacrament & did reuerence to the same, the sayd Laurence answering in these words: what, said he, ye shal not need to put of your cap: for it is not so holy that you need to put of your cap thereunto.

Further, beyng apposed concernyng the veritie of the Sacrament geuen to Christes disciples,* he affirmed, that euen as Christ gaue his very body to his Disciples, and confessed it to be the same, so likewyse Christ himselfe sayd, he was a dore, &c. addyng moreouer, that as he had sayde before, so he sayth still, that the Sacrament of the aultar is an Idole, and no remembrance of Christes passion, & contrary he knoweth not. At last beyng required to put to his hand in subscribing to his answers, he wrote these words vnder the bill of their examinations: Ye are all of Antichrist and hym ye fol.* And here his hand was stayed to write any further: Belike hee would haue written out (follow) &c. And so vpon the same sentence was read agaynst hym the 1. of August.

¶Rich. Colliar of Ashford.

Richard Colliar aboue mentioned,* hauyng the 16. of August to appeare, examined of the Sacrament of the popish aultar, aunswered and sayd, that he did not beleue, that after the Consecration, there is the reall and substantiall body of Christ, but onely breade and wyne,* and that it is most abhominable, most detestable, and most wicked to beleue otherwyse, &c. Uppon this the Sentence was read agaynst hym, and he condemned the 16. of August. After hys condemnation he sang a Psalme.* Wherefore the Priestes and their officers rayled at hym, saying, he was out of hys wits.

¶Richard Wright.

Richard Wright the same place and day,* beyng the 16. of August, apperyng, and required of the Iudge what he deleeued of the reall presence in the Sacrament, answered agayne,* that as touchyng the Sacrament of the aulter and the masse, he was ashamed to speake of it, nor to name it, and that he allowed it not as it was vsed in the church. Agaynst whom the sentence also was read, the day & place aforesayd.

¶William Stere.

William Stere of the foresayd parish of Ashford,* likewise detected and accused, was brought to appeare the sayd 16. day of August, where he in the sayd Chapterhouse of Canterbury, beyng required to make aunswer to the positions layd vnto hym by the Iudge, made aunswer agayne, that he should commaund hys dogs and not him: and further declared,* that Dicke of Douer had no authoritie to sit agaynst hym in iudgement, and asked where his authoritie was. Who then shewed him certaine Bulls and writyngs from Rome, as he said. William Stere denying that to be of sufficient force, the sayd Dicke sayd also he had authoritie from the Queene. Then the Martyr alledgyng that the B. of Canterbury (who then was in pryson) was hys Diocessan,* vrged hym to shew hys authoritie from the Archbishop, or els he denied his authoritie to be sufficient. And as touchyng the Sacrament of the aultare, he found it not (he sayd) in the scripture, & therfore he would not answer thereunto.

And moreouer, the Iudge speaking of the Sacrament of the aultare, with reuerence thereof, and putting of his cappe, he sayd,* that he needed not to reuerence that matter so highly. And thus saying to the Iudge, that hee was a bloody man, &c. the sentence was pronounced agaynst hym: after which sentence beyng read, he sayd, that the sacrament of the aultar, was the most blasphemous Idoll that euer was, &c.

¶The burnyng of sixe godly Martyrs in one fire.

Page 1689 And thus these vj. heauenly Martyrs and witnes bearers to the truth, beyng condemned by the bloody Suffragan and Archdeacon of Canterbury, M. Collins, and M. Faucet, were burned altogether in the same towne of Canterb. at three stakes and one fire, about the latter ende of August.

The copy of their sentence condemnatorie, you maye find aboue in the story of Iohn Rogers, for the papists in all their condemnations follow one maner of sentence of course commonly against all that be condemned through their vnmercifull tyranny.

¶The persecution of tenne Martyrs together, sent by certaine of the Counsaile to Boner to be examined.

AFTER the burning of these vj. aboue named: next followeth the persecution of x. other true seruantes and saints of the Lord,* not such saints as the Pope maketh, or which are mentioned in Legenda sanctorum, or in vitis patrū or in the fabulous booke de vita sanctorum Wallensium,

&c. but such as are spoken of in the holy Apocalyps, of whom it is written: *Hij sunt qui sequuntur Agnum quocun{que} ierit, quique lauarunt stolas suas in sanguine agni i. These bee they that follow the Lambe whether soeuer he goeth, & whiche haue washed their stooles in the bloud of the Lambe, &c. Thus these saints be not of the Popes making, or rather to say the truth, they are of the Popes making, of y^e Popes making (I say) in this respect, * not that the saints of God are made by the Pope, but that the saints of God are tried and declared by the Pope: so as by afflictions of Sathan Iobs patience was prooued, by Pharaos Gods power declared, and by Salmator, Tarentum was won (as Tullie writeth) for except he had lost it before, Q. Fabius could not haue recouered it: so in lyke maner, vnlesse by Antichrist good men had bene destroyed, otherwyse they had not bene tryed true Martyrs of Christ. The names of these were:

- *Elizabeth Warne.
- George Tankerfield.
- Robert Smith.
- Steuen Harwood.
- Thomas Fust.
- William Hale.
- Thomas Leyes.
- George King.
- Iohn Wade.
- Ione Layshford.

The prisons of London beginnyng now to be replenished with gods saints, and stil mo and mo comming in, the Counsaile & Commissioners thinkyng to make ready dispatch with the poore prisoners, caused these x. aboue named, to be sent with their letter directed to Boner Bish. of London, by hym to be examined, and rid out of the way. The copy of which their letter, with their names subscribed, here followeth to be read and noted.

A letter sent by the Commissioners to the B. of of London D. Boner.

The history of Elizabeth VVarne widow, burnt at Stratford bowe.

NOW seuerally to prosecute the stories of these x. Martyrs aforementioned,* first we will begin with the historie of Elizabeth Warne, who in this moneth of August was burned at Stratford Bowe, nye vnto London, widowe, late the wyfe of Ioh. Warne Upholster, and Martyr, who also was burned in the end of the month of May last past, as before in hys storye is recorded. This Elizabeth had bene apprehended amongst others, the first day of Ianuary, in a house in Bow Church yard in London, as they were gathered together in prayer, and at that present was caried to the Counter (as is also aboue specified) where she lay as prisoner vntil the 11. day of Iune. At which time she was brought vnto Newgate, and remayned there in lyke case vnto the 2. day of Iuly. Then shee was sent by the Kyng and Queenes Commissioners vnto Boner B. of London, who the sixt day of the same moneth, caused her with diuers others (as Robert Smith, George Tankerfield, &c.) to be brought before hym into hys Pallace, and there examined her vpon sundry Articles, such as of common order be ministred vnto the poore saints & Martyrs of God, as ye may more playnely perceyue by other more large and ample processes, as well before, as hereafter mentioned.

The chieftest obiection that he vsed,* eyther towards her, or the most of those, was touchyng the reall and corporall presence of the body and bloud of Christ in the Sacrament of the aultar, as the chieftest ground & profitablest foundation for their Catholike dignitie. Many other matters he objected agaynst them, as for not comyng to the Church, for speakyng agaynst the masse, for despising their ceremonies and new founde Sacramentes, with dyuers other fonde and triflyng toyes, not worthy any mentionyng.

In the ende, when she had bene diuers tymes brought before hym and other hys adherentes, and there earnestly exhorted to recant, shee sayde: Doe what ye will. For if Christ was in an errour, then am I in an errour.* Uppon which aunswere, she was the xij. day of the same moneth of Iuly, adiudged and condemned as an heretike, and so deliuered vnto the secular power (as they terme it (to be by them (yet at the Clergies appoyntment) put to death, which thyng was accomplished in her the same month aboue mentioned.

The chiefe procurer of this her death, was D. Story beyng (as it is thought) of some alliaunce eyther to her the sayd Elizabeth, or els to her late husband. Who,* thogh he was at the first apprehension of his sayd kinswoman, a very earnest suiter for her deliuerance to Doctor Martin, then one of the Kyng and Queenes Commissioners in matters of Religion (hymselfe beyng as yet not made Commissioner) and had by his sute obteyned her deliuerance for that present, as Doct. Martin hymselfe the authour hereof) hath reported, yet afterwards, vpon what occasion God onely knoweth, except vpon some burning charitie the sayd Doctor Story,* obteyning now the roome of one of the Commissioners, caused not onely the sayde Iohn Warne, but also hys wyfe, & afterwards his daughter to be agayne apprehended, neuer leauyng them, vntyll hee had brought them all to ashes. Such was the rage of that deuout catholike, and white chyld of y^e mother church that neyther kinred nor any other consideratiō could preuaile with hym, although it dyd (at hys request) wyth others, who in respect of hym, were but straungers vnto them. The Lord if it be hys will turne hys hart, or els rid hys poore Church from such an Hibra, as thanked bee the Lord, now he hath.

¶George Tankerfield a faythfull Martyr and wnesse of the Gospell, constantly suffering for the testimonie of the same.

GEorge Tankerfield of London Cooke,* borne in the Citie of Yorke, about the age of xxvij. or xxviij. yeres, was in king Edwards daies a very papist, til the time Queene Mary came in, and then perceiuing the great crueltye vsed of the Popes side, was brought into a misdoubte of theyr doings, and begā (as he said) in his heart to abhorre them. And as concerning the masse, whereof he had but a doubtful opinion before, and much struiing with him self in that case, at length hee fell to prayer, desiring God in mercye to open to him the truth, that he might be thorowly perswaded therein, whether it were of God, or no: If not, that he might vtterly hate it in his heart, and abhorre it:* whiche according to his prayer, the Lorde mercifully heard, woorking daily more and more in him to detest and abhorre the same: and so was mooued to read the Testament, whereby (as is sayd) the Lord lightened his minde with the knowledge of the truthe, woorking liuely faith in him to beleue the same, and vtterly to detest all papistrie, and so he came no more to their doings: And not onely that,* but also thys liuely faith, sayd he, kindled such a flame in him, as would not be kept in, but vtter it selfe by confession therof, reprouing his owne former doings to his friendes, exhorting them likewise to conuert and turne to the truth with him, and thus he began to be smelled out among them, til at the last he was sent for, as followeth.*

It pleased God to strike him w^t sicknesse, whereby hee lay long sicke: and on a certaine day to take the air abroad, he rose vp and went and walked into the Temple fieldes, to see y^e shooters. In the meane season came Bearde home to his house, and inquired for him, pretending to his wife, that he came only for to haue hym to come and dresse a bāket Page 1690 at the Lord Pagets. The wife because of his apparell (which was very braue) tooke him to be some honeste Gentleman, and with all speede prepared her selfe to fetch her husband, hauing a good hope he should nowerne some mony: and least this gentleman should not be noyed with tarying,* she fet him a cushin to set him soft, and said a fayre napkin before him, and set breade thereon, and came to her husband: who whē he heard it, sayd: a banket woman? In deed it is such a banquet as wil not be very pleasant to the flesh but Gods will be done. And when he came home hee saw who it was, and called him by his name, which when his wife perceiued, & wherfore he came, like a tall woman, would play Peters part, and in sted of a sword took a spit, and had runne him thorow, had not the Constable which Bearde had sent for by his man, come in withall, who rescued him: yet she sent a brickebatte after him and hit hym on the backe.* And so Tankerfield was deliuered to y^e Constable, and brought to Newgate about the last day of February an. 1555. by the sayd Bearde Yeoman of the Gard, and Simon Ponder Pewterer, Constable of S. Dūstons in the West, sent in by Syr Roger Chomley knight and by Doctor Martin.

Tankerfield thus being brought to prison by hys aduersaryes, at lēgth w^t the other aboue named was brought to his examination before Boner. Who after his accustomed maner, ordered his articles and positions vnto him: the copy and tenor of which his ordinary Articles ye may read aboue expressed. pag. 1585.

To these Articles as aboue rehearsed, he aunswered agayne, constantly declaring his mind both touching auricular confession, and also the sacrament of the popish alter, and likewise of the Masse.* &c. First that he was not confessed to any priest 5. yeaes past, nor to any other but only to God, and further denying that he would hereafter be confessed to anye Prieste, for that hee founde it not in Christes booke, and tooke it onely to be a counsell.

And concerning the sacrament, commonly called here in England of the aultar,* he confessed that hee neither had nor did beleue, that in the sayd sacrament, there is the reall body and bloud of Christ, because that the bodye is ascended into heauen, and there doth sit at the right hand of god the father.

And moreouer he sayd, that the Masse now vsed in the Church of England was nought,* and ful of Idolatry and abomination, and agaynst the word of God, affirming also, that there are but two Sacramentes in the Church of Christ, Baptisme, and the Supper of the Lord. &c. And to these assertions, he sayd, he would stand: and so he did to the end.

And when at last the Byshop began to read y^e sentence exhorting him before with manye woordes to reuoke hys professed opinion (which they called damnable & heretical) he notwithstanding,* resisted all contrary perswasions, answering the bishop agayne in this forme of words: I will not (sayd he) forsake mine opinions, except you (my Lord) can repell thē by scriptures, and I care not for your Diuinity:* for you condemne al men: and proue nothing against them. And after many fayre wordes of exhortation, which Boner then vsed (after his ordinary maner) to conuerte or rather peruert him, he aunswered boldlye agayne, saying moreouer: that the church wherof y^e pope is supreme head, is no part of Christes Catholicke Church: & adding thervnto, and poynting to the Bishop, spake to the people, say'ing: Good people beware of him, and such as he is: for these be the people that deceiue you. &c.

These with other wordes moe, he spake: whereupon the Bishop reading the sentence of his popish condēnatiō gaue him to the secular power.*

And so this blessed seruauent of God was had to saynct Albons,* and there with much pacience and constācy ended his life, the xxvi. day of August, for the defence of the truth, which at length will haue the victory.

Certayne notes concerning George Tankerfield, after he came to suffer martyrdome at Saynt Albons.

IN primis, he was brought vnto S. Albons, by the high Shiriffe of Hereford Shyre, M Edw. Brocket Esquire and one Pulter of Hitchen which was vnder Shiriffe.

Item theyr Inne was the crosse keyes whereas there was great cōcourse of people to see and heare the prisoner, among the which multitude some were sory to see so godly a man brought to be burned, others praised God for his constancy and perseuerance in the trueth. Contrarywyse some there were which said it was pity he did stand in such opinions, and others both old womē & men cried against him one called him hereticke, & sayd it was pity that he lyued. But George Tankerfield did speake vnto them so effectually out of the word of God, in lamenting of theyr ignorance, & protesting vnto them his vnspotted conscience, & that God did mollify theyr hardened hartes insomuch y^t some of them departed out of the chamber w^t weping eies.

Item there came vnto him a certayne Scholemayster (which reteined vnto sir Tho. Pope knight) this man had certayne cōmunication w^t G. Tankerfield the day before he was cōming toward S. Albons, as touching theyr sacrament of y^e aultar & other poyntes of papisticall religiō, but as he vrged Tankerfield w^t the authority of y^e doctors, wrasting thē after his own will: so on y^e other side Tākerfield aunswered him mightily by y^e scriptures not wrested after y^e mind of any man but being interpreted after y^e will of the Lord Iesus. &c. So that as he would not allow such allegatiōs as Tankerfield brought out of the scriptures w^t out the opiniōs of y^e doctors: so agayn Tankerfield would not credit his doctrine to be true except he could cōfirme it by the scriptures. In y^e end Tankerfield prayd him that he would not trouble him in such matters, for his conscience was established. &c. and so he departed from him wishing him well & protesting that he meant him no more hurt thē his owne soule.

Item when the houre drew on apace y^t he should suffer he desired the wine drawer that he might haue a pinte of malmesey & a loafe that he might eat & drinke that in remēbrance of Christes death and passion, because he could nor haue ministred vnto him by others in such maner as christ cōmaunded, & thē he kneeled downe making his cōfession vnto the Lord w^t all those which were in the chāber wyth him, & after y^t he had prayd earnestly vnto the Lord, & had read the institution of the holy supper by the Lord Iesus, out of y^e euangelistes & out of S. Paule: he sayd O Lord y^u knowest it I do not this to derogate authority frō any mā, or in contēpt of those which are thy ministers, but only because I cannot haue it ministred according to thy word &c. & when he had spoken these & such like wordes he receiued it with geuing of Thankes.

Item when some of his frends willed him to eat some meat, he sayd he would not eat that which should do other good that had more need, & y^t had lōgertime to liue thē he.

Item he prayd his host to let him haue a good fire in y^e chāber, he had so, & thē he sitting on a forme before the fire put of his shoes & hose & stretched out his leg to y^e flame, & whē it had touched his foot, he quickly withdrew his leg shewing how y^e flesh did perswade him one way & the spirit another way. The flesh sayd O thou foole wilt y^u burne & needest not. The spirit sayd be not afrayd, for thys is nothing in respect of fire eternall. The flesh sayd do not leaue the cōpany of thy frēdes & acquaintance which loue & will let thee lack nothing. The spirit sayd the cōpany of Iesus Christ & his glorious presence doth exceed al fleshly frēds. The flesh sayd do not shortē thy time now for y^u mayst liue if thou wilt much lōger. The spirit said this life is nothing vnto y^e life in heauen which lasteth for euer. &c. And all this time the shiriffes were at a certayn gētlemans house at diner not far frō the towne whither also resorted knightes & many gētlemē out of y^t coutry, because his sonne was married that day, & vntill they returned from diner the prisoner was lefte w^t his host to be kept & looked vnto. And G. Tankerfield all y^e time was kindly & louingly entreated of his host, and considering that his time was short his saying was, that although the day were neuer so long, yet at the last it ringeth to Euensong. &c.

Item about two of y^e clocke whē the shiriffes were returned frō diner they brought G. Tankerfield out of his Inne vnto y^e place where he shoulde suffer which is called Romeland, being a greene place nigh vnto y^e west end of y^e Abbey church, vnto the which whē he was come he kneeled downe by the y^e stake that was set vp for him & after he had ended his prayers, he arose & with a ioyfull fayth he sayd y^t although he had a sharpe diner, yet he hoped to haue a ioyfull supper in heauen.

Item while the fagots were set about him there came a priest vnto him, & perswaded him to beleue on y^e sacrament of y^e aulter & he should be saued. But G. Tankerfield cried out vehemētly & sayd, I defye the whore of Babilon, I defie the whore of Babilon, fie of y^e abhominable Idoll, good people do not beleue him, good people doe not beleue him. And thē y^e Maior of the towne cōmaunded to set fire to the heretique, and sayd if he had but one loade of fagots in the whole world, he would geue thē to burn him. There was a certayne knight by & went vnto Tankerfield & took him by the hand & sayd good brother be strōg in Christ, this he spake softly, and Tankerfield sayd, O syr I thanke you I am so I thanke God. Then fire was set vnto him, & he desired the shiriffe & all the people that they woulde pray for him, the most part did so. And so embracing the fire he bathed Page 1691 himselfe in it, and calling on the name of the Lord Iesus he was quickly out of payne, &c.

After the martyrdome was ended & that he was fallen a sleepe in the Lord, there were some superstitious old women did blasphemously say that the Deuill was so stronge with him and all such hereticks as he was that they could not feele any payne almost, nor yet be sory for theyr sinnes.

The history and examinations of Robert Smith, constantly maynteining the trueth of Gods word, and suffering for the same in the moneth of August.

RObert Smith was brought vnto Newgate the fifte of Nouember, in the first and second yere of the king and queene, by Ioh. Mathew, yeomā of the gard o• the quenes side, by the commaudemēt of the Counsell. This Smith first gaue himselfe vnto seruice in the house of sir Thomas Smith knight, being thē Prouost of Eton: from thence he was preferred to Windsore, hauing there in the colledge a clerkship of x. poūd a yere. Of stature he was tall & slēder, actiue about many things, but chiefly delighting in the art of Painting, which many times, rather for his minds sake thē for any liuing or lucre, he did practise & excercise. In re'ligion he was feruent, after he had once tasted the trueth: wherin he was much confirmed by the preachings & readings of one M. Turner of Windsore & others: wherupō at the comming of Queene Mary he was depriued of hys Clerkship by her visitors, & not long after he was apprehended, and brought to examinatiō before Boner, as here foloweth, written and testified with his owne hand.

¶The first examination of Robert Smith before Bishop Boner.

*ABout nine of the clocke in the morning, I was among the rest of my brethren brought to the Bishops house: and I first of al was brought before him into his chamber to whom the bishop sayd, as foloweth, after he had asked my name.

Boner.

How long is it agoe since the time that ye were cōfessed to any priest?*

Smith.

Neuer since I had yeres of discretion. For I neuer saw it needfull, neither cōmaūded of God to come to shew my faultes to any of that sinfull nūber, whō ye call priests.

Boner.

Thou shewest thy selfe euen at the first chop to be a ranke heretick, which being wery of painting, art entred into Diuinity, and so fallen, through thy departing frō thy vocation into heresy.

Smith.

Although I haue vnderstanding in y^e said occupation, yet (I prayse God) I haue had litle need all my life hitheyto to liue by the same,* but haue liued without the same in mine own house as honestly in my vocation, as ye haue liued in yours, and yet vsed the same better then euer you vsed the Pulpit.

Boner.

How long is it ago since ye receiued the sacrament of the aultar, and what is your opinion in the same?

Smith.

I neuer receiued the same since I had yeres of discretion,* nor neuer will, by Gods grace: neither do esteeme the same in any poynt, because it hath not gods ordinance, neither in name, nor in other vsage, but rather is set vp & erected to mocke God withall.

Boner.

Do ye not beleue that it is the very body of Christe that was borne of the virgin Mary, naturally, substantially and really, after the wordes of consecration?

Smith.

I shewed you before it was none of Gods ordynaunces, as ye vse it: thē much lesse to be God, or any part of his substance, but onely bread & wine erected to the vse aforesaid: yet neuerthelesse, if ye can approue it to be the bo|dy that ye spake of, by the word, I will beleue it: if not, I will, as I do, accoūt it a detestable Idol, not God, but contrary to God and truth.

Boner.

*Thē after many raging words & vayne obiectiōs, he sayd there was no remedy but I must be burned.

Smith.

Ye shall do no more vnto me, then ye haue done to better mē then either of vs both. But thinke not therby to quench the spirit of god, neither therby to make your matter good. For your sore is too well sene to be healed so priuily w^t bloud. For euē the very childrē haue al your deedes in dirision: so that although ye patch vp one place with au'thority, yet shall it breake out in forty to your shame.

Boner.

Then after much ado, & many railing sentences, he sayd throwing away y^e paper of mine examinatio^o: wel euē now by my truth, euen in good earnest: if thou wilt go and be shriuen, I will teare this paper in peces.

Smith.

To which I aunswered: It would be too much to his shame to shew it to men of discretion.

After which aunswere, I was caried downe into the garden with my Gaoler, & there remayned vntill my brother Harwood was examined: * & thē being agayn brought vp before the sayd Bishop, he demaunded if I agreed with Harwood in his confession, vpon these articles folowing.

Boner.

What say you to the Catholicke church? Do ye not confesse there is one in earth?

Smith.

Yes verely, I beleue that there is one Catholicke Church, or faythfull Congregation, which as the Apostle sayth, is builded vpon the Prophets and Apostles, Christ Iesus being the head corner stone: which church in all her wordes and workes, mainteineth the word, and bringeth the same for her authority, & without it doth nothing, nor ought to doe, of which I am assured, I am by grace made a member.

Boner.

Ye shall vnderstand, that I am boūd when my brother offendeth, & will not be reconciled, * to bring him before the congregation: now if your Church be the same, where may a man finde it, to bring his brother before the same?

Smith.

It is written in the Actes of the Apostles, that whē the tyranny of the Bishops was so great agaynst the churche in Iewry, they were fayne to congregate in houses & priuy places, as they now do: and yet were they neuerthelesse the Church of God: and seing they had theyr matters redressed being shut vp in a corner, may not we do the like now a dayes?

Boner.

Yea, theyr Church was knowne full wel.* For saint Paul writ to the Corinthians to haue the man punished & excommunicate, that had committed euil with his fathers wife. Whereby wee maye well perceiue, it was a knowne church, but yours is not knowne.

Smith.

Then could ye not persecute it, as ye do: but (as ye say) the Churche of God at Corinth was manifest both to God and Paul: euē so is this Church of God in England whome ye persecute, both knowne to God, and also euen to the very wicked although they know not, nor will not know theyr truth nor conuersation: yea and your sinneful number haue professed theyr verity, and maineteyned the same a long season.

Boner.

Well, thou sayest that the church of God was onely at Corinth when Paul writ vnto them, and so will I put in writing: shall I?

Smith.

I do maruell greatly, my Lord, that ye are not ashamed to lay snares for your Brethren on this manner.* This is now the third snare you haue layd for me. First to make me confesse that the Churche of Englande is not the church of Christ: Secōdly, to say, it is not knowne. Thirdly, to say the church of God is not vniuersall, but particular: and this is not the office of a bishop. For if an innocent had come in your way, you would haue done your best (I see) to haue entangled him.

Harps.

Well frend, quoth one of my Lordes Chapleynes, you are no innocent, as it appeareth.

Smith.

By the grace of God, I am that I am: & this grace in me, I hope, is not in vayne.

Boner.

Well, quoth my Lord, laughing: tell me, how sayst thou of the church.

Smith.

I tolde you whereupon the true Chrch is builded, and I affirme in England to be the congregation of God, and also in Omnem terram, as it is written: Theyr sounde is gone forth into all landes, and that this is the afflicted & persecuted Church, which ye cease not to imprison, slay & kyll.* And in Corinth was not all the congregation of God, but a number of those holy and elect people of God. For Paul neither Peter were present at Corinth when they wrote, & yet were they of the Church of God, as many thousandes moe, which also communicate in that holy spirit.

Boner.

What call ye Catholick, and what call you church?

Smith.

Catholique is vniuersall,* and Church is a congregation knit together in vnity.

Then after much like v••ne talke, it was layde to my charge, that my felowe and I spake one thing. Whereof I praysed God, and was sent agayne to a garden. Where after a while, as my Brother Harwood and I had bene together, commeth one of my Lords Chapleynes, that much desired to common with me, demaunding first if I were not a prisoner.

Smith.

I am in this fleshe a Prisoner, and subiecte to my Mayster and yours: but I hope yet the Lordes free man through Christ Iesu.

Doct.

I do much desire to talke with you louingly, for because ye are a man that I muche lament, with many other sweet wordes.

To which I aunswered: Sub melle latet venenum. And after much ado about his God, I cōpelled him to say, that it must needs enter into the belly, & so fal into the draught. To which he answered.

Doct.

What derogation was it to Christ, whē the Iewes spit in his face?

Page 1692

Smith.

If the Iewes being his enemies, did but spit in his face, and we being his friends throw him into the draught, which of vs haue deserued the greatest damnation? Then by your argument, he that doth iniury to Christ, shal haue a most plenteous saluation.*

Doct.

Then start he away, and would haue his humanity incōprehensible, making a comparison betwene our soule and the body of Christ, bringing in to serue his turne, whi'che way Christ came in among his disciples, the dores being shut?

Smith.

Although it be sayd, that when he came the doores were shut, yet haue I as much to proue, that the doores opened at his cōming, as ye haue to proue he came through the dore. For that mighty God that brought the Disciples out of prisons, which yet whē search came, were foūd shut, was able to let Christ in at the dore, although it were shut: and yet it maketh not for your purpose, for they saw hym, heard him, and felt him, and so can we not say ye doe, neyther is he in more then in one place at once. At which aunswere, when he had made many scoffinges, he departed away from me, and we were caryed vnto my Lordes Hall; where we were bayted of my Lordes band, almost all the day, vntill our keeper seing theyr misorder, shut vs vp all in a fayre Chamber, while my Lord went into his Synagogue, to condemne M. Denly and Iohn Newman.

Then brought they vp my Lorde Maior to heare our matter aboue in the chamber, and I first of all was called into the chamber,* where my Lord intended to sup. Where my Lord Maior being set with the Bishop and one of the Sheriffes, wine was walking on euery side, I standyng before them as an outcast, which made me remember how Pilate & Herode were made frendes, but no man was sory for Iosephes hurt. But after my Lords had well drūke, my ar•icles were sent for, & read, and he demaunded whether I sayd not, as was written.

Smith.

That I haue sayde, I haue sayde, and what I haue sayd, I do meane vtterly.

Boner.

Well my Lorde Maior, your Lordship hath hearde somewhat, what a stout hereticke this is, and that his Articles haue deserued death: Yet neuertheles for so much as they report me to seeke bloud,* and call me bloody Boner, where as God knoweth, I neuer sought any mans bloud in all my life, I haue stayed him from the Consistory thys day, whither I might haue brought him iustly: and yet here before your Lordship, I desire him to turne, and I will with all speed dispatch him out of trouble: and this I professe before your Lordship and all this audience.

Smith.

Why, my Lord, do ye put out this fayre visor before my Lord Maior, to make him beleue that ye seeke not my bloud, to cloke your murthers through my stoutnesse, as ye call it? Haue ye not had my brother Tomkins before you,* whose hand when you had burned most cruelly, ye burnt also his bodye, and not onely of him, but of a greate many of the members of Christ, men that feared God, and liued vertuously, and also the Queenes Maiestyes moste true subiectes, as theyr goodes and bodies haue made manifest? and seing in these Sayntes ye haue shewed so little mercy, shall it seeme to my Lord and this audience, that ye will shew me more fauour? No, no, my Lorde. But if ye meane as ye say, why then examine ye me of that I am not bound to aunswere you vnto?

Boner.

Well, what sayst thou by the Sacrament of the aultar? * is it not the very body of Christ, fleshe, bloud, & bone, as it was borne of the virgin?

Smith.

I haue aunsweared, that it is none of Gods order, neither any Sacrament, but mans owne vayne inuention, and shewed him the Lordes institution. But when he was so earnest before the audiēce, declaring that we knew nothing, brynging out his Hoc est corpus meum, to laye in my Dishe, I prooued before the audience, that it was a dead God, declaring the destinction appoynted betwene the two creatures of bread and wine, and that a body with out bloud hath no life. At which Harpsfield found himselfe much offended, and tooke the tale out of my Lords mouth, saying:

Harps.

I will approoue by the Scriptures, that ye blaspheme God in so saying: for it is geuen in two partes, because there is two thinges shewed, that is to saye his body and his Passion, as sayth S. Paule: and therefore is the bread his body, and the wine the representatiō of his death and bloud shedding.

Smith.

Ye falsify the worde, and racke it to serue your purpose. For the wine was not onely the shewing of his passion, but the bread also: for our Sauour sayth: So oft as ye do this, do it in remembraunce of me. And S. Paule sayth: So oft as ye eate of this bread, and drinke of this cup, ye shall shewe the Lordes death till he come. And here is as much reuerence geuen to the one, as to the other.

Wherefore yf the bread be his body, the cuppe must be his bloud, and as wel ye make his body in the cup,* as his bloud in the bread. Then vp rose my Lorde and went to the table: where my Lorde Maior desired me to saue my soule. To whome I answered, I hope it was saued thorow Christ Iesus, desiring him to haue pity on his owne soule, and remember whose sword he caryed.

At which I was caryed into the Garden, and there abode vntill the rest of my frendes were examined,* and so were we sent away with many foule farewellles, to Newgate agayne, my Lord Bishop geuing the keeper a charge to lay me in limb•.

¶An other examination of Robert Smith before the sayd Bishop.

Vpon Saturday at eight of the clocke, I was brought to his chamber agayne, and there by him examined,* as foloweth.

Boner.

Thou Robert Smith. &c. sayst, that there is no catholicke Church here on earth.

Smith.

Ye haue heard me both speake the contrary, and ye haue written it as a witnes of the same.

Boner.

Yea, but I must aske thee this question: how sayest thou?

Smith.

Must ye of necessity beginne with a lye? it maketh manifest that ye determine to end with the same. But there shall no Liers enter into the kingdome of God. Neuerthelesse, if ye will be aunswared, aske mine articles that were written yesterday,* and they shall tel you that I haue confessed a Church of God, as well in earth as in heauen, and yet all one Church, & one mans members, euen Christ Iesus.

Boner.

Well, what sayest thou to auricular confession? is it not necessary to be vsed in Christes Church, and wilt not thou be shriuen of the priest?

Smith.

It is not needefull to be vsed in Christes Church, as I aunswered yesterday. But if it be needefull for your Church, it is to picke mens purses.* And such pickepurse matters is all the whole rabble of your ceremonies: for all is but mony matters that ye maynteyne.

Boner.

Why, how art thou able to proue that confession is a pickepurse matter? Art thou not ashamed so to say?

Smith.

I speake by experience. For I haue both hearde and seene the fruites of the same. For firste it hath bene, we see, a bewrayer of kinges secretes,* and the secretes of other mens consciences. Who being deliuered, and glad to be discharged of theyr sinnes, haue geuen to Priests great summes of mony to absolue them, & sing Masses for theyr soules health.

And for ensample, I beganne to bring in a pageant, that by report was played at saynt Thomas of Acres, and where I was sometime a childe waiting on a Gentleman of Northfolke,* which being bounde in conscience through the perswasion of the Priest, gaue away a great summe of his goodes, and forgaue vnto M. Gressam a great summe of money, and to an other as much. The priest had for his part a summe, and the house had an annuitie to keepe him, the which thing when his brother heard, he came down to London, & after declaration made to the Counsaile, how by the subtilty of the Priest he had robbed his wyfe & children, recouered a great part agayne, to the value of two or three hundred poundes of Maister Gressam and his other frende: but what he gaue to the house, could not be recouered. This tale began I to tell. But when my Lord saw it sauored not to his purpose, he began to reuile me, & sayde: By the Masse, if the Queenes maiesty were of his mynde, I should not come to talke before any man, but should be, put into a sacke, & •ogge tyed vnto the same, & so should be throwen into the water.

Smith.

To which I answered againe, saying: I know you speake by practise, as much as by speculation: for both you & your predecessors haue sought all meanes possible to kyll Christ secretly: record of M. Hunne, whom your predecessor caused to be thrust in at the nose, w^t hot burning needles, and then to be hanged, & sayde y^e same Hunne to haue hanged himselfe: and also a good brother of yours, a Byshop of your professiō hauing in his prison an innocēt mā, whom because he saw he was not able by the scriptures to ouercome, he made him priuily to be snarled, & his flesh to be torne and plucked awaye with a payre of pinsers, and bringing him before the people, sayd, the Rattes had eaten him. Thus according to your othe, is all your dealing and hath bene: and as you taking vpon you the office,* doe not without othes open your mouth, no more do you without murder maynteyne your traditions.

Boner.

Ah, ye are a generation of lyers: there is not one true word that commeth out of your mouthes.

Page 1693

Smith.

*Yes, my Lorde, I haue sayde that Iesus Christ is dead for my sinnes, and risen for my iustification, and thys is no lye.

Boner.

Then made he his man to put in my tale of y^e gentleman of Northfolke, and would haue had me recite it agayne: which when I would not doe, he made his man to put in suche summes as he imagined. At the ende of thys, commeth in M. Mordant knight,* and sate downe to heare my examination. Then sayd my Lord. Howe sayest thou Smith to the seuen sacramentes? Beleeuest thou not that they be Gods order, that is to say, the sacrament of. &c.

Smith.

I beleue that in Gods Church are but two Sacramentes,* that is to say, the sacrament of regeneration, & the sacrament of the Lordes supper: and as for the Sacrament of the aultar, and all your sacraments, they may wel serue your church, but Gods church hath nothing to do w^t them, neither haue I any thing to do to aunswere them, nor you to examine me of them.

Boner.

Why, is Gods order chaūged in baptisme? In what poynt do we dissent from the word of God?*

Smith.

First in halowing your water: in coniuring of the same: in baptising children, with annoynting and spitting in their mouthes, mingled with salt, and with many other lend ceremonies, of which not one poynt is able to be proued in Gods order.

Boner.

By the masse this is the vnshamefast heretique that euer I heard speake.

Smith.

Well sworne my Lord, ye keepe a good watch.

Boner.

Well, M. Controller, ye catche me at my wordes: but I will watch thee as well, I warrant thee.

Mordant.

By my troth, my Lord, quoth M. Mordant, I neuer heard the like in all my life. But I pray you my lord, marke well his aunswere for Baptisme. He dissalloweth therin, holy oyntmēt, salt, and such other laudable ceremonies which no Christian man will deny.

Smith.

That is a shamefull blasphemy agaynst Christ, so to vse any mingle mangle in baptising young infants.

Boner.

I beleue, I tell thee, that if they dye before they bee baptised, they be damned.

Smith.

Yee shall neuer bee saued by that beliefe. But I pray you my Lord, shewe me, are we saued by water, or by Christ?

Boner.

By both.

Smith.

Then the water dyed for our sinnes: and so muste ye say,* that the water hath life, and it being our seruaunt, & created for vs, is our sauour: this, my Lord, is a good doctrine, is it not?

Boner.

Why, how vnderstandest thou these scriptures? Except a man be borne of water and of the spyrit, he can not enter into the kingdome of God.

And againe, Suffer (sayth our Sauour) these children to come vnto me: and if thou wilt not suffer them to be baptised after the laudable order, thou lettest them to come vnto Christ.

Smith.

Where ye alleadge Saynt Iohn, Except a man &c. and will thereby proue the water to saue, and so the deede or worke to saue and putte away sinnes, I will send you to Saynt Paule, which asketh of the Galathians: Whether they receiued the spirite by the deedes of the law, or by the preaching of fayth? and there concludeth, that the holye Ghost accompanyeth the preaching of fayth, and with the worde of fayth entreth into the harte. So nowe if Baptysme preache me the washinge in Christes bloud, so doeth the holy Ghost accompanye it, and it is vnto me as a Preacher, and not a Sauour. And where ye say, I let the children to come vnto Christ,* it is manifest by our Sauours wordes, that ye let them to come, that will not suffer them to come to him without the necessitye of water. For he sayth: suffer them to come vnto me and not vnto water, and therefore if ye condemne them, ye condemne both the merites and wordes of Christ. For our Sauour sayeth: Except ye turne and become as childrē, ye cannot enter into the Kyngdome of GOD. And so broughte I out manye other ensamples, to make manifest, that Christ hath cleansed original sinne, bringing in ensamples out of scriptures for the same.

Boner.

Then thou makest the water of none effect, and then put away water.*

Smith.

It is not (sayth Saynt Peter) the washynge awaye of the filth of the fleshe, but in that a good conscience consenteth vnto GOD. And for to prooue that water onely bringeth not the holye ghost, it is written in the 8. of the Actes, that Simon receiued water, but would haue receyued the holy ghost for money.* Also that the holy ghost hath come before baptisme, it is written that Iohn had the holy ghost in his mothers wombe. Cornelius, Paule, and the Queene of Candace seruant, with many other receiued the holy ghost before Baptisme. Yea, and although your generation haue set at nought the worde of God, and like swine turned hys wordes vpside downe, yet must his Church keep the same in order that he left them, whiche his Church dare not breake: and to iudge children damned that be not baptised, it is wicked.

Mord.

By our Lady syr, but I beleue that if my childe dye without water, he is damned.

Boner.

Yea, and so do I, and all Catholicke men, good M. Mordant.

Smith.

Well my Lord, such Catholicke, such saluation.

Boner.

Well Syr, what say you to the Sacrament of Orders?

Smith.

Ye may call it the Sacrament of misorders: * for all orders are appoynted of God. But as for your shauing, annoynting, greasing, poling, & rōūding, there are no such thinges appointed in Gods book, and therefore I haue nothing to do to beleue your orders. And as for you, my lord, if ye had grace or intelligēce, ye wold not so disfigure your selfe as ye do.

Boner.

Sayest thou so? * nowe by my troth and I wyll goe shaue my selfe to anger thee withal: and so sent for his barber, which immediatly came. And before my face at y^e doore of the next chamber he shaued himselfe, desiring me before he went, to answere to these articles.

Boner.

What say you to the holy bread and holy water, * to the sacrament of annoynting, & to all the rest of such ceremonies of the church?

Smith.

I say, they be bables for fooles to play withall, & not for the children of God to exercise themselues in: and therefore they may go among the refuse. Then went away Maister Mordant, and my Lord went to shauing, leauing there certayne Doctors, as he called thē, to assay what they could doe, of whō I was baited for halfe an houre: of whō I also asked this questiō: Where were all you in the dayes of Kyng Edward, that ye spake not that which ye speake now?

Doct.

We were in England. *

Smith.

Yea, but then ye had the faces of men, but nowe yee haue put on Lyons faces again, as sayth S. Iohn: Ye shew your selues now as full of malice as ye may be. For ye haue for euery time a visier: yea, & if an other king Edward shoulde arise, ye would then say, Downe with the Pope, for hee is Antichrist, and so are all his Angels.

Then was I al to reuiled, and so sent away, & brought in agayne to come before these men: & one of them that baited me before, asked me if I disobeyed confession?

Smith.

To whom I answered: Looke in mine articles, and they shall shew you what I allow.

Doct.

Your articles confesse that you allow not auriculare confession.

Smith.

I allow it not, because the word aloweth it not, nor commaundeth it.

Doct.

Why, it is written, thou shalt not hide thy sinnes & offences.*

Smith.

No more do I when I confesse them to almightye God.

Doct.

Why, ye can not say, that ye can hide them frō God, and therefore you must vnderstand the wordes are spoken to be vttered to them that do not know them.

Smith.

Ye haue made a good aunswere: then must y^e priest confesse himselfe to me, as I to him. For I know his faultes and secretes no more then he knoweth mine. But if ye confesse you to the Priest, and not vnto God, ye shall haue the reward that Iudas had: for he confessed him selfe to the priest, and yet went and hanged himselfe by and by: and so as many as do not acknowledge theyr faultes to God, are sayd to hide them.

Doct.

What did they that come to Iohn to be baptised?

Smith.

The came and confessed theyr sinnes vnto almighty God.

Doct.

And not vnto Iohn?

Smith.

If it were vnto Iohn, as ye are not able to proue, yet was it to God before Iohn, and the whole Congregation.

Doct.

Why, Iohn was alone in the wildernes.*

Smith.

Why, and yet the scriptures say he had many Disciples, and that many Phariseis and Saduces came to hys Baptisme. Here the Scriptures and you agree not. And if they confessed themselues to Iohn, as ye say, it was to all the Congregation, as saynt Paule doth to Timothy, and to all that reade his Epistle, in opening to all the hearers, that he was not worthy to be called an Apostle, because he had bene a Tyraunt. But as for eare confession, ye neuer heard it allowed by the worde. For the Prophete Daud maketh his confession vnto God, and sayeth: I will confesse my sinnes vnto the Lord. Daniell maketh his confession vnto the Lorde: Iudith, Tobye, Ieremye, Manasses, wyth all the forefathers did euen so. For the Lorde hath sayde: Page 1694Call vppon mee in the time of trouble,*and I will deliuer thee. Knocke, aske, seeke, with such like, and this is the woorde of God. Now bring somewhat of the word to helpe your self withall. Then they raged and called me dogge, and said I was damned.

Smith.

Nay, ye are dogges, that for because holy things are offered, you wyll slaye your frendes. For I maye say with S. Paul: I haue fought with beastes in the likenes of mē. For here I haue bene bayted these two dayes, of my Lord & his great Bulles of Basan, and in his hall beneath haue I bene bayted of the rest of his bande. With this came my Lord from shauing, and asked me how I liked him?

Smith.

Forsoothe, ye are euen as wise as ye were before ye were shauen.

Boner.

How standeth it, mayster Doctours, haue ye done any good?

Doct.

No, by my troth my Lord, we can do no good.

Smith.

Then is it fulfilled which is written: How can an euill tree bring forth good fruit?

Bonor.

Nay, noughty fellow, I set these gentlemē to bring thee home to Christ.

Smith.

Such Gentlemen, such Christes: and as truely as they haue that name from Christ, so truely doe they teache Christ.

Boner.

Well, wilt thou neither heare them nor me?

Smith.

Yes I am compelled to heare you: but ye can not compell me to folow you.

Boner.

Well, thou shalt be burned at a stake in smithfield if thou wilt not turne.

Smith.

*And ye shall burne in hell, if ye repent not: but my Lord, to put you out of doubt, because I am wery, I wyll strayne curtesy with you. I perceiue ye will not with your Doctors come vnto me, and I am not determined to come vnto you, by Gods grace. For I haue hardened my face agaynst you as hard as brasse. Thē after many rayling sentences I was sent away. And thus haue I left the trueth of mine answeres in writing (gentle Reader) being compelled by my frends to do it: that ye may see how the Lord hath according to his promise, geuen me a mouth and wise'dome for to answer in his cause, for which I am condemned, and my cause not heard.

¶The last examination of Robert Smith.

The 12. of Iuly I was with my brethren brought into the Consistory,* and mine articles read before my Lord Maior and the Shiriffes, with all the assistances: to which I answered, as foloweth.

Boner.

By my fayth, my Lord Maior, I haue shewed him as much •auor as any man liuing might do: but I perceiue all his lost, both in him and all his company.

Smith.

At this word which he coupled with an othe, came I in, and taking him with the maner sayd: My Lord, it is written: Ye must not sweare.

Boner.

Ah, mayster controller, are ye come? Loe, my Lord Maior, this is Mayster Speaker, poynting to my brother Tankerfield, and this is Mayster Controller, pointing to me. And then beginning to read my articies, he perseuered till he came at my tale of the gentleman of Northfolke, and then demaūded of my Lord Maior, if he heard of the same before. To which he answered, No. To whō I answered.

Smith.

My Lorde Maior shall it please you to heare me to recite it, as I hearde it & tolde it, & then shall you heare the truth. For this tale that my Lord hath told, is vntrue.

Boner.

How say you good M. Mordant, spake he not this that is here, as it is written? were ye not by?

Mord.

Yes, my Lord, that it is: I heard him say it.

Smith.

How heard ye me say it, and were not present whē I spake it? should such a man make a lye? it is manifestlye proued that the Prophet sayth: Euen as the king sayth. so saith the Iudge, that he may doe him a pleasure agayne. And so was brought out my Gaoler for tryall therof, who there openly professed, that neyther mayster Mordant nor the Doctors before mentioned were present when I spake it. At which maister Mordant with blushing cheekes, sayde, hee heard thē read, and heard me affirme the same, which was also not true. Then proceded my lord with the rest of mine articles, d•maunding of me, if I sayd not as was written. To whiche I aunswered, No: and turning to my Lorde Maior, I sayd: I require you, my Lord Maior in Gods behalfe, vnto whom perteineth your sword & Iustice, that I may here before your presence answere to these obiections that are layd agaynst me, and haue the probatiō of the same: and if any thing that I haue sayd or will say, be to be approued (as my Lord saith) heresy, I shall not only with all my hart forsake the same, and cleaue to the truth, but also recant wheresoeuer ye shall assigne me, and all this audience shalbe witnesses to the same.

Maior.

Why Smyth, thou canst not deny, but this thou sayedst?

Smith.

Yes my Lord, I deny that which he hath written,* because he hath both added to, & diminished from the same: But what I haue spoken, I will neuer deny.

Maior.

Why, thou spakest agaynst the blessed Sacrament of the aultar.

Smith.

I denied it to be any Sacrament, and I do stand here to make probation of the same: and if my Lorde here, or any of his Doctors be able to approue either the name, or vsage of the same, I will recant mine error. Thē spake my Brother Tankerfielde, and defended the probation of thinges, which they called heresy, to the which the Bishop aunswered.

Boner.

By my troth, Mayster speaker, ye shall preache at a Stake.

Smith.

Well sworne, my Lord, ye keepe a good watch.

Boner.

Well, mayster Controller, I am no Saynt.

Smith.

No, my Lord, nor yet good Bishop.* For a Bishop sayth S. Paule, should be faultles, and a dedicate vessell vnto god, and are ye not ashamed to sit in iudgement, & be a blasphemer, condemning Innocents?

Boner.

Well, M. Controller, ye art faultles.

Smith.

My Lorde Maior, I require you in Gods name,* that I may haue Iustice. We be here to day a great many of Innocentes, that are wrongfully accused of heresy. And I require you, if you will not seeme to be parciall, let me haue no more fauour at your handes, then the Apostle had at the handes of Festus and Agrippa, which beyng Heathen and Infidels, gaue him leaue not onely to speake for himselfe, but also hearde the probation of his cause. This require I at your hands, which being a Christian Iudge, I hope will not denye me that right, whiche the Heathen haue suffered: if ye doe, thē shall all this audience, yea, & the Heathen speake shame of your fact. For a City (saith our sauour) that is builded on a hill, can not be hid: if they therefore haue the truth, let it come to light. For al that wel do, come to the light, and they that do euill hate the light.

Then my Lorde Maior hanginge downe his head, sayd nothing, but the Byshop tolde me, I shoulde preache at a Stake, and so the Shiriffe cryed, with the Byshop,* away with me.

Thus came I in before thē foure times, desiring Iustice, but could haue none: and at length my frendes requiring with one voyce the same, & coulde not haue it,* we had sentence, and then •eing caried out, were brought in agayne, and had it euery man seuerally geuen. But before the Bishop gaue me sentence, he told me in derision of my Brother Takerfielde, a tale betweene a Gentleman and his Cooke. To whiche I aunsweared: My Lorde, yee fill the peoples eares with fantasies and foolish tales, and make a laughing matter at bloud: but if ye were a true byshop, ye should leaue these railing sentences, and speak the wordes of God.

Boner.

Well, I haue offred to that noughty felow mayster Speaker, your companion the Cooke, that my Chancellor should here instruct him: but he hath here with great disda•ne forsaken it. How sayest thou, wilt thou haue him instruct thee, and lead thee in the right way?

Smith.

My Lorde,* if your Chauncellour shall doe me any good, and take any paynes, as ye say, let him take mine articles in his handes, that ye haue obiected agaynst me, and either proue one of them heresy, or any thing that you doe, to be good: and if he be able so to doe, I stand here wyth all my hart to heare him: if not, I haue no neede, I prayse God of his sermon: for I come to answere for my life, and not heare a sermon.

Then beganne the sentence, In Dei nomine.* To whiche I answered, that he beganne in a wrong name, requiring of him, where hee learned in Scriptures to geue sentence of death agaynst any man for his conscience sake. To the which he made no aunsweare, but went forward to the end and immediately cryed. Away with me. Then I turned me to the Maior, and sayde: Is it not enough for you my Lord Maior, and ye that are the shiriffes, that ye haue left the strait way of the Lord, but that ye must condemne Christ causeles?

Boner.

Well Mayster Controller, nowe ye can not say, but I haue offered you fayre, to haue instruction. And now I pray thee, call me bloody Bishop, and say, I seeke thy blood.

Smith.

Wel, my Lord, although neither I, nor any of this congregation do report the truth of your fact, yet shal these stones cry it out, rather then it shall be hidden.

Boner.

Away with him, away with him.

Woodrofe.

Away with him, take him away.

Smith.

Well, good frendes, yee haue seene and hearde the great wrong that we haue receiued this day, & ye are al recordes, Page 1695 that we haue desired the probation of our cause by Gods booke, and it hath not bene graunted: but we are cōdemned, and our cause not heard. Neuerthesse my Lord Maior, for as much as here ye haue exercised Gods sword causelesse,* and will not heare the righte of the poore, I committe my cause to almighty God, that shall iudge all men according vnto right, before whō we shall both stand without authority: and there will I stand in the right, and haue true iudgement, to your great confusion, except ye repent, which the Lord graūt you to do, if it be his will. And then was I with the rest of my brethren caryed away to Newgate.

Thus gentle Reader, as neare as I can, I haue set out the truth of my examination, and the verity of mine vniust condemnation for the truth, requiring god, that it may not be layd to the charge of thee, O England, requiring your harty prayers vnto God for his grace & spirit of boldnes: with hope euen shortlye to set to my seale, at Uxbridge, the 8. of August, by Gods grace: pray that it may be to his honor, my saluation, and your consolation, I pray you.

Da gloriam Deo.

Robert Smith.

Thus hast thou (good Reader) not onely to note, but also to folow in this man, a singular example of Christian fortitude, which so man•ully and val•auntly did stande in the defence of his maysters cause. And as thou seest hym here boldly stand in examination before the Bishoppe and Doctours: so was he no lesse comfortable also in the pryson among his felowes. Whiche also is to be obserued no lesse in his other prison felowes,* who being there together cast in an outward house within Newgate, had godly cōference with themselues, with dayly praying, and publick reading, whiche they to theyr greate comforte vsed in that house together: amongst whom this foresayd Smith was a chiefe doer. Whose industry was alwayes solicitous, not onely for them of his owne company, but also his diligēce was carefull for other prisoners, whom he ceased not to dehort and diswade from theyr olde accustomed iniquity: and many he conuerted vnto his Religion. Diuers letters he wrote there in the prison to sūdry his frendes partly in metre, partly in prose. And first in metre as followeth.

¶ O ye that loue the Lord, see that ye hate the thing that is euill.

ThE God that geueth life and light,

And leadeth into rest:

That breaketh bondes and bringeth out

The poore that are opprest,

And keepeth mercy for the meeke,

His treasure and his store:

Increase the life in perfect loue,

Both now and euermore.

That as thou hast begun to ground,

In fayth and feruent loue:

Thou mayest be made a mighty mount,

That neuer may remoue.

That thine ensample may be shewed

Among all thine encrease:

That they may liue and learne the like,

And passe theyr time in peace.

Thy salutations that were sent,

I hartely retayne:

And send thee seuentie times as much,

To thee and thine agayne.

And for because I know the gole,

That thou doest most desire:

I send thee here a paper full,

Is fined in the fire.

In hope thou wilt accept it well,

Although it be but small:

Because I haue none other good,

To make amendes with all.

For all thy free and frendly factes.

Which thy good will hath wrought:

I send the surely for a shift

The thing that cost me nought.

Absteyne from all vngodlines▪

In dread direct your dayes:

Possesse not sinne in any wise,

Beware of wicked wayes.

Hold fast your fayth vnfaynedly,

Build as ye haue begon:

And arme your selfe in perfect fayth,

To do as ye haue done.

Least that the wicked make a mocke,

That ye haue take in hand:

In leauing of the perfect rocke,

To build vpon the sand.

Beware these filthy Pharisies▪

Their building is in bloud:

Page 1696Eate not with them in any wise,

Their leauen is not good.

Their salte is all vnsauery,

And vnder good ententes

They mayntayne all their knauery,

And murder Innocentes.

They seeke to sit in Christes seate,

And put him out of place:

And make all meanes that may be made,

His doynges to deface.

They keepe him downe with bils & bat•

That made the blinde to see:

They make a God for myce and Rattes,

And say the same is he.

They shew like sheepe & sweate like Wolues

Their baytes be all for bloud:

They kill and slay the simple soules,

And rob them of ther good.

The darke illusions of the deuill,

Haue dimned so their eyes,

That they cannot abide the truth,

To sturre in any wise.
And if ye keepe the perfect path,
As I haue hope you doe,
Ye shall be sure to haue suche shame,
As they may put you to.
For all that leade a godly life,
Shall surely suffer losse:
And eke the world will seeke theyr shame
And make them kisse the crosse.
Ye shalbe killed sayth Christ,
Your sorrowes shall not cease:
And yet in your afflictions
I am your perfect peace.
For in the worlde ye shall haue woe,
Because ye are vnknowne:
And for because ye hate the world,
The world will loue his owne.
Be feruent therefore to the death,
Agaynst all their decrees:
And God shall surely fight for thee
Agaynst thine enemies.
Commit your cause vnto the Lord,
Reuenge not any euill:
And thou shalt see the wicked want,
When thou shalt haue thy will:

For all afflictions that may fall,
That they can say or doe:
They are not sure of the wealth,
We shall attayne vnto.
For I haue seene the sinners spread,
Theyr braunches like a bay:
And yet ere one could turne his head,
Were withered cleane away.
Beware that mony make ye not
In riches to aryse
Agaynst the goodnes of the Lord,
Among the worldly wise.
For many mischiefes it hath made,
That may not be exprest:
And many euils it hath begonne,
Which may not be redrest.
For money maketh many one,
In riches to rebell:
And he that maketh gold a God,
He hath a soule to sell.
It maketh Kinges to kill and slay,
And wast their wittes in warre:
In leauing of the Wolfe at home,
To hunt the Foxe a farre.
And where they should see iustice done

And set their realme in rest:
By mony they be made a meane,
To see the poore opprest▪
It maketh Lordes obey the lawes
That they doe ill and nought:
It maketh Bishops suck the bloud,
That God hath dearely bought.
And where they shuld be faythfull friends
And father to the flocke:
By money they do turne about,
Euen like a weather Cock.
The Prieste doth make a mony meane
To haue agayne his whoores,
To put away his wedded wife,
And children out of doores.
It holdeth backe the husbandman,
Which may not be forborne:
And will not suffer him to sow,
And cast abroad his corne.
In like case it doth let agayne,
When that the seede they sowe:
It choketh vp the corne agayne,
So that it cannot growe.
The husband he would haue a wife,
With nobles new and olde:

The wife would haue the husband hangd
That she might haue his gold,
It maketh murthers many a one,
And beareth much with bloud:
The childe would see the parentes slayne▪
To sease vppon their good.
And though it be a blessed thing,
Created in the kinde:
It is a necessary euill,
Annexed to the mind.
For who so playeth with the pitch,
His fingers are defiled:
And he that maketh gold a God
Shall surely be beguiled.
Be frendly to the fatherles,
And all that are opprest:
Assist them alwayes out of hand,
And see them set at rest.
In all your doinges and your deedes
Let mercy still remayne:
For with the measure that ye meate,
Shall ye be mette agayne.
Be alwayes lowly in your life,
Let loue enjoy her owne:
The highest trees are seldome sure,

And soonest ouerthrowne.

The Lyons lacke and suffer sore,

In hunger and in thirst:

And they that doe oppresse the poore,

Continue still accurst.

The Bee is but a little beast

In body or in sight:

And yet she bryngeth more encrease,

Then other Crow or Kyte.

Therefore beware in any wise,

Keepe well your watche alway:

Be sure of oyle within your lampe,

Let not your light decay.

For death despiseth them that lacke,

And hateth them that haue:

And treadeth downe the riche and poore

Together in the graue

Exhort your Children to be chaste,

Rebuke them for their ill:

And let them not at any wise

Be wedded to theyr will.

Laugh not with them, but keep them low

Shew them no mery cheare:

Least thou doe weepe with them also,

But bryng them vp in feare.

And let your light and liuing shyne,
That ye be not suspect
To haue the same within your selfe,
For which they are correct.
Be meeke and modest, in a meane
Let all your deedes be done:
That they which are without the law,
May see how right ye runne.
Keepe well the member in your mouth,
Your tongue see that ye tame:
For out of little sparkes of fire,
Proceedeth out a flame.
And as the poyson doth expresse
The natures of the Tode:
Euen so the tongue doth manifest,
The hartes that feareth God.
For therewith blesse we God aboue,
And therewith curse we men:
And therby murders doe aryse,
Through women now and then.
And seeing God hath geuen a tongue▪
And put it vnder power:
The surest way is for to set
A hatch before the doore.
For God hath set you in a seate,

Of double low degree:

Fyrst vnto God, and then to man

A subiect for to be.

I write not, that I see in you

These thinges to be suspect:

Page 1697 But onely set before your face,

How sinne should be correct.

For flesh and bloud I know ye are,

As other women be:

And if ye dwell in flesh and bloud,

There is infirmitie.

Receave a warning willingly,

That to thy teeth is tolde:

Accompt the gift of greater price,

Then if he gaue thee gold.

A wiseman sayth Salomon,

A warning will embrace:

A foole will sooner (as sayth he)

Be smitten on the face.

And as your members must be dead,

From all thinges that are vayne:

Euen so by Baptisme ye are borne,

To liue with Christ agayne.

Thus fare well free and faythfull frend:

The Lorde that is aboue

Encrease in thee • perfect fayth,
And leade thee in his loue.
And as I pray with perfite loue,
And poure out bitter teares
For you and all that are at large,
Abroad among the bryers:
Euen so I pray thee to preferre,
My person and my bondes:
Vnto the euerlasting God,
That hath me in his handes,
That I may passe out of this ponde,
Wherein I am opprest:
Inclosed in a clod of clay,
That here can haue no rest.
That as he hath begon in me
His mercies many one,
I may attayne to ouertake
My brethren that be gone.
That when the death shall do his worst
Where he shall point a place,
I may be able like a man
To looke him in the face.
For though he catch away my cloke,
My body into dust:
Yet am I sure to saue a soule.

When death hath done hys worst.
And though I leaue a little dust
Dissolued out of bloud:
I shall receaue it safe agayne,
When God shall see it good.
For my redeemer I am sure
Doth liue for euermore,
And sitteth high vpon the heauens,
For whome I hunger sore.
Euen as the Deare with deadly wounds,
Escaped from the spoyle
Doth hast by all the meanes he may,
To seeke vnto the soyle.
Of whome I hope to haue a crowne,
That alwayes shall remayne:
And eke enioy a perfect peace,
For all my woe and payne.
The God that geueth all encrease,
And seeketh still to saue,
Abound in thee that perfect peace,
Which I do hope to haue.
And I beseech the liuing God,
To hold thee in hys handes:
And wish thee euen with all my hart,
The blessing of my bandes.

Which I esteeme of hier price,
Then pearle or precious stone:
And shall endure for euermore,
When earthly thinges are gone.
For though the fire doe consume,
Our treasure and our store:
Yet shall the goodnes of the Lord,
Endure for euermore.
And where thou art a friend to him,
That is to me full deare:
That God of might make the amendes,
When all men shall appeare.
That hath shewed mercy to the meeke,
And rid them out of payne.
And thus the Lorde possesse thy spirite,
Till we do meete agayne.
If thou wilt haue a recompence,
Abide still in obedience.

¶The exhortation of Robert Smith, vnto his children, commonly set out in the name of maister Rogers.

GEue eare my children to my words,
Whome God hath dearely bought:
Lay vp my law within your harte,
And print it in your thought.*
For I your father haue foreseene
The frayle and filthy way,

Which flesh and bloud would follow fayne,

Euen to theyr owne decay.

For all and euery liuing beast,

Their crib do know full well:

But Adams heyres aboue the rest,

Are ready to rebell:*

And all the creatures on the earth,

Full well can keepe their way:

But man aboue all other beastes,*

is apte to go astray.

For earth and ashes is his strength,

His glory and his rayne:

And vnto ashes at the length,

Shall he returne agayne.*

For flesh doth florish like a flower,

And grow vp like a grasse,

And is consumed in an houre,

As it is brought to passe.

In me the Image of your yeares,

Your treasure and your trust:

Whome ye do see before your face,

Dissolued into dust.

For as you see your fathers fleshe.

conuer•ed into clay:

Euen so shall ye my children deare.

Consume and weare away.

The sonne and moone and eke the starres

That serue the day and night:*

The earth and euery earthly thing,

Shalbe consumed quite.

And all the worship that is wrought

That haue bene heard or seene:

Shall cleane consume and come to naught,*

Ar it had neuer bene.

Therefore that ye may follow me:

Your Father and your frend,

And enter into that same lyfe,

Which neuer shall haue end,

I leaue you heare a little book,

For you to looke vpon:*

That you may see your Fathers face,

When I am dead and gone.

Who for the hope of heauenly thinges,

While he dyd here remayne*

Gaue ouer all his golden yeares,

In prison and in payne.

Where I among myne iron bandes,

Enclosed in the darcke

A few dayes before my death,

Did dedicate this worke.

To you myne heyres of earthly thinges

Which I haue left behynde:

That ye may read and vnderstand,

And keepe it your minde,

That as you haue bene heyres of that,

Which once shall weare away:

Euen so ye may possesse the parte,

Which neuer shall decay.

In following of your fathers foote,

In truth and eke in loue:

That ye may also be his heyres,

For euermore aboue.*
_

And in example to your youth,

To whome I wish all good,

I preache you here a perfite fayth

And seale it with my bloud.

Haue God alwayes before your eyes,*
_

In all your whole ententes:

Commit not sinne in any wise,

Keepe his commaundementes.

Abhorre that errant whoore of Rome,

And all her blasphemies:

And drincke not of her decretals,

Nor yet of her decrees.

Geue honour to your mother deare,*
_

Remember well her payne:

And recompence her in her age▪

Page 1698In lyke with loue agayne.

Be alwayes ayding at her hand,

And let her not decay:

Remember well your fathers fall,

That should haue bene her stay.

Geue of your portion to the poore,

As riches doth arise:

*And from the needy naked soule,

Turne not away your eyes.

For he that will not heare the cry,

Of such as are in neede:

Shall cry himselfe, and not be heard,

*When he would hope to speede.

If God haue geuen you great encrease,

And blessed well your store▪

Remember ye are put in trust,

*To minister the more.

Beware of foule and filthy lust,

Let whoredome haue no place:

Keepe cleane your vessels in the Lord,

*That he may you embrace.

Ye are the temples of the Lord,

*For ye are dearely bought:

And they that do defile the same,
Shall surely come to nought.
Possesse not pride in any case,
Build not your neastes to hye:
But haue alwayes before your face,
That ye be borne to dye.
Defraud not him that hyred is,
Your labours to sustayne:
But geue him alwayes out of hand,
His penny for hys payne.
And as ye would that other men
*Agaynst you should proceede
Do ye the same agayne to them
When they do stand in neede.
And part your portion with the poore
In mony and in meate
And feede the faynted feeble soule,
*With that which ye should eate,
That when your mēbers lacketh meate
*And clothing to your backe:
Ye may the better thinke on them
That now do liue and lacke
Aske counsell at the wise,
Geue eare vnto the end.
Refuse not you the sweete rebuke

Of hym that is your frend:

Be thankefull alwayes to the Lord,

*With prayer and with prayse.

Desire you him in all your deedes,

For to direct your wayes:

And sinne not like that swinish sorte

Whose bellies beyng fed,

Consume theyr yeares vpon the earth

From belly vnto bed.

Seeke first I say the liuing God

*Set him alwayes before:

And then be sure that he will blesse

Your basket and your store.

And thus if you direct your dayes,

*According to this booke,

Then shall they say that see your wayes,

How lyke me you do looke

And when you haue so perfectly,

*Vpon your fingers endes:

Possessed all within your booke,

Then geue it to your frendes.

And I beseeche the liuing God,

Replenish you with grace,

That I maye haue you in the heauens,

And see you face to face.

And though the sword haue cut me off,

Contrary to my kinde,

That I could not enioy your loue,

According to my minde,

Yet do I hope when that the heauens,

*Shall vanish like a scrole:

I shall receaue your perfect shape,

In body and in soule.

And that I may enioy your loue,

And ye enioy the land:

I do beseeche the liuing God,

To holde you in hys hand,

Fare well my children from the world

Where ye must yet remayne:

The Lorde of hostes be your defence,

Till we do meete againe,

Fare well my loue and louing wife,

My Children and my frendes:

I hope to God to haue you all,

When all thinges haue their endes.

And if you doe abide in God,

As ye haue now begonne:

Your course I warrant will be short,

Ye haue not farre to runne,

God graunt you so to end your yeares

As he shall thinke it best:
That ye may enter into heauen,
Where I do hope to rest.

Written at the request of a Lady in her booke.

IF you will walke the way,
That Christ hath you assignde:
Then learne this little verse,
Which I haue left behinde.
Be feruent in the truth,
Although it beare the blame:
And eke apply your youth,
To sticke vnto the same:
That when the age is come,
And death beginneth to call?
The truth may be your staffe,
To stay you vp withall.
And though it bryng rebuke,
And cause you kisse the crosse:
Yet is it a reward,
To all that suffer losse.
For here we doe lay out,
The thinges that be but vayne:
But we are sure to reape,
The thinges that doe remayne.
For all that ye do lose,

Is but a sinnefull slime:
And lyke vnto a Rose,
That taryeth but a tyme.
But if ye carry Christ,
And walke the perfect way,
Ye shall possesse the gold,
That neuer shall decay.
And all your fathers goodes,
Shalbe your recompense:
If ye confesse the worde,
With double diligence.
Not onely for to heare
His pure and perfite word:
But also to embrace,
The fire and eke the sword.
And if ye keepe this path,
And do not runne a croke,
Then shall ye meete the man,
That write this in your booke
In that eternall loye,
That alwayes shall remayne:
Thus fare well faythfull frend,
Till we do meete agayne.

Legem pone.

TEache me O Lorde to walke thy waies,

My liuing to amend:

And I shall keepe it all my dayes,

Euen to my liues end.

Geue me a minde to vnderstand,

So shall I neuer starte:

But I shall keepe all thy preceptes,

Euen wholly with mine hart.

Make me to go a perfect pace,

In that I haue begonne:

For all my loue and my delight,

Is in thy wayes to runne.

Encline my hart vnto thy wayes,

Set thou thereon my thought:

And let me not consume my dayes,

To couet that is naught.

O quicken me in all thy wayes,

The world for to despise:

And from all fond and foolish toyes,

Turne thou away mine eyes.

O plant in me thy perfect word,

Which is to me so deare:

Lay vp thy lawes within my hart,

To keepe me still in feare.

And robbe me of that great rebuke▪

Which I do feare full sore.

For all thy iudgementes and thy law

Endure for euermore.

Behold O Lord in thy preceptes

Is all my whole delight.

O quicken me in all my wayes

That I may walke aright.

To hys brother.

AS nature doth me binde,

Because thou art my bloud

According to my kinde

To geue thee of my good,

That thou mayest haue in minde

How I haue runne my race

Although thou bide behynde

But for a little space,

I yeauē thee here a pearle

The price of all my good

For whiche I leaue my life,

To buy it with my bloud

More worth then all the world

Or ought that I can note,

Although it be yclad,

In such a simple cote.

For when I had obtayned

This pearle of such a price

Then was I sure I gayned
The way for to be wise.
It taught me for to fight
My flesh for to despise
To sticke vnto the light
And for to leaue the lyes
In sending out my seede
With bondes and bitter teares
That I might reape with loye
In euerlasting yeares,
And haue for all my losse
My trauayle and my payne
A thousand tymes and more
Of better goodes agayne.
And for because the good
That hath bene gotte and gayned
And that the Lordes elect
Hath euermore obtayned
Is closed in this booke
Which I do geue to thee
Wherein I haue my parte
As thou thy selfe mayest see.
In which I hope thou hast
A stocke also in store:
And wilt not cease to sayle

Till God haue made it more,
I will thee to beware▪
Be sure thou keepe it well
For if thou do it lose
Thy part shalbe in hell.
And here I testifie
Before the liuing God,
That I detest to doe
The thinges that are forbod.
And as in iudgemente is
My body to be brent,
My hart is surely sette
Therewith to be content.
And sith it is his will,
To put in me his power
Vpon his holy hill
To fight agaynst this whore,
Full well I am content,
If he allowe it so
To stand with all my might
The whore to ouerthrow.
Euen with a willing minde
The death I will outface
And as I am assured
The battayle to embrace,

That they which heare the truth

How I haue past the pike

May set aside theyr youth

And learne to do the like.

Page 1699 And though it be my lotte, to let her suck my bloud

Yet am I well assured, it shall do her no good.

For she is set to kill The thinges she thinkes accurst,

And shall not haue her fill, of bloud vntill she burst.

And when that thou shalt see, or heare of my disease:

Pray to the liuing God, that I may passe in peace.

And when I am at rest, and rid out of my paine:

Then will I do the like, for thee to God agayne.

And to my woefull wyfe, and widow desolate:

Whome I doe leaue behynd, In such a simple state.

And compassed with teares, and morninges many one

Be thou her staying staffe, when I am dead and gone.

My mouth may not expresse, the dolours of my minde:

Nor yet my heauines, to leaue her here behinde.

But as thou art my bone, my brother and my bloud:

So let her haue thy hart, if it may do her good.

I tooke her from the world, and made her like the crosse:

But if she hold her owne, she shall not suffer losse.

For where she had before, a man vnto her make

That by the force of fire, was stranged at a stake,

Now shall she haue a king, to be her helpyng hand:

To whom pertayne all thinge, that are within the land.

And eke my daughter deare, whome I bequeath to thee:

To be brought vp in feare, and learne the A.B.C.

That she may grow in grace, and ruled by the rod:

To learne and lead her lyfe, within the feare of God:

And alwayes haue in minde, thy brother beyng dead

That thou art lefte behynde a father in my stead.

And thou my brother deare, and eke my mothers sonne

Come forth out of all feare, and do as I haue done,

And God shall be thy guide, and geue thee such encrease

That in the flames of fire, thou shalt haue perfect peace.

Into eternall ioy, and passe out of all payne:

Where we shall meete with mirth, and neuer part agayne.

If thou wilt do my daughter good,

Be mindfull of thy brothers bloud.

To All whiche loue God vnfaynedly, and entend to lead a godly life according to his Gospell, and to perseuer in his trueth vnto the ende: grace, and peace from God the father, and from our Lorde Iesus Christ, Amen.

*BE not afrayd, most dearely beloued in our Sauior Iesus Christ, at these most perillous dayes, wherein by the sufferaunce of God, the Prince of darkenes is broken lose, and rageth in hys members agaynst the electe of God wyth all crueltie, to set vp agayne the kingdome of Antichrist: agaynst whome, see that ye be strong in fayth to resist his most deuilishe doctrine with the pure Gospell of God, armyng your selues with pacience, to abide what soeuer shalbe layd to your charge for the truthe sake knowyng that thereunto ye be called, not onely to beleeeue in hym, but also to suffer for hym. Oh howe happy are ye that in the sight of God are counted worthy to suffer for the testimony of Christ? Quiet therefore your selues (Oh my louing brethren) and reioyce in hym for whome ye suffer: for vnto you do remain the vnspeakable ioyes, which neither the eye hath seene, nor the eare hath heard, * neither the hart of man is able to comprehende in anye wyse. Be not afrayd of the bodily death, for youre names are written in the booke of lyfe, And the Prophetes doth recorde, * that in the sight of the Lorde, precious is the death of hys Saynctes. Watch therefore and praye, that yee be not preuented in the daye of temptation. Now commeth the day of your tryall, wherein the waters rage, and the stormy windes blowe. Now shall it appeare whether ye haue builded vppon the fleeing sande,* or vppon the vnmoueable rocke Christe, whiche is the foundation of the Apostles and Prophetes: whereon euery house that is builded, groweth into an holy temple of the Lord, by the mighty working of the holy Ghost.* Now approacheth the daye of your batttaye, wherein it is required that ye shewe your selues the valiaunte souldiours of Iesus Christ, wyth the armour of God, that yee may be able to stand fast agaynst all the craftye assaultes of the Deuill. Christ is your Captayne, and yee be his souldiours, whose cognisaunce is the Crosse, to the whiche hee wyllingly humbled hymselfe euen vnto the death, and therby spoyled hys enemies,* and now triumpheth hee ouer them in the glorye of hys father, makyng intercession for them that here doe remayne to suffer the afflictions that are to be fulfilled in his mysticall bodye. It behoueth therefore euery one that will be counted his scholler, to take vp his owne crosse and follow hym, as ye haue hym for ensample: and I assure you that hee being on your side, nothing shalbe able to preuayle agaynst you. And that he will be with you euen to the worldes ende, yee haue hys promise in the 28. of Mathew. He will goe forth wyth hys host as a conquerour to make a conquest.* He is the man that sitteth on the white horse, crowned with immortalitie, and yee, brethren, are his fellowship, whereof he is the head. He hath your hart in hys hand as a bow bent after hys godly will: he shall dyrect the same accordyng to the riches of hys glory, into all spirituall and heauenly cogitations. He is faythfull,* and will not suffer you to be further assaulted, then he will geue you strength to ouercome, and in the most daunger he will make a waye, that ye may be able to beare it.

Shrynke not therefore deare heartes, when ye shalbe called to aunswere for the hope that is in you:* for we haue the comforter, euen the spirite of trueth whiche was sent from the heuens to teache vs. He shall speake in vs, hee shall strengthen vs: what is he then that shalbe able to confound vs? Naye, what Tiranne is he that now boasteth hymselfe of hys strength to doe mischief, whome the Lord shall not with the same spirite,* by the mouth of his seruautes, strike downe to hell fire? Yea, sodaynly will the Lord bryng downe the glory of the proud Philistians, by the handes of hys seruaunt Dauid. Theyr strength is in speare & shield, but our helpe is in the name of the Lord, which made both heauen and earth, He is our buckler and our wall,* a strong Tower of defence. He is our God, and we are his people. Hee shall bryng the counsels of the vngodly to nought. He shall take them in theyr owne nette. He shall destroy them in theyr own inuentions. The right hand of the Lorde shall worke this wonder. His power is knowne among the children of men.* Theyr fathers haue felt it, and are confounded. In lyke maner shall they knowe that there is no counsell agaynst the Lorde, when their secrets are opened to the whole worlde, and are found to be agaynst the lyuing God. Worke they neuer so craftily, builde they neuer so strongly: yet downe shall theyr rabble fall, and the builders them selues shall then be scattered vpon the face of the earth,* as accursed of God. The iust shall see this and be glad, & prayse the name of the Lord, that so meruellously hath delte with hys seruautes,* as to bryng theyr enemies vnder theyr feet. Thē shall the fearfull seed of Cayne trēble and quake. Thē shall the mockyng Ismaelites be cast out of the doore. Then shall the proud Nembroth see hys labour lost. Then shal the beast of Babilon, be troden vnder foot. Then shall the scribes and Pharisees for madnes fret and rage.* Then sha theyr paynted wisdom be knowne, for extreme folly. Then shall bloody Dragon be voyd of hys pray. Then shall the whore of Babilon, receaue double vengeance. Then shall they scratch theyr crownes for the fall of their Maistres harlot, whom they now serue for filthy lucre, whē no man will buy their wares any more. Then shall the Popishe Priesthoode crye weale away with care, euen when the Lord shall helpe his seruautes: which day is not farre of, the daye wherein the kingdome of Antichrist shall haue an ende, and neuer aryse anye more.* In the meane tyme, abide in certayne and sure hope, cleauing vnto the promises of God, whiche in theyr owne tyme shalbe fulfilled. Acquite youre selues lyke men agaynst the enemies of GOD in all humblenes of minde,* strong in spirite to acknowledge one God, one holy Sauoure Iesus Christ, one onely euerlastyng and sufficient sacrifice for the remission of sinnes euen the precious bodye of the Lorde Iesus once offered for all and for euer. Whiche now sitteth on the right hand of God, and from thence shall hee come,* to iudge both the quicke and the dead at the last day: & vntil that tyme, occupyeth that blessed body, none other place to dwell in, to be kepte in, to be closed in,* but onelye in the heauens, euen in the glorious maiestye of God, personally abidyng there in the fleshe, not commyng downe from thence till the last houre. And as hee neuer ceaseth to be man, so doth he neuer lose the similitude of man:* hys body there hath hys liniamentes, hee leaueth them not: so hath that body there hys highnesse, and shrinketh not, and hys manly shape, he altereth not at any tyme. He is in that he tooke of the virgin Mary, a naturall man in all conditions except sinne. And what he tooke of hys blessed Mother,* by the workyng of the holye Ghost, he tooke it for euer, and will not exchaunge the same for anye other. He tooke the shape of a man with the substaunce of hys manhoode, in one sacred wombe. There were they coupled together by the holy ghost,* neuer to be deuyded a sunder. He retayneth the one with the other, in seperablye. As he will not altar the substaunce of hys fleshe, into the substaunce of bread no more will hee altar the shape of hys bodye, into the forme of bread There cannot be a greater absurditie agaynst the truth, then to thinke that he would leaue the shape that he tooke in the virgins womb, being an accident vnto hys manhoode, and ioyned vnto the same a wafer cake baken in an ouen, or betwene a payre of yrons. As he is in heauen very man, one onely mediatour betwene God and man, euen the man Chryst Iesus,* hee it is that is the propitiation for our sinnes. Be bolde therefore, to confesse thys most pure and Apostolicall doctrine:* and also that all fauoure, mercy, and forgeuenesse commeth onely by him Page 1700 He onely of God the father was made for vs, all wisdom, righteousnes, sanctification and redemption. All these are the giftes of God the father, freely geuen vnto vs by Christ Iesus God and man, through fayth in his bloud, and not by the merites of men. Giftes they are (I say) freely geuen vnto vs of fauoure,* wythout our deserte by beleeuing, and not by deseruing. To this doe the lawe and the Prophetes beare witnesse.

This doctrine haue all the blessed Martyrs of Christes church wytnessed wyth theyr bloude to bee true. To thys trueth, haue all the consciences of all true beleuers subscribed euer since the Ascension of Christ. This witnesse is not of man, but of God. What better quarrell can ye thē haue to geue your liues for,* then the trueth it selfe? That man that geueth his lyfe for the truth, taketh the rediest way to lyfe. He that hath the Popes curse for the truth, is sure of Christes blessing. Well then my brethren what shall now lette, but that ye goe forward as ye haue begon? Nay rather runne wyth the runners that ye maye obtayne the appoynted glorye. Holde on the right waye, looke not back, haue the eye of youre heart fixed vppon GOD, and so runne, that ye may get holde of it. Cast awaye all your worldly pelfe,* and worldly respects, as the fauour of friendes, the feare of men, sensuall affection, respect of persons, honour, prayse, shame, rebuke, wealth, pouertie, riches, landes, possessions, carnall fathers and mothers, wife and children, with the loue of your own selues, and in respect of that heauenly treasure ye looke for, let al these be denyed, & vtterly refused of you, so that in no cōditiō they do abate your seale, or quenche youre loue towards God. In this case make no acōpt of thē, but rather repute thē as vile, in comparison of euerlasting life.* Away with them as thornes that choke the heauenly seede of the Gospel, where they be suffered to grow. They are burdens of the fleshe, which encomber the soule exchange them therefore for aduantage. Doth not he gayne that findeth heauenly and immortall treasure, for earthly & corruptible riches? * Loseth that man any thing, whiche of his carnall father and mother is forsaken, when therefore he is receaued of God the father to be his childe and eyre in Christ? * Heauenly for earthly: for mortall, immortall: for transitory thinges, permanēt: is great gaynes to a Christian conscience.

Therefore as I beganne, I exhort you in the Lorde, not to be afrayd. Shrinke not my brethren, mistrust not God, bee of good comforte, reioyce in the Lord, hold fast your fayth, and continue to the end Deny the world and take vp your crosse and follow him whiche is your loadesman, * and is gone before. If you suffer with him, yea you shall raygne with him. What way can you glorifie the name of your heauenly father better, then by sufferyng death for his sonnes sake? What a spectacle shal it be to the world to beholde so godly a fellowship as you seruantes of God, in so iust a quarrell as the Gospell of Christ is, with so pure a conscience, so strong a fayth, and so liuely a hope, to offer your selues to suffer most cruell tormentes at the handes of Gods enemyes, and so to end your dayes in peace, * to receaue in the resurrection of the righteous, life euerlasting?

Be strong therfore in your battayle. The Lord God is on your side, and his truth is your cause: and against you be none, but the enemies of the crosse of Christe, * as the serpent and his seede, the Dragon with hys tayle, the marked men of the Beast, the ofspring of the Pharisees, the congregation malignant, the generation of Vipers, murtherers, as theyr father the deuill hath bene from the beginning. To conclude, such are they as the Lorde God hath alwayes abhorred, and in all ages resisted and ouerthrowne. God, from whome nothing is hid, * knoweth what they are. Hee that searcheth the heartes of men, he hath found them out to be crafty, subtile, full of poyson, proud, disdainefull, stiffnecked, deuourers, raueners, and barkers against the truth, filthy & shamelesse- and therefore doth the spirite of God, by the mouthes of hys holy Prophetes and Apostles, * call them by the names of Foxes, serpentes. Cockatrices, Lyons, Leopardes, Bulles, Beares, Wolues, Dogs, Swine, Beasts, teachyng vs therby to vnderstād, that their natural inclinatio is, to deceaue, poison, and destroy (as much as in them lyeth) the faythfull and elect of God. * But the Lord with his right arme shal defend his little flocke agaynst the whole rabblement of these worldlings, * which haue conspired against him: he hath numbred all the heares of his childrens heades, so that not one of thē shal pearish without hys fatherly wil. He kepeth the sparowes, much more will he preserue them whom he hath purchased with the blood of the immaculate Lambe. Hee will keepe them vnto the houre appointed, wherein the name of God shalbe glorified in his sayntes. In the meane tyme let them worke theyr willes, * let them enuy, let them maligne, let thē blasphemie let them curse, banne, betray, whippe, scourge, hang and burne: for by these meanes God will try his elect as gold in the furnace and by these fruites, shall they also bring themselues to be knowen what they be, for all their sheepes skinnies. For as he that in suffering patiently for the Gospell of God, is thereby knowne to be of Christ: * euen so in likewise is the persecutor of him knowne to be a member of Antichrist. Besides this, their extreme cruelty shall be a meane, the sooner to prouoke God to take pittie vpon his seruantes, and to destroy them that so tyrannously entteate his people: as we may learne by the historyes, as well in the bondage of Israell vnder Pharaο in Egypt, * as also in the miserable captiuitie of Iuda in Babilon: Where as, when the people of God were in most extreeme thraldome, thē did the Lord stretch forth his mighty power to deliuer his seruantes. Though God for a tyme, suffer them to be exalted in theyr owne pryde, yet shal they not scape his vengeance. They are hys roddes, and when hee hath worne them to the stumpes, then will he cast them into the fire: this shalbe theyr final reward. Our duetye is in the meane while, patiently to abide the wil of God, which worketh al thinges for the best.

Thus dealeth he with vs, partly for our tryall, and partly also for our sinnes,* which we most greuously haue committed to the great slaunder of hys gospell, whereby the name of God was euil spoken of among hys enemies: for the whiche he now punisheth vs with his fatherly corrections in this worlde,* that wee shoulde not be dampned with the world. By thys meanes seeketh hee his sheep that were lost, to bring thē home to the fold agayn. By this w•y seeketh he to reform vs,* that we may be lyke vnto him after the image of his son Iesus christ, in al holines & righteousnes be'fore him. Finally, this way vseth his godly wisdom, to make vs therby to know him, & our selues in him,* that afore time had in a manner forgotten him, praysed be hys name therefore. And as for these Balaamites, whiche now do molest vs, commit, them to the handes of GOD, geue him the vengeance, and hee will reward them. Fall ye to prayer,* and let these belly GODS prate. For he is in heauen and sleepeth not, that keepeth Israell. He is in heauen that made the seas calme,* and when the Disciples were afrayd. Let vs nowe faythfully call vppon him and hee wyll heare vs. Let vs cry vnto the Lorde for he is gracious and mercifull. When we are in trouble he is with vs, he will deliuer vs, and he will glorifie vs. If we come vnto him, we shall find him turned vnto vs. If we repent vs of our wickednes done agaynst hym, thē shall he take away the plague that he hath deuised agaynst vs.

Let vs therefore earnestly repent, and bring forth the worthy fruites of repentaunce. Let vs study to be hys, then shall we not neede to feare what these hipocrites do agaynst vs,* whiche wyth theyr pretensed holines deceiue the harts of the simple, and abuse the authoritie of God in his Princes, causing them (by theyr pro'curement) to testify their ambitious prelacye, and to erect vpp theyr Idoll agayne with the Romish Masse.* God in whose hands are the hartes of kinges, open the hart of the Queenes highnesse to espy them out what they be, and so to wede thē out, that they no longer be suffered to trouble the congregation of God,* and to poyson the realme with Pope holy doctrine. God almighty for hys sonne Iesus Christes sake deliuer the Queenes highnes and this her church & realme, frō these proud prelates, which are as profitable in the Church of Christ as a polecatte in the midst of a Warran of connies.

To conclude my brethren, I commit you to God and to the power of his worde, whiche is able to establishe you in all truth. His spirite be with you and worke alway that ye may be mindfull of your dueties towards hym whose ye are both body and soule. Whome see that ye loue, serue, dread and obey, aboue al worldly powers, and for nothing vnder the heauē,* defile your consciēce before God. Dissemble not with his word: God will not be mocked: nay they that dissemble with hym, deceiue themselues. Such shal the Lord deny & cast out at the last day: such (I say) as beare two faces in one hoode: such as play on both hands: suche as deny the knowne trueth: such as obstinately rehell against him. All such with their partakers shall the Lord destroy.* God defend you from all such. and make you perfite vnto the end. Your sorrowe shall be turned into ioy.

¶An other letter sent to hys wife.

THE God and father eternal, which brought again from death our Lord Iesus christ, keep thee deare wife now and euer, amen, and al thy parentes and friendes, I praise God for his mercy, I am in the same state that ye left me in, rather better then woorse, looking dayly for the liuing God, before whome I hunger full sore to appeare, and receaue the glory, of whiche I trust thou art willing to be a partaker. I geue God most hartly thanks therefore, desiring thee of all loues, to stand in that faith which thou hast receiued, and let no man take away the seed that almighty God hath sowne in thee, but lay hands of euerlasting lyfe, which shall euer abide, when both the earth, and all earthly frends shall perish, desiring them also to receaue thankfully our trouble whiche is momentane and light, and as S. Paule sayth not worthy of the thinges whiche shall be shewed on vs, that we patiētly carying our crosse may attayne to the place where our sauour Christ is gone before to the which I beseeche God of his mercye bryng vs speedely. I haue bene much troubled about your deliuerance fearing muche the perswasions of worldlings, and haue founde a friend, whiche will (I trust) finde a meane for you if you bee not alreadye prouyded desirynge you in anye case to abide suche order, as those my Page 1701 friendes shall appoint in God. And beare well in mind y^e wordes which I spake at our departing, that as god hath found vs, and also elected vs worthy to suffer with hym. We may endeuour our selues to follow vprightly in thys our vocation, desiring you to present my hartye commendations to all our friendes, and in especiall to youre Parentes, keeping your matter close in any wise. Geue most hartly thanks to my frend, whiche onely for oure cause is come to Windsor. Continue in prayer. Do well. Be faultles in all thinges. Beware abhominations. Keepe you cleane from sinne. Praye for me, as I doe for you. I haue sent you a peece of golde for a token, and moste entierlye desire you to send me word if ye lacke any thing. The lord Iesu preserue you and yours. Amen. From Newgate the 15. of Aprill.

By your husband here and in heauen Robert Smith.

This foresayde Robert Smith the valiaunt and constant martyr of christ, thus replenished (as ye haue heard) with the fortitude of Gods spirite, was condemned at Lōdon by Boner there Bishop,* the xii. day of Iulye, and suffered at Uxbridge the 8. day of August: who as he had bene a comfortable instrument of God before to all them that were in prison with him, so nowe also being at the stake, hee did no lesse comforte the people, there standyng aboute hym, willing them to thinke well of his cause, and not to doubte but that his bodye dying in that quarrell, shoulde rise agayne to life. And sayde hee, I doubte not, but that God wil shew you some token thereof. At length he being well nigh halfe burnt,* and all blacke with fire, clustered together as in a lumpe like a blacke cole, all men thinking him for dead, sodaynely rose vp right before the people, lifting vp the stumpes of his armes, and clapping the same together, declaring a reioysing heart vnto them, and so bending downe agayne, and hanging ouer the fire, slept in the Lord, and ended this mortall life.

¶Letters. A sententious letter of Robert Smith to Anne Smith hys wyfe

*SEeke first to loue God deare wife, with your whol hart and then shall it be easy to loue your neighbour.

Be frendly to al creatures, and especially to your own soule.

Be alwayes an enemy to the deuill and the world, but especially to your owne flesh.

In hearyng of good thinges ioyn the eares of youre head and ha•t together.

Seeke vnitie and quietnes with all men, but especially with your conscience: for he wil not easely be entreated.

Loue all men, but especially your enemies.

*Hate the sinnes that are paste, but especiall ye those to come.

Be as ready to further your enemy, as he is to hinder you, that ye may be the childe of God.

Defile not that which Christ hath clēsed, least his bloud be layd to your charge.

Remember that God hath hedged in your tongue, w^t the teeth and lips, * that it might speake vnder correction.

Be ready at all tymes to looke in youre brothers eye, but especially in your owne eye. For hee that warneth other of that he himselfe is faultie, doth geue hys neighbour the cleare wyne, and keepeth the dregges for hymselfe

*Beware of riches and worldly honor: for without vnderstansting prayer, and fasting, it is a snare and also pouertie, all whiche are like to consuming fire, of whiche if a man take a little, it will warme hym, but if hee take too much, it will consume him. For it is hard for a man to cary fire in his bosome, and not be brent.

Shew mercy vnto the sayntes for Christes sake, and Christ shall reward you for the sayntes sake. Among all other prisoners visite your owne soule: * for it is enclosed in a perillous prison.

If ye will loue God, hate euill, and ye shall obteyn the reward of well doynge.

Thus fare you well, good Anne. Haue me hartily com^mended to all that loue the Lorde vnfaynedly. I beseeche you haue me in your prayer while I am liuing, and I am assured the Lord will accept it. Bring vp my children and yours in the feare of God, and then shall I not fayle but re^ceaue you together in the euerlasting kingdome of God, which I goe vnto.

Your husband, Robert Smith.

If ye will meete with me agayne,

Fosake not Christ for any payne.

¶An other letter sent to his wife Anne Smyth.

The grace of almighty God be alwayes with you and comfort, strength, and stablishe you in all thinges,* that what his blessed will is, ye may followe faythfully, to hys honour, my comfort, and your owne saluation, and the good ensample to our posteritie.

I haue receiued your letter, and I prayse God, without any danger:* neuerthelesse if Gods meruailous goodnes had not brought it to my handes by Peter the keeper there might haue risen a great trouble vpon the same. For will ye know that George is a wicked man, vtterly without all feare of God: and if he had gotten it, the Counsaile sure had seene it. But Peeter like an honest man neuer opened it. Wherefore I desire you from henceforth let your letters be deliuered at Chauncery lanes ende, to my sister Tankerfield, and she may deliuer them safe into my hand. We are very straitely kepte, I prayse God of hys mercye Neuerthelesse, almighty God is alwayes with vs. I haue sent you that ye wrote for. The two Nutmegges y^t shulde haue gone by Nicholas to our frendes, I send nowe, and desire them to accept them as a poore prisoners gift vntill God geue more largely. Thomas Iuison sendeth you a peny, I pray you geue him thanks for the same, and Diricke also. I haue sent you of that little that I haue two peeces of spanishe mony. The Lorde Iesus haue you in his custody, & send you good speed. In any case keepe your selfe close, I doubt much of your walkings. Haue my harty commendations to your parentes, and desire thē with you to haue me in theyr prayers. Be feruēt in prayer, pray pray, pray, that God would of his mercy put vp his sword and looke on his people. Tell my brother, with commendations, that the next commer shall bryng vp the Epistle & exhortation. I haue written all this fourtnight for my Lady, yea, and almost done nothing els. I woulde haue sēt him the articles of William Flower, and my talk with him, if I could haue deliuered it from the prison. The holy Ghost keepe you. I would ye could make a meanes for your money, to send a cheese to Peter: for I finde muche kindenesse at his handes. Ye shall alwayes heare of me at Tankerfieldes house. All the Congregation salute you. Fare you most hartily well.

I haue not yet (tell my brother) spoken with the person. There hathe come so straita a commaundement, that no man might come to vs, because Tooly cursed the pope at the gallowes. They thought it to be our counsell.

Yours, and euer yours, Robert Smith.

A letter sent to his frende.

The eternall God keepe you in his feare. I haue hearty commendations vnto you and your husbände, beseeching almighty God to preserue you in well doing, and in perfect knowledge of his Christe, that yee may be founde faultles in the day of the Lorde. I haue heard saye, that my frende is geuen ouer to vanitie: it breaketh my hearte, not onely to heare that he so doeth, but also teacheth other, that it is vnhurtful to goe to all abominations, whych nowe stand in the Idols temples: neuerthesse deare frende, be ye not mooued to follow sinners: for they haue no inheritance with God and Christe. But looke that by going into the Idoll temple, ye defile not the temple of God: for light hath no felowship w^t darkenesse. But looke what the Lord hath commaunded, that doe. For if not going to Churche were without persecution, they would not learne you that lesson. But all thing that is sweete to the flesh, is allowed of the fleshly. The Lord shal reward euery man according to his woorkes, and he that leadeth into captiuitie, shall go into captiuitie, and hee that by the fleshly man is led in the flesh, shall of the flesh reape corruption. The Lorde Iesu geue thee his holy spirite. Amen.

I haue sent thee an Epistle in metre, whiche is not to be laid vp in thy cofer, but in thy heart.

Seeke peace and ensue it. Feare God, loue God with all thy heart, with all thy soule, and with all thy strength.

Thy frend and al mens in Christ Iesus, Rob. Smith.

Scribled in much hast from N. the 12. of May.

Robert Smith to all faithfull seruants of Christ, exhorting them to be strong vnder persecution.

Content thy selfe with patience,

With Christ to beare the crosse of paine:

Which can and will thee recompence,

A thousande folde with ioyes againe.

Let nothing cause thy heart to quaille,

Lanch out thy boate, hale vp thy saile.

Put from the shore:

And be thou sure thou shalt attaine,

Vnto the port that shall remaine.

For euermore.

The burning of Steuen Harwood, and Thomas Fust, martyred for the testimonie of the Gospel.

ABout this time died also (by cruell fire) these two martyrs of God,* y^t is to saye, Steuen Harwoode, at Stratford, and Thomas Fust, at Ware. Which both two, as they were about one time burned with the fore mētioned Robert Smith and George Tankerfield, although in sundry places: so were they also examined and openly cōdemned togethers wyth them. Their processe because it was ioyned all in one with the processe of Robert Smith & other of the said company aboue mentioned, I thought it superfluous againe to repeate the same: saue that of Thomas Fust this is to be added, that where as he in his last appering the 12. of Iuly, was mooued by the Byshop to reuoke his opinion,* thus he answered: No (said he) my Lorde, for there is no truth commeth out of your mouth, but all lyes. Yee condemne men, and will not heare the truthe. Where can ye finde any annoynting or greasing in Gods booke? I speake nothing but the truthe, and I am certaine that it is the truthe that I speake. This answer of hym onely I finde noted by the Register: although howe slenderly these Registrers haue dealt in vttering such matters, that is, in omitting those thinges which moste woorthy were to be knowen,* by their doings it is easie to be seene. But to be short, after their answeres made, both he & Thomas Fust were for their faithfull perseuerance condemned together by the Bishop in his accustomed pitie, as heretikes to be burned, and so (as before ye haue heard) finished they their martyrdom, the one at Stratford, and the other at Ware, in the moneth of August and yere abouesayd.

The constant Martyrdome of William Haile, burned at Barnet.

*OF the same companie of these x. aboue recorded, whych were sent vp to Byshop Boner, by sir Nicholas Hare and other Commissioners, in the companie of George Tankerfielde and Roberte Smith, was also Willyam Haile of Thorpe in the Countie of Essex, who lykewise being examined with the rest, the 12. day of Iuly, receiued with them also the sentence of cōdemnation. Geuing thys exhortation with al to the lookers on: Ah good people, sayd he, beware of this Idolatrer, and thys Antichriste, poynting

* vnto the Bishop of London,* and so was he deliuered to the Sheriffes as an heretique to be burned, who sente him to Barnet, where, about the latter ende of August, hee moste constantly sealed vp his faith with the consuming of his bodye by cruell fire, yeelding hys soule vnto the Lorde Iesus his onely and most sure redeemer.

George King, Thomas Leyes, Iohn VVade, sickened in prisone, and were buried in the fieldes.

YEe hearde before of ten sundry personnes sent oute of Newgate by Maister Hare and other Commissioners, to be examined of Boner Bishoppe of London.* Of whome sixe already haue bene executed in seuerall places, as hathe beene shewed: whose names were Elizabeth Warne, George Tankerfielde, Robert Smith, Steuen Harwoode, Thomas Fust, and William Haile.* Other three, to witte, George King, Thomas Leyes, and Iohn Wade sickening in Lollardes Tower, were so weake that they were remooued into sundry houses wythin the Citie of London, and there departed, and cast out into y^e fieldes, and there buried by nighte of the faithfull brethren,* when none in the day durste doe it, propter metum Iudaeorum. The last that remained of thys foresayde company, was Ioane Layshe or Layshforde, the Daughter in lawe to Iohn Warne and Elizabeth Warne Martyrs, but because shee was reprieued to a longer day, her storie and Martyrdom we will deferre till the moneth of Ianuarie the next yeare following.

William Andrewe.

THE like catholike charitie was also shewed vpon William Andrew of Horsley in the Countie of Essex Carpenter,* who was brought to Newgate the firste day of Aprill 1555. by Iohn Motham Constable of Mauldon in Essex. The first and principall promoter of hym was the Lorde Riche, who sent him first to prisone.* An other great doer against him also seemeth to be sir Richard Southwel Knighte, by a letter wrytten by him to Boner, as by the copie heereof appeareth.

A letter sent to Boner Bishop of London, from sir Richard Southwel knight.

PLEaseth it your Lordship to vnderstand, that the Lord Rich did about seuen or eight weekes past,* send vppe vnto the Counsaile, one Wil. Andrew of Thorpe within the Countie of Essex, an arrogant heretike. Their pleasure was to commaund me to commit him vnto Newgate where he remaineth, and as I am infourmed, hathe infected a nounter in the prisone wyth hys heresie. Your Lordshippe shall doe verye well (if it please you) to conuent him before you, and to take order with him, as his case doth require. I knowe the Counsaile meant to haue wrytte heerein vnto your Lordship, but by occasion of other businesse the thing hath bene omitted. Wherefore knowing their good pleasure, I did aduise the keeper of Newgate to waite vpon you with these fewe lines. And so referring the rest to your vertuous consideration, I remaine your good Lordships to cōmaund, this 12. of Iune. 1555.

Richard Southwel.

*Thys William Andrewe being twice brought before Boner to examination, there manfully stode in the defence of hys Religion. At length through straite handlynge in the Prison of Newgate, there he lost his life, which els hys aduersaries woulde haue taken away by fire: and so after the popish manner he was cast out into the fielde, and by night was priuily buried by the handes of good men and faithfull brethren.

The Martyrdome of Rob. Samuel, Preacher, suffering for the true defence of Christes Gospell.

MAister Foster Iustice, dwelling at Cobdock in the Countie of Suffolke,* and a little from Ipswich, being in continuall hatred against the truthe and the professours of the same, did not onely not cease day nor night to studie howe to bring those in thrall and captiuitie, that were honest and godly inclined to religion, but also what soeuer they were that once came in hys clawes, they easily escaped not without clogge of conscience, or els losse of life: so greedy was he of bloude. Among many whom he had troubled, there was one Samuel in king Edwardes dayes,* a very godly and righte faithfull preacher of Gods woorde, who for his valiante and constante behaiour in his sermons, seemeth worthy of high admiration. He was minister at Barfolde in Suffolke, where he taught faithfully & fruitfully that flocke which the Lord had committed to hys charge, so long as the time woulde suffer hym to doe hys duetie.

At the laste being remooued from the Ministerie, and put from hys Benefice (as manye other good Pastoures were beside) when hee coulde not auoide the raging violence of the time, yet woulde he not geue ouer his care that he had for hys flocke, but woulde teache them priuilye and by stealth, when he coulde not openly be suffered so to doe. At what time order was taken by the Queene, to be published by the Commissioners, that all Priestes whiche had married in kinge Edwardes dayes, putting theyr wiues from them, should be compelled to returne againe to theyr chastitie and single life. This Decree woulde not Samuel stande vnto, for that hee knewe it to be manifestly wicked & abhominable, but determining with himselfe that Gods lawes were not to be broken for mannes traditions, kept hys wife still at Ipswich, and gaue his diligence in the meane time to the instructing of other whyche were about him, as occasion serued. At laste maister Foster hauing intelligence heereof, beinge a greate doer in those quarters, foreslacked no time nor diligence, but eftsoones sendeth out his espialles abroad, laying hard waite for Samuel, that if he came home to his wife at anye time, they myghte apprehend him, and carie him to prison.

In conclusion, when suche as shoulde betraye hym, espied him at home with his wife, they bringing woorde to the Officer, came immediately flocking about hys house, and besette it wyth a great companie,* and so tooke hym in the nyght season, because they durste not doe it in the daye time, for feare of trouble and tumult, althoughe good Samuell did nothing withstand them at all, but mekely yeelded himselfe into their clouches of his owne accord. When they had thus caughte hym,* they put hym into Ipswich Gaile, where he passed his time meekely among his godly brethren, so long as hee was permitted to continue there. How•eit not long after, being taken from thence, he was carryed (through malice of the wicked sorte) to Norwiche, where the sayde bishop Doctour Hopton,* (whether he or Doctour Dunning his Chauncelloure) full like vnmercifull Prelates exercised greate crueltie againste hym, as in deede they were men in that time of persecution, as had not their matches for straitnes and cruell tormenting the bodies of the Saintes among all the rest beside, and specially through the procuring of Dunning. For althoughe the other were sharpe enough in their generatiō: yet could they be satisfied with imprisonment and death, and would goe no further. Neyther did I euer yet heare of anye besides these,* which so farre exceeded all bounds of pitie and compassion in tormenting their pore brethren as this Bishoppe did: in suche sorte that many of them hee peruerted and broughte quite from the truthe, and some from theyr wittes also.

The B. therefore, or els his Chancellor, thinking that he mighte as easily preuaile with Samuel, as he had done w^t other before, kept him in a very straite prison at his first comming, where he was chained bolte vpright to a greate Page 1704 post, in such sort, that standing only on tiptoe, he was faine to stay vp the whole paise or waight of his bodye thereby. And to make amends for the cruelty or paine that he suffered, they added a farre more greuous torment, keping him without meate and drinke,* whereby he was vnmercifully vexed through hunger and thirst: sauing that he had euery day allowed 2. or 3. mouthfuls of bread, and 3. sponefuls of water, to the ende rather that he might be reserued to farther torment, then that they woulde preserue hys lyfe. O worthy constancie of the Martyr. O pitillesse hearts of papists, worthy to be complained of, and to be accused before God and nature.* O the wōderfull strength of Christ in his members? Whose stomacke, though it had ben made of Adamant stone, would not haue relented at these intollerable vexations, and extreme paines aboue nature? How oftentimes would he haue drūken his owne water, but hys body was so dried vp wyth this long emptinesse, that he was not able to make one drop of water?

At the laste when he was brought foorth to be burned, which was but a trifle in comparison of those paynes that he had passed, certaine there were that hearde hym declare what straunge things had happened vnto hym during the time of his imprisonment: to wit, that after he had bene famished or pined with hunger two or three daies together, he then fell into a sleepe, as it were one halfe in a slumber, at which time one clad all in white, seemed to stande before hym, which ministred comfort vnto him by these wordes: Samuel, Samuel, be of good cheare, and take a good heart vnto thee. For after this day shalt thou neuer be either hungry or thirsty: Which thing came euen to passe accordingly: for speedily after he was burned, and from that time till he should suffer, he fealt neither hunger nor thirst. And this declared he, to the ende (as he sayde) that all men might beholde the wonderfull workes of God. Many moe like matters concerning the great comforte he had of Christe in his afflictions, he could vtter (he sayde) besides this, but that shamefastnes and modestie would not suffer him to vtter it. And yet if it had pleased God,* I would he had bene lesse modest in that behalfe, that the loue and care that Christe hathe of his, might haue the more appeared therby vnto vs by such present argumentes, for the more plentifull comfort of the godly, though there be sufficient testimonies of the same in the holy scriptures already.

No lesse memorable it is, and woorthy also to be noted concerning the 3. ladders which he tolde to diuers he sawe in his sleepe,* set vp toward heauen: of the which there was one somewhat longer then the rest, but yet at length they became one, ioyning (as it were) all three together. Thys was a forewarning reuealed vnto him, declaring vndoubtedly the martyrdome, first of him selfe, and then the death of two honest women, which were brought foorth & suffered in the same towne anone after.

As this godly martyr was going to y^e fire, there came a certaine maide to him,* which tooke him aboute the necke and kissed him, who being marked by them that were present, was sought for the next day after, to be had to prisone and burned, as the very party her self informed me: Howbeit, as God of his goodnes wold haue it, she escaped their fiery handes, keeping her selfe secrete in the towne a good while after. But as this maide, called Rose Nattingham, was marueilously preserued by the prouidence of God: so there were other two honest women did fall into the rage and furie of that time.* The one was a Bruers wyfe, the other was a Shoomakers wife, but both together nowe espoused to a newe husband Christ.

With these two was thys maid aforesaid very familiar and wel acquainted, who on a time geuing counsail to the one of them, that shee shoulde conuey her selfe away while she had time and space, seeing she could not away with the Quenes vniust procedings, had thys answer at her hands againe: I know well, sayth shee, that it is lawfull enough to flee away,* which remedy you may vse, if you list. But my case standeth otherwise. I am tied to an husbnde, and haue besides a sorte of yong children at home: and then I know not how my husband, being a carnall man, wil take my departure from him: therefore I am mineded for the loue of Christ and his truthe, to stande to the extremitie of the matter.

And so the next daye after Samuel suffered, these two godly wiues, the one called Anne Potten, the other called Ioane Trunchfielde, the wife of Michael Trunchfielde, Shomaker of Ipswich, were apprehended and had bothe into prison together.* Which as they were both by sexe and nature somewhat tender: so were they at first lesse able to endure the straitnesse of the prisone, and especially the Brewers wife was cast into marueilous great agonies and troubles of minde thereby. But Christ beholding y^e weake infirmitie of hys seruauant, did not faile to helpe her when The cruel burning of Robert Samuel, Martyr.

* shee was in thys necessitie. So at the lengthe they bothe suffered after Samuel.* Anno 1556. Februarie 19. as shalbe by the Lordes grace declared heereafter. And these (no doubt) were those two Ladders, which being ioyned with the thirde, Samuel sawe stretched vp into heauen. Thys blessed Samuel the seruant of Christ, suffred the 31. of August. Anno 1555.

The report goeth amōg some that were there present, and saw him burne, that his body in burning did shine as bright & white as new tried siluer in the eyes of them that stode by: as I am infourmed by some which were there, and did beholde the sight.

Letters of Robert Samuel, Preacher.

A letter or exhortation to the pacient suffering of afflictions for Christes cause.

A Man knoweth not hys time, but as the fishe is taken with the Angle,* and as the birdes are caught with the snare: euen so are men caughte and taken in the perillous time when it commeth vppon them. The time commeth:* the day draweth neare. Ezechiel 7. Better it were to dye, (as the Preacher sayeth) then to liue and see the miserable workes which are done vnder the Sunne: suche sodaine and straūge mutations, such wofull, hainous, and lamentable diuisions so fast approacheth, and none or verye fewe thorowly repenteth. Alas for this sinfull nation, a people of great iniquity & sede of vngratiousnes, corrupting their wayes. They haue forsaken the Lord,* they haue prouoked the holy one of Israel to anger, & are gon backward. Who now liueth not in such securitie and rest,* as though all dāgers were cleane ouerpast? Who now blindeth and buffeteth not Christe, with seest me, and seest me not? Yea, who liueth not nowe in suche felicitie, worldlye pleasures and ioyes, wholly seeking the world, prouiding & craftily shifting for the earthly clod & all carnal appetites, as though sinne were cleane forgotten, ouerthrowne, and deuoured? Like hoggish Gergesites nowe are we more afraide and ashamed of Christe oure Messias, fearing the losse of oure filthy pigges, I meane our transitory goods,* and disquieting of our sinfull and mortall bodies in this short, vncertaine and miserable life, then of a Legion of Deuils, seducing and driuing vs from hearing, reading, and beleeuing Christ Gods eternal sonne, and his holy worde, the power to saue our soules: vnto vanities, lies and fables, and to this bewitching world.

Oh perilous abundance of goods, too much saturity of meates, wealth, and quietnes, which destroyed wyth so many soules, those goodly cities Sodom & Gomorre. Ieroboam, so long as he was but a pore man, not yet aduanced to his dignity, liued in y^e lawes of God without reprehension: but broughte once to wealth & prosperous estate, hee became a wicked and moste shamefull Idolater. And what made the couetous yong mā so loth to folow Christ, Page 1705 when he was bidden to forsake but worldly wealth which hee then enioyed?_ Woe be vnto these false elusions of the world, baites of perdition, hookes of the deuil, which haue so shamefully deceiued and seduced full many frō the right path vnto the Lorde, into the high waies of confusion and perpetuall perdition.

We might nowe woorthily (deare Christians) lament & bewaile our heauie state, miserable cōdition, and sorowfull chaunce: yea, I say, we might well accuse our selues, and w^t Iob curse these oure troublous,* wicked, and bloody last dayes of thys worlde, were it not that wee both see and beleue, and finde in Gods sacred booke, that a remnaunt God hath in all ages reserued, I meane the faithful, as many as haue bene from the beginning of the worlde, exercised, whetted, and pullished with diuers afflictions, troubles and tossings, cast and dashed againste all pearils and dangers, as the very drosse and outcastes of the earth, and yet wil in no wise halte betweene God and Baall: for God verily abhorreth two men in one: he can not away with them that are betweene both, but casteth them away as a filthy vomite. Christe will not parte spoyle wyth his mortall enemie the deuil: he wil haue all or lose all: he will not permit the deuill to haue the seruice of the body, and he to stand contented with the heart and minde: but he will be glorified both in your bodies and in your spirites,* which are hys, as S. Paule sayth. 1. Cor. 6. For he hath made all, boughte all, and dearely paide for all, as S. Peter sayeth: With his owne immaculate body hath he cleane discharged youre bodyes from sinne,* death and hell, and with his most precious blood paid your ransome and full price once for all and for euer.

Nowe what harme, I pray you, or what losse sustaine you by this? Why are you, O vaine men, more afraide of Iesus your gentle saueour, & his gospell of saluation, then of a legion of cruell deuils, going about w^t false delusions, vtterly to destroy you both bodies & soules? * Thynke you to be more sure then vnder your captaine Christ? Doe you promise your selues to be more quiet in Sathans seruice, then in Christes religion? esteeme you more these transitory and pernicious pleasures, then God and all his heauenly treasures? * Oh palpable darknes, horrible madnes, & wilful blindnes, w^tout comparison, too much to be suffred any longer. We see, and wil not see: we know & wil not know: yea, we smarte and will not feele, and that our owne conscience well knoweth. Oh miserable and brainlesse soules, which would for foolish pleasures & slipperye wealth, loose the royall kingdome and permanent ioyes of God, wyth the euerlasting glory which he hath prepared for them that truely loue hym, and renounce the world. The children of the world liue in pleasure and wealth, and the deuill, who is their God and prince of this world, kepeth their wealth which is proper vnto them, and letteth them enioy it. But let vs which be of Christe, seeke and enquire for heauenly things, which by Gods promise and mercy in Christ, shall be peculiar vnto vs. Let (I say) the Crecians, Epicures, and such other beastly Belials and carnall people, passe for things that be pleasant for the body, and doe appertaine to this transitorie life: * Yet shall they once (as the kingly Prophet sayth) runne about the Citie of God, to and froe howling like dogges, desiring one scrappe of the ioyes of Gods elect, but all too late, as the rich glutton did.

Let vs therefore passe for those things that doe pertaine to the spirite, * and be celestiallyl, We must be here (sayth Paule) not as inhabitours and home dwellers, but as straungers: not as straungers onely, but after the minde of Paule, as painful souldiers appoynted of our gouernour to fight against the gouernour of darkenesse of this worlde, against spirituall craftinesse in heauenly things. The time is come: we must too it: the iudgement must begin first at the house of God. Began they not first with the greene and sappie tree? and what followed then on the dry braunches? Ieremie speaking in the persone of God, * sayeth: In the Citie wherein my name is inuocate, will I begin to punish: but as for you, (meaning the wicked) you shall be as innocentes and not once touched: for the dregges of Gods wrath, the bottome of all sorrowes, are reserued vnto them in the ende: but Gods houshold shall drinke the flower of the cup of hys mercye. And therefore let vs say w^t Ezechias: * Play the men & shrinke not: let vs comfort our selues, for the Lorde is with vs our helper, and fighteth for vs. The Lord is (sayth he) with you when you be with him, and when you seeke him he will be found of you: and againe, when you forsake him, he will forsake you.

Wherefore we ought not to be dismaid or discourage our selues, but rather to be of good comforte: not to be sad but merry: not sorrowful, but ioyfull, in that God of his goodnesse will vouchsafe to take vs as his beloued children, to subdue our sinful lustes, our wretched flesh and bloud vnto his glory, the promoting of his holy word, and edifying of his church. What if the earthly house of this our habitation (Paule meaning the body) be destroyed? * We know assuredly we shall haue a buildinge of God not made wyth handes, but euerlasting in heauen, * with such ioyes as faith taketh not, hope toucheth not, nor charitye apprehendeth not. They passe all desires and wishes. Gotten they maye be by Christ, esteemed they can not be. Wherefore the more affliction and persecution the woorde of God bringeth, the more felicitye and greater ioy abideth in heauen. But the worldly peace, idle ease, wealthy pleasure, and this present and pleasant transitory life and felicity, which the vngodly foolishly imagine to procure vnto themselues by persecuting, and thrusting away the gospel, shall turne vnto theyr owne trouble, & at last vnto horrible destruction & mutations of realmes and countries,* and after this life (if they repent not) vnto their perpetuall infelicitie, perdition, and damnation. For they had rather with Nabal and his temporal pleasures descend to the deuill, then with pore Christ and his bodely troubles, ascend vnto the kingdom of God his father. But an vnwise man (sayeth the Psalmist) compr•hendeth them not, neither doth the folish vnderstand them, <◇> these bloody persecutors grow vp & florish like the flower and grasse in the field. But vnto this end do they so florish, that they might be cut downe & caste into the fire for euer. For, as Iob sayth: Their ioy lasteth but the twinkling of an eie, and death shall lie gnawing vpon them, as doth the flock• vpon the pasture: yea the cruell worme, late repentaunce (as S. Marke sayeth) shall lie gnawing, tormenting, and accusing their wretched conscience for euermore.

Let vs therfore (good Christians) be constant in obeying God rather then men. For although they slay our sinful bodies (yea rather our deadly enemies) for Gods veritie: yet they can not do it,* but by Gods sufferance and good will, to his praise and honour, and to our eternall ioye and felicitie. For our blood shed for the Gospel, shall preache it wyth more fruite and greater furtheraunce, then did oure mouthes, liues and wrytings: as did the bloude of Abell, Steuen, wyth many other moe. What though they laughe Christ & his worde to scorne, which sit in the chaire of peruerse pestilent scornors? To whome as to the wise Gentiles of the world, the Gospel of Christ is but foolishnes, as it was to the Iewes a sclaunder and a stumblinge stone, whereat they now being fallen, haue prouoked the wrath and vengeance of God vpon them.

These are the dayes of vengeaunce (sayeth Luke) that all thinges wrytten may be fulfilled.* And surely it shall be no lesse then a huge storme of euils that shal come vpō vs, because that a long and a cursed obstinate maliciousnes of vs, hath gone before, crying in the eares of the Lorde God of hostes, who so many times and so many wayes haue bene prouoked with the vnspeakeable riches of his goodnesse, his pacience, and long suffering, to amendement, and haue neuerthelesse contemned the same, and proceeded forward to worse and worse, prouoking and stirring the presence of Gods maiestie vnto anger.

Now therfore sayth God by the mouth of his prophet: I wil come vpon thee, and I will send my wrath vpon thee:* vpon thee (I say) O Englande, and punish thee according to thy wayes, and rewarde thee after all thyne abominations.* Thou hast kindled the fire of Gods wrath, and hast stirred vp the coales. For thou wast once lightned, and hadst tasted of the heauenly gifte, and wast become partaker of the holy ghost, & haddest tasted of the good word of God: Yea, it is yet in thy mouth, sayth the Prophet. Alas O Englād, thou knewest thy Lorde and maisters wil, but diddest nothing thereafter:* Thou must therefore (sayeth hee) suffer many stripes, and many sharpe strokes, and walke on in the glittering and hot flame of thine owne fire, and in y^e coles that thou hast kindled. This commeth to thee from my hande, saith the Lorde: namely: That thou shalt sleepe in sorrowe, yea euen so thou shalt. The plain truth telleth the tale, the immutable iustice of the euerliuing God, and the ordinarie course of his plagues from the beginning confirmeth the same. The ioy of our heart (sayeth Ieremie) is gone,* oure glory is fallē away, our mery singing is turned into mour'ning, the garland of our head is fallen, Alas and weale away that euer we sinned so sore: Wo worth all abominations and wickednesse: wo woorth cloked hypocrisie: woe worth our carnall liberty: wo worth our most cursed idolatrie. For because of these things, sayth the Lorde, ye shall perish with sword, hunger, and pestilence.

Wherefore, let all the wicked enemies of Christe, and all y^e vnbeleuers, look to be tormented and vexed with al hellish furies, and cleane wythout hope at Gods accompting day, which know not God in Christ to be their very righteousnesse, their life, their onely saluation & alone sauour, nor beleue not in him. They must, sayth S. Iohn, needes abide and pearish wyth their sinnes in death and in eternall damnation. But we be the children of Saintes, as the Page 1706 elder Toby did aunswer, and looke for an other life, which God shall geue to all them which chaunge not theyr faith, nor shrink not from him. Reioyce therefore ye Christian afflicted brethren, for they can not take our soules and bodies out of the handes of the almighty,* which be kept as in the bosome of our most swete and louing father, and if we abide fast in Christ, and turn not away like weathercocks, surely we shall liue for euer, Christ affirmeth the same, saying:My sheepe heare my voyce, I knowe them, they hearken vnto me and to no straungers, and I geue them euerlasting life, for they shall not be lost, nor no manne shall plucke them oute of my handes: no nor yet this flattering world with all his vaine pleasures, nor any tyranne with his great threatens & stout bragges can once mooue them oute of the way of eternall life. What consolation and cōfort may we haue more pleasant and effectuous then thys (God is on our side, & fighteth for vs: he suffereth, he smarteth, and is afflicted wyth vs. As the world can doe nothing against his might, neyther in taking away, or diminishing of his glory, nor putting him from his celestiall throne: so can it not harme nor hurte any one of hys children without his good will. For we are members of his body, oute of hys fleshe and of hys bones,* and as deare to him as the apple of his eye.

Let vs therefore with an earnest faith, set fast hold and sure feeling vpon the promises of God in the gospell, & let vs not be sundred from the same by any temptation, tribulation, or persecution. Let vs consider the verity of God to be inuincible,* inuolable & immutable, Promising and geuing vs his faithfull souldiours life eternal. It is he onely that hath deserued it for vs: it is his onely benefite, & of his only mere mercy, & vnto him only must we render thāks. Let not therefore the vaine fantasies and dreames of men, the foolish gauds and toyes of the world, nor the crafty delusions of the deuil, driue and separate vs from our hope of the crowne of righteousnes, that is layd vp in store for vs against the last day. Oh that happy and merry last day, I meane to the faithfull,* when Christ by his couenaunt shall graunt and geue vnto them that ouercome and keepe hys woordes to the ende, that they may ascend and sitte in seate with him, as he hath ascended & sitteth on throne with hys father. The same body and soule that is now wyth Christ afflicted,* shall then be with Christ glorified: now in y^e butchers hands as shepe apoynted to die, then sitting at Gods table with Christ in his kingdom, as Gods honorable and deare children: where we shall haue for earthly pouertie, heauenly riches, for hūger and thirst, saturitie of the pleasant presence of the glory of God, for sorrowes, troubles, and colde yrons, celestiall ioyes, and the company of aungels, and for a bodely death, life eternal. Oh happy soules, Oh precious death and euer more blessed: right dear in the eyes of God,* to you the spring of the Lord shal euer be flourishing. Then (as sayth Esay:) the redeemed shal returne and come againe into Sion, praising the Lorde, and eternall mercies shalbe ouer their heads: they shall obtaine mirth and solace: sorrowe and woe shalbe vtterly vanquished: yea I am he, sayeth the Lord, that in all things geueth you euerlasting consolation. To whom with the Father, and the holy Ghost, be glory and praise for euer. Amen.

Robert Samuel.

An other letter wrytten to the Christian congregation, by Robert Samuel, wherein he declareth the confession of his faith.

The beliefe of the hert iustifieth, and the knowledge with the mouth maketh a man safe. Rom. 10.

Feare not the curse of mē, be not afraid of their blasphemies and reuilings, for wormes and mothes shal eat them vp like cloth and woolle, but my righteousnesse shall endure for euer, and my sauing health from generation to generation Esay 51.

*Considering with my selfe these pearillous times, pearishing daies▪ and the vnconstante and miserable state of man, the decay of our faith, the sinister reporte and false sclaunder of Gods most holy word, these vrgent causes in conscience do constraine me to confesse and acknowledge my faith and meaning in Christes holy Religion, as S. Peter teacheth me, saying: be readye alwayes to geue an aunswere to euerye man that asketh you a reason of the hope that is in you, and that with meekenes and feare, hauing a good conscience, that when they backbite you as euill doers▪ they may be ashamed, for asmuche as they haue falsly accused your good conuersation in Christ.

As touching my doctrine, for that little talent that God hath geuen mee, God I take to recorde, mine owne conscience and mine audiorie knoweth, that I neither in doctrine nor maners, willingly taughte any other thinge then I receiued of the holye Patriarckes, Prophetes, Christe and hys Apostles. For it were not onely sinne, but also the verye parte of a cursed miscreant, to denye, to be lye, or betraye the innocencye of that heauenlye doctrine, or to bee ashamed to confesse and stande to the defence of the same, seeing that Christe planted it with hys moste precious bloude: and all good menne haue more esteemed the true and infallible woorde of GOD, then all thys transitorye worlde, or their owne mortall liues.* And I beleeeue this doctrine of the Patriarkes, Prophetes, Christe and his Apostles to be sufficient and absolutely perfecte to instructe and teache mee, and all the holy Church, of our dueties towards God, the Magistrates, and our neighbours

Firste, and principallye I do assuredly beleeeue wythout any doubting, that there is one Deitie or Diuine essence, and infinite substaunce. which is both called, and is in dede God euerlasting, vnbodye, vnpartible, vnmeasurable in power, wisdom, and goodnesse, the maker and preseruer of all thinges,* as well visible as inuisible: and yet there be three distincte persones, all of one Godheade or Diuine beyng, and all of one power, coequall, consubstantiall, coeternell, the Father, the Sonne, and the holye Ghoste.

I beleeeue in God the Father Almightye &c.* As touching God the Father of heauen, I beleeeue as muche as holye Scripture teacheth mee to beleeeue. The Father is the firste persone in Trinitie, first cause of our saluation, which hathe blessed vs with all maner of blessings in heauenly thinges by Christe: whych hathe chosen vs before the foundations of the worlde were layde, that wee shoulde be holye and wythout blame before hym: who hath predestinate vs and ordained vs to bee his childrenne of adoption,* thorough Christe Iesu. In hym, as it is sayde, we liue, wee mooue and haue oure being: he nourisheth, feedeth, and geueth meate to euery creature.

And in Iesus Christe his onely sonne our Lorde.* I beleue that the woorde, that is the Sonne of God the seconde person in Trinitie, did take mannes nature in the wombe of the blessed Virgine Marie: So that there be in hym two natures, a Diuine nature, and an humaine nature, in the vnitie of parson inseparable,* conioyned and knitte in one Christe, truely God and truely man, the expresse and perfecte Image of the inuisible God,* wherein the will of God the Father shineth apparantly, and wherein man, as it were in a glasse, may beholde what he ought to doe, that he maye please God the Father.

Borne of the Virgine Marie: truely sufferinge his Passion, crucified, deade and buried, to the entent to bring vs againe into fauoure wyth God the Father almightie, and to be a sacrifice, hoste and oblation, not onely for originall sinne, but also for all actuall sinnes of the whole generation of mankinde. For all the woorkes, merites, deseruings, doinges,* and obedience of man towards God, althoughe they be done by the spirite of God, in the grace of God, yet being thus done, be of no validitie, worthine, nor merite before God, except God for his mercy and grace, accompte them woorthye for the woorthinesse and merytes of Christ Iesus.

The same Christ went downe to the helles, and truely rose againe the thirde day, and ascended into the heauē, that he might there stil raigne and haue dominion ouer all creatures: and from thence shall come. &c.

I beleue in the holy Ghost, coequall with God the Father and the Sonne, and proceeding from them bothe: by whose vertue, strength and operation, the true Catholicke Church, which is the Communion and societie of Saintes, is guided in all truthe & veritie, & kept frō al errors & fals doctrine, the deuill, & all power of sinne. Which Church is sanctified and halowed with the precious bloude, and spirite of our Lorde Iesus Christe:* whiche hathe also her signe and mark, that she heareth and foloweth the voice of her only and true pastour Christ, and no strangers. This church also is the house of God, the congregation of the liuing God, the pillar of truth, the liuely body of Christe, a Church both in name and in deede.

I beleue the remission of sinnes, by the only meanes and merites of Christes death & passion:* who made vnto vs of God that onely sacrifice and oblation offered once for all and for euer, for all them that be sanctified.

I beleue the resurrection of the body, whereby in the last day al men shal rise againe from death, the soules ioyned againe to the bodies, the good to euerlasting life,* the wicked to euerlasting pain and punishmēt. And nothing may more certainly stablish & confirme our faith, that we shall rise againe immortal both in body & soule, thē the resurrection of Christ our Sauour, and first fruites of the deade. Nowe that Christe our head is risen, we beyng hys body and members, must follow our head. Death, hell, and sinne, cannot sunder nor plucke vs from him. For as the Sonne can not be deuied nor sundred from the Father, nor the holy Ghost frō them bothe, no more maye wee beinge the faithfull members of Christ, be separated from Christ. And for a confirmation of our resurrection,* Christ would be seene after his resurrection in hys most glorious body, his woundes being handled and felte, speaking and teaching, eating and drinking▪ &c. Wee looke (sayeth S. Paul) for Iesus Christ our Sauour, which shall trāsfigure our vile bodies, & conform them to his glorious body by the same power Page 1707 and vertue, wherwith he is able to subdue all things: euen like as the graine of wheate sown in the ground, is first putrified and brought as into a thing of nought, yet after that it springeth vp freshly with a more goodly colour, forme and beautie then it had before The body is sowne in corruption,* and riseth in incorruption: it is sown in dishonour, and riseth in honour.

Thus I verely know, and assuredly beleue the resurrection of oure bodies,* and to haue life eternall by Christ, and for Christes sake. Verely, verely, I say vnto you (sayth Christ,) he that heareth my woorde, and beleueeth on him that sent me, hath euerlasting life,* and shall not come into damnation, but is escaped frō death to life. It is Christe that died once for oure sinnes, and is risen againe, neuer more to die: it is he that swallowed vp death, & hath cast it vnder his feete for euer. What now can death do vnto vs? Verelye nothing els,* but for a little time separate oure precious soules from oure wretched bodies, that diuine substaunce from a masse of sinne, that eternall life from a body of death, and so send our soules oute of this miserable, wretched and sorrowfull lyfe, combred with all calamities, vnto that moste blessed felicitie and ioyes eternall.

As concerning the holy and reuerende Sacraments of Christes Church, which be in number two, the Sacrament of Baptisme, and the Supper of the Lord, I beleue them to be as S. Paul calleth them, confirmations or seales of Gods promises, whiche haue added to them a promise of grace, and therefore they are called visible signes of inuisible grace.

The Sacrament of Baptisme is a marke of Christes Church, a seale and confirmation of our acception into the grace & fauour of God for Christes sake. For his innocencie, his righteousness, his holinesse, his iustice, is ours, geuen vs of God, and our sinnes and vnrighteousnesse, by his obedience and abasing of him selfe to the death of the crosse, are his, whereof Baptisme is the signe, seale, and confirmation.

Baptisme is also a signe of repentaunce, to testifie that we be borne to the waues of pearils, and chaunges of life, to the intent that we should die continually as lōg as we liue from sinne, and rise againe like new men vnto righteousness. Rom. 6.

The other Sacrament which is the supper and holy Maundie of our Sauour Christ,* whereby the church of Christ is knowen, I beleue to be a remembraunce of Christes death and passion, a seale and confirmation of his moste precious bodye geuen vnto death, euen to the vile death of the crosse, wherewith wee are redeemed and deliuered from sinne, death, hell, and damnation, It is a visible woorde, because it worketh the same thing in the eyes, which the worde worketh in the eares. For like as the worde is a meane to the eares, whereby the holy Ghost moueth the heart to beleue, Romanes 10. so this sacrament is a meane to the eyes, whereby the holy Ghost moueth the hart to beleue:* it preacheth peace betweene God and man: it exhorteth to mutuall loue and all godly life, and teacheth to contemne the world for the life to come, when as Christ shall appeare, which now is in heauen, and no where els as concerning his humane body.*

Yet do I beleue assuredly that his very body is present in his moste holy Supper at the contemplation of oure spirituall eyes,* and so verely eaten with the mouth of our faith. For as soone as I heare these most comfortable and heauenly woordes spoken and pronōced by the mouth of the Minister. This is my body which is geuen for you, when I heare (I say) this heauenly harmonie of Gods vnfallible promises and truthe: I looke not vpon, neyther doe I beholde breade and wine: for I take and beleue the wordes simply and plainly,* euen as Christe spake them. For hearing these wordes, my senses be rapt and vtterly excluded: for faith wholly taketh place, and not flesh nor the carnall imaginations of our grosse, fleshly, and vnreuerent eating after the maner of our bodily foode whiche profiteth nothinge at all, as Christe witnesseth, Iohn 6 but with a sorrowfull and wounded conscience, an hungry and thirsty soule, a pure and faithfull mind do fully embrace, beholde and feede, and looke vppon that most glorious body of Christ in heauen, at the right hande of God the father, very God and very man, which was crucified and slaine, and his bloud shed for our sinnes, there nowe making intercession, offering and geuing his holy body for me,* for my body, for my raunsome, for my full price and satisfaction, who is my Christ and all that euer hee hath: and by this spirituall and faithfull eating of this liuelye and heauenlye breade,* I feele the moste sweete s•ppe and taste of the fruites, benefites, and vnspeakeable ioyes of Christes deathe and passion fullye digested into the bowelles of my soule. For my minde is quieted from all worldly aduersities, tormoylinges, and trouble: my conscience is pacified from sinne, deathe, hell, and damnation: my soule is full, and hath euen enough, and will no more: for all things are but losse, vile dounge and drosse, vayne vanitie, for the excellent knowledge sake of Christ Iesu my Lord and Sauour.

Thus nowe is Christes flesh my very meate in deede, and hys bloud my very drinke in deede,* & I am become flesh of his flesh, and bone of his bones. Nowe I liue, yet not I, but Christe liueth in me:* yea I dwell in him, and he in mee: for thorough faith in Christe, and for Christes sake we are one, that is, of one consente, minde▪ and fellowship with the Father, the Sonne and the hol Ghost. Iohn 17. Thus am I assured and fullye perswaded, and on this rocke haue I builded by Gods grace, my dwelling and resting place for body and soule, life and death. And thus I commit my cause vnto Christe the righteous and iust iudge, who will an other day iudge these debates and controuersies: whome I humbly beseeche to cast his tender and mercifull eyes vppon the afflicted and ruinous Churches, and shortly to reduce them into a godly and perpetuall concorde. Amen.

Thus do I beleeeue, and this is my faith and my vnderstanding in Christ my Sauour, and his true and holy religion. And thys whosoeuer is ashamed to doe among this adulterous and sinnefull generation, of hym shall the sonne of man be ashamed,* when he commeth in the glory of his father with the holy Angels.

Robert Samuel.

William Allen, Martyr.

NExT after the suffering of Robert Samuel,* aboute the beginning of September, was burned William Allen in Walsingham, labouring man, seruaunte sometime to Iohn Houghton of Somerton. He being brought before the Bishop, and asked the cause why he was imprisoned: aunswared, that he was put in prison, because he woulde not followe the Crosse, saying that he woulde neuer go on Procession.

Then being willed by the Bishoppe to returne againe to the Catholicke Church, he aunswared, that he would turne to the Catholicke Church, but not to the Romishe Church, and said, that if he saw the King and Quene,* and all other folowe the crosse, or kneele downe to the crosse, he would not. For the which, sentence of condemnation was geuē against him, the 12. of August, and he burned at Walsingham about the beginning of September, who declared suche constancie at hys Martyrdome, and hadde suche credite wyth the Iustices, by reason of hys vprighte and well tried conuersation among them, that he was suffered to goe vntied to hys suffering, & there being fastened with a chaine, stode quietly without shrinking, vntill he dyed.

The Martyrdome of Roger Coo of Melforde in Suffolke, Shereman, first examined before the Byshop of Norwich, and by him condemned. Anno 1555. August 12.

ROger Coo broughte before the Bishop,* first was asked why he was imprisoned.

Coo.

At the Iustices commaundement.

Bishop.

There was some cause why.*

Coo.

Heere is my accuser, let hym declare.

And his accuser sayde that hee woulde not receyue the Sacrament.

Bish.

Then the Bishop sayde that he thought he had transgressed a lawe.

Coo.

But Coo answered that there was no law to transgresse.

Bish.

The Bishop then asked, what he sayd to the law that then was?

Coo.

He answered how he had bene in prison a long time, and knew it not.

No, sayd his accuser, nor wilt not. My Lord, aske him when he receiued the Sacrament.

Coo.

When Coo heard him say so, he sayde:* I pray you my Lord, let him sit downe and examine me him selfe.

Bish.

But the Bishoppe woulde not heare that, but sayde: Coo, why? will ye not receiue?

Coo.

He aunswered him, that the Bishoppe of Rome had chaunged Gods ordinaunces,* and geuen the people bread and wine in the steade of the Gospell, and the beliefe of the same.

Bish.

Howe prooue you that.

Coo.

Our Sauour sayde: My fleshe is meate in deede, and my bloude is drinke in deede. He that eateth my fleshe,* and drynketh my bloud, abideth in me, and I in him, and the breade and wine doth not so.

Bish

Well Coo, thou doest sclaunder our holy fathers. Did not Christ take bread, geue thanks, and brake it, and said: This is my body?

Coo.

Yes, sayde hee, and so he went further wyth the texte, saying: Which shall be geuen for you: doe this in remembrance of me.

Bish.

You haue sayde the truth.

Coo.

Then Coo replyed further, and sayde: Christe willed to doe this in remembraunce of hym, and not to saye thys in the remembraunce of hym, neyther did the holy Ghoste so leade the Apostles, but taughte them to geue thanks, and to breake breade from house to house, and not to saye as the Bishop sayde.

Page 1708

Bish.

How prooue you that?

Coo.

It is written in the 2. of the Acts.

Then the Bish. chaplayne sayd it was true.

Bish.

The Bish. asked hym if he could his beliefe.

Coo.

He answered yea, and so sayd part of the Creede, and thē after he said, he beleued more: for he beleued the x. commaundements, that it was meete for all such as looke to be saued to be obedient vnto them.

Bish

Is not the holy church to be beleueed also?

Coo.

Yes, if it be builded vpon the word of God.

Bish.

The Byshop sayd to Coo, that he had charge of hys soule.

Coo.

Haue ye so my Lord? Then if ye go to the Deuill for your sinnes, where shall I become?

Bish.

Do you not beleue as your father did? Was not he an honest man?

Coo.

*It is written that after Christ hath suffred: There shal come a people with the Prince that shal destroy both Citie and Sanctuary. I pray you shew me whether this destruction was in my fathers tyme, or now?

Bish.

The B. not answering his question, asked hym whether he would not obey the kyngs lawes?

Coo.

As farre as they agree with the word of God, I will obey them.

Bish.

*Whether they agree with the worde of God or not, we be bound to obey them, if the kyng were an Infidel.

Coo.

If Sydrach, Mysaach, and Abednago had so done, Nabucha••nosor had not confessed the liuyng God.

Bish.

Then the B. told hym, that these 22. yeares wee haue bene gouerned with such kyngs.

Coo.

My L. why were ye then dumme, and did not speake or barke?

Bish.

I durst not for feare of death, and thus they ended.

☛ But after this done, it was reported that I rai•ed: wherfore I called it to memory, & wrote this my railing, that light should not be taken for darknesse, nor sinne for holynes, and the deuill for God, who ought to be feared & honoured both now and euer, Amen.

*This Roger Coo, an aged father, after his sundry troubles and conflictes with his aduersaries, at length was committed to the fire at Yexford in the countie of Suffolk, where he most blessedly ended his aged yeares. An. 1555. Mens. Septemb.

†Thomas Cobbe of Hauerhill, butcher, Martyr.

Ouer and besides this foresayd Roger Coo, Wil. Allen, Iames Abbes of Stokennayland,* Robert Samuell and other moe, in the same yeare vpon the 12. of August, was also with them condemned Thomas Cobbe of Hauerhill Butcher, executed in the moneth of September aforesayd. Who beyng brought and examined by Michaell Dunnyngs the bloudy Chauncellour of Norwich, first whether he beleueed that Christ is really and substantially in the Sacrament of the aultar, aunswered that the body of Christ borne of the blessed virgin was in heauē, and otherwise (he sayd) he would not aunswere, because hee had read it in the Scripture,* that Christ did ascende, and dyd neuer descend since, and therefore sayd that he had not learned in the Scripture, that Christ should be in the Sacrament.

Furtheymore, beyng demanded whether he would obey the lawes of the realme of England,* made for the vnitie of fayth, or no, he aunswered that his body should be at the King and Queenes commaundement so farre as the law of God would suffer. &c. In fine the sayd Tho.

Cobbe beyng condemned the same xij. day of August, with the other his fellowmartyrs, was burned in the towne of Tetford. An. 1555. Mens. Septemb.

The Martyrdome of George Catmer, Robert Streater, Anthony Burward, George Brodbridge, and Iames Tutty.

NOwe from Northfolke and Suffolke, to returne agayne into the Diocesse of Caunterbury, we haue to entreat of fiue worthy Martyrs, whose bloud in the same yeare and moneth of September was spilt for the true testimony of Christ, and his Gospels cause. The names of the which fiue Martyrs were these.

- George Catmer, of Hyth.
- Robert Streater, of Hyth.
- Anthony Burward, of Calet.
- George Brodbridge, of Bromfield.
- Iames Tutty, of Brenchley.

Who vppon the 3. day of August were brought before Thornton the foresaid Bish. of Douer and his complices,* and there were both iointly and seuerally examined vpon certaine Articles, touching the Sacrament of their aultar, auricular confession, and other such lyke.

To the which the sayd Catmer (being first examined) made aunswere on this wise:* Christ (quoth he) sitteth in heauen on the right hand of God the Father, and therefore I do not beleue him to be in the Sacrament of the aultar: but he is in the worthy receiuer spiritually, & the Sacrament as you vse it, is an abhominable Idoll.

Next vnto hym was called forth Rob. Streater:* who beyng also asked whether he dyd beleue the reall presence of Christ in the Sacrament of the aultar, sayd, that he dyd not so beleue: for you doe maintayne heresie and Idolatry (quoth he) in that ye teach to worship a false God in the Sacrament, enclosed in a boxe. It is you that are the malignant Church: for in your Church there are twenty thyngs vsed agaynst the law of God.

The like obiection was articulate also against Anthony Burward, who also sayd,* that their Sacrament was made an Idoll.

After hym was George Brodbridge demanded what he sayd to those Articles. Who aunswered,* that hee would not be confessed of a priest, because he could not forgeue his owne sinnes: and further sayd, that in the Sacrament of the aultar there is not the real body of our sauour Christ, but bread geuen in the remembrance of him. Moreouer, as for your holy bread, your holy water, and your Masse, I do (quoth he) vtterly defie them.

And last of all did also Iames Tutty make & confirme their sayd former aunswers.*

And therefore they were all fiue condemned to be burned as heretikes, and so were they all in one fire at Canterbury aforesayd, about the 6. day of September thē next followyng.

The burnyng of fiue Martyrs at Caunterbury.

¶Thomas Hayward and Iohn Goreway, Martyrs.

Althoꝛgh the rage and vehemency of this terrible persecution in Queene Maries dayes did chiefly lyght in London, Essex, Northfolke, Suffolke, and Kent,* as hath bene partly already declared: yet notwithstanding, besides the same, we finde but fewe partes of this Realme from this fatall storme, but some good Martyrs or other there shed their bloud. And first to begin with the Dioces of Lichfield and Couentry,* there we finde these two to bee condemned and also burned about the middest of the sayd month of September at the towne of Lichfield: whose names were Thomas Hayward, and Iohn Goreway.

¶The persecution and story of M. Robert Glouer Gentleman, and of Iohn Glouer his brother, in the Dioces of Lichfield.

VNto this present tyme and moneth of September, pertaineth also the memorable Martyrdome, of M. Rob. Glouer Gentleman, in the Diocesse of Lichfield and Couentry. Of whose apprehensiō and troubles, because I cannot well entreate, but I must also intermixt some mention of his brother Iohn Glouer, for so much as this priuy Commission was chiefly sent downe for the said Iohn, and not for Rob. Glouer, (albeit it pleased almighty God, that Iohn escaped, and Rob. in his stead was apprehended) I thought therefore in one story to comprehēd them both, in describing some part of their vertuous institution and order of lyfe, and first to begin with Iohn the eldest brother. Who beyng a Gentleman, and heyre to his father, dwellyng in the towne of Mancetor, was endued with fayre possessiōs of worldly goods, but yet much more plentifully enriched with Gods heauenly grace and inward vertues. Which grace of God so working in him, he with hys two other brethren, Rob. and Wil. not onely receyued and embraced the happy light of Christes holy Gospell, but also most zealously professed, and no lesse diligētly in their liuyng & conuersation followed the same: much vnlike vnto our tablegospellers now adaies, Virtutem qui verba putant, vt lucum ligna, as Horace sayth.

And as touchyng this foresayde Iohn Glouer (who through his manifold afflictions, seemed to haue a deeper taste and contemplation of spirituall thyngs, ioyned with mortification from all worldly eares more then the other had) although sufficient relatiō be made before in our first edition to be seene, yet as concernyng his spirituall conflicts, and the Lordes gracious workyng in hym, because the consideration thereof,* is both worthy of memory, and the example may worke experience peraduenture to the comfort of the godly, it shal not be hurtful to rehearse some part of the same. So it pleased God to lay his heauy hand of inward afflictions and greuous passions vpon this mā that though he suffred not the paynes of the outward fire, as his brother and other Martyrs did: yet if we consider what inwardly in spirit and mynd this man felt & suffred,* and that of so long tyme, he may well be counted with his brother Rob. for a Martyr, beyng no lesse desirous w^t hym of the same Martyrdome: yea, & in comparison may seme to be chronicled for a double Martyr.

For as the sayd Rob. was spedily dispatched with the sharpe and extreme torments of the fire in a short tyme,* so this no lesse blessed Saint of God, what and how much more greuous pangs, what sorrowfull tormentes, what boyling heates of the fire of hell in hys spirit inwardly he felt and sustayned, no speech outwardly is able to expresse. Being yong,* I remember I was once or twice with him, who partly by hys talke I perceiued, and partly by myne owne eyes saw to be so worne and consumed by the space of fiue yeares, that neither almost any brookyng of meate, quietnes of sleepe, pleasure of lyfe, yea and almost no kynd of senses was left in hym. And doubtlesse I haue greatly wondered oftentymes at the meruailous workes and operation of Christ shewed vpon hym, who vnlesse he had relieued betymes his poore wretched seruant so far worne, with some opportune consolation, now and then betwixt, it could not possible bee, that he should haue susteined so vntollerable paynes and tormentes.* And yet the occasion thereof was not of so great moment and weight. But this we see common among holy & blessed men, how the more deuout and godly they are, hauing the feare of God before their eyes, the more suspition and mistrust they haue of thē selues: whereby it commeth to passe, that often they are so terrified & perplexed with small matters, as though they were huge mountains: where as contrary others there be, whom most hainous & very sore crimes in deed do nothyng touch or stirre at all.

The occasion of this was, that he beyng first called by the light of the holy spirit to the knowledge of the gospell, and hauyng receiued a wonderous sweet feeling of Christes heauenly kyngdom, his mynd after that fallyng a little to some cogitation of his former affayres belongyng to hys vocation, began by & by to misdoubt hymselfe vpō the occasion of these words written in the 7. to the Hebrues: For it cannot be that they which were once illumined, and haue tasted the heauenly gift, &c. Upon the consideration of which words he fully perswaded himselfe, that he had sinned verely against the holy Ghost: euen so much, that if hee had bene in the deepest pit of hell, he could almost haue dispaired no more of hys saluation. Here redily euery good man may iudge of hymselfe, what terrors, boylings, & conuulsions turmoiled in the meane tyme in his wofull brest: although it be hard for any mā to iudge the greuousnes therof, vnlesse he which hath experience of the lyke.

In comparing now the torments of all Martyrs with his paynes, I pray you what paynes, punishment,* and flames would not he willingly haue suffered, to haue had some refocillation and tyme of refreshyng? Who in suche intollerable griefes of mynd, although he neyther had nor could haue any ioy of hys meate, yet was he compelled to eate against hys appetite, to the end to differre the tyme of his damnation, so long as he might, thinking with hymself no lesse, but that he must needs be thrown into hell, the breth beyng once out of the body. Albeit Christ he thought did pity hys case, and was sory for hym: yet he could not (as he imagined) helpe, because of the veritie of the word, which sayd: It cannot be, &c.*

And this I rehearse of hym not so much to open hys wounds and sorrowes,* as for that by his example all wee with hym may glorifie the sonne of God, who suffereth none to be tempted aboue hys strength, but so tempereth and seasoneth the asperitie of euyls, that what seemeth to vs intollerable, not onely he doth alleuate the same, that we may beare it, but also turneth it to our further commoditie then we can thinke. Which well appered in this good seruaunt of God, in no man more. Who albeit (as we haue sayd) suffred many yeres so sharpe temptations & strong buffetyngs of Sathan: yet the Lord,* who graciously preserued hym all the whyle, not onely at last did rid him out of all discomfort, but also framed hym thereby to such mortification of lyfe, as the lyke lightly hath not bene seene, in such sort as he beyng lyke one placed in heauen alreedy and dead in this world, both in word and meditation led a life altogether celestially, abhorryng in hys mynd all prophane doyngs. Neither was his talke any thyng discrepant frō the fruits of his lyfe, throwyng out neuer any idle, vyle, or vayne language. The most part of hys landes he distributed to the vse of hys brethren, and committed the rest to the guidyng of hys seruauntes and officers, whereby the more quietly he myght geue hymselfe to hys godly study, as to a continuall Saboth rest. This was about the latter end of K. Henries raigne, and continued a great part of the tyme of K. Edward 6.

After this in the persecuting dayes of Queene Mary, as soone as the B. of Couentry heard y^e fame of this Iohn aforesayde beyng so ardent and zealous in the Gospell of Christ, eftsoones he wrote his letter to the Maior and Officers of Couentry to apprehend hym as soone as myght be. But it chaunced otherwyse by Gods holy prouidence, disposing all thyngs after hys owne secret pleasure, who seyng his old and trusty seruaunt so many yeares with so extreme and many torments broken and dried vp, would in no wyse heape too many sorrowes vpon one poore sillie wretch: neyther would commit hym to the flames of fire, who had bene already baked and scorched with the sharpe fires of inward affliction, and had sustained so many burnyng dartes and conflictes of Sathan so many yeares. God therefore of hys diuine prouidence thinkyng it too much that one man should be so much ouercharged wyth so many plagues and tormentes, did graciously prouide, that Robert his brother beyng both stronger of body, and also better furnished with helpes of learnyng to aunswer the aduersaries (beyng a Maister of Arte in Cambridge) should sustaine that conflict, and euen so it came to passe, as ye shall heare.

For as soone as the Maior of Cauentry had receyued the Byshops letters for the apprehendyng of M. Iohn Glouer, he sent forthwith a priuy watchword to the sayde Iohn to conuey away hymselfe. Who with hys brother William, was not so soone departed out of hys house:* but that yet in sight of the shiriffe and other, the serchers came and rushed in to take hym, accordyng to the bishops commandement.

But when the sayde Iohn could in no place be found, one of the Officers goyng into an vpper chamber, founde there Robert the other brother lying on hys bed: & sicke of a long disease, who was by hym incontinent brought before the Shiriffe. Which Shiriffe notwithstanding fauouryng Robert and hys cause,* would in deed fayne haue dismissed hym, and wrought what meanes he could, saying, that he was not the man for whome they were sent: Yet neuerthelesse beyng feared wiche the stoute wordes of the officer contendyng with hym to haue hym stayed tyll the bishops comyng, he was constrained to cary him away agaynst his will, and so layed hym fast while the Bishop came. And thus much by the way of preamble first concernyng the woorthy remembraunce of maister Iohn Glouer.

Now to enter the matter which principally we haue in Page 1710 hand, that is, to consider the story and Martyrdome of M. Robert Glouer, forsomuch as the whole narration of the same by his owne record and testimony in a writyng was sent vnto his wife concerning the maner of his ordering & handling, it shall therefore seeme best for the more credite of the matter, to exhibite the sayd his owne letter, the wordes and contents whereof here ensue, as followeth.

¶A Letter of M. Robert Glouer to his wyfe, conteinyng the whole discourse and description of hys troubles susteined in prison, and of his sundry conflicts betweene the Bishop and him about Religion.

¶To my entirely beloued wyfe Mary Glouer.

*The peace of conscience which passeth all vnderstāding, the sweete consolation, comfort, strength, and boldnes of the holy Ghost be continually encreased in your heart, thorough a feruent, earnest, and stedfast fayth in our most deare and onely Sauour Iesus Christ, Amen.

I thanke you hartily most louing wyfe, for your letters sent vnto me in my imprisonment. I red them with teares more then once or twise, with teares (I say) for ioy & gladnes, that God had wrought in you so mercifull a worke: first an vnfaigned repentance: secondly, an humble & hartie reconciliation: thirdly, a willing submission & obedience to the will of God in all thyngs. Which whē I red in your letters, & iudged them to proceed from the bottom of your hart: I could not but be thankfull to God, reioysing with teares for you & these his great mercies poured vpon you.

These your letters, and the hearing of your most godly proceedings and constant doyngs from tyme to tyme, haue much relieued and comforted me at all tymes, & shall be a goodly testimony with you at the great day, against many worldly and dainty dames, which set more by theyr owne pleasure and pelfe in this world, then by Gods glory, litle regarding (as it appeareth) the euerlasting health of their owne soules or others.* My prayer shalbe whilest I am in this world, that god which of his great mercy hath begun hys good worke in you, will finishe it to the glory of his name, and by the mighty power & inspiration of his holy spirit so strengthen, stablish, and confirme you in all hys wayes to the ende, that we may together shew forth hys prayses in the world to come, to our vnspeakable consolation euerlastingly. Amen.

So long as God shall lend you continuaunce in this miserable world, aboue all things geue your self continually to prayer,* lifting vp as S. Paule saith, cleane or pure hands without anger, wrath, or doubtyng, forgeuing (as he sayth also) if you haue any thyng agaynst any man, as Christ forgeueth vs. And that we may bee the better willyng to geue, it is good often to call to remembraunce the multitude & greatnesse of our owne sinnes, which Christ daily and houely pardoneth and forgeueth vs, and then we shall, as S. Peter affirmeth, be ready to couer and hide the offences of our brethren, bee they neuer so many. And because Gods word teacheth vs,* not only the true maner of praying, but also what we ought to do or not do in the whole discourse and practise of this lyfe, what pleaseth or displeaseth God, and that, as Christ sayth, The worde of God that hee hath spoken shall iudge in the last day:* let your prayer bee to this ende specially, that God of hys great mercy would open and reueale more and more dailye to your hart, the true sense, knowledge and vnderstandyng of his most holy word, and geue you grace in your liuyng, to expresse the fruits thereof.

And for as much as it is, as the holy Ghost calleth it, the word of affliction, that is, it is seldom without hatred, persecution,* peril, danger of losse of lyfe and goods, & what so euer semeth pleasaunt in this world, as experience teacheth you in this tyme: call vpon God continually for his assistaunce alwayes, as Christ teacheth, castyng your accompts what it is like to cost you, endeuoring your selfe, thorough the helpe of the holy Ghost, by continuaunce of prayer, to lay your foundation so sure, that no storme or tempest shalbe able to ouerthrow or cast it down: remembring alwayes (as Christ saith) Lothes wyfe,* that is, to beware of looking backe to that thyng that displeaseth God. And because nothing displeaseth God so much as Idolatry, that is, false worshipping of God, otherwise then hys word commandeth: looke not backe (I say) nor turne not your face to their Idolatrous and blasphemous massing, manifestly against the word,* practise & example of Christ: as it is most manifest to all that haue any taste of the true vnderstandyng of Gods word, that there remayneth nothing in the church of England at this present, profitable or edifieng to the church and congregation of the Lord, all things beyng done in an vnknownen tong, contrary to the expresse commandement of the holy Ghost.

They obiect that they be the church,* and therefore they must be beleued. My aunswer was, the Church of GOD knoweth and reknowledgeth no other head but Iesus Christ the sonne of God, whome ye haue refused & chosen the man of sinne, the sonne of perdition, enemy to Christ, the deuils deputy and lieuutenant, the Pope.

Christes church heareth, teacheth, and is ruled by hys word, as he sayth:*My sheepe heare my voyce If you abyde in me, and my word in you, you be my Disciples. Their Church repelleth Gods word, and forceth all men to followe their traditions.

Christes Churche dare not adde or diminish, alter or change his blessed Testament: but they bee not afrayd to take away all that Christ instituted, and go a whoryng (as the Scripture saith) with their owne inuentions,*Et laetari super operibus manuum suarum. i. To glory and reioyce in the workes of their owne hands.

The Church of Christ is, hath bene,* and shall be in all ages vnder the Crosse, persecuted, molested and afflicted, the world euer hating thē, because they be not o• y^e worlde. But these persecute, murther, slay and kil such as professe the true doctrine of Christ, be they in learning, liuing, conuersation and other vertues neuer so excellent.

Christ & his church reserued the triall of their doctrine to the worde of God,* and gaue the people leaue to iudge therof by the same worde, Search the Scriptures: But thys church taketh away the word from the people, & suffereth neither learned nor vnlearned, to examine or prooue their doctrine by the word of God.

The true church of God laboureth by all means to resist & withstand the lusts, desires, & motions of the world,* the flesh, and the deuil. These for the most part geue themselues to all voluptuousnes, & secretly commit such things which (as S. Paul sayth) it is shame to speake of.

By these and such like manifest probations they do declare themselues to be none of the church of Christ,* but rather of the sinagoge of Sathan. It shal be good for you oftentimes to conferre & compare their procedings and doings, with the practise of those whō the word of God doth reach to haue bene true members of the church of God, & it shal worke in you both knowledge, erudition, & boldnes to withstand with suffering, their doyngs. I likened them therefore to Nemrod, whom the scripture calleth a mighty hunter, or a stout champion, telling them that that which they could not haue by the worde, they would haue by the sword, & be the church whether men will or no, and called them with good conscience, as Christ called their forefathers, the children of the deuill: and as their father the deuill is a lyer and murtherer, so their kingdom and church (as they call it) standeth by lying and murtheryng.

Haue no fellowship with them therefore my dere wife, nor with their doctrine and traditions, lest you be partaker of their sinnes, for whom is reserued a heauy damnation, without speedy repentaunce. Beware of such as shal aduertise you somethyng to beare with the world as they do, for a season. There is no dallying with gods matters: It is a fearefull thing (as S. Paule sayth) to fall into the handes of God. Remember the prophet Helias,*Why halt you on both sides? Remember what Christ sayth: Hee that putteth hys handes to the plough, and looketh backe, is not worthy of mee.And seying God hath hetherto allowed you as a good souldior in the forward, play not the coward, neither drawe backe to the rereward. S. Iohn numbred among them y^t shall dwell in the fiery lake, such as be fearefull in Gods cause. Set before your eyes alwayes the examples of such as haue behaued themselues boldly in gods cause, as Steuen, Peter, Paul, Daniel, the three children, the widowes sonnes, and in your days, Anne Askew, Laurence Saunders, Iohn Bradford, with many other faythfull witnesses of Christ. Be not afraide in nothyng (sayth Saint Paule) of the aduersaries of Christes doctrine,*the which is to them the cause of perdition, but to you of euerlasting saluation. Christ commandeth the same, saying: Feare them not. Let vs not follow the example of him which asked tyme first to take leaue of hys friends. If we so doe, we shall finde fewe of them that wil encourage vs to go forward in our busines, please it God neuer so much. We read not that Iames and Iohn, Andrew and Symon, when they were called, put of the tyme till they had knowen their fathers and friends pleasure. But the Scripture sayth, They forsooke all,*and by and by followed Christ. Christ likened the kingdom of God to a precious perle, the which whosoever findeth, selleth al that he hath for to buy it. Yea, whosoever hath but a little taste or glimmering how precious a treasure the kingdom of heauen is, will gladly forgo both life & goods for the obtainyng of it. But the most part now a dayes bee lyke to Page 1711 Esopes cocke, which when he had found a precious stone, wished rather to haue found a barley corne. So ignorant be they how precious a iewell y^e word of God is, that they choose rather the thyngs of this world, which beyng compared to it,*be lesse in value then a barley corne.

If I would haue geuen place to worldly reasons, these might haue moued me: First, the forgoyng of you and my children: the consideration of the state of my children, being yet tender of age and yong, apt and inclinable to vertue & learnyng, and so hauyng the more neede of my assistance, beyng not altogether destitute of gifts to helpe thē withall: possessions about the common sort of men: because I was neuer called to be a preacher or minister: & (because of my sickenes) feare of death in imprisonment before I should come to my aunswer, and so my death to be vnprofitable.

But these and such lyke, I thanke my heauenly father (which of his infinite mercy inspired me with hys holye Ghost,for his sonnes sake my onely Sauour and redeemer) preuailed not in me: but when I had by the wonderfull permission of God, fallen into their handes, at the first sight of the Shiriffe, nature a little abashed: yet ere euer I came to the prison, by the workyng of God & thorough his goodnes feare departed. I sayd to the Shiriffe at his comming vnto me: What matter haue you maister Sheriffe to charge me withall? He aunswere: you shall knowe when you come before the maisters: and so taking me with him, I looked to haue bene broughte before the maisters, and to haue heard what they could haue burdened me withall: but contrary to my expectation, I was committed forthwith to the Iaile, not being called to my aunswere, little iustice being shewed therein. But the lesse iustice a man finedeth at their hands, the more consolation in conscience shall he finde from God: for whosoever is of the world, the world will loue hym.

After I came into prisone, & had reposed my selfe there a while,* I wept for ioy and gladnes my belly full, musing muche of the great mercies of God, and (as it were) saying to my selfe after this sort: O Lorde who am I, on whome thou shouldest bestowe thus thy great mercye, to be numbred among the Saintes that suffer for thy Gospels sake? And so beholding and considering on the one side my imperfection,* vnablenesse, sinnefull misery, and vnwoorthinesse, and on the other side the greatnesse of Gods mercye, to be called to so high promotion, I was, as it were amazed and ouercome for a while with ioy and gladnesse, concluding thus with my selfe in my heart: O Lord thou shewest power in weakenesse, wisdom in foolishnesse, mercy in sinfulness: who shall let thee to choose where & whom thou wilt. As I haue zealously loued the confession of thy woord, so euer thought I my selfe to be most vnworthy to be partaker of the affliction for the same.

*Not long after, came vnto me M.W. Brasbrige, M.C. Phinees, M.N. Hopkins, traueling with me to be dismissed vpon bondes. To whome my answere was (to my remembrance) after this sorte: For as much as the Maisters haue imprisoned me, hauing nothing to burden mee with all, if I should enter into bondes, I should in so doing accuse my selfe: and seeing they haue no matter to laye to my charge, they may as well let me passe w^tout bondes, as wyth bondes.

Secondarily, if I shall enter bondes, couenaunt, and promise to appeare, I shall do nothing but excuse, colour, and cloke their wickednesse, and endanger my selfe neuerthelesse,* being bound by my promise to appeare. They alleaged many worldly perswasions vnto me to auoide the present perill, & also how to auoid the forfeiture, if I brake promise. I sayde vnto them I had cast my penywoorth by Gods help. They vndertooke also to make the bond easie.

And when they were somewhat importune, I sayd to maister Hopkins, that libertie of conscience was a precious thing, and toke as it were a pause, lifting vp my heart to God earnestly for hys aide and helpe, that I might doe the thing that might please him.* And so, when they had let their sute fal, my hart, me thought, was wonderfully comforted. Maister Dudly commoned with me in like maner: whom I answered in effect as I did before.

Afterwarde debatin[•] the matter wyth my selfe, these considerations came to my head: I haue from time to time wyth good conscience (God I take to recorde) mooued all such as I had conference withal, to be no daliers in Gods matters, but to shew themselues after so great a light and knowledge, hearty, earnest, constante, and stable in so manifest a truthe, and not to geue place one iuate contrarye to the same. Nowe thought I, if I shall withdrawe my selfe, and make any shifts to pull my owne necke out of the collar,* I shall geue greatesse offence to my weake brethren in Christe, and aduantage to the enemies to sclaunder Gods word. It wil be sayd, he hath ben a great boldner of others to be earnest and feruent, to feare no worldly pearils or daungers, but he him selfe will geue no such example.

Wherefore I thought it my bouēden duety both to God and man, being (as it were) by the great goodnes of God,* maruelously called and appoynted hereunto, to set aside all feare, pearils, and daungers, al worldly respects and considerations, and like as I had heeretofore, according to the measure of my small gift, within the compasse of my vacation and calling, from the bottome of my heart vnfaignedly mooued, exhorted, and perswaded all that professe Gods woorde, manfully to persist in the defence of the same, not wyth sworde and violence, but wyth suffering and losse of life, rather then to defile themselues againe with the whorish abhomination of the Romish Antichrist: so the houre being come, with my fact and example to ratifie, confirme, and protest the same to the hearts of all true beleeuers: and to thys end (by the mighty assistance of Gods holy spirit:*) I resolved my selfe wyth muche peace of conscience, willingly to sustaine what soeuer the Romish antichrist shuld doe against mee, and the rather because I vnderstoode the Bishops comming to be at hand, and considered that pore mens consciences shoulde be then sharply assaulted. So remained I prisoner in Couentrie by the space of 10. or 11. dayes, being neuer called to my answere of the Maisters, contrary to the lawes of the Realme, they hauing neyther statute, lawe, proclamation, letter, warrant, nor commandement for my apprehension. They woulde haue laide all the matter vpon the Sumner. Who being examined, denied it before their faces (as one of my frendes tolde me) saying that he had no commandement concerning me, but for my elder brother. God laye not their extreeme doings against me, to their charge at the great day.

The seconde day after the bishoppes comming to Couentrie, M. Warren came to the Yeldhall, and willed the chiefe Iayler to carye me to the Bishop. I laide to maister Warrens charge the cruell seeking of my death: and when he would haue excused himselfe, I tolde him he coulde not wipe hys handes so: hee was as guiltie of my bloude before God, as though he had murdered me with his owne handes.

And so he parted frō me, saying, I needed not to feare if I would be of his beliefe, God open his eyes if it be hys will, and geue him grace to beleue this, which he and all of his inclination, shall finde (I feare) to true for their parts: that is, that all they whiche cruelly, maliciously, and spitefully persecute, molest and afflicte the members of Christe for their cōscience sake, and for the true testimonie of Christes worde, and cause them moste vniustly to be slayne and murdered: without spedy repentance, shall dwel with the deuil and his angels in the fiery lake euerlastingly, where they shall wish and desire, crie and call, but in vayne (as their right companion Epulo did) to be refreshed of them,* whome in this world they contemned, despised, disdained, as slaues, misers, and wretches.

When I came before y^e bishop in one Dentons house, he began wyth this protestation, that he was my Byshop for lacke of a better, and willed me to submit my selfe.

I sayd to him, I am not come to accuse my selfe: what haue you to lay to my charge?*

He asked me whether I was learned? I aunswared, smally learned.

Maister Chauncellor standing by, sayde I was a maister of Arte.

Then my Lord laid to my charge, my not comming to the Church.

Heere I might haue dalied wyth him, and put hym to his proofes, for asmuch as I had not bene for a long season in his Diocesse, neither was any of the Citizens able to proue any suche matters against me. Notwythstanding I answered him through Gods mercifull helpe, that I neyther had nor woulde come at their church as long as theyr masse was vsed there, to saue (if I had them) fiue hundreth liues. I willed him to shew me one iote or title in y^e scripture for the prooffe and defence of the Masse.

He aunswered, he came to teache and not to be taught.

I was content (I tolde him) to learne of him, so farre as he was able to teach me by the word of God.

Bishop.

Who shall iudge the worde?

Glouer.

Christ was content that the people shoulde iudge hys doctrine by searching the Scriptures, and so was Paule: me thinketh ye should claime no further priuiledge or preeminence then they had.

Thus spake Robert Glouer offering him further,* that he was content the primitiue Church next to the Apostles time, should iudge betwixt the bishop and him. But he refused also to be iudged by that. Then he sayde hee was hys Bishop, and therefore he must beleeue him.

Glouer.

If you say blacke is white my L. (quoth Glouer) must I also say as you say, and beleeue the same because you say it is so? M. Chancellor here noted me to be arrogant, because I would not geue place to my Bishop.

Glouer.

If you will be beleued because you be a Bish. why find you fault with the people that beleeued M. Latimer, M. Ridley, M. Hooper, and the residue of them that were bishops?

Bish.

Because they were heretikes.

Glouer.

*And may not you erre (quoth I) as well as they? I looked for learning at my Lords hand to perswade me, and he oppressed me onely with hys authoritie. He said I dissented from the church, and asked me where my church was before king Edwards tyme.

I desired hym to shew me where their church was in Helias tyme,* and what outward shew it had in Christes tyme.

Bish.

Helias complaint was onely of the x. tribes that fell from Dauids house, whom he called heretikes.

Glo.

You be not able to shew any Prophets that the other two tribes had at the same tyme.

My L. making no answer to that, M. Rogers one of the maisters of the citie commeth in the meane season, taking vpon hym as though he would aunswer to the text. But my L. forthwith commanded me to be committed to some Tower if they had any besides the common Gaole, saying he would at the end of his visitation of his dioces, weede out such wolues. M. Rogers willed him to contēt himselfe for that night, till they had taken further order for me. Euen where it pleaseth you, said I to my Lord, I am content: and so I was returned at that tyme to the common Gaole agayne from whence I came.

On the Friday mornynge beyng the next day after, I had warnynge by one of the prisoners to prepare my selfe to ride with my fellow prisoners the same day to Lichfield there to be bestowed at the Bish. pleasure.* Which tidynge at the first something discouraged me, searyng lest I shold by the meanes of my great sicknesse, through extreme hādlyng (which I looked for) haue dyed in the prison before I should come to my aunswer. But I rebuked immediately with Gods word this infidelitie in my selfe, and by y^e same corrected myne owne mistrust and fantasie after this maner. What make I of God? Is not hys power as great in Lichfield as in Couentry? Doth not his promise extend as well to Lichfield,* as to Couentry? Was hee not wyth Abacuck, Daniell, Misaach, and Ieremy, in theyr most dangerous imprisonments? He knoweth what thyngs we haue neede of. He hath numbred all the haire of our head. The Sparowe falleth not on the ground, without our heauenly fathers will: much more will he care for vs if we be not faythlesse, whom he hath made worthy to bee witnesses of his truth. So long as we put our trust in him we shall neuer be destitute of his helpe, neither in prison, neither in sickenes nor in helth, neither in life nor in death, neither before kyngs nor before Bishops: not the Deuill himselfe,* much lesse one of hys ministers shall bee able to preuaile agaynst vs. With such like meditations I waxed cherefull of good consolation and comfort: so that hearing one say that they could not provide horses enough for vs, I sayd, let them cary vs in a dung cart for lacke of horses, if they list: I am well content for my part.

Notwithstanding at the request of my friends, I wrote to M. Maior and his brethren, briefly requiring thē that I myght make aunswer here to such thyngs as should be layed to my charge: The contentes of which letter were these.

A Letter of M. Robert Glouer, to the Maior of Couentry and his brethren.

I Beseech you to vnderstand, that it is not vnknownen as well to the Keeper of the Gaole,* as to the inhabitants about me where I dwell, that I am a man subiect to very great sicknesse, and haue bene by the space of seuen yeares and more, so that it is not like that I shall be remooued without perill and danger of lyfe. And because I was here committed to Warde by your appoyntment, I would gladly here aunswer to such thyngs as should bee layed to my charge. If I may obtayne this of you, I haue cause thankfully to reknowlege your indifferencie: if otherwyse, I praye God it be not layd to your charge at the great day, where euery man shall haue iust iudgement without respect of person.

Your prisoner in the Lord, alwayes myndefull of you in my poore prayer. Rob. Glouer.

But I receiued no answer of my letters to nor fro, I coniectured, that when the B. and the Chancellor had seen thē, it mooued thē the rather to haue me away, beyng more desirous (as I suppose) to haue had me dispatched priuily in prison, then to come openly to my answer. The maner of entreating and vsing me at my first commyng to prison, did partly declare the same.

Certayne Sergeaunts and Constables of Couentry,* beyng appointed to haue the conueying of vs to Lichfield to be deliuered there to one Iephcot the Chancellors man sent from Couētry with vs for the same purpose, we were commaunded to horsebacke about xj. or xij. of the clocke on Friday, beyng market day, that we might be the more gased and wondered at: and to kindle the peoples heartes more agaynst vs, they did proclayme a letter cōcernyng a proclamation made for calling in & disanullyng of all such bookes as truely expound and interpret the Scriptures. We came to Lichfield about 4. of the clocke at night, & had leaue to repose our selues for our Supper tyme. We inned at the signe of the Swanne, where wee were entertayned friendly and gently.

After supper Iephcot repaired to vs,* whome we intreated that vpon sureties we myght rest our selues that nyght, beyng vnprouided of any thyng to help our selues withall in the prison at that present. He was content at the first (as he semed) but afterwards, whether it was by perswasion, or rather (as it seemed to me) he did but of pollicie put off the tyme till he had gathered a multitude to stare and wonder vpō vs, and also that we should prouide nothyng to ease our selues withall: he reuoked his promise,* and so by consent we were had to the prison, the multitude wonderyng at vs. I willed Iephcot before, to execute his office with mercy, tellyng him that they should haue iudge|mēt without mercy, that shewed no mercy. And this mercy I found at his hand.

He put me into a prison the same night, where I continued vntill I was condemned, a place next to the dungeon, narrow of rowmes, strong of building, and very cold with small light, and there allowed he me a būdle of straw in stead of my bed, w^tout chaire, forme, or any other thyng els to ease my self withal. God of his mercy gaue me great patience through praier that night, so that if it had ben his pleasure, I could haue bene contented to haue ended my lyfe. But Iephcot & one Persey the bishops man,* which afterwarde was my continuall keeper for the most part, came to me in the morning, to whō I said, this is a great extremitie, God send vs patience, and no more.

Then they were content that I should haue a bed of myne owne procurement. But I was allowed no helpe, neither night nor day, nor company of any man, notwithstanding my great sicknesse, nor yet paper, pen, nor inke, or bookes, sauynge my new Testament in Latine, & a praier booke which I priuily stole in.

Within two days after,* M. Chancellor and one Temsey a Prebendary there, came to me into my prison. Maister Chauncellour exhorted me to conforme my self to my Lord and to the Church. He wished to my soule no more hurt then to hys owne: belyke because I had layd to hys charge at Couentry, the seeking of my bloud vniustly and wrongfully.

Now thus the second tyme I answered M. Chancellor to his exhortatiō, that I refused not to be ruled by that church that was content to bee ordered and gouerned by the word of God.

Chaun.

He asked me how I knew the worde of God, but by the Church?

Glouer.

* The church sheweth which is the word of God, therefore the Church is aboue the word of God. This is no good reason in learnyng, sayd I to M. Chauncellour. For it is lyke vnto this: Iohn shewed the people who was Christ: Ergo, Iohn was aboue Christ. Or els, I haue a man that knoweth not the kyng, and I tell hym who is the kyng: am I therfore aboue the kyng?

M. Chauncellour sayd, he came not to reason with me and so departed. So remayned I without any further cōference of any man by the space of viij. dayes, and till the Bishops commyng: In the which tyme I gaue my selfe continually to prayer, and meditation of the merciful promises of God, made vnto all without exception of person, that call vpon the name of his deare sonne Iesus Christ. I found in my selfe daily amendment of health of body, increase of peace in conscience,* and many consolations from God by the helpe of his holy spirit, and sometymes, as it were a taste and glimeryng of the lyfe to come: all for his onely sonne Iesus Christes sake: to hym be all praise for euer and euer.

The enemy ceased not many tymes, sundry wayes to assault me, oftentimes obiectyng to my conscience myne owne vnworthines, through the greatnesse of the benefite to be counted among the number of them that should suffer Page 1713 for Christ, for his Gospels sake. Against him I replied with the worde of God in this sorte. What were all those whom GOD had chosen from the beginnyng, to be his witnesses, and cary his name before the world? were they not men as Paule and Barnabas sayd,* Similiter obnoxij peccato, as well subiect to wickednes, sinne, imperfectiōs, as other men be? Euen such were Noe, Abraham, Daid and all the rest. Quis prior dedit illi, as Paul saith, Who gaue first vnto him? And also speakyng to euery man: What hast thou that thou receiuedst not? Likewise Iohn: All haue receiued of his fulnesse: they were no bringers of any goodnes to God, but altogether receyuers. They choose not GOD first, but he choose them. They loued not God first, but hee loued them first. Yea, hee both loued and chose them when they were his enemies, full of sinne and corruption, and voyd of all goodnes. Est Dominus omnium, diues in omnes & super omnes inuocantes eum. He is and wil be still the same God, as rich in mercy, as mighty, as able, as ready, as willyng to forgeue sinnes without respect of person,* to the worlds end, of all them that call vpon hym. Propè est Dominus omnibus inuocantibus eum: God is nere, he is at hand, he is with all, with all (I say) and refuseth none,* excepteth none that faithfully in true repentance call vpon hym, in what houre, what place, or what tyme so euer it bee. It is no arrogancy nor presumption in any man, to burthen God (as it were) with hys promise, and of duetie to clayme and challenge hys ayde, helpe, and assistaunce in all our perils, daungers, and distresse, callyng vpon hym, not in the confidence of our owne godlynesse, but in the trust of his promises made in Christ, in whom, and by whome, and for whose sake, whosoeuer boldly approacheth to the mercy seate of the Father, is sure to receiue whatsoeuer is expedient or necessary eyther for bodye or soule,* in more ample wyse and large manner, then hee can well wish, or dare desire. His worde can not lye: Call vpon me in the day of trouble, and I will heare thee, & thou shalt prayse me.*

I aunswered the enemy also on this maner: I am a sinner, and therefore not woorthy to bee a witnesse of this truth. What then? Must I deny his worde because I am not woorthy to professe it? What bring I to passe in so doyng, but adde sinne to sinne? What is greater sinne then to deny the truth of Christes Gospell? as Christ himself beareth witnesse: Hee that is ashamed of me or of my wordes, of hym I will be also ashamed before my father and all his aungels. I might also by like reason forbear to do any of gods cōmandements.

When I am prouoked to pray, the enemy may say vnto me, I am not worthy to pray, therfore I shall not pray: & so in lyke maner of all the commandements: I shall not forbear swearing, stealing, murthering, because I am not worthy to do any commaundement of God. These be the delusions of the Deuill, and Sathans suggestions, which must be ouercome by continuance of prayer, and with the word of God applied accordyng to the measure of euery mans gift,* agaynst all assaults of the Deuill.

At the bishops first comming to Lichfield after myne imprisonment, I was called into a by chamber next to my prison, to my Lord. Before whom when I came and saw none but his officers, chaplains & seruants, except it were an old priest, I was partly amazed and lifted vp my heart to God for his mercifull helpe and assistance.

My Lord asked me how I liked my imprisonment. I gaue hym no aunswer touchyng that question. He proceded to perswade me to be a member of hys Church, which had continued so many yeares. As for our church (as hee called it) it was not knowen, he sayd, but lately in kyng Edwards tyme.

I professe my selfe to be a member of that * church (said I) that is builded vpon the foundation of the Apostles & Prophets, Iesus Christ beyng the head corner stone: and so alledged the place of S. Paule to the Ephes. And this Church hath bene from the beginnyng (said I) though it beare no glorious shew before the world, beyng euer, for the most part vnder the Crosse and affliction, contemned, despised, and persecuted. My Lord on the other side, contended that they were the Church.

Glouer.

So cryed all the Clergy agaynst the Prophets of Ierusalem, saying: Templum Domini, templum Domini, The Church, the Church, &c.

Bish.

And always when I was about to speake any thing my Lord cried, hold thy peace: I commaund thee by the vertue of obedience, to hold thy peace, callyng me a proud arrogant heretike.

Glouer.

I willed my Lord to burthen me with some specialties, & then to conuince me with some Scriptures and good learnyng.

Then my L. began to mooue certaine questions. I refused to aunswer him in corners, requiryng that I myght make my answer openly. He sayd I should aunswer hym there. I stood with hym vpon that poynt vntill he said I should to prison agayne, and there haue neither meate nor drinke till I had answered hym.

Then I lifted vp my hart to God, that I might stand and agree with the doctrine of his most holy word.

Bish.

The first question was this: * how many sacraments Christ instituted to be vsed in the church?

Glo.

The Sacrament of Baptisme sayd I, and the Sacrament that he instituted at his last Supper.

Bish.

No more sayd he?

Glo.

To all those that declare a true and vnfayned repentaunce, a sure hope, trust, and confidence in the death of Christ, to such ministers (I grant) that they haue authoritie to pronounce by the power of Gods word, the remission of sinnes. *

Here interruptyng me, he would needes beare me in hand that I called this a sacrament. I would not greatly contend with hym in that poynt, because that matter was of no great waight or importāce: although he in so doing, did me wrong, for I called it not a Sacrament.

Hee asked me further whether I allowed theyr confession.

I sayd no.

Bish.

Then he would know my mynd what I thought of the presence of Christes body in the Sacrament.*

Glouer.

I aunswered that their Masse was neither sacrifice nor Sacrament, because (sayd I) you haue takē away the true institution, which when you restore agayne, I will tell you my iudgement concernyng Christes body in the Sacrament.

And thus much did this worthy Martyr of God leaue behynd hym by his owne hand in writyng concerning the maner of hys vsing and entreatyng in pryson, and also of hys conflictes had with the Bishop and hys Chauncellor. Moe examinations he had (no doubt) with the Byshop in the publike Consistory, when he was brought forth to be condemned, which also he would haue left vnto vs, if either length of lyfe, or laysure of tyme, or haste of execution had permitted hym to finish that he intended: but by reason of the writ of his burnyng beyng come down from London, lacke of tyme neither did serue hym so to do, neither yet could I get the Records of hys last examinations wheresoeuer they are become.

Onely this which I could learne by relation of one Austen Bernher a Minister, and a familiar friend of hys, concernyng the goyng to his death, I can report, that the sayd blessed seruant of the Lord, M. Rob. Glouer, after he was condemned by the Bishop, and was now at a poynt to be deliuered out of this world, it so happened, that two or three dayes before, his hart beyng lumpish and desolate of all spirituall consolation, felt in hymselfe no aptnes nor willingnes, but rather a heauines and dulnesse of spirite,* full of much discomfort to beare that bitter crosse of Martyrdome ready now to be layd vpon hym.

Wherupon he fearing in himself, lest the Lord had vtterly withdrawne his woonted fauor from him, made hys mone to this Austen his frend aboue remembred, signifieng vnto hym, how earnestly he had prayed day and night vnto the Lord, and yet could receiue no motion nor sense of any comfort from hym.

Unto whom the sayd Austen answering agayne, willed and desired him patiently to waite the Lords pleasure and how so euer his present feling was, yet seing his cause was iust and true, he exhorted hym constantly to sticke to the same, & to play the man,* nothyng misdoubting but the Lord in his good time would visit him, and satisfie his desire with plenty of consolation, whereof (he sayd) he was right certayne and sure, & therfore desired hym when so euer any such feeling of Gods heauenly mercies should begin to touch his hart, that then he would shew some signification thereof, wherby he might witnesse with hym the same, and so departed from hym.

The next day when the tyme came of his martyrdome, as hee was goyng to the place, and was now come to the sight of the stake, although all the night before praying for strength and courage he could feele none, sodainly he was so mightily replenished with Gods holy comfort and heauenly ioyes, y^t he cryed out clapping his hands to Austen, & saying in these words, Austen, he is come, he is come, * &c. & that with such ioy and alacritie, as one seeming rather to be risen from some deadly daunger, to libertie of life, then as one passing out of the world by any paines of death. Such was the change of the meruailous workyng of the Lordes hand vpon that good man.

¶ Cornelius Bongey fellow Martyr with Mayster Robert Glouer.

IN the same fire with him was burned also Cornelius Bongey a Capper of Couentry, * and condemned by the sayd Radulph Byshoppe of Couentry and Liechfield. As concerning the Articles which were to him objected, the effect therof was this.

*Firste it was articulate agaynste him, that these three yeres last, in the City of Couentry and Liechfield, & other places about, he did hold, mainteyne, argue and teach, that the Prieste hath no power here to absolue any sinner from his sinnes.

Secondly, that by Baptisme sinnes be not washed away, because he sayd that the washing of the flesh purgeth the flesh outwardly▪ and not the soule.

Thirdly, that there be in the Church onely two sacramentes, that is, Baptisme, and the Lordes Supper.

Fourthly, that in the sacrament of theyr popish aulter, was not the reall body & bloud of Christ, but the substance of bread & wine there remayning stil, because S. Paul calleth it bread and wine. &c.

Fiftly, that he within the compasse of the sayd yeares & time, did hold, maintayne and defend, that the Pope is not the head of the visible church here in earth. &c.

Sixtly, that he was of the dioces and iurisdiction of the Bishop of Couentry and Liechfield. &c.

Seuēthly, that the premises are true, manifest and notorious, and that vpō the same there hath bene & is a publick voice and fame, as well in the places aboue rehearsed, as in other quarters also about. &c.

¶ His aunsweres.

*Unto the which articles he aunswering agayne, to the first he graunted, and to euery part therof, meaning after y^e Popish maner of absolution.

The second he graunted first, after reuoked the same.

To the thyrd also he graunted, adding withall, that in scripture there be no more conteined.

To the fourth, touching the sacrament, he graunted & to euery part therof.

To the fift concerning the Pope likewise.

Also to the sixt he graūted and likewise to the seuenth.

Upon these articles and his answeres to the same, the sayd Radulph the Bishop read the sentence, and so cōmitted him also after the condemnation of Mayster Roberte Glouer, to the seculer power.

Thus this foresayd Cornelius falsely condēned by the Bishop before mentioned, suffered at the same stake wyth the Christian Martyr Mayster Robert Glouer at Couentry, about the xx. day of September.

¶The burning of Mayster Robert Glouer, and Cornelius Bongey at Couentry.

¶Here foloweth the story of Iohn Glouer and William Glouer, how they were excommunicate and cast out after theyr death, and buried in the fieldes.

NOwe that wee haue discoursed the storye of Mayster Robert Glouer,* something also woulde bee touched of his other two brethrē Iohn and William Glouer. Who albeit they were not called to finishe theyr course by lyke kinde of Martyrdome in the fire, as the other did: yet because for theyr constaunt profession of Gods Gospell vnto the latter ende, they were exempted after theyr death, & cast out of the same Church, as the other was, I thought them not vnworthy therefore in the story to be ioyned together, which in one cause and the same profession were not sūdered one from the other.

And first concerning Mayster Iohn Glouer the eldest brother, what inward stormes and agonies he sustained by the ghostly enemy, partly ye heard before described: nowe what his bodily enemies wrought against him, remaineth to be declared. Whose rage and malice, although god so restrained, that they coulde litle preuayle agaynst him so long as his life endured, yet after his decease, hauing power vpon him, what they did ye shall now vnderstand.

After the Martyrdome of mayster Robert Glouer, although Iohn Glouer seing his brother to be apprehended for him, had small ioy of his life for the great sorow of his hart, wherewith he was sore oppressed, and would gladly haue put himselfe in his Brothers stead, if frendes had not otherwise perswaded with him, shewing that in so doynge he might intangle himselfe, but should doe his brother no good. He thus in great care and vexation endured: yet notwithstanding, rubbing out as well as he could, til at lēgth about y^e latter end of queene Mary there was a new search made for the sayd Iohn Glouer.*

Whereupon the Sheriffes with theyr vnder Officers and seruauntes being sent to seek him, came into his house where he and his wife were. It chaūced as he was in his chamber by himselfe, the Officers brusting into the house, and searching other roomes, came to the Chamber doore where this Iohn Glouer was. Who being within, and holding the latch softly with his hand, perceiued and heard the Officers buskeling about the doore, amongst whome one of the sayd officers hauing the string in his hand, was ready to draw and plucke at the same.

In the meane time an other comming by (whose voice he heard and knew) bad them come away,* saying they had bene there before. Whereupon they departing thence, wēt to search other corners of the house, where they found Agnes Glouer his wife, who being had to Liechfilde, & there examined before the bishop, at length after much ado was constrayned to geue place to their tyranny, Ioh Glouer in the meane time, partly for care of his wife, partly through cold taken in the woodes where he did lye, tooke an Agew, whereupon not long after he left this life, which the cruell Papistes so long had sought for.

Thus by the mighty protectiō of y^e almighty Lord, how Iohn Glouer was deliuered and defended frō the handes of the persecuting enemies during all the time of hys life, ye haue hearde, Nowe what befell after his death both to him & to William his brother it is not vnworthy to be remēbred. Who after that he was dead, & buried in y^e churchyard without Priest or Clerke, D. Dracot then Chauncellour,* sixe weekes after sent for the parson of the Towne & demaunded howe it chaunced that hee was there buryed. The parson aunswered that he was then sicke, and knewe not of it. Then the Chauncellour commaunded the parson to go home and to cause the body of the said Iohn Glouer to be taken vp, & to be cast ouer the wall into the hie way: The Parson agayne answered that he had bene 6. weekes in the earth & so smelled that none was able to abide the sa'uor of him. Well quoth D. Dracot, then take this byll and pronounce him in the pulpit a damned soule, and a twelue moneth after take vp his bones (for then the fleshe will be consumed) and cast thē ouer the wall,* that cartes and horses may tread vpon them, and then will I come & hallow againe that place in the churchyard where he was buried. Recorded by the Parson of the towne who tolde the same to Hugh Burrowes dwelling at Fynden in Darbyshyre, and to M. Rob. Glouers wife, by whose credible information we receiued the same.

Not much vnlike vsage was practised also by these catholicke children of the mother Church vpon the body of Will. the third brother. Whō, after it had pleased almighty god about y^e same seasō to cal out of this vale of misery,* the good disposed people of the Towne of Weme in Shropshyre, where he dyed, brought the bodye vnto the Parishe Church, entending there to haue it buried. But one Bernerd, Page 1715 being then Curate of the sayd Church (and is yet as I heare say to this day) to stoppe the buriall therof, rode to the bishop named Raufe Bayne, to certify him of the matter, and to haue his aduise therein. In the meane time, the body lying there a whole daye,* in the night time one Rich. Morice a Taylour woulde haue enterred him. But then came Iohn Thorlyne of Weme with other moe, & woulde not suffer the body to be buried: expressing to vs y^e contrary examples of good Toby, for as he was religious in buryng the dead so this man putteth religiō in not burying the dead: so that after he had layne there two dayes & one night, commeth the foresayd Bernerd the Curate with the Bishops letter, the contentes of which letter beyng copied out word for word here foloweth.

A copy of the Byshops Letter written to the Parish of Weme.

*VNderstanding that one Glouer an heretick is dead in the parish of Weme, whiche Glouer hath for all the time of my being in this country bene knowne for a rebellion agaynst our holy fath and Religion, a Contemner of the holy Sacramentes and ceremonies vsed in holy Church, and hath separate himselfe frō the holy Communion of all good Christian men, nor neuer required to be reconciled to our mother holy Church, nor in hys last dayes did not call for his ghostly father, but dyed without all rites belonging to a Christian man: I thought it good not only to commaund the Curate of Weme that he shoulde not be buried in Christian mans buriall, but also will and commaunde all the parish of Weme that no manne procure, helpe, nor speake to haue him buried in holy ground: but I do charge and commaund the Church Wardens of Weme in speciall, and all the parishe of the same that they assist the sayd Curate in defending and letting, and procuring that he bee not buried neither in the Church nor within the wanybles of the Churchyarde, and likewise I charge those that brought the body to the place, to cary it away agayne, and that at theyr charge: as they will aunswere at theyr perill. At Ecclesch this 6. of September. an. 1558.

By your Ordinary Radulph Couentry and Liechfield.

*By y^e vertue of this foresaid letter so it fel out, that they which brought the corps thither, were fayne at their owne charges to carye it backe agayne. But for so muche as the body was corrupted, and smelt so strongly that vnneth any man might come nere it, they were forced to draw it w^t horses vnto a brome field, and there was he buried.

Witnesses of the godly end of the sayde William Glouer dying in the true fayth and confession of Christe, Mayster Nowell Deane of Liechfielde, George Wilestone and hys wife, Tho Cōstantine, Roger Wydouse, Iohn Prynne, George Torpelley. &c.

The like example of charitable affection in these catholicke churchmen is also to be sene and noted in the burying of one mayster Edward Bourton Esquire,* who in y^e same Diocesse of Chester departing out of this worlde the verye day before Queene Elizabeth was crowned, required of his frendes, as they would aunswere for it, that his bodye should be buried in his Parishe Church (which was S. Chaddes in Shrousbury) so that no Massemonger should be present therat. Which thing being declared to the Curat of that Parish named sir Iohn Marshal, & the body being withall brought to the buriall, vpon the same day whē the Queene was crowned, the Curate being therewith offended, sayd playnely that he should not be buried in y^e church there. Whereunto one of his frendes, named George Torpelley answering againe said, that God would iudge him in the last day. &c. Then the priest, Iudge God (saith he) or Deuill, the body shall not come there. And so they buried him in his owne garden. Where he is no doubt as neare y^e kingdome of heauen, as if he had bene buried the middest of the Church.

*Moreouer, in the sayd County of Salop, I finde that one Olyuer Richardyne of the Parish of Whitchurch was burned in Hartford Weste, Syr Iohn Ygone being Sheriffe the same time. Whiche seemeth to be about the latter yeare of king Henry viij. Whose name because it was not mentioned before, I thought here to geue some litle touch of him, hauing now in hande to speake of the persecution within the Diocesse of Couentry and Liechfield.

¶The Martyrdome of William Wolsey, and Robert Pygot Paynter.

After the sufferyng of Mayster Robert Glouer & Cornelius Bongey at Couentrye, followeth next the condemnation of other two blessed Martyrs which were iudged and condemned at Eley by Iohn Fuller the Bishops Chauncellour of Eley, Doctor Shax•on his Sus•ragane, Robert Steward Deane of Eley, Iohn Christopherson Deane of Norwich. &c. an. 1555. October 9. the names of which martyrs were William Wolsey and Robert Pygot, dwelling both in the Towne of Wisbich, whiche William Wolsey being a constable, dwelling and inhabiting in the Towne of Well, was there brought to death by the meanes and procurement of one Richard Euerard Gentlemā a Iustice appoynted for those dayes, who extremely handled the same William Wolsey, and bounde him to the good abearing, causing him to put in sureties vpon his good behauior vntill the next general Sessions holden within the Ile of Eley: and so the sayd Wolsey being dispatched of his office, and brought in trouble, remoued his house & dwelling place, comming to dwell in the Towne of Wisbiche. Then being called agayne at the nexte Sessions, hee was still constrayned to put in new sureties, which at the lēgth he refused to do, & so was commaunded to the Iayle,* at the Syse holden at Eley in lent.

In the Easter weeke folowing, there repayred to conferre with him, D. Fuller the Chauncellor, with Christopherson, and one D. Young: who layde earnestlye to hys charge that he was out of the catholicke fayth, willing him to meddle no further with the scriptures, thē it did become such a lay man as he was, to do. The said William Wolsey stāding still a great while, suffering them to say their pleasures, at the last answered in this wise: Good M. Doctor, what did our Sauour Christ meane, when he spake these wordes written in the 23. Chapter of S. Mathewes Gospell: Wo be vnto you Scribes and Phariseis, ye hipocrites for ye shut vp the kingdome of heauen before men: ye your selues goe not in, neither suffer ye them that come to enter in.

Yea sayeth Doctour Fuller, you must vnderstand, that Christ spake to the Scribes and Phariseys.

Nay Mayster Doctour (sayth Wolsey) Christ spake euē to you, and your felowes here present, & to al other such like as you be.

Away Mayster Doctor (saith Christopherson) for you can do no good with this man, Yet sayth D. Fuller, I will leane thee a booke to read. I promise thee, of a learned mās doing, that is to say of Doctor Watsons doing, (who was then Bishop of Lincolne.)

Wolsey receiuing the same booke,* did diligently reade it ouer, which in many places did manifestly appeare contrary to the knowne trueth of Gods word. At the length a fourtnight or three weekes folowing, the sayde Doctour Fuller resorting agayne to the prison house to confer with the sayd Wolsey, did aske him how he liked the sayd booke (thinking that he had won him by y^e reading of the same:) who aunswered him and sayd: Syr, I like the booke no otherwise then I thought before I should find it. Whereupon the Chauncellor taking his booke departed home.

At night when D. Fuller came to his chamber to looke on it, he did finde in many places cōtrary to his minde, the booke raced with a pen by the sayd Wolsey. The which hee seing, and being vexed therewith, sayd: Oh this is an obstinate hereticke and hath quite marred my booke.

Then the Syse holden at Wisbich drawing nye, Doctor Fuller commeth agayne to the sayd Wolsey, and speaketh vnto him on this maner: * Thou doest much trouble my cōscience, wherfore I pray thee depart, & rule thy 〈◇〉, so that I heare no more complaint of thee, and come to the Church when thou wilt, and if thou be complayned vpon, so farre as I may, I promise thee I will not heare of it.

Mayster Doctour (quoth Wolsey) I was brought hyther by a law, and by a law I will be deliuered.

Then being broughte to the Sessions before named, Wolsey was layd in the Castle at Wisbich, * thinking to him and al his frēdes, that he should haue suffered there at that present time, but it proued nothing so.

Then Robert Pygot the painter being at liberty, was there presented by some euill disposed persons (sworne mē as they called them) for not comming to the Church. *

The sayd Pygot being called in the Sessions, woulde not absent himselfe, but there did playnely appeare before Syr Clement Hygham being Iudge, who sayd vnto him: Ah, are you the holy father the Paynter? How chaunce ye came not to the Churche? Syr (quoth the Paynter) I am not out of the Church, I trust in God.

No Syr, sayd the Iudge, this is no Churche, this is a Haule. Ye sir sayd Pygot, I know very wel it is a Haule: but he that is in the true faith of Iesus Christ, is neuer absent, but present in the Church of God.

Ah Syrha, sayd the Iudge, * you are to high learned for me to talke withall: wherfore I will send you to them that be better learned then I, strayght wayes commaundyng him to the layle where Wolsey lay. So the Sessiōs being Page 1716 broken vp and ended, * the sayd Wolsey and Pigot were caryed agayne to Eley into yrison, where they both did remayne till the day of theyr death.

In the meane time certaine of theyr neighbors of Wisbych aforesayd being at Eley, * came to see how they did.

There came thither also a Chapleine of Bishop Gooderikes a Frenchman borne, one Peter Ualentius, who said vnto the said Wolsey and Pygot: My brethren, according to mine office I am come to talk with you, for I haue bene Amner here this xx. yeares and aboue.

Wheerfore I must desire you my brethren to take it in good parte that I am come▪ to talke with you, I promise you, not to pull you from your fayth. But I both requyre and desire in the name of Iesus Christ that you stande to the truth of the Gospell and worde, and I beseech the almighty God for his sonne Iesus Christes sake to preserue both you & me in the same vnto the end. For I knowe not myselfe (my brethrē) how soone I shal be at the same point that you now are. Thus with many other like wordes he made an end, causing all that were there present to water theyr cheekes, contrary to al the hope they had in him, god be prayسد therfore.

Then within short time after, Pygot and Wolsey wer called to iudgement about the ix. daye of October, * before Doctor Fuller then Chauncellor, with old Doctor Shaxton, Christopherson, and others in Commission, who layd earnestly to theyr charge for theyr belief in diuers articles, but especially of the Sacrament of the aultar. Whereunto theyr aūswere was: that the Sacrament of the aultar was an Idoll, and that the naturall body and bloud of Christe was not present really in the sayd Sacrament, and to this opinion they sayd they would sticke, beleuing perfectly the same to be no heresye that they had affirmed, but the verye truth wherupō they would stand. Then said the Doctors, that they were out of the Catholicke fayth.

*Then Doctor Shaxton sayd vnto them: good brethren remember your selues and become new men, for I my self was in this •ond opinion that you are nowe in, but I am now become a new man.

Ah sayd Wolsey, are you become a new man? Wo be to thee thou wicked new man,* for God shal iustly iudge thee.

Doctour Fuller then spake saying, this Wolsey is an obstinate fellow, and one that I could neuer do good vpon. But as for the Paynter hee is a man quiet and indifferent (as farre as I perceiue) and is soone reformed, and maye very well be deliuered for any euill opinion I find in him.

Then Christopherson called for penne and yncke and wrote these wordes folowing:* I Robert Pygot do beleue that after •he wordes of consecration spoken by the Priest, th•re remaineth no more bread and wine, but the very body and bloud of Christ really, substauntially, the selfe same that was borne of the virgine Mary: and reading it to the Paynter, he sayd thus: doest thou beleue all this according as it is written?

Pygot.

No Syr, sayd the Paynter: that is your fayth and not mine.

Christopher.

Loe Mayster Doctor Fuller you would haue lettē this fellow go: he is as much an heretick as the other.

And so immediately iudgemēt was geuen vpon thē to dye. Which done, after the sētēce read, they were sent again to the prison, where they did lye till the day of theyr death.

At which day one Peacocke Bachelor of diuinity being appoynted to preach, took his text out of the first Epistle of S. Paul to the Corin. 5. chap. of one that had liued vnordinately by abusing his fathers wife:* likening the sayd Pygot and Wolsey to the same man, often times saying, that such members must be cut of from the congregation, most maliciously reporting the sayd Wolsey to be cleane out of y^e fayth, and in many places quite denying the Scripture.

So his Sermon being ended, the forenamed, Pygot & Wolsey being brought to the place of executiō and so boūd to the stake with a chain, thither commeth one sir Richard Collinson a priest, at that time desolate of any biding place or stay of benefice, who sayd vnto Wolsey: brother Wolsey the preacher hath openly reported in his Sermon this day that you are quite out of the Catholicke fayth, & deny baptisme, and that you do erre in the holy Scripture: Wherefore I beseech you for the certifying of my conscience wyth others here present: that you declare in what place of the Scripture you do erre or finde fault.

Wolsey.

*I take the eternall and euerlasting God to witnesse that I do erre in no part or poynt of Gods booke the holy Bible, but hold & beleue in the same to be most firme and sound doctrine in all poyntes most worthy for my saluation and for al other Christians to the end of the world. Whatsoeuer mine aduersaries report by me, God forgeue thē therfore. With that cōmeth one to the fire with a great sheet knit ful of books to burne, like as they had bene new ¶The burning of William Wolsey, and Robert Pygot, Martyrs.

* Testamentes. O sayd Wolsey, geue me one of thē, & Pigot desired an other, * both of them clapping them close to theyr brestes saying the 106. Psalme, desiring all the people to say Amen, and so receiued the fire most thankfully.

Concerning the storye of William Wolsey I receiued moreouer from the vniuersity of Cambridge by a credible person and my faythfull frend William Fulke, this relatiō which I thought in this place not vnmeete to be notified vnto the Reader in order and forme as foloweth.

There were burned at Ely two Godly Martyrs, * the one called Wolsey, the other Pygot. In these two appered diuers opinions of one spirit. Pygot was mylde, humble, and modest, promising that he would be cōformable to his persecutors, if they could perswade him by the Scripture. The other Wolsey, was stout, strong and vehemēt, as one hauing 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 of the spirite, * and detested all theyr doinges, as of whom he was sure to receiue nothing but cruelty and tyranny. He was wonderfull ielous ouer his cōpanion, * fearing lest his gentle nature would haue bene ouercome by the flattering inticementes of the worlde, and therefore the same day that they were burned, when they would haue talked w^t him alone, he pulled him away front them almost by force. * He was so desirous to glorify God with his suffering, that being wonderfull sore tormented in the prison with the toothe ake, hee feared nothing more, thē that he should depart before the day of executiō (which he called his glad day) were come.

This Wolsey being in prison at Elye, was visited by Thomas Hodilo Berebrier in Ely. To him he deliuered certayne mony to be distributed (as he appoynted) part to his wife, and part to his kinsfolkes and frends,* and especially 6. shillings. 8. pence to be deliuered to one Richard Denton Smith dwelling at Welle in Cambridgeshyre wⁱn the iurisdiction of the Ile of Ely, with this commendation, that he maruelled that he taryed so long behinde him, seing he was the first that did deliuer him the book of scripture into his hand, and told him that it was the truth, desiring him to make hast after as fast as he could.

This Thomas Hodilo, both to auoyde daunger of the time,* and to haue a witnes of his doings herein deliuered the sayd summe of money, to one M. Laurence preacher in Essex (which then resorted often to his house) to be distributed as Wolsey had appoynted: which thing they performed, riding from place to place. And when this 6. shilling 8. pence was deliuered to Richard Denton with the commendation aforesayd, his aunswere was this: I confesse it is true, but alas I can not burne. This was almoste one whole yeare after Wolsey was burned.* But he that coulde not burne in the cause of Christ, was afterward burned agaynst his will whē Christ had geuen peace to his church. Page 1717 For in the yeare of our Lord. 1564. On Tuesday beyng the 18. day of Aprill, his house was set on fire, & while he went in, to saue his goodes he loste his life, with two other that were in the same house.

*Witnessed by Thomas Hodilo, and William Fulke.

Not much vnlike to this, was also the example of M. West Chapleine to Bishop Ridley, who refusing to die in Christes cause with his Mayster, sayd Masse agaynst hys conscience, and soone after dyed.

¶Doctor Nicholas Ridley and M. Hugh Latimer, both Byshops, Preachers, and Martyrs of Christ, with theyr doinges, conferences, and sufferinges described.

THE same yeare, moneth, and day in whiche the foresayd 2. Martyrs William Wolsey,* & Tho. Pygot suffered at Eley, the which was an 1555 October 16. folowed also at Oxford the slaughter of two other speciall & singuler Captaines, & principall pillars of Christes Church. Mayster Kidley Bishop of London, & Mayster Hugh Latimer, Byshop sometimes of Worcester: of whose famous doinges & memorable learning, & incomparable ornaments & giftes of grace, ioyned with no lesse cōmendable sincerity of lyfe, as all the Realme ca^{••}e witnes sufficiently: so it needeth not greatly that we should stand exactly at this time in setting forth a full description of the same, but onely to cōprehend briefly in a few words touching the order of theyr liues, so much as necessarily serueth to the due instruction of y^e reader, & maketh to the vse of this present history, in declaring first theyr beginning & bringing vp, thē theyr studyes and actes in the Uniuersitye, theyr prefermentes also by theyr studyes to higher dignity, at last theyr trouble & trauell in setting forth Religion, and in maintaining the same to the shedding of theyr blood. And first to begin with the life of Mayster Ridley, whose story here ensueth.

AMong many other worthy and sundry historyes & notable acts of such as of late daies haue bene turmoile•, murthered, & martyred for the true Gospell of Christe in Queene Maries raigne, the tragicall story and life of Doctour Ridley, I thought good to commend to Chronycle and leaue to perpetuall memorye: beseeching thee gentle Reader, with care and studye well to peruse, diligently to consider, and deeply to print the same in thy brest, seeing him to be a man beautified with such excellent qualities, so ghostly inspired and godly learned, & now written doubtlesse in the booke of life, with the blessed Sayntes of the almighty, crowned and throned amongst the glorious cōpany of Martyrs. First descending of a stocke right worshipfull, he was borne in Northūberlandshire, who being a childe,* learned his Grammer with greate dexteritie in Newcastle, and was remoued from thence to the Uniuersity of Cambridge, where he in shorte space became so famous, that for his singular aptnes, he was called to hyer functions and Offices of the Uniuersity, by degree atteyning thereunto, and was called to be head of Pembroke hall, and there made Doctour of Diuinitye. After thys departing from thence, he trauelled to Paris, who at his returne, was made Chapleine to king Henrye the eight, and promoted afterwarde by him to the bishoprick of Rochester: and so from thence translated to the See and Bishopricke of London in king Edwardes dayes.

In which calling and offices he so trauelled and occupied hym selfe by preachinge and teachinge the true and wholesome doctrine of Christ, that neuer good childe was more singularly loued of his deare parents, then he of his flocke and Dioces. Euery holy day and Sunday he lightly preached in some one place or other, except he wer other wise letted by weighty affayres and busines: to whose sermons the people resorted, swarming about him like bees, and coueting the sweete flowers and wholesome ioyce of the fruitfull doctrine, whiche he did not onely preach, but shewed the same by his life, as a glittering lanterne to the eyes and sences of the blinde, in such pure order and chastity of life (declining from euil desires and concupiscences) that euen his very enemies could not reprove him in anye <◇> iote thereof.

Besides this, he was passingly well learned, his memorye was greate,* and he of suche reading withall, that of right he deserued to be comparable to the best of this our age, as can testify as well diuers his notable workes, pythy sermons, and sundry his disputatiōs in both the Uniuersities, as also his very aduersaries, all whiche will saye no lesse themselues.

Besides all this, wise he was of counsell, deepe of wit, and very politicke in all his doings. How mercifull & carefull he was to reduce the obstinate papistes frō their erroneous opinions, & by gentlenes to win them to the truth, his gentle order•ng and curteous handling of Doc. Heath late Archbishop of Yorke being prisoner with him in king Edwardes time in his house one yere, sufficiently declareth. In fine, he was suche a Prelate, and in all poyntes so good, godly, & ghostly a man, that England may iustly •ue the loue of so worthy a treasure. And thus hitherto concerning these publicke matters.

Now will I speake something further particularly of his person & conditiōs.* He was a man right comly & well proportioned in all poynts, both in cōplexion & lineamēts of the body. He tooke all thinges in good part, bearing no malice nor rancour in his hart, but straight wayes forgetting all iniuries & offēces done agaynst him. He was very kind & naturall to his kinsfolke, and yet not bearyng with them any thing otherwise thē right would require, geuing them alwayes for a generall rule, yea to his own brother & sister, that they doing euill, should seeke or look for nothing at his hand, but shoulde be as straungers and aliens vnto him, and they to be his brother or sister, which vsed honesty, and a godly trade of life.

He vsing all kindes of wayes to mortify himselfe, was geuen to much praier and contemplation: For duely euery morning, so soone as his apparell was done vpon him, he went forthwith to his bedde chamber, and there vpon hys knees prayed the space of halfe an houre: which being don, immediately he went to his studye (if there came no other busines to interrupt him) where he continued till ten of y^e clocke, and then came to common prayer, dayly vsed in his house. The prayers being done, he went to dynner, where he vsed litle talke except otherwise occasion by some hadde bene ministred, and then was it sober, discreet, and wise, & sometime mery, as cause required.

The dinner done, which was not very long he vsed to sit an houre or therabouts talking or playing at the chests: That done, he returned to his study, & there would continue, except suiters or busines abroad were occasiō of the cō'trary, vntill 5. of the clocke at night, & then would come to cōmon prayer, as in the forenoone: which being finished he went to supper, behauing himselfe there, as at his dinner before: After supper, recreating himselfe in playing at chestes the space of an houre,* he would then returne againe to his studye: continuing there till 11. of the clocke at night, which was his cōmon houre to go to bed, then saying hys prayers vpō his knees as in y^e morning when he rose. Being at his manor of Fulhā, as diuers times he vsed to be,* he read daily a lecture to his family at the commō prayer, beginning at the acts of the apostles, & so going throughout all the Epistles of S. Paule, geuing to euey man that could read a new Testament, hyring thē besides with mony to learne by hart certayne principall Chapters, but especially the xiiij. chapter of the Actes, reading also vnto his housholde oftentimes the 101. Psalme, being maruellous carefull ouer his family, that they might be a spectacle of all vertue & honesty to other. To be short, as he was godly & vertuous himselfe, so nothing but vertue and godlines reigned in his house, feeding them with the food of our sauour Iesus Christ.

Now remayneth a worde or two to be declared of hys gentle nature and kindly pittie in the vsage of an olde woman called Maystres Boner, mother to Doctour Boner, sometime Bishop of London: whiche I thought good to touch, as well for the rare clemency of Doctour Ridley, as the vnworthy immanity and ingratefull disposition again of Doctor Boner. Bishop Ridley being at his Manor of Fulham, alwayes sent for the sayd maistres Boner,* dwelling in an house adioyning to his house, to dyner and supper, with one Maistresse Mungey Boners sister, saying: go for my mother Boner, who cōming, was euer placed in the chayre at y^e tables end, being so gently entreated, welcomed, & taken, as though he had bene borne of her owne body, being neuer displaced of her seat, although the kings Counsell had bene present, saying, when any of them were there (as diuers times they were) by your Lordships sauor, this place of right and custome is for my mother Boner. But howe well he was recompenced for this his singular gentlenes, and pitifull pity after at the handes o• the sayd Doctor Boner, almost the least child that goeth by the ground can declare. For who afterward,* was more enemy to Ridley, then Boner and his? Who more went aboute to seek his destruction, then he? recompensing his gentlenes with extreme cruelty. As well appeared by the strait handling of Ridleyes owne naturall sister, and George Shypside her husband, from time to time: whereas the gentlenes Page 1718 of the other did suffer Boners mother, sister, and other his kinred, not onely quietly to enioy all y^t which they had o• Boner, but also entertained them in his house, shewyng much curtesy and frendship dayly vnto them: whereas on the other side,* Bishop Boner being restored agayn, would not suffer the brother & naturall sister of Bishop Ridley, & other his frendes, not onely not to enioye that which they had by the sayd theyr brother Bishop Ridley, but also carrishly without all order of law or honesty, by extort power wrasted from them all the liuinges they had.

And yet being not therewith satisfied, he sought all the meanes he could, to worke the death of the foresayd Shipside, saying, that he would make twelue godfathers to goe vpō him, which had bene brought to passe in deed at what tyme he was prisoner at Oxford, had not God otherwyse wrought his deliuerance by meanes of D. Heath Byshop then of Worcester. Teste Georg. Shipsido.

Wherby all good indifferent Readers notoriously haue to vnderstand, what great diuersity was in the disposition of these two natures. Wherof as the one excelled in mercy and pity: so the other agayne as muche or more excelled in churlish ingratitude, and despitefull disdayne. But of this matter enough.

Now concerning Gods vocation, how Doctor Ridly was first called to the sauouring and fauouring of Christe and his Gospell, partlye by his disputation before, & other his Treatises it may appeare, that the first occasion of hys conuersion, was by reading of Bertrams book of the Sacrament,* whom also the conferēce with Bishop Cranmer, and with Peter Martyr did not a litle confirme in that behalfe. Who now by the grace of GOD, being thoroughly won and brought to the true way, as he was before blind and zelous in his old ignoraunce: so was he as constant & faythfull in the right knowledge whiche the Lorde had opened vnto him, (as well appeared by his preachings and doynges duringe all the time of Kyng Edward) and so long dyd muche good, while authoritye of externe power might defend and hold vp the peace of the church, and proceedinges of the Gospell. But after that it pleased so the heauēly will of our Lord our God to bereue vs of y^e stay,* and to call from vs Kyng Edward that precious Prince, as the whole state of the Church of Englande was leafte desolate and open to the enemies hande: so this Byshop Ridley, after the comming in of Queene Mary, eftsoone and with the first was layd handes vpō and committed to prison, as before hath sufficiently bene expressed: first in the Tower, then after translated from thence with the Archebishop of Canterbury,* and mayster Latimer, to Oxforde, was with them inclosed in the common Gayle and prison of Bocardo, while at lēgth being disseuered from them, he was committed to custody in the house of one Irish, wher he remayned till the last day of his death and martyrdome, which was from the yeare of our Lord. 1554. till the yeare 1555. and 16. day of October.

Furthermore, as touching his disputations & cōflicts had at Oxford, and also of his determination had at Cambridge, also his trauels in perswading and instructing the Lady Mary before she was Queene, his reasons & conference likewise had in the tower at the Lieutenants boord, enough hath bene sayd already. Besides this, other conferences hee had in prison both with D. Cranmer, and M. Latimer as here foloweth to be read.

A conference had betwixt Mayster Ridley, and Mayster Latimer in prison, vpon the obiection of Antonian, meaning by that name some popish persecutour, as Winchester, alluding thereby to the story of Victor. lib. 3. de persecut. Aphri.

IN writing agayne yee haue done me an vnspeakeable pleasure,* and I pray that the Lord may requite it you in that day. For I haue receiued great comfort at your wordes: but yet I am not so filled withall, but that I thyrste much more nowe then before to drinke more of that cuppe of yours, wherein ye mingle vnto me profitable wyth pleasaunt. I pray you good father let me haue one draught more to comfort my stomacke. For surely except the Lord assist me with his gracious ayde, in the time of his seruice, I know I shall play but y^e part of a white liuered knight. But truely my trust is in him, that in mine infirmitye hee should try himselfe strong, and that he can make the Coward in his cause to fight like a man.

Syr, now I looke dayly when Diotrephes wyth hys warriours shall assault me: wherefore I pray you good father, for that you are an olde Souldiour, and an experte warriour, and God knoweth I am but a young Souldiour, and as yet of small experience in these fittes, helpe me I pray you to buckle my harnesse. And now I would haue you to thinke, that these dartes are cast at my head of some one of Diotrephes or Antonius souldiers.

The obiection of the Antonian.

All men maruell greatlye, why you,* after the libertye which you haue graunted vnto you, more then the rest, do not go to masse, which is a thing (as you know) now much esteemed of all men, yea of the Queene herselfe.

The aunswere.

Because no man that layeth hande on the plough and looketh backe is fitte for the kingdome of God,* and also for the selfe same cause why Saynt Paule woulde not suffer Titus to be circumcised, which is that the truth of the gospell might remayne with vs vncorrupt. Gala. the second: and agayne. If I builde agayne the thinges which I destroyed, I make my selfe a trespasser. This is also another cause, least I should seeme by outward facte to allowe the thing, which I am perswaded is contrary to sounde doctrine, and so should be a stumbling stocke vnto the weake. But woe be vnto him by whom offence commeth: it were better for him that a milstone were hanged about his neck and he cast into the midst of the sea.*

Except the Lord helpe me ye say. Truth it is. For with out me (sayth he) ye can do nothing much lesse suffer death of our aduersaries,* through the bloudy lawe now prepared agaynst vs. But it foloweth, if ye abide in me, and my woordes abide in you, aske what yee will, and it shall bee done for you. What canne be more comfortable? Syr, you make aunswere your selfe so well that I cannot beter it. Syr, I beginne now to smell what you meane by traueilling thus with me, you vse me as Bilney dyd once when he conuerted me? pretending as though he would be taught of me, he sought wayes and meanes to teach me, and so do you. I thanke you therefore most hartely. For in deed you minister armour vnto me, whereas I was vnarmed before and vnprovided, sauing that I geue my selfe to prayer for my refuge.

What is it then that offendeth you so greatlye in the Masse, that ye will not vouchsafe once eyther to heare it,* or see it? And from whence commeth this new religion vp on you? haue not you vsed in times past to say masse your selfe?

I confesse vnto you my fault and ignorance: but know you that for these matters I haue done penance long agoe, both at Paules crosse,* and also openly in the Pulpit at Cambridge, and I truste God hath forgeuen mee thys mine offence: for I didde it vpon ignoraunce. But if ye be desirous to knowe, and will vouchsafe to heare, what thinges doe offende me in the Masse, I will rehearse vnto you those thinges whiche be moste cleare, and seeme to repugne most manifestly agaynst Gods worde. And they be these. The straunge tongue: the want of the shewynge of the Lordes death: * The breaking of the Lordes commaundement of hauing a communion: the sacrament is not cōmunicated to all, vnder both kindes, according to the word of the Lord. The signe is seruilely worshipped, for y^e thing signified. Christes Passion is iniured, for asmuch as this Masse sacrifice is affirmed to remayne for the purging of sinnes: to be shorte, the manifolde superstitions, and triflyng fondnesse whiche are in the Masse, and aboute the same.

Better a few thinges well pondered, then to trouble y^e memory with to much, * you shall preuayle more with praying, thē with studying, though mixture be best. For so one shall alleuiate the tediousnes of the other. I entend not to contend much with them in wordes, after a reasonable account of my fayth geuen: for it shall be but in vayne. They will say, as theyr fathers sayd, * when they haue no more to say. We haue a law, and by our law he ought to dye. Be ye steadfast and vnmoueable sayeth Saynt Paule, * and agayne, persistito, stand fast. And how oft is this repeated, if ye abide, if ye abide. &c. But we shall be called obstinate, sturdy, ignorant, heady, and what not? So that a man hath need of much pacience, hauing to do with such men.

But you knowe howe greate a crime it is to separate your selfe from the communion or felowship of the Church, and to make a schisme, or diuision, * you haue bene reported to haue hated the secte of the Anabaptistes, and alwayes to haue impugned the same. Moreouer this was the pernicious error of Nouatus, and of the Heretickes called (Cathari) that they woulde not communicate wyth the Church.

I know that the vnity of the Church is to be reteyned by all meanes, & the same to be necessary to saluation. * But I doe not take the Masse as it is at this day, for the communion of the Church, but a Popishe deuise, whereby both the commaundement and institution of our Sauour Christ, for the ofte frequenting of the remembraunce Page 1719 of his death, is eluded, & the people of God are miserablye deluded. The sect of the Anabaptistes, and the heresy of the Nouatians, ought of right to be condemned, for as muche as without any iust or necessary cause they wickedly separated themselues from the communion of the congregation: for they did not alleadge that the Sacramentes were vnduely ministred, but turning away theyr eyes from thēselues, wherewith according to Saynt Pauls rule they ought to examine themselues and ca•ing theyr eyes euer vpon others, * either Ministers, or Communicantes with them, they alwayes reprooued something for the whiche they abstained from the Communion, as from an vnholly thing.

I remember that Caluin beginneth to confute the Interim after this sort with this saying of Hilary. * The name of peace is beautifull and the opinion of vnitye is fayre: but who doubteth that to be the true and onely peace of the Church, which is Christes? I would you had that litle booke: there should you see how much is to be geuen to vnity. Saynt Paule when he requireth vnitye, he ioyneth straight with al, * secundum Iesum Christum, according to Iesus Christ, no further. Diotrophes nowe of late did euer harpe vpon vnity, vnity. Yea Syr (quoth I) but in verity, not in popery. Better is a diuersity, then an vnitye in Popery. I had nothing agayne but scornefull giers, with commaundement to the Tower.

But admitte there be in the Masse that peraduenture might be amended, * or at least made better: yea, seing you will haue it so, admit there be a fault: if you do not consent therto. Why do you trouble your selfe in vayne: do not you know both by Cyprian and Augustine that communiō of sacramentes doth not defile a man,* but consent of deedes.

If it were any one trifling ceremony, or if it were some one thing of it selfe indifferent (although I woulde wishe nothing should be done in the Church,* which doth not edify the same) yet for the continuance of the common quietnesse I coulde be content to beare it. But forasmuche as thinges done in the masse tend openly to the ouerthrow of Christes institution, I iudge that by no meanes either in word, or deed I ought to consent vnto it. As for that which is objected out of the Fathers, I acknowledge it to be wel spoken, if it be well vnderstanded. But it is meant of them which suppose they are defiled, if any secret vice be either in the ministers, or in them that communicate with them, & is not ment of them which doe abhorre superstition, and wicked traditions of men, and will not suffer the same to be thrust vpon themselues, or vpon the Church in stead of Gods word, and the truth of the Gospell.

*The very marowe bones of the masse are all together detestable, and therefore by no meanes to be borne withal, so that of necessity the mending of it, is to abolish it for euer. For if you take away oblation, and oration, which doe hang vpon consecration and transubstantiation, the moste papistes of them all will not set a button by the masse, as a thing which they esteeme not, but for the gayne that foloweth thereon. For if the English communion, whiche o• late was vsed, were as gaynefull to them, as the Masse hath bene heretofore, they would striue no more for their masse: from thence groweth the grieve.

Consider into what daūgers you cast your selfe, if you forsake the church:* & you cannot but forsake it, if you refuse to go to masse. For the Masse is the Sacrament of vnity: without the Arke there is no saluation. The church is the Arke and Peters ship.* Ye know this saying wel enough. He shall not haue God to be his Father, which acknowledgeth not the church to be his mother. Moreouer without the church (sayth S. Augustine) be the life neuer so wel spent, it shall not inherit the kingdome of heauen.

The holy Catholicke or vniuersall church, which is y^e communion of saintes, the house of God, the City of God the spouse of Christ, the body of Christ, the pillar, and stay of the trueth, this Church I beleue accordinge to the Creede. This Church I doe reuerence, and honour in the Lord. But the rule of this Church is the word of God, according to which rule, we goe forward vnto life. And as many as walk according to this rule, I say with S. Paul peace be vpon them, and vpon Israell which perteyneth vnto God. The guid of this church is the holy ghost. The markes, whereby this church is knowne vnto me in this dar•ke worlde, and in the midst of this crooked and froward generatiō, are these. The sincere preaching of Gods holy worde, the due administration of the Sacramentes, charitye, and faythfull obseruing of Ecclesiasticall discipline, according to the word of God. And that the Church or congregation whiche is garnished with these markes,* is in very deede that heauenly Hierusalem, whiche consisteth of those that be borne from aboue. This is the Mother of vs all. And by Gods grace, I will liue, and dye the childe of this Church. Forth of this (I graunt) there is no saluation: and I suppose the residue of the places objected are rightly to be vnderstanded of this Church onely.* In times past (sayth Chrysostome) there were many wayes to know the Church of Christ, that is to say, by good lyfe, by myracles, by chastity, by doctrine, by ministring the sacramentes. But from that time that heresies did take hold of the Church, it is onely knowne by the Scriptures whiche is the true church. They haue all thinges in outwarde shew, which the true Church hath in truth. They haue tēples like vnto ours.

And in the end concluded. Wherefore onely by y^e scriptures do we know which is the true church. To that whiche they say, the Masse is the Sacrament of vnity. I aunswere. The bread which we breake,* according to the institution of the Lord, is the Sacrament of the vnity of Christes mistical body. For we being many, are one bread, and one body, forasmuch as we al are partakers of one bread. But in the Masse, the Lordes institution is not obserued: for we be not all partakers of one breade, but one deuoureth all. &c. So that (as it is vsed) it may seeme a Sacrament of singularitye, and of a certayne speciall priuiledge for one sect of people, wherby they may be discerned from the rest rather then a sacrament of vnity, wherin our knitting together in one is represented.

Yea, what felowship hath Christ with Antichrist? Therfore is it not lawefull to beare the yoake with Papistes. Come forth from among them, & separate your selues frō them, sayth the Lorde. It is ane thing to be the Church in deed, another thing to counterfayt the church.* Would god it were well knowne, what is the forsaking of the church. In the kinges dayes that dead is, who was the church of Englande? The king and his fautors, or Massemongers in corners? If the king and the fautors of his procedings, why be not we now the church abiding in the same procedinges? If clanculary Massemongers mighte bee of the Church, and yet contrary to the kinges proceedings, why may not we as well be of y^e church contrarying y^e queenes procedinges? Not all that be couered with the title of the church: are the church in deed. Separate thy selfe from thē that are such sayth S. Paule: from whom?* The text hath before. If any man folow other doctrine. &c. he is pint vp, and knoweth nothing. &c. Weigh the whole text, that yee may perceiue what is the fruit of contēcious disputatiōs. But wherfore are such men sayd to know nothing, when they know so many thinges? You know the olde verses.

Hoc est nescire, sine Christo plurima scire.

Si Christum bene scis, satis est, si caetera nescis.

That is: This is to be ignorant, to know many thinges without Christ. If thou knowest Christ well yⁿ know est enough, though thou know no more. Therefore would S^r Paule knowe nothing, but Iesus Christ crucified. &c.* As many as are Papistes and Massemongers, they may well be said to know nothing. For they know not Christ, forasmuch as in theyr massing they take much away from the benefite and merite of Christ.

That Christ which you haue described vnto me,* is inuisible, but Christes Churche is visible and knowne. For els why would Christ haue sayd, Dic Ecclesiae. Tell it vnto the church. For he had commaunded in vaine to go vnto the church if a man cannot tell which it is.

The Church which I haue described is visible it hath members which may be sene: and also,* I haue afore declared, by what markes & tokens it may be knowne. But if either our eies are so dazeled, that we cannot see, or that sa'than hath brought such darckenes into the world that it is hard to discern the true church: that is not the fault of the church, but either of our blindenesse, or of Sathans darknes. But yet in this most deep darkenes, there is one most cleare candle, which of it selfe alone is able to put away all darkenes. Thy word is a candle vnto my feet, and a lyght vnto my steppes.

The church of Christ is a catholick or vniuersall church, dispersed throughout the whole world: ^{*} this church is the great house of God, in this are good men & euill mingled together, goates and sheepe, corne and chaffe: it is the net which gathereth all kind of fishes: this church cannot erre, because Christ hath promised it his spirit, which shall lead it into all truth, and that the gates of hel shal not preuayle agaynst it, that he will be with it vnto the end of the world: whatsoever it shall loose, or binde vpon earth, shall be ratified in heauen. &c. This church is the pillar and stay of the truth: this is it for the which S. Augustine sayth, he beleeueth the Gospell. But this vniuersall Church aloweth the masse, because the more part of the same aloweth it. Therefore. &c.

I graunt that the name of the Church is taken after three diuers maners in the scriptures. ^{} Some tyme for the Page 1720 whole multitude of them which professe the name of christ, o^r the which they are also named christians. But as saint Paule sayth of the Iewe, not euerye one is a Iewe that is a Iewe outwardly, &c. Neither yet all that be of Israell, are counted the seede, euen so not euerye one which is a christian outwardly, is a Christian in deede. For if any man haue not the spirite of Christ, the same is none of his. Therefore that Church whiche is his body, and of whiche Christ is the head, standeth onely of lyuing stones, and true Christians, not onely outwardly in name and title, but inwardly in hart and in truth. But forasmuch as this church (which is the second taking of the church) as touchyng the outward fellowship, is contayned within y^e great house, & hath with the same, outward societie of the sacramentes, and ministry of the worde, manye thinges are spoken of that vniuersall Church (whiche saynt Austen calleth the mingled Church) whiche cānot truely be vnderstanded, but onely of that pure part of the Church. So that the rule of Ticonius concerning the mingled Church, may here well take place: where there is attributed vnto the whole Church that whiche cannot agree vnto the same, but by reason of the one parte thereof that is eyther for the multitude of good men, which is the very true Church in deede, or for the multitude of euill men, whiche is the malignant Church and sinagogue of Sathan. ^{} And is also the third taking of the Church of the whiche, although there be seldomer mention in the scriptu^{es}, in that signification, yet in the worlde, euen in the most famous assemblies of Christendome, this Church hath borne the greatest swinge. This distinction presupposed of the 3. sortes of Churches, it is an easy matter, by a figure called Sinecdoche, to geue to the mingled and vniuersall Church, that which cannot truely be vnderstanded but onely of thone part therof. But if any man will stiffely affirme, that vniuersally doth so pertayne vnto the church that what soeuer Christ hath promised to the Church, it must needes bee vnderstanded of that, I would gladly knowe of the same man, ^{} where that vniuersall Church was in the tym^s of the Patriarches and Prophetes, of 〈◇〉, Abraham, and Moses (at suche tyme as the people would haue sto^{ed} hym) of Helias, of Hieremy, in the times of Christ, and the dispersion of the Apostles, in the time of Arius, when Constantius was Emperour, and Felix bishop of Rome succeeded Liberius. It is worthye to be noted, that Lira writeth vpon Mathew. The church (sayth he) doth not stand in men by reason of theyr power or dignitie, ^{} whether it be Ecclesiastical, or secular. For many princes and Popes, and other inferiours haue bene o^ūd to haue fallen away frō God. Therefore y^e church con'sisteth in those persons, in whome is true knowledge and confession of the fayth, and of the truth. Euill men (as it is in a glose of the decrees) are in the Church in name, and not in deede. And S. Augustine, contra Cresconium grammaticum sayth: Who soeuer is afrayd to be deceiued by the darkenes of thys question: * let hym aske counsell at y^e same church of it: which Church the scripture doth poynt out without anye doubtfulnes. All my notes whiche I haue written and gathered out of suche authors, as I haue red in this matter, and such like, are come into the handes of suche, as will not let me haue the least of all my wrytten bookes: wherein I am enforced to complayne of them vnto God: for they spoyle me of all my laboures, whiche I haue taken in my study these many yeares. My memorye was neuer good, for helpe whereof I haue vsed for y^e most part to g•ther out notes of my readyng, and so to place them, that thereby I might haue hadde the vse of them, when the time required. But who knoweth whether this be Gods will, that I should be thus ordered, and spoyled of the poore learning I had (as me thought) in store, to thintent that I now destitute of that, * shoulde from henceforth learne onely to knowe with Paule, Christ, and hym crucified. The Lord graunt me herein to be a good young scholer, and to learn this lesson so well, that neyther death nor lyfe, wealth nor woe, &c. make me euer to forget that. Amen. Amen.

I haue no more to say in this matter: for you your selfe haue sayd all that is to be sayd. That same vehement saying of S. Augustine, * I would not beleue the Gospell. &c. was wont to trouble many men: as I remember I haue read it well qualified of Philippe Melancthon: but my memory is altogether slippery. This it is in effecte: The church is not a iudge, but a witnes. There were in hys tyme that lightly esteemed the testimony of the Church, * & the outward ministry of preachyng, and reiected the outward word it selfe, sticking onely to their inward reuelations. Suche rashe contempte of the worde prouoked, and drone S. Augustine into that excessiue vehemency. In the which, after the bare sound of the wordes, he might seeme to such as do not attayne vnto hys meaning, that hee preferred the Church farre before the Gospell, and that the Church hath a free authoritie ouer the same: but that godly man neuer thought so. It were a saying worthy to be brought forth agaynst the Anabaptistes, whiche thinketh the open ministerye to be a thinge not necessary if they any thing esteemed such testimonies. I would not sticke to affirme that the more part of the great house, that is to say of the whole vniuersall Church may easely e•re. And agayne, I would not sticke to affirme that it is one thyng to be gathered together in the name of Christe, and an other thing to come together with a Masse of the holy ghost going before. For in the first Christ ruleth, in the latter the Deuill beareth the swinge: and how then can anye thyng be good that they goe about? From this latter shall our sixe articles come foorth agayne into the light, they themselues being very darckenes. But it is demaunded, whether the sounder or better part of the Catholicke Church may be seene of men or no? Sainct Paule sayth: * The Lord knoweth them that are hys. What manner of speaking is this, in commendation of the Lord, * if we know as well as he, who are hys? Well, thus is the text: the sure foundation of God standeth still, and hath his seale: the Lord knoweth thē that are his: and let euerye man that nameth the name of Christ depart from iniquitie. Nowe howe many are there of the whole Catholicke Church of Englande whiche departe from iniquitie? Howe many of the noble men, how many of the Byshops or Clergy, how many of the rich men, or marchauntes, how many of the Queenes counsellours, yea, howe many of the whole Realme? In how small rome then I pray you is the true church within the Realme of England? And where is it? And in what state? I had a conceite of mine owne well grounded (as they say) when I began: but now it is fallen by the way.

Generall counsels, represent the vniuersall Church, & haue this promise of Christ, where two or three be gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst of thē. * If Christ be present with two, or three, then much more where there is so great a multitude, &c. But in general counsels Masse hath bene approued and vsed. Therefore &c.

Of the vniuersall Church which is mingled of good and bad, thus I thinke: * Whensoever they whiche be chiefe in it, which rule and gouerne the same, and to whome the rest of the whole mysticall body of Christ doth obey, are the liuely members of Christ, and walk after the guiding and rule of hys word, and go before the flocke towardes euerlasting life, then vndoubtedly Councils gathered together of such guides and pastours of the christian flock, doe in deede represent the vniuersall Church, and being so gathered in the name of Christe, they haue a promise of the gifte, and guiding of hys spirite into all truth. But that any such counsell hath at any time allowed the Masse, suche a one as ours was of late, in a straunge tongue, and stuffed with so many absurdities errors, and superstitions, that I vtterly deny, and affirme it to be impossible. For like as there is no agreement betwixt light and darcknes, * betweene Christ and Belial, so surely superstition and the sincere religion of Christ, wil worship, and the pure worshipping of God, suche as God requireth of his, that is in spirite and truth, can neuer agree together. * But ye wil say where so great a company is gathered together, it is not credible but there be two or three gathered in the name of Christ. I aunswere: if there be one hundred good, and two hundreth bad (forasmuch as the decrees and ordinaunces are pronouced according to the greater number of y^e multitude of voyces) what can the lesse number of voyces auayle? It is a knownen thing, and a common prouerbe▪ Oftentimes the greater part ouercommeth the better. *

As touchyng general counsels, at this present I haue no more to say, then you haue sayd. Onely I referre you to your owne experience, * to thinke of our country parlamentes and conuocations, howe and what ye haue seene and heard. The more part in my tyme did bryng forth sixe articles: for then the king would so haue it, being seduced of certayne. Afterward the more part did repell the same, * our good Iosias willing to haue it so. The same articles now agayne (alas) another great, but woorse parte hath restored. O what an vncertaynty is thys? But after thys sorte most commonly are mans proceedings God be mercifull vnto vs. Who shall deliuer vs from such tormentes of minde? Therefore is death the best phisition, but vnto the faythfull whome she together, and at once, * deliuereth from all griefes. You must thinke this written vpon this occasion, because you woulde needes haue youre paper blotted.

If the matter should goe thus, that in general counsailes Page 1721 men shoulde not stand to the more number of the multitude, (I meane of them whiche ought to geue voyces) then should no certaine rule be left vnto the Church, by the which controuersies in weighty matters might be determined: * but it is not to be beleued, that Christ woulde leaue his Church destitute of so necessary a helpe and safegarde.

Christ who is the most louing spouse of his espouse the church, who also gaue himselfe for it, that he might sanctify it vnto himselfe, * did geue vnto it abundantly all things which are necessary to saluation, but yet so, that the church should declare it selfe obedient vnto hym in all things and keepe it selfe within the boundes of hys commaundemēts and further, not to seeke any thing which he teacheth not, as necessary vnto saluation. Now further, for determination of all controuersies in Christes Religion, Christ him selfe hath left vnto the Church not onely Moses, and the Prophetes: * whom he willeth his Church in al doubtles to go vnto, and aske counsell at, but also the Gospelles, and the rest of the bodye of the newe testament: in the whiche what soeuer is heard of Moses and the Prophetes, and whatsoeuer is necessary to be knowne vnto saluation, is reuealed and opened.

So that now we haue no neede to say, who shal clyme into heauen,* or who shall goe downe into the depth, to tel vs what is needefull to bee done? Christe hath done both and hath commended vnto vs the word of fayth, whiche also is abundantly declared vnto vs in his word written so that hereafter if we walke earnestly in this way, to the searching out of the truth, it is not to be doubted, but thorough the certayne benefite of Christes spirite,* whiche hee hath promised vnto his, wee may finde it, and obtayne euerlasting life. Should men aske counsell of the dead for the liuing, sayth Esay? Let them go rather to the law, and to the testimony.* &c. Christ sendeth them that be desirous to know the truth, vnto the scriptures, saying: searche the scriptures. I remember a like thing well spoken of Hierome:* Ignorance of the scriptures, is the mother and cause of all errors. And in an other place, as I remember in the same author: The knowledge of the scriptures is the foode of euerlasting life.* But nowe me thinketh I enter into a very broad sea in that I begin to shew, either out of the scriptures themselues, or out of the ancient writers, how much the holy scripture is of force to teache the truth of our religiō. But this is it, that I am now about, that Christ would haue the church his spouse in al doubts to aske counsell at the word of his father written, & faythfully left, and commended vnto it in both Testaments, the olde and the new. Neither doe we read that Christ in anye place hath layde so great a burthen vpon the members of his spouse, that he hath commaunded them to go to the vniuersall Church.* What soeuer things are written saith Paule, are written for our learning. And it is true that Christ gaue vnto his Church, some Apostles, some Prophetes, some Euangelistes, some shepherdes and teachers, to the edifying of the sayntes, till we come all to the vnity of fayth. &c. But that all men should meete together out of all partes of the world, to define of the articles of our fayth, I neither finde it commaunded of Christe nor written in the word of God.

There is diuersitie betwixt things pertayning to god or fayth, and politicke and ciuill matters. For in the first we must stand onely to the scriptures, whiche are able to make vs all perfect and instructed vnto saluation, if they be well vnderstāded. And they offer themselues to be well vnderstanded onely to them, which haue good willes, and geue themselues to study and prayer. Neither are there any men lesse apte to vnderstand them, then the prudent & wise men of the world. But in the other, that is in ciuill or politicke matters, oftentimes the magistrates do tolerate a lesse euil, for auoyding of a greater: as they whiche haue this saying oft in their mouthes: Better an inconuenience then a mischiefe. And it is the property of a wise man (saith one) to dissemble many thinges: and he that cannot dissēble, cannot rule. In whiche sayinges they bewray themselues, that they do not earnestly weigh what is iust, what is not. Wherefore forasmuch as mans lawes, if it be but in this respect onely, that they be deuised by men, are not able to bring any thing to perfectiō, but are inforced of necessitie to suffer many thinges out of square, and are compelled sometime to wincke at the worst things, seeing they know not how to mayntayne the common peace and quiet otherwise,* they do ordayne that the more part shal take place. You know what these kindes of speaches meane, I speake after the maner of men: yea walke after the maner of men: al men are lyers. And y^t of S. Augustine: if ye lyue after mans reason, yee do not lyue after the wyll of God.

If ye say y^e counsels haue sometime erred, or may erre, how then should we beleue, the catholicke Church? * For y^e counsels are gathered by the authoritie of the Catholicke Church.

From may be, to be in deed, is no good argument: * but from being to may be, no man doubteth, but it is a moste sure argument. But now that counsels haue sometime erred, it is manifest. How many counsels were there in the East partes of the world, whiche condemned the Nicene councell? and all those which would not forsake the same, * they called by a sclaunderous name (as they thought) Homonsians. Was not Athanasius, Chrysostome, Cyril Eustachius, men very well learned, and of godly lyfe, banished and condemned as famous heretickes, and that by wicked counsels? * How many thinges are there in the Canons and constitutions of the counsels, which the papists themselues do much mislike? But here peraduenture one man wil say vnto me: We wil graunt you this in prouinciall counsels, or councelles of some one nation, that they may sometimes erre, * for asmuch as they do not represent the vniuersall church: but it is not to be beleued, that the generall and full councelles haue erred at any tyme. Here if I had my bookes of the counsels, or rather suche notes as I haue gathered out of those bookes, * I coulde brynge something which shoulde serue for this purpose. But now seeing I haue them not, I will recite one place onely out of saint Austen, which (in my iudgement) may suffice in this matter in stead of many. * Who knoweth not (sayth he) that y^e holy scripture is so set before vs, that it is not lawfull to doubt of it, and that the letters of Byshops may be reprov'd by other mens wordes, and by councelles, and that the counsels themselues whiche are gathered by prouinces and countries, do geue place to the authoritie of the generall and full counsels: and that the former and generall counsels are amended by the latter, when as by some experience of thinges, eyther that which was shut vpp, is opened, or that which was hid is knowne. Thus much of Augustine. But I wil plead w^t our Antonian, vpon matter confessed. Here with vs when as Papistry raygned, I pray you how doth that booke whiche was called the Byshops booke, made in the tyme of king Henrye theight, * wherof the byshop of Winchester is thought to bee eyther the first father, or chiefe gatherer: Howe doth it (I say) sharply reprove the Florentine counsell, in whiche was decreed the supremacy of the Byshop of Rome, and that with the consent of the Emperor of Constantinople, and of the Grecians? So that in those dayes, our learned auncient fathers, and byshops of Englande, did not sticke to affirme, that a generall councell might erre. But me think I heare an other man despising all that I haue broughte forth, and saying: these which you haue called counsels, are not worthy to be called counsels, but rather assemblies, & conuenticles of heretickes. I praye you sir, why doe you iudge them worthye of so slaunderous a name? Because (sayth he) they decreed thinges hereticall, contrary to true godlines, and sounde doctrine, and agaynst the faythe of christian religion. The cause is waightye, for the whiche they ought of right so to be called. But if it be so that all counsels ought to be despised, which decree any thing contrary to sound doctrine, and the true word, which is according to godlines, forasmuch as the Masse, * such as we had here of late, is openly agaynst the word of God: forsoothe it must follow of necessitie, that all such counsel•, as haue approoued such masses, ought of right to be <◇> •nd despised, as conuenticles, and assemblies of men <◇> stray from the truth.

An other man alleadgeth vnto me the autho•ity of the Bishop of Rome, without which, * neither ••nne the Counsells (sayth he) be lawfully gathered ney•her being gathered determyne anye thinge concerning Religion. But this obiection is only grounded vpon the ambytious and shameles maintenance of the Romish tirranny, and vsurped dominion ouer the Clergy, which tyranny we Englishe men long agoe, by the consent of the whole Realme, * haue expulsed, and abiured. And how rightely we haue done it, a little booke set forth de vtraque potestate (that is of both the powers) doth clearely shew. I graunt that the Romish ambition hath gone about to challenge to it self & to vsurpe such a priuiledge of old time. But the counsell of Carthage, in the yeare of our Lord 457. did openly withstand it, and also the councell at Milenite,* in the whiche S. Augustine was present, did prohibite any appellations to be made to Byshops beyond the sea.

S. Augustine sayth, the good men are not to be forsaken for the euill,* but the euill are to be borne with all for the good. Ye will not say (I trow) that in our congregations all be euill.

I speake nothing of the goodnes or euilnes of youre Page 1722 congregations:* but I fight in Christes quarrel against the Masse, which doth vtterly take away and ouerthrowe the ordinaunce of Christ. Let that be taken quite awaye, and then the partition of the wall that made the strife, shall be broken down.* Now to the place of S. Austen: for bearing with the euill for the goodes sake, there ought to be added other words, which the same writer hath expressedly in other places, y^t is: if those euill men do cast abroad no seedes of false doctrine, nor lead other to destruction by their example.

It is perillous to attempt any new thing in y^e Church which lacketh example of good men. How much more perillous is it to commit any act, vnto the whiche, the example of the prophetes, of Christ, and of thapostles are contrary.* But vnto this your facte, in abstayning from the Church by reason of the masse, the example of the Prophetes, of Christ, and of thapostles are cleane contrarye. Therefore. &c. The first part of the argument is euident, and the second part I proue thus. In the times of the pro|phetes, of Christ, and his Apostles, all things were most corrupt. The people was miserably geuen to superstition, the priestes despised the law of God: and yet notwithstāding, we neither read that y^e prophets made any schismes or diuisions, and Christ himselfe haunted the temple, and taught in the temple of the Iewes. Peter and Iohn went vp into the temple at the 9. houre of praiere: Paule after the readyng of the lawe, being desired to say something to the people,* did not refuse to doe it. Yea further no man can shewe, that eyther the prophetes, or Christ, and his Apostles did refuse to pray together with others, to sacrifice, or to bee partakers of the Sacramentes of Moses law.

I graunt the former part of your argument, and to the second part I saye,* that although it contayne manye true thinges, as of the corrupt state in the times of the Prophetes, of Christ, and the Apostles, and of the temple being haunted of Christ and his Apostles, yet notwithstanding the second part of your argument is not sufficientlye prooued: For ye ought to haue proued, that eyther the prophetes, eyther Christ or hys Apostles did in the temple communicate with the people in any kind of worshipping which is forbidden by the lawe of God, or repugnaunt to word of God. But that can no where be shewed. And as for the Church I am not angry with it, and I neuer refused to goe to it, and to praye with the people, to heare the word of God, and to do all other things what soeuer may agree with the word of God. S. Augustine speaking of the ceremonies of the Iewes (I suppose in the Epistle ad Ianuarium) although hee graunt they greeuously oppressed that people,* both for the number, and bondage of the same yet he calleth them burdēs of the law, which were deliuered vnto thē in y^e word of God, not presumptions of men, which notwithstanding if they were not contrary to gods word, might alter a sorte be borne withall. But now, seeing they are contrarye to those thinges whiche are in the word of God written, whether they ought to be borne of any Christian or no, let hym iudge whiche is spirituall, which feareth God more thē man, and loueth euerlastinge life, more then this short and transitory lyfe. To that whiche was sayd that my fact lacketh example of the godly fathers that haue gone before,* the contrary is most euident in the historye of Toby. Of whome it is sayd, that when all other went to the golden calves, whiche Hieroboam the king of Israel had made, he himselfe alone fled al their companions,* and gotte hym to Ierusalem, vnto the temple of the Lorde, and there worshipped the Lorde God of Israel. Did not the man of God threatē greuous plagues both vnto the Priestes of Bethell and to the aulter which Hieroboam had there made after his own fantasie? Which plagues king Iosias the true Minister of God did execute at the time appoynted.* And where doe wee reade that the Prophetes, or the Apostles did agree with the people in their Idolatry? whē as the people went a whoring with their hill aulters, for what cause I praye you did the Prophetes rebuke the people so muche, as for theyr false worshipping of God after theyr owne mindes, and not after Gods word? For what was so much as that was? Wherefore the false prophetes ceased not to maligne the true prophetes of God:* therefore they bet them, they banished thē &c. How els I pray you can you vnderstand that Sainct Paule alledgeth,* when he sayth? What concord hath christ with Beliall? Either what part hath the beleuer with the Infidel? or how agreeth the temple of God with images? For ye are the temple of the liuing God as God himselfe hath sayde:* I will dwell among them, and will be theyr God, and they shalbe my people. Wherefore, come out from among them,* and separte your selues from them (saythe the Lorde) and touch none vncleane thinge: so will I receaue you, and wil be a father vnto you, and ye shal be my sonnes and daughters sayth the Lord almighty.

Iudith that holy woman would not suffer herselfe to be defiled with the meates of the wicked.* All the Sayntes of God which truely feared God, when they haue bene prouoked to do any which they knewe to be contrarye to Gods lawes, haue chosen to dye, rather then to forsake the lawes of their God.* Wherefore the Machabees put themselues in daunger of death for the defense of the lawe, yea and at length died manfully in the defense of the same. If we do prayse (sayth S. Augustine) the Machabees, and that with great admiration, because they did stoutly stand euen vnto death, for the lawes of theyr countrey▪ howe muche more ought wee to suffer all thinges for our Baptisme, for the sacramēt of the body and bloud of Christ. &c. But the supper of the Lord, such a one (I meane) as Christ commaundeth vs to celebrate, the Masse vtterly abolysbeth, and corrupteth most shamefully.

Who am I that I shuld adde any thing to this which you haue so well spoken? Nay, I rather thanke you,* that you haue vouchsafed to minister so plentifull armour to me, being otherwise altogether vnarmed, sauing that hee cannot be left destitute of helpe, whiche rightly trusteth in the helpe of God. I onely learne to dye in reading of the new testament, and am euer nowe and then praying vnto my God,* that hee will bee an helper vnto me in tyme of neede.

Seeing you are so obstinately set agaynst the Masse,* that you affirme, because it is done in a tongue not vnderstanded of the people, and for other causes, I cannot tell what: therefore it is not the true sacrament ordayned of Christ: I beginne to suspecte you, that you thinke not catholickely of Baptisme also. Is our Baptisme whiche we do vse in a tongue vnknowne to the people, the true baptisme of Christ or no? If it be, then doth not the straunge tongue hurt the Masse. If it be not the baptisme of Christ, tell me, howe were you baptised? Or whether will yee (as the Anabaptistes do) that al which were baptised in latin, should be baptised agayne in the English tongue?

Although I would wish baptisme to be geuen in the vulgar tongue for the peoples sake which are present, that they may the better vnderstand their owne profession,* and also be more able to teache theyr children the same, yet notwithstanding there is not like necessity of y^e vulgar tongue in baptisme, and in the Lordes supper. Baptisme is geuē to children, who by reason of their age are not able to vnderstand what is spoken vnto them, what tongue soeuer it be. The Lordes supper is, and ought to be geuen to thē that are waxen. Moreouer, in baptisme which is accustomed to be geuen to children in the latine tongue, all the substanciall poyntes (as a man would say) whiche Chryst commaunded to be done, are obserued. And therefore I iudge that baptisme to be a perfect and true baptisme: and that it is not onely not needefull, but also not lawfull for anye man so christened, to be Christened agayne. But yet notwithstanding, they ought to be taught the Catechisme of the christian fayth, when they shall come to yeares of discretion: Which Cathechisme whosoever despiseth, or wyll not desirously embrace and willingly learne, in my iudgement he playeth not the parte of a christian man. But in the popish mass• are wanting certayne substancialles, that is to say, things commaunded by the worde of God to be obserued in ministration of the Lordes supper: of y^t which there is sufficient declaration made before.

Where you say (I would wish) surely I would wishe, that you had spoken more vehemently and to haue sayd it is of necessitie,* that all thinges in the congregation should be done in the vulgar tongue, for the edifying and comfort of them that are present, notwithstanding that y^e childe it selfe is sufficiently baptised in the latin tongue.

For asmuche as I perceaue you are so stiffely, I wyll not say obstinately bente, and so wedded to your opinion, that no gentle exhortations, no holesome counsailes,* no other kinde of meanes can call you home to a better mynde there remayneth that which in like cases was wonte to be the onely remedy against stiffe necked, and stubborne persons, that is, you must be hampered by the lawes, & compelled eyther to obey whether ye will or no, or els to suffer that, which a rebell to the lawes ought to suffer. Doe you not knowe that whosoever refuseth to obey the lawes of the realme, he bewrayeth himselfe to be an enemye to hys countrey? Do you not know that this is the redyest waye to stirre vp sedition, and ciuill warre? It is better y^t you should beare your owne sinne, then that through the example of your breache of the common lawes the common quyet should be disturbed. How can you say, you will be the Queenes true subiect, when as you do openly professe that you will not keepe her lawes?

O heauenly father, the father of all wisdom, vnderstanding, Page 1723 and true strength,* I beseeche thee for thy onely sonne our sauour Christes sake, looke mercifully vppon me wretched creature, and send thine holy spirite into my brest, that not onely I may vnderstand according to thy wisdom,* howe this pestilent and deadly darte is to bee borne of, and with what aunswere it is to be beaten back but also when I must ioyne to fight in the field for y^e glory of thy name, that then I being strengthned with the defense of the right hand, may manfully stand in the confession of thy fayth, and of thy truth, and continue in y^e same vnto the end of my lyfe, thorough the same our Lord Iesus Christ. Amen.

Now to the obiection. I graunt it to bee reasonable, that he whiche by wordes and gentlenes cannot be made yeld to that is right, and good, shoulde be bridleed by the straite correction of the lawes: that is to say, he that wyll not be subiecte to Gods word, must bee punished by the lawes. It is true that is commonly sayd: He that wil not obey the Gospell, must be tamed and taught by the rigour of the law. But these thinges ought to take place agaynst him, whiche refuseth to doe that is right and iust, according to true godlines, not against him, which cannot quietly beare superstitions, but doth ha•e, and detest from his age such kinde of proceedinges, and that for the glorie of the name of God. To that whiche ye say a trangressour of the common lawes bewrayeth himselfe to be an enemye of his countrey, surely a man ought to looke vnto the nature of the lawes, what maner of lawes they be which are broken. For a faythful Christian ought not to thinke alike of all maner of lawes. But that saying ought onely truely to be vnderstanded of suche lawes as be not contrarye to Gods word. Otherwise whosoever loue their countrey in truth (that is to say in God) they will alwayes iudge (if at any time the lawes of God and man be then contrarye to the other) that a man ought rather to obeye God then man.* And they that thinke otherwise, and pretend a loue to their countrey, forasmuche as they make their countrey to fight as it were agaynst God, in whome consisteth the onely stay of that country, surely I do thinke that such are to be iudged most deadly enemies, and traytours to theyr countrey. For they that fight agaynst God, whiche is the safety of their countrey, what doe they els but go about to bryng vpon theyr countrey a present ruine and destruction. But they that doe so are worthy to be iudged enemyes to their countrey, and betrayours of the Realme. Therefore &c.

But this is the redyest way (ye say) to stir vp sedition to trouble the quiet of the common wealth: therefore are these things to be repressed in tyme, by force of lawes. Beholde Sathan doth not cease to practise hys olde guiles, and accustomed subtilities.* Hee hath euer thys darte in a redines to hurle agaynst hys aduersaries, to accuse them of sedition that he may bryng them (if he can) in danger of the higher powers. For so hath hee by his ministers alwayes charged the Prophetes of God. Achab sayde vnto Elias: art thou he that troubleth Israell? The false Prophetes also complayned to theyr Princes of Hieremy, that hys wordes were seditious and not to be suffered: did not the scribes, and Pharisies falsely accuse Christ as a seditious person, and one that spake agaynst Cesar? Did they not at the last cry,* if thou let this man go, you are not Cesars frend? The Oratour Tertullus, how doth he accuse Paule before Felix the high Deputie? We haue found this man (sayth he) a pestilent fellow, & a stirrer of sedition, vn'to all the Iewes in the whole world. &c. But I praye you were these men as they were called seditious persons? Christ, Paule, and the Prophetes? God forbid. But they were of false men falsely accused. And wherefore I praye you but because they reproued before y^e people their giles, superstition, and deceites. And when the other coulde not beare it, and would gladly haue had them taken out of the way, they accused him as seditious persons, and troublers of the common wealthe, that being by this meanes made hatefull to the people, and Princes, they might the more easely be snatched vpp to be tormented, and put to deathe. But howe farre they were from all sedition, their whole doctrine, lyfe and conuersation doth well declare. For that which was obiected last of all, that he cannot be a faythful subiect to hys prince, which professeth openly that he will not obserue the lawes, which the Princes hath made: here I would wish that I might haue an indifferent Iudge, & one that feareth God to whose iudgement in this cause I promise I will stand. I aunswere therefore, a man ought to obey hys Prince, but in the Lord, and neuer agaynst the Lord. For he that knowingly obeyeth his Prince agaynst God, doth not a duety to the Prince, but is a deceauer of the Prince and an helper vnto him to worke his owne destruction. Hee is also vniust whiche geueth not the prince that is the princes, and to GOD that is GODS. Here commeth to my remembraunce, that notable saying of Ualentinianus the Emperoure for choosing the Bishop of Millayne. Set him (saith he) in the Bishoppes seate, to whome if we (as man) do offend at any tyme,* wee may submitte our selues, Policarpus the most constaunt Martyr, when he stode before the chiefe Ruler, and was commaunded to blaspheme Christ, and to sweare by the fortune of Cesar. &c. he aunswered with milde spirite: wee are taught (sayth he) to geue honour vnto Princes, and those powers which be of God: but such honour as is not contrary to Gods religion.

Hither vnto ye see good father, how I haue in words onely made as it were a florisse before the fight, whiche I shortly looke after, and how I haue begonne to prepare certayne kindes of weapons, to fight agaynst the aduersary of Christ, and to inuse with my selfe, how the da•s of the olde enemy may bee borne of,* and after what sorte I may smite him againe with the sword of the spirit. I learn also hereby to be in vre with armour, and to assaye howe I can go armed. In Tindall where I was borne, not far from the Scottish borders, I haue knowne my countreyemen to watch night and day in theyr harnes, suche as they had, that is in theyr lackes, & theyr speares in their hands (you call them northern gads) specially when they had any priuy warning of the comming of the Scottes. And so doing, although at euery such bickerings some of them spent their liues, yet by such meanes like prettye men they defended their countrey, And those that so dyed, I thynke that before God they dyed in a good quarrell, and theyr ofspring and progeny all the countrey loued them the better for theyr fathers sake. And in the quarrell of Christ our sauour, in the defense of his owne diuine ordinaunces, by the which he geueth vnto vs lyfe and immortalitie, yea, in the quarrell of fayth, and christian religion, wherein resteth our euerlasting saluation, shall wee not watche?* shall wee not go alwayes armed? euer looking when our aduersary (whiche like a roaring Lyon seeketh whome hee may deuour) shall come vpon vs by reason of oure slouthfulnes? yea, and woe be vnto vs,* if he can oppresse vs vnawares whiche vndoubtedly hee will doe, if he finde vs sleepyng. Let vs awake therefore. For if the good man of the house knew what houre the theefe would come, he would surely watch & not suffer his house to be brokē vp. Let vs awake therfore I say: Let vs not suffer our house to be brokē vp.* Resist the deuill, sayth S. Iames, & he will flee frō you. Let vs therefore resist him manfully, and taking the crosse vpon our shoulders, let vs followe our captayne Christ who by hys owne blood hath dedicated and hallowed the way whiche leadeath vnto the father, that is,* to the light which no man can attayne, the fountayn of the euerlasting ioyes. Let vs follow I say, whether hee calleth & allureth vs, that after these afflictions which last but for a moment whereby he tryeth our fayth as gold by the fire, we may euerlastingly raygne and triumph with him in the glory of the father, and that through the same our Lord and sauior Iesus Christe, to whome with the father and the holye Ghost be all honour and glory nowe and for euer. Amen. Amen.

Good father, forasmuche as I haue determined wyth my selfe, to poure forth these my cogitations into your bosome, here me thinketh I see you sodainly lifting vp your head towardes heauen, after youre maner, and then looking vpon me with your propheticall countenaunce, and speaking vnto me, with these or like woordes. Trust not my sonne (I beseethe you vouchsafe me the honour of this name:) for in so doing I shall thinke my selfe both honoured, and loued of you.) Trust not I say my sonne to these worde weapons: for the kingdom of God is not in words but in power. And remember alwayes the wordes of the Lord: do not imagine afore hand, what and how you wil speake. For it shall be geuen you, euen in that same houre what ye shall speake. For it is not ye that speake, but y^e spirite of your father which speaketh in you. I pray you therfore father, pray for me, that I may cast my whole care vppon him, & trust vpon him in all perils. For I know, and am surely perswaded,* that whatsoever I can imagine or think afore hand, it is nothing, except he assist me with his spirite when the tyme is. I beseeche you therefore Father, pray for me, that such a complet harnes of the spirite, such boldnes of minde may be geuen vnto me,* that I may out of a true faith say with Dauid. I wil not trust in my bow, and it is not my sword, y^t shal saue me. For he hath no plesure in the strength of an horse. &c. But the Lordes delight is in them that feare him and put theyr trust in his mer•y. I beseech you pray, pray, that I may enter this fight only in the name of God, and that when all is past, I being not ouercome through his gracious ayde, may remayne, Page 1724 and stand fast in him, till that day of the Lord, in y^t which to them that obtayne the victorie,* shall be geuen the liuely Manna to eate,* and a triumphant Crowne for euermore.

Now Father, I pray you helpe me to buckle on thys geare a little better. For ye know the deepenes of Sathan being an olde souldiar, and you haue collored with him or now: blessed be God, that hath euer ayded you so well. I suppose he may well hold you at the baye. But truly hee will not be so willing (I thinke) to ioyn with you, as with vs younglinges.*

Syr I beseeche you, let your seruaunt reade this my babling vnto you, and now and then as it shal seeme vnto you best, let your pen runne on my booke: spare not to blotte my paper. I geue you good leaue.

Syr I haue caused my man not onely to reade youre armour vnto me, but also to write it out. For it is not only no bare armure, but also well buckled armure. I see not how it coulde be better. I thanke you euen from the bottome of my hart for it, and my prayer shall you not lacke trusting that you doe the like for me. For in deede there is the helpe. &c, Many thinges make confusion in memory. And if I were as well learned as saint Paule, I woulde not bestow much amongst them: further then to gaul thē, and spurgal too, when and where as occasion were geuen and matter came to minde: for the lawe shalbe their shote anchor, staye, and refuge. Therefore there is no remedye, namely, now whē they haue y^e maister bowle in their hand and rule y^e roste, but pacience. Better it is to suffer what cruelly they wil put vnto vs, then to incurre Gods high indignation. Wherefore good my Lord be of good cheare in the Lord, with due consideration what hee requireth of you, and what he doth promise you. Our common enemy shall do no more then God will permit him. God is faithfull, which wil not suffer vs to be tēpted aboue our strēgth &c. Be at a poynt what ye wil stand vnto: sticke vnto that and let them both say and do what they list. They can but kil the body, whiche otherwise is of it selfe mortall. Neyther yet shal they do that when they list, but when God wil suffer them, when the houre appoynted is come. To vse many wordes with them it shal be but in vayne, nowe that they haue a bloudy and deadly lawe prepared for thē. But it is very requisite that ye geue a reasonable accompt of your fayth,* if they wil quietly heare you, els ye knowe in a wicked place of iudgement a man may keepe silence, after the example of Christ. Let them not deceiue you with their sophistical Sophismes and fallacies you knowe that false thinges may haue more apparence of truth,* then thin'ges that be most true: therefore Paule geueth vs a watchē worde. Let no man deceiue you with likelines of speache. Neither is it requisite that with the contentious ye shulde follow strife of wordes,* which tend to no edification, but to the subuersion of the hearers, and the vayne braggyng and ostentation of the aduersaries. Feare of deathe doth most perswade a great number. Be well ware of that argument: for that perswaded Shaxton (as manye menne thought) after that he had once made a good profession, openly before the iudgement seate. The flesh is weake, but the willingnes of the spirite shal refresh the weakenesse of the fleshe.

The number of the cryars vnder the aultar must needs be fulfilled: if we be segregated thereunto, happy be wee. That is the greatest promotion that God geueth in thys world,* to be such Phillippians to whome it is geuen, not only to beleue, but also to suffer. &c. But who is able to do these thinges? Surely all our habilitie, all our sufficiencie is of God.* He requireth and promiseth. Let vs declare our obedience to his wil, when it shalbe requisite, in the ryme of trouble, yea in the midst of the fire.

When that number is fulfilled, which I weene shalbe shortly, then haue at the papists, when they shal say peace al things are safe,* when Christ shal come to keep his great Parliament to the redresse of al things that be amisse. But he shal not come as the papistes fayne him, to hide himself and to play bo piepe as it were vnder a peece of bread: but he shal come gloriously,* to the terrour and feare of all Papistes: but to the great consolation and comfort of all that wil here suffer for him. Comfort your selues one an other with these wordes.

Lo syr, here I haue blotted youre paper vaynely, and played y^e foole egregiously: but so I thought better thē not to doe your request at this time. Pardon me and praye for me: pray for me I say, pray for me I saye. For I am some time so feareful, that I would creep vnto a mouse hoale: some time God doth visite me agayne with his comforte. So he commeth and goeth, to teache me to feel & to know mine infirmitie to thintent to geue thanks to him that is worthy,* least I shuld rob hym of hys duety, as many do, & almost al the world. Fare you well.

What credence is to be geuē to papists it may appeare by their racking, writhing, wrinching, and mōstrously iniuryng of Gods holy scripture, as appeareth in the popes law. But I dwell here now in a schole of obliuiousnesse. Fare you well once agayne, and be you steadfast and vn'moueable in the Lord. Paule loued Timothy meruelous well, notwithstanding he sayth vnto him. Be thou partetaker of the afflictions of the Gospell: and agayne. Harden thy selfe to suffer afflictions. Bee faythfull vnto the death, and I wyll geue thee a Crowne of life sayth the Lorde.

Here followeth the letters of the reuerend Byshop and Martyr, Nicholas Ridley.

A letter sent from Bishop Ridley and his prison fellowes, vnto M. Bradford, and his prison fellowes in the Kynges Benche in Southwarke. an. 1554.

Well beloued in Christ our sauour, we all with one hart wish to you,* with all those y^t loue God in deede and truth, grace, and health, and especially to oure dearely beloued companions which are in Christes cause, and the cause both of theyr brethren and of theyr own saluation, to put their neck willingly vnder the yoke of Christes crosse. How ioyfull it was to vs to heare the reporte of Doctour Taylour and of hys godly confession. &c. I ensure you, it is hard for me to expresse.

Blessed be God, whiche was and is the geuer of that, and of all godly strength and stomacke in the tyme of aduersitie. As for the rumours that haue or doe goe abroad,* eyther of our relenting or massing, we trust that they whiche knowe God and their duety towards theyr brethren in Christ, will not be too light of credence. For it is not the slaunders euill tongue, but a mans euill deede that can with God defile a man: and therefore with Gods grace, ye shall neuer haue other cause to do otherwise then ye say ye do, y^t is not to doubt, but that we wi^l, by Gods grace, continue, &c. Like rumour as yee haue heard of our comming to London, hath bene here spread of the comming of certayne learned men, prisoners, hither from London: but as yet wee knowe no certaintie whether of these rumours is, or shalbe more true. Know you that wee haue you in our dayly remembraunce, and wishe you and al the rest of our foresayd companions, well in Christ.

It shuld do vs much comfort,* if we might haue know|ledge of the state of the rest of oure most dearely beloued, which in this troublesome tyme do stand in Christes cause and in the defence of y^e truth thereof. Somewhat we haue heard of mayster Hoopers matter: but of the rest neuer a deale. We long to heare of father Crome, Doctor Sandys M. Saunders, Ueron, Beacon, Rogers. &c. wee are in good health, thanks be to God, and yet the maner of our entreating doth chaunge as sowre ale doth in summer. It is reported to vs of our keepers, that the Uniuersitie beareth vs heauily.* A cole chaunced to fall in the night out of the chimney, and burnt a hole in the floore: and no more harme was done, the Balyffes seruauntes sitting by the fire. An other night there chaunced (as mayster Bailiffes told vs) a dronken fellow to multiply wordes, and for the same he was set in Bocardo. Upon these things (as is reported) there is risen a rumour in the towne and country about, that we should haue broken the prison with such violence, as if mayster Bayliffes had not playde the prettye men, we should haue made a scape. We had out of our pryson a wall that we might haue walked vpon, and our seruauntes had libertie to goe abroad in the towne or fieldes but now both they and we are restrayned of both.

My Lord of Worcester passed by through Oxford, but he did not visite vs.* The same day beganne our restraynt to be more, and the booke of the Communion was taken from vs by the Bayliffes, at the Maiors commaundement, as the Bayliffes did report to vs. No man is licensed to come vnto vs: afore they might, that woulde see vs vppon the wall: but that is so grudged at, and so euill reported, that we are now restrayned. &c. Sir, blessed be god with all our euill reportes, grudges, and restrayntes, we are merry in God, and all our cure and care is and shall be (by Gods grace) to please and serue him, of whom we look and hope after this temporal and momentany miseries, to haue eternall ioye and perpetuall felicitie with Abraham,* Isaac, and Iacob, Peter, and Paule, and all the heauenly company of the Aungels in heauen, through Iesus Christ our Lord. As yet there was neuer learned man, nor anye scholer, or other that visited vs since we came into Bocardo, which nowe in Oxforde may be called a Colledge of Page 1725Quondams. For as ye know, wee be no fewer then three and I dare say, euery one wel contented with his portion which I do reckē to be our heauenly fathers fatherly good and gracious gift. Thus fare you well. We shal by Gods grace one day meete together, and be merry. The day assuredly approacheth apace: The Lorde graunt that it maye shortly come. For before that daye come, I feare me the world will waxe worse and worse. But then all our enemies shalbe ouerthrowne and troden vnder foote: righteousnes and truth then shall haue the victory, and beare the bell away, whereof the Lorde graunt vs to be partakers and al that loueth truely the truth.

We al pray you, as ye can, to cause all our commendations to be made to all such as ye know did visite vs and you, when we were in the Tower, with their frendly remembraunces and benefites. Maistresse Wilkenson and maistresse Warcup haue not forgottē vs, but euer since we came to Bocardo, with their charitable and frendly beneuolence haue comforted vs:* not that els we did lacke (for God be blessed, he euer hitherto hath prouided sufficiently for vs (but that is a great comfort, and an occasion for vs to blesse God, when we see that he maketh them so frendly to tender vs, whom some of vs were neuer familiarly acquaynted withall.

Yours in Christ Nich Ridley.

¶Letter of mayster Ridley, sent to a Cosin of his.

*Gods holy spirite be with you now and euer. Amen.

When I call to remembraunce (beloued Cosin) the state of those that for feare of trouble, eyther for losse of goods, wil do in the sight of the world those thinges that they know and are assured are contrary to the wyll of God,* I can do no lesse but lamēt theyr case, being assured the end thereof will be so pittifull (without speedy repentaunce) that I tremble and feare to haue it in remembraunce. I would to God it lay vpon some earthly burden so that freedome of conscience might be geuen vnto them. I wrote (as God knoweth) not of presumption, but onely lamenting the state of those, whome I thought now in this dangerous time should haue geuen both you and me comfortable instructions. But (alas) in steade thereof we haue instructions to folow (I lament me to rehearse it) superstitious Idolatrye. Yea, and that woorst of all is, they wil seeke to proue it by the Scriptures. The Lord for his mercy turne their hartes. Amen. Commend me. &c.

Yours, Nicholas Ridley.

¶To Mayster Bradford.

BRother Bradford, I wishe you and your company in Christ,* yea and al the holy brotherhood that now with you in diuers prisons suffereth and beareth paciētly christes crosse for the mayntenance of his Gospell, grace, mercy and peace from God the father, and from our Lord Iesus Christ.

Sir, considering the state of this chiuallrie and warfare wherin I doubt not but we be set to fight vnder Christes banner,* and his crosse agaynst our ghostly enemy y^e deuill and the old serpent Satan, me thinke I perceiue 2. thinges to be hys most perilous and moste daungerous engynes whiche he hath to impugne Christes veritie, hys gospell, and hys fayth: and the same two also to be the most massy postes, and most mightye pillars, whereby hee mayntayneth and vpholdeth his Satanical sinagogue. These two, sir are they, in my iudgement: the one, his false doctrine & idolatrical vse of the Lordes supper, and the other, y^t wicked and abhominable vsurpation of the premacy of y^e See of Rome. By these two Satan seemeth to me principally to mayntayne and vphold hys kingdome: by these two he driueth downe mightily (alas) I feare me, the third parte of the stars in heauen. These two poysonfull rotten posts he hath so paynted ouer with such a pretense and colour of Religion, of vnitie in Christes Church, of the Catholicke fayth, and such like, that the wily serpent is able to deceiue (if it were possible) euen the elect of God. Wherefore Iohn sayd not without great cause: If any know not Satans subtleties and the profundities thereof, I will wishe him no other burden to be laden withall.

Syr, because these be hys principall and mayne postes whereupon standeth all his falsehoode, crafte, and trechery, therefore according to y^e poore power that God hath geuen me, I haue bended mine artillery to shoote at y^e same. I knowe it to be but little (God knoweth) that I can doe and of my shotte I knowe they passe not. Yet I will not (God willing) cease to doe the best that I can, to shake those cankered and rotten postes. The Lorde graunt me good successe, to the glory of hys name, and y^e furtherance of Christes Gospell. I haue now already (I thanke God) for this present tyme spent a good parte of my ponder in these scriblings,* wherof this bearer shal geue you knowledge. Good brother Bradford, let the wicked surmise and say what they list, know you for a certaintie, by GODS grace, without all doubt, that in Christes Gospelles cause agaynst and vpon the foresayd Gods enemies, I am fully determined to liue and dye. Fare well deare brother, and I beseeche you and al the rest of our brethren, to haue good remembraunce of the condemned heretiques (as they call them) of Oxford, in your prayers. The bearer shall certifie you of our state. Farewell in the Lorde. From Bocardo.

Yours in Christ Nicholas Ridley.

An other letter of Mayster Ridley, vnto Mayster Bradforde and other his prison fellowes. An. 1555.

DEarely beloued, I wish you grace, mercy, and peace.*

According to your minde. I haue runne ouer all your papers, and what I haue done (which is but small) therein may appeare. In two places I haue put in two loose leaues. I had muche adoe to read that was written in your great leaues, and I weene some where I haue altered some words,* because I could not read perfectly that which was written. Sir, what shall best be done w^t these thinges, now ye must consider: for if they come in sight at this time, vndoubtedly they must to the fire with theyr father: and as for any safegard that your custody can be vnto them, I am sure you looke not for it. For as you haue bene partner of the worke, so I am sure you looke for none other, but to haue and receiue like wages, and to drynke of the same cup. Blessed be God that hath geuen you liberty in the meane season, that you may vse your penne to hys glory, and the comforte (as I heare say) of many. I blesse God dayly in you, and all your whole company, to whom I beseeche you commend me hartily. Nowe I loue my country man in deed & in trueth,* I meane Doctor Taylor not for my earthly cuntryes sake, but for oure heauenlye fathers sake, and for Christes sake, whome I heard say, he did so stoutly in tyme of perill confesse, and yet also for our cuntryes sake and for all our mothers sake,: but I mean of the kingdome of heauen, and of heauenly Hierusalem, and because of the spirite, whiche bringeth in hym, in you, and in your company such blessed frutes of boldnes in the Lords cause, of pacience, and constancie. The Lord which hath begun this work in you all, performe and perfite this his owne deede, vntill his owne day come. Amen.

As yet I perceauē yee haue bene not bayted, and the cause therof God knoweth, which wil let thē doe no more to his, then is his pleased will and pleasure to suffer them to doe for his owne glory, and to the profite of them which be truely his. For the father whiche doth guide them that be Christes to Christ, is more mighty then all they, and no man is able to pul thē out of the fathers handes: except I saye, it please our father, it please our mayster Christe to suffer them, they shall not stirre one heare of your heades.

My brother P. the bearer hereof, and mayster Hoopers letters woulde that we shoulde saye what we thinke good concerning your * minde, that is, not for to answeere except ye might haue somewhat indifferent Iudges. We are (as yee knowe) separated, and one of vs cannot in any thing consult with an other, and much strayte watching of the Baliffes is about vs, that there be no priuie conference amongst vs. And yet as wee heare, the scholers beareth vs more heauily then the townesmen. A wonderfull thing, among so many, neuer yet scholler offered to any of vs (so farre as I know) any maner of fauor, eyther for or in Christes cause.

Nowe as concerning your demaund of our counsell, for my part I do not mislike that which I perceiue ye are minded to do. For I looke for none other, but if ye aunswere afore the same Commissioners that we did, ye shall be serued and handled as we were, though ye were as wel learned as euer was either Peter or Paule. And yet further I thinke, that occasion afterward may be geuen you, and the consideration of the profite of your auditory may perchaunce moue you to do otherwise.

Finally, determinetely to say what shalbe best, I am not able, but I trust he, whose cause ye haue in hand, shall put you in minde to do that which shalbe most for his glory, the profite of his flock, and your owne saluation. This letter must be common to you and Maister Hooper, in whome and in his prison fellowe good father C. I blesse God, euen from the bottome of my hart: for I doubt not but they both doe to our maister Christ, true, acceptable, and honourable seruice, and profitable to his flocke: the one with his penne, and the other w^t his fatherly example Page 1726 of pacience and constancie, and all manner of true godlinesse. But what shall I neede to say to you: Let thys be common among your brethrē, among whom (I dare say) it is with you as it is with vs,* to whome all things heere are common, meat, mony, and whatsoeuer one of vs hath that, can or maye doe an other good. Althoughe, I sayde the Bailiffes and our Hostesse straitly watche vs, that we haue no conference or intelligence of anye thinge abroad, yet hath God prouided for euery one of vs, in steade of our seruauntes, faithfull fellowes, whyche will be content to heare and see, and to doe for vs what soeuer they can. It is Gods worke surely, blessed be God for his vnspeakable goodnesse. The grace of oure Lorde Iesus Christe, and the loue of God, and the communication of the holy Ghost be with you all. Amen. Amen.

*As farre as London is from Oxforde, yet thence wee haue receiued of late, both meate, money, and shyrts, not onely from suche as are of our acquaintaunce, but of some (whome thys bearer can tell) with whome I hadde neuer to my knowledge any acquaintance. I knowe for whose sake they doe it: to him therefore be all honor, glory, and due thanks.

And yet I pray you do so much as to shewe them that we haue receiued theyr beneuolence, and (God be blessed) haue plentie of al such things. This I desire you to do: for I know they be of M. Hoopers, & your familiar acquaintaunce. Maister Latimer was crased: but I heare now, (thanks be to God) that he amendeth againe.

Nicholas Ridley.

An other Letter of Maister Ridley vnto Maister Bradford.

OH deare brother, seeing the time is now come, wherein it pleaseth the heauenly father,* for Christe our sauour his sake, to call vpon you, and to bid you to come, happie are you that euer you were borne, thus to be found awake at the lords calling. Euge serue bone & fidelis: quia super pauca fuisti fidelis, super multa te constituet, & intrabis in gaudium Domini. i. Wel good seruaunt and faithful, because thou hast ben trusty in small matters, he shall set thee ouer great things, & thou shalt enter into the ioye of thy Lorde.

O deare brother, what meaneth thys, that you are sent into your owne natie countrey? The wisdom and policie of the worlde may meane what they will, but I trust, God will so order the matter finally by his fatherly prouidence, that some great occasion of Gods gracious goodnesse shal be plenteously powred abroad amongst his, our deare brethren in that country, by this your martyrdome, where the Martyrs for Christes sake shed their bloud, and lost their liues. O what wonderous things hath Christe afterward wrought to his glory, and confirmation of their doctrine? If it be not the place that sanctifieth the man, but the holy man doth by Christe sanctifie the place: Brother Bradford, then happy and holy shalbe that place, wherein thou shalt suffer, and shalt be with thy ashes in Christes cause sprinkled ouer withall. All thy countrey may reioyce of thee, that euer it brought forth such a one, which would render his life againe in his cause, of whome he had receiued it. Brother Bradford, so long as I shall vnderstande thou art in thy iourney, by Gods grace I shall call vpon our heauenly Father for Christes sake, to sette thee safely home: and then good brother speake you, and praye for the remnant that are to suffer for Christes sake, according to that thou then shalt know more clearly.

We do loke now euery day when we shalbe called on: blessed be God. I weene I am the weakest many wayes of our companie: and yet I thanke oure Lorde God and heauenly Father by Christ, that since I heard of our deare brother Rogers departing, and stout confession of Christe and his truth euen vnto y^e death,* my heart (blessed be God) reioyced of it, that since that time, I say, I neuer fealt any lumpish heauinesse in my heart, as I graunt I haue fealt sometimes before. O good brother, blessed be God in thee, and blessed be the time that euer I knewe thee. Farewell, farewell.

Your brother in Christ, Nicholas Ridley. Brother farewell.

To the brethren remaining in captiuitie of the flesh, and dispearsed abroad in sundry prisonnes, but knit together in vnity of spirit and holy Religion in the bowels of the Lorde Iesu.

GRace, peace & mercye be multiplied among you. What worthy thanks can we render vnto the Lorde for you my brethren,* namely for y^e great cōsolation which through you we haue receiued in the Lorde, who notwithstanding the rage of Sathan that goeth about by all maner of subtil meanes to beguile the worlde, and also bu•l• laboreth to restore and set vp his kingdome againe, y^t of late began to decay and fall to ruine: ye remaine yet stil 〈◇〉, as men surely grounded vpon a strong rocke. And nowe, albeit that sathan by his souldiors and wicked ministers, daily (as we heare) draweth numbers vnto hym, so that it is sayd of him that he plucketh euen the very starres out of heauen, whiles hee driueth into some men th• feare of death and losse of all their goods, and sheweth and offereth to other some the pleasaunt baites of the worlde, namelye riches, wealth, and all kinde of delightes and pleasures, faire houses, great reuenues, •at benefices, and what not? and all to the intent they should fall downe & worship, not the Lorde, but the Dragon the olde Serpent, whych is the deuil, that great beast and his image,* and should be in•iced to commit fornication with the strompet of Babilon, together wyth the kings of the earth, wyth the lesser beast, and with the false Prophetes, and so to reioyce and be pleasant wyth her, and to be drunken wyth the wine of her fornication: yet blessed be God the Father of oure Lorde Iesus Christe, which hath geuen vnto you a manly courage,* and hath so strengthened you in the inwarde man by the power of his spirite, that you can contemne as well all the terrours, as also the vaine flatteringe allurements of the worlde, esteeming them as vanities, mere trifles, & things of nought: Who hath also wroughte, planted, and surely stablished in your hearts so stedfast a fayth and loue of the Lorde Iesus Christe, ioyned with such constancie, that by no engines of Antichriste, be they neuer so terrible or plausible, yee will suffer any other Iesus or any other Christ to be forced vpon you▪ besides him whom the Prophet▪ haue spoken of before, y^e Apostles haue preached, the holy Martyrs of God haue cōfessed and testified with the effusion of their blood.

In thys Faith stand ye fast my brethren and suffer not your selues to be brought vnder the yoke of bondage and superstition any more. For ye know, brethren, howe y^t our sauour warned his beforehand, that such shoulde come as would poynt vnto the world an other Christ, and woulde set him out wyth so many fals myracles,* and with such deceiueable and subtyll practises, that euen the very electe (if it were possible) should be thereby deceiued: such strong delusion to come, did our Sauour geue warning of before:. But continue ye faithful and constant, and be of good comfort, & remember that our graund captaine hath ouercome the world: for he that is in vs, is stronger then he that is in the world, and the Lorde promiseth vnto vs, that for the elects sake, the daies of wickednes shall be shortned. In the meane season abide ye & endure with patience as ye haue begun: endure I say, and reserue your selues vnto better times, as one of the heathen Poetes said,* cease not to shew yourselues valiant Soldiours of the Lorde, and helpe to maintaine the traueilling faith of the Gospell.

Yee haue neede of patience, that after ye haue done the wil of God, ye may receiue the promises. For yet a very litle while, and he that shall come will come, and wil not tarie, and the iust shall liue by faith: but if anye withdrawe him selfe▪*my soule shall haue no pleasure in him (sayth the Lorde.) But we are not they which doe withdrawe oure selues vnto damnation,but beleuee vnto the saluation of the soule. Let vs not suffer these woordes of Christ to fall out of our hearts by any manner of terrours or threatnings of the worlde. Feare not them which kil the body: the rest ye know. For I wryte not vnto you, as to menne which are ignoraunt of the truth, but which know the truthe, and to this ende onely, that we agreeing together in one faith, may take comfort one of an other, and be the more confirmed and strengthened thereby. We neuer had a better or more iust cause either to contemne our life or shed our blood:. we can not take in hande the defence of a more certaine, cleare, and manifest truthe. For it is not any ceremonie for the which we contend, but it toucheth the very substance of our whole Religion, yea, euen Christ him selfe. Shall we,* either can we receiue and acknowledge any other Christe in steade of hym, who is alone the euerlasting sonne of the euerlasting Father, and is the brightnesse of the glory, and liuely image of the substaunce of the Father, in whome onely dwelleth corporally the fulnesse of the Godhead, who is the onely waye, the truth and the life? Let such wickednesse (my brethren) lette such horrible wickednesse be farre from vs. For althoughe there be that are called Gods, whether in heauen either in earth, as there be many Gods and many Lordes, yet vnto vs there is but one God, which is the Father, of whome are al things, and we in him, and one Lord Iesus Christ, by whome are all things, and wee by him: but euery man hath not knowledge. This is life eternal (sayth S. Iohn) that they know thee to be the onely true God,*and whome thou haste Page 1727 sent, Iesus Christ. If any therfore would force vpon vs any other GOD, besides him whom Paule and the Apostles haue taughte, let vs not heare him, but let vs flee frō him, and hold him accursed.

Brethren, ye are not ignorant of the deepe and profoūd subtleties of Satan: * for he will not cease to raunge about you, seking by all meanes possible whom he may deuour: but play ye the men, and be of good comfort in the Lorde. And albeit your enemies and the aduersaries of the truth, armed with all worldly force and power that may be, doe set vppon you: yet be not ye faynt harted, nor shrinke not therfore: but trust vnto your Captayne Christ, trust vnto the spirit of truth, & trust to the truth of your cause: which, as it may by the malice of satan be darckened, * so can it neuer be cleane put out. For we haue (high prayse be geuen to God therfore) most playnely, euidently, and clearely on our side, all the Prophets, all the Apostles, and vndoubted^{ly} all the auncient Ecclesiastical writers which haue writtan, vntill of late yeares past.

Let vs bee hartye and of good courage therefore, and throughlye comforte our selues in the Lorde. Bee in no wise afrayd of your aduersaries: for that which is to them an occasion of perdition, is to you a sure token of saluatiō, and that of GOD. For vnto you it is geuen, that not onely ye shoulde beleeeue on hym, but also suffer for hys sake. * And when ye are rayled vppon for the name of Christe, remember that by the voyce of Peter, yea, and of Christe our Sauour also, ye are counted with the Prophetes, with the Apostles, and with the holy Martyrs of Christ, happy and blessed therefore: for the glory and spirit of God resteth vpon you.

On their part our Sauour Christe is euill spoken of, but on your part he is gloryfied. For what can they els do vnto you by persecuting you, and working al crueltie & villanie agaynst you, * but make your crownes more glorious, yea beautifie & multiply the same, & heape vpon them selues the horrible plagues and heauy wrath of God: and therfore good brethrē, though they rage neuer so fiercely against vs, yet let vs not wish euill vnto thē againe, knowing that whiles for Christes cause they vexe and persecute vs, they are lyke mad men, most outrageous and cruell agaynst them selues, heaping hot burning coles vpon their owne heades: but rather let vs wish well vnto thē, knowing that we are thereunto called in Christe Iesu, * that we should be heyres of the blessing. Let vs pray therefore vnto God, that he would driue out of their harts this darkenes of errours, & make the light of his truth to shine vnto thē, that they acknowledging their blindnes, may with al humble repentance be conuerted vnto the Lord, & together with vs confesse hym to be the onely true God, which is the father of light, & his onely sonne Iesus Christ, worshipping him in spirit and veritie. Amen. The spirit of our Lord Iesus Christ comfort your hartes in the loue of God and pacience of Christ. Amen.

Your brother in the Lord, whose name this bearer shall signifie vnto you, ready alwayes by the grace of God, to liue and die with you.

¶ To the brethren which constantly cleaue vnto Christ in suffering affliction with him, and for his sake.

* Grace and peace from God the father, and frō our Lord Iesus Christ be multiplied vnto you. Amen.

Although brethren, we haue of late heard nothing from you, neither haue at this present any newes to send you: yet we thought good something to write vnto you, wherby ye might vnderstand that we haue good remembraunce of you continually, as we doubt not but ye haue of vs also. When this messenger comming vnto vs from you of late, had brought vs good tidings of your great constancie, fortitude,* and patience in the Lord: we were filled with much ioy & gladnes, geuing thanks to God the father through our Lord Iesus Christe, which hath caused his face so to shine vpon you, and with the light of spirituall vnderstanding hath so lightened your hartes, that now being in captiuitie & bandes for Christes cause, ye haue not ceased, as much as in you lyeth, by wordes, but much more by deede and by your example, to stablysh and confirme that thing, which when ye were at libertie in the world, ye laboured to publish and set abroad by the word and doctrine: that is to say, holding fast the worde of life, ye shine as lightes in the worlde in the midst of a wicked and crooked nation, and that with so much the greater glory of our Lord Iesus Christe,* and profite of your brethren, by how much Satan more cruelly now rageth and busily laboureth to darken the light of the Gospel.

And as for the darkenes that Satan nowe bringeth vpon the Church of England, who needeth to doubt therof? Of late tyme our Sauour Christe, his Apostles,* Prophetes, and Teachers, spake in the Temple to the people of England in the Englishe tongue, so that they might be vnderstanded playnly and without any hardnesse, of the godly and such as sought for heauenly knowledge in matters whiche of necessitie of saluation perteyned to the obteyning of eternall life: but now those thinges which once were written of them for the edifiyng of the congregation, are read in a strange tongue without interpretatiō, manifestly agaynst saint Paules commaundement, so that there is no man able to vnderstand them which hath not learned that strange and vnknownen tongue.

Of late dayes those heauenly mysteries, whereby Christe hath ingrafted vs into his body,* and hath vnited vs one to another, whereby also being regenerate & borne anew vnto God, he hath nourished, encreased, and strengthened vs, whereby moreouer, eyther he hath taught and set foorth an order amongst them which are whole, or els to the sicke in soule or body hath geuen, as it were wholesome medicines and remedies: those (I say) were al plainlye set foorth to the people in their owne language, so that what great and exceeding good thinges euery man had receiued of God: what duetie euery one owed to an other by Gods ordinaunce: what euery one had professed in his vocation, and was bound to obserue: where remedy was to be had for the wicked and feeble, he to whom God had geuen a desire and willing hart to vnderstand those thinges, might soone perceiue and vnderstand. But now all these thinges are taught & set forth in such sort, that the people redeemed with Christes blood, and for whose sakes they were by Christe himselfe ordeined, can haue no maner of vnderstanding thereof at all.

Of late, (for as much as we knowe not how to pray as we ought) our Lorde Iesus Christe in his Prayer, wherof he would haue no man ignoraūt, and also the holy Ghost in the Psalmes, Hymnes,* and spirituall songes which are set foorth in the Bible, did teache and instructe all the people of Englande in the Englyshe tongue, that they might aske such thinges as are according to the will of the Father, and might ioine their hartes and lyppes in prayer together: but nowe all these thynges are commaunded to be hid and shutte vp from them in a straunge tongue, whereby it must needes followe, that the people neyther can tell how to pray, nor what to pray for: and how can they ioine their hartes and voyce together, whē they vnderstande no more what the voyce signifieth, than a brute beast.

Finally, I heare say, that the Catechisme whiche was lately set foorth in the Englyshe tongue, is now in euery Pulpite condemned. O deuilish malice, and most spitefully iniurious to y^e saluation of mankinde purchased by Iesus Christe. In deede Satan coulde not long suffer that so great light should be spread abrode in y^e world: he sawe well enough that nothing was able to ouerthrow his kingdome so much, as if childrē being godly instructed in Religion, should learne to knowe Christe whilst they are yet young: whereby not onely chyl dren, but the elder sort also and aged folkes that before were not taught to know Christe in their childehood, shoulde now euen with children and babes be forced to learne to know him. Now therefore he roreth, now he rageth. But what els do they (brethren) which serue Satan and become his ministers & slaues in mainteining of his impietie, but euen the same which they did, to whom Christ our Sauour threatneth this curse in the Gospell: Woe vnto you which shutte vp the kingdome of heauen before men,* & take away the key of knowledge from them: you your selues haue not entred in, neither haue you suffered them that would enter, to come in.

And from whence shall we say (brethren) that this horrible & mischeuous darknes proceedeth,* which is now brought vpon the worlde? From whence I pray you, but euen from the smoke of the great furnace of y^e bottomlesse pit, so that the sunne and the ayre are now darkened by the smoke of the pit? Now, euen now (out of doubt brethren) the pit is opened agaynst vs, and the Locustes begyn to swarme, and Abbadon now raigneth.

Ye therfore (my brethren) which pertaine vnto Christ, and haue the seale of God marked in your foreheades, that is to wit, are sealed with y^e earnest of the spirite to be a peculiar people of God, quite your selues like men, and be strong, for he that is in vs, is stronger then he which is in the world: and ye know, that al that is borne of God ouercommeth the world, and this is our victory that ouercommeth the worlde, euen our fayth. Let the world freat, let it rage neuer so much, be it neuer so cruel and bloody, yet be ye sure that no man can take vs out of the fathers handes, for he is greater then all: who hath not spared his owne Page 1728 sonne, but hath geuen him to death for vs all, and therefore how shall he not with him geue vs all thinges also? Who shall lay any thyng to the charge of Gods elect? It is God that iustifieth, who shall then condemne? It is Christ that is dead, yea rather which is risen againe, who is also at the right hand of God, and maketh request also for vs. Who shall seperate vs from the loue of Christe? Shall tribulation,* or anguish, or persecution, or famine, or nakednes, or perill, or sworde? the rest ye knowe, brethren. We are certainly perswaded with S. Paul, by the grace of our Lorde Iesus Christe, that no kynde of thyng shalbe able to seperate vs from the loue of God which is in Christ Iesus our Lord. Which thyng, that it may come to passe by the grace and mercy of our Lord Iesus Christ, to the comfort both of you & of vs all, as we for our partes will continually (God wylling) pray for you: so (deare brethren in the Lorde) with all earnest and harty request we beseech you, euen in the bowelles of our Lorde Iesus Christ, that ye will not cease to pray for vs. Fare ye well, deare brethren. The grace of our Lorde Iesus Christe be with you all euermore. Amen.

¶A Letter of Byshop Ridley answearyng to a certayne Letter of one Maister West, sometime his Chapleine.

I Wishe you grace in God and loue of the truth, without the which truely stablished in mens hartes by the mightie hand of almighty God, it is no more possible to stande by the truth in Christe in tyme of trouble, then it is for the waxe to abide the heate of the fyre. Sir, knowe you this, that I am (blessed be God) perswaded that this worlde is but transitorie, and (as saint Iohn sayth) The world passeth away and the lust thereof. I am perswaded Christes wordes to be true: Who soeuer shall confesse me before men, hym will I confesse also before my father which is in heauen: and I beleue that no earthly creature shalbe sau'd, whom the Redeemer and Sauour of the worlde shall before his father denie. This the Lorde graunt, that it may be so graffed, established, and fixed in my hart, that neyther thinges present nor to come, hygh nor low, lyfe nor death be able to remoue me thence. It is a goodly wishe, that you wish me deeply to consider thinges perteyning vnto Gods glorye: but if you had wished also, that neither feare of death, nor hope of worldly prosperitie shoulde let me to mayneteine Gods worde and his truth, which is his glory and true honour,* it would haue liked me well. You desire me for Gods sake to remember my selfe. In deede sir, now it is time so to do, for so farre as I can perceiue, it standeth me vpon no lesse daunger, then of the losse both of body and soule, and I trow, then it is time for a man to awake, if any thyng will awake him.* He that will not feare hym that threatneth to cast both body & soule into euerlasting fire,* whom will he feare? With this feare, O Lord, fasten thou together our frayle flesh, that we neuer swarue from thy lawes. You say, you haue made much sute for me. Sir, God graunt that you haue not in suing for my worldly deliuerance, impayred and hindered the furtheraunce of Gods worde and his truth.

You haue knowen me long in deede: in the which time it hath chaunced me (as you say) to mislike some thinges. It is true, I graunt: for sodaine chaunges without substantiall and necessary cause, and the heady setting foorth of extremities, I did neuer loue. Confession vnto the minister which is able to instruct, correct, comfort, & informe the weake, wounded, and ignoraunt conscience, in deede I euer thought might do much good in Christes congregation, and so, I assure you. I thynke euen at this daye. My doctrine and my preaching you say, you haue hearde often, and after your iudgement haue thought it godly, sauynge onely for the Sacrament, which thing although it was of me reuerently handled, and a great deale better then of the rest (as you) yet in the margent you write warily, and in this worlde wisely: and yet me thought all sounding not well. Sir, but that I see so many changes in this worlde, & so much alteration, els at this your saying I would not a litle marueile. I haue taken you for my frend, and a man whom I fansied for plainnes and faythfulnes, as much (I assure you) as for your learning: and haue you kept this so close in your hart from me vnto this day? Sir, I consider moe things then one, and wil not say all that I thinke. But what neede you to care what I thinke, for any thing I shalbe able to do vnto you, eyther good or harme? You geue me good lessons to stand in nothing against my learning, and to beware of vayne glory. Truly sir, I herein like your counsell very well, and by Gods grace I intend to folow it vnto my lyues end.

To write vnto those whom you name, I can not see what it wyll auayle me. For this I woulde haue you knowe, that I esteeme nothyng auayleable for me,* which also wyll not further the glory of GOD. And now, because I perceiue you haue an entire zeale and desire of my deliuerance out of this captiuitie and worldly myserie, if I shoulde not beare you a good hart in God againe, me thinke I were to blame. Sir, howe nigh the day of my dissolution and departure out of this worlde is at hand, I can not tell: the Lordes wyll be fulfilled how sone soeuer it shall come. I knowe the Lordes wordes must be verified on me, that I shall appeare before the incorrupt Iudge, and be countable to him of all my former lyfe. And although y^e hope of his mercies is my shootanker of eternall saluation, yet am I perswaded, that who soeuer wittingly neglecteth & regardeth not to cleare his conscience, he can not haue peace with God, nor a liuely fayth in his mercy. Conscience therefore moueth me, considering you were one of my familie and one of my houshold, of whom then I thinke I had a speciall cure, and of all them which were within my house, which in deede ought to haue bene an example of godlynes to all the rest of my cure, not only of good life, but also in promotyng of Gods worde to the vttermost of their power, (but, alas,* now when the tryall doth separte the chaffe from the corne, how small a deale it is, God knoweth, which the wind doth not blow away) this conscience, I say, doth moue me to feare, lest the lightnesse of my familie shall be layde to my charge for lacke of more earnest and diligent instruction which should haue ben done. But blessed be God which hath geuen me grace to see this my default, and to lament it from the bottome of my hart, before my departyng hence.

This conscience dooth mooue me also now to require both you and my friende Doctor Haruy, to remember your promises made to me in tymes past,* of the pure setting foorth and preachyng of Gods worde and his truth. These promises, although you shall not neede to feare to be charged with them of me hereafter before the worlde,* yet looke for none other (I exhort you as my friendes) but to be charged with them at Gods hand. This conscience and the loue that I beare vnto you, byddeth me now say vnto you both in Gods name, feare GOD, and loue not the world: for GOD is able to caste both body and soule into hell fyre. When his wrath shall sodaynely be kindled, blessed are all they that put their trust in hym.* And the saying of saint Iohn is true: All that is in the world, as the lust of the fleshe, the lust of the eyes,* and the pride of lyfe, is not of the father, but of the worlde, and the worlde passeth away, and the lust thereof, but he that doth the wyll of God abydeth for euer. If this gyfte of grace (whiche vndoubtedly is necessarily required vnto eternall saluation) were truely and vnfainedly graffed and firmly stablished in mens hartes, they would not be so light, so sodenly to shrink from the maintenance and confession of the truth, as is now (alas) seene so manifestly of so many in these dayes.* But here peradventure you woulde knowe of me what is the truth. Syr, Gods woorde is the truth, as saint Iohn sayth, and that euen the same that was heretofore. For albeit man doth vary and change as the Moone, yet Gods worde is stable & abydeth one for euermore: and of Christ it is truely sayd:* Christ yesterday and to day, the same is also for euer.

When I was in office, all that were esteemed learned in Gods word,* agreed this to be a truth in Gods word written, that the common prayer of the Church should be had in the common tongue. You know I haue conferred with many, and I ensure you, I neuer founde man (so farre as I do remember) neither old nor new, gospeller nor papist, of what iudgement soeuer he was, in this thing to be of a contrary opinion. If then it were a truth of Gods word, thinke you that the alteration of the world can make it an vntruth? If it can not, why then do so many men shrynke from the confession & maintenance of this truth receyued once of vs all? For what is it, I pray you,* els to confesse or deny Christe in this worlde, but to mainteyne the truth taught in Gods word, or for any worldly respect to shrink from the same? * This one thing haue I brought for an ensample: other thinges be in like case, which now particulerly I neede not to rehearse. For he that wil forsake wittingly, either for feare or gayne of the world, any one open truth of Gods word, if he be constrained, he wyl assuredly forsake God and al his truth, rather then he wyl endaunger hym selfe to loose or to leaue that he loueth better in deede, then he doth God and the truth of his word.

I like very well your plaine speaking, wherein you say, I must eyther agree or dye, and I thinke that you meane of the bodyly death, which is common both to good and bad. Sir, I knowe I must dye whether I agree or no. But what folly were it then to make such an agreement, by the which I could neuer escape this death which Page 1729 is so common to all, and also incurre the gylt of death and eternall damnation? Lord graunt that I may vtterly abhorre and detest this damnable agreement so long as I lyue. And because (I dare say) you wrote of friendship vnto me this short earnest aduertisement, and I thynke verily, wishing me to lyue, and not to dye, therefore bearyng you in my hart no lesse loue in GOD, then you doe me in the worlde, I say vnto you in the worde of the Lord (and that I say to you, I say to all my friendes and louers in God) that if you do not confesse & maintayne to your power & knowledge that which is grounded vpon Gods worde, but will eyther for feare or gayne of the worlde, shrinke and play the *Apostata, in deede you shall dye the death: you know what I meane. And I beseeche you all my true frendes & louers in God, remember what I say, for this may be the last time peradventure that euer I shall write vnto you.

From Bocardo in Oxford, the .viij. day of Aprill. 1555.

M. Grindal now Archbishop of Canterbury, being in the tyme of exile in y^e citie of Frankford, wrote to D. Ridley thē prisoner, a certaine Epistle, wherein first he lamenteth his captiuitie, exhorting him withall to be constant. Secondly he certieth him of y^e state of the English exiles being dispersed in Germany, and of the singuler prouidence of God in stirring vp the fauour of the Magistrates and rulers there towards them. Thirdly, he writeth to know his minde and will concerning the printing of his booke agaynst Transubstantiation, and of certayne other treatises and his disputations. Wherunto Bishop Ridley answereth agayne in order, as foloweth.

¶The aunsweare of Doctor Ridley to the letter abouesayd.

BLessed be God our heauēly father which enclined your hart to haue such a desire to write vnto me,* & blessed be he againe which hath heard your request, & hath brought your letters safe vnto my handes: and ouer all this, I blesse him through our Lorde Iesus Christe, for the great comfort I haue receiued by the same, of the knowledge of your state, and of other our dearly beloued brethren and countrey men in those parties beyond the sea.

Dearely beloued brother Grindall, I say to you and all the rest of our brethren in Christe with you, reioyce in the Lord, and as ye loue me and the other my reuerend fathers and concaptiues (whiche vndoubtedly are Gloria Christi,) lament not our state, but I beseech you and them all to geue to our heavenly Father for his endlesse mercies and vnspeakeable benefits euen in the myddest of all our troubles geuen vnto vs,* most hartly thanks. For knowe ye, that as the weight of his crosse hath increased vpō vs, so he hath not nor doth not cease to multiply his mercies to strengthen vs, and I trust, yea by his grace I doubt nothing, but he will so do for Christe our Maisters sake, euen to the end. To heare that you and our other brethren doo finde in your exile fauour and grace with the Magistrates, Ministers, and Citizens, at Tigury, at Frankford, and other where, it doth greatly comfort (I dare say) all here that do in deede loue Christe and his true woorde. I ensure you it warmed my hart, to heare you by chaunce to name some, as Scory and Coxe. &c. Oh that it had come in your mynde to haue sayd somewhat also of Cheeke, of Turner, of Leauer, of Sampson, of Chambers, but I trust in God they be all well. And sir, seeyng you say, that there be in those parties with you of studentes and Ministers so good a number, nowe therefore care ye not for vs, otherwyse then to wish that Gods glory may be set forth by vs. For whensoever God shall call vs home (as we looke dayly for none other, but when it shal please God to say, come) you, blessed be God, are enough through his ayde, to light and set vp againe the lanterne of his worde in Englande. As concerning the copies ye say ye haue with you, I wonder how euer they did and could find the way to come to you. My disputation, except he haue that whiche I gathered my selfe after the disputation done, I can not thynke ye haue it truly. If ye haue that, then ye haue therewithall the whole maner after the which I was vsed in the disputation.

As for the treatise in English. Contra transubstantiationem, vix possum adduci vt credam operaepretium fore vt in latinum transferatur. Caeterum quicquid sit nullo modo velim vt quicquam quocun{que} modo meo nomine ederetur, donec quid de nobis dominus constituerit fieri, vobis prius certo constiterit: and thus much vnto your letters. Now although I suppose ye know a good parte of our state here (for we are forth commyng, euen as when ye departed. &c.)* You shall vnderstande that I was in the Towar about the space of two monethes close prisoner, and a•ter that had graunted to me without my labour, the liberty of the Tower, and so continued about halfe a yeaere, and then because I refused to allow the Masse with my presence, I was shut vp in close prison agayne.

The last Lent saue one,* it chaunsed by reason of the tumult styrred vp in Kent, there was so many prisoners in the Tower, that my Lord of Canterbury, M. Latimer, Maister Bradford, and I were put altogether in one prison, where we remayned still almost to the nexte Easter, and then we three, Canterbury, Latimer and I, were sodenly sent a litle before Easter to Oxford, and were suffered to haue nothing with vs, but that we caried vpon vs. About the Whitsontide followyng was our disputations at Oxford, after the which was all taken from vs, as pen and inke. &c.* Our owne seruantes were taken from vs before, and euey one had put to hym a straunge man, and we eche one appoynted to be kept in seuerall places, as we are vnto this day.

Blessed be God, we three at the writing hereof, were in good health, and (in God) of good cheare. We haue looked long agoe to haue bene dispatched,* for we were all three on one day within a day or two of our disputations, of D. Weston being the head Commissioner, condemned for heretikes, and since that tyme we remayne as we were of hym left. The Lordes will be fulfilled in vs, as I do not doubt, but by his grace it shal be to his glory, and our endles saluation through Iesus Christ our Lord.

Likewise the Lord hitherto hath preserued aboue all our expectation, our deare brother, and in Christes cause a strong Champion Iohn Bradford.* He is likewyse condemned, and is already deliuered to the secular power, and writtes (as we haue heard say) geuen out for his execution, and called in agayne. Thus the Lord, so long as his blessed pleasure is, preserueth whom he listeth, notwithstanding the wonderfull raging of the world. Many (as we heare say) haue suffered valiauntly, confessyng Christes truth, and nothyng yeeldyng to the aduersary, yea not for the feare or paynes of death.

The names of them whiche I knewe,* and haue nowe suffered, are these, Farrar the Bishop of S. Dauides, Hooper the Bishop of Worcester, Rogers tuus olim comprehendarius. D. Tailour of Hadley, M. Sanders, and one Tomkins a weauer, and now this last day M. Cardmaker, with an other, were burnt in Smithfielde at London, and many other in Essex and Kent, whose names are written in the booke of lyfe, whom yet I do not know.

West, your olde companion and sometyme myne officer (alas hath relented (as I haue heard) but the Lorde hath shortned his dayes, for anone he dyed and is gon.* Grimbolde was caught by the heele and caste into the Marshalsey, but now is at liberty againe, but I feare me he escaped not without some becking and bowyng (alas) of his knee vnto Baall.

My deare friende Thomas Ridley of the Bulhead in Cheape, which was to me the most faythfull friende that I had in my trouble, is departed also vnto God. My brother Shipside that hath married my sister, hath ben almost halfe a yeare in prison, for deliuering (as he was accused) of certayne thynges, I wene, from mee: but now thanks be to God, he is at libertie agayne, but so that the Bishop hath taken from him his * Parke.

Of all vs three concaptiues at Oxford, I am kept most strait, and with least libertie, Vel quia viro in cuius aedibus, ego custodior, vxor dominatur (licet modo sit Prefectus ciuitatis) mulier vetula, morosa, & superstiosiss. quae etiam hoc sibi laudi ducit quod me dicatur arctissime & cautissime custodire, vir autem ipse Irischius nomine, mitis satis est oībus, •xori vero plusquam obsequentiss. Licet vxorem (vti nosti) nunquam habuerim, tamen ex hac quotidiana consuetudine, quem cum istis coniugibus habeo, videor mihi nonnihil posse intelligere quam graue malum & intolerabile iugum sit cum mala muliere in coniugio coll•cari. Recte ergo sapiens dixit, vxor bona donum Dei: & iterum mulieris bonae beatus vir. Vel haec inquam causa est, vel quia á magnis magistratibus (nescio quas ob causas) illud est, vt ita fieret, ipsis mandatum: id{que} illi si quando de mea nimia seruitute apud eos conqueror,*sedulo saepe rursus mihi inculcant.

At Cambridge (as I heare say) Omnes studiorum & statutorum reformationes nuper factae, nunc sunt denuo deformatae & delete, & omnia sunt in pristinum chaos & in antiquum papismum reducta: omnes collegiorum prefecti qui synceritati Euangelij fauebant, vel qui coniugati erant, loco moti• sunt, & alij Papisticae factionis in eorum loca surrogati, quod & de socijs collegiorum qui noluerunt flectere genu Baal factum esse audio. Nec mirum, nam & illud passim factum est in vniuerso Page 1730 regno Angliae, in omnibus Archiepiscopis, Episcopis, Decanis. Prebendarijs, Sacerdotibus Ecclesiarum, & in toto cl•o: and to tell you muche naughty matter in fewe woordes, Papismus apud nos vbique in pleno suo antiquo robore regnat.

The Lord be mercyfull, and for Christes sake pardon vs our olde vnkyndnesse and vnthankefulnesse: for when he powred vppon vs the gyftes of his manifolde graces and fauoure (alas) we did not serue him nor render vnto hym thanks according to the same. We pastors manye of vs were to colde and bare to much (alas) with the wicked worlde, our Magistrates did abuse to their owne worldly gayne, both Gods Gospell and the ministers of the same. The people in many places was wayward and vnkynde. Thus of euery side and of euery sorte we haue prouoked Gods anger and wrath to fall vppon vs: but blessed myght he be that hath not suffered his to continue in those wayes, which so wholly haue displeased his secrete Maiestie, but hath awaked them by the fatherly correction of his owne sonnes crosse, vnto his glorie and our endlesse saluation, through Iesus Christe our Lorde.

My dayly prayer is (as God doth know) and by gods grace shall be so long as I lyue in this worlde, for you my deare brethren that are fled out of your owne Coun•y, because you will rather forsake all worldly thynges <◇> the truth of Gods worde. It is euen the same that I

⟨◇⟩ to make to GOD for all those Churches abroad through the worlde, which haue forsaken the kyngdome of Antichrist, and professed openly the puritie of the Gospell of Iesus Christ: * that is, that God our eternall father for our Sauour Christes sake, will dayly encrease in you the gracious gifte of his heauenly spirite to the true setting forth of his glory and of his Gospell, and make you to agree brotherly in the truth of the same, that there arise no rote of bitternesse among you that may infect that good seede which God hath sowed in your hartes already, and finally that your lyfe may be so pure and so honest, accordyng to the rule of Gods worde, and according to that vocation whereunto we are called by y^e Gospell of Christ our Sauour, that the honesty and purity of the same may prouoke all that shall see or knowe it, to the loue of your doctrine, and to loue you for your honesty and vertues sake, and so both in brotherly vnity of your true doctrine and also in the Godly vertue of your honest lyfe, to glorifie our father which is in heauen.

Ex nostratibus magni aliquot magistratus, Cancellarius Wint. Comes Arundellus, & Dominus Pachetus iam legatione funguntur, vna cum Cardinali Polo, in partibus transmarinis, ad componendam (vt aiunt) pacem inter imperatorem, regem nostrum, * & Francorum regem. Post illorum magistratuum nostrorum reditum, & partum reginae, quem iam quotidie expectamus & iam aliquandiu expectauimus, quem{que} Deus pro sui nominis gloria dignetur bene illi fortunare: nos tunc statim nihil aliud quam nostrae confessionis de hoste nostro antiquo triumpiales in domino coronas expectamus.

Omnium vestrūm precibus me humillime ex toto corde commendo: In primis, tuis o chariss. in Christo frater, & delectiss. Grindalle, & chariss. fratrum & vnicè mihi in domino delectorum, Checi, Coxi, Turnerī Leueri, Sampsonis, Chamberi, & omnium fratrum nostrorum & contreraneorum qui apud vos degunt & deligunt dominum nostrum Iesum Christum in veritate. Commendo etiam vobis reuerendiss. patres & concaptiuos meos in domino Thomam Cranmerum, iam veri magni pastoris & Archipresulis nomine digniss. & veteranum illum Christi & nostrae gentis Anglicanae verum Apostolum Hugonem Latimerum. Condone mihi frater harum prolixitatem, non enim post hac credo charissime frater, meis literis iam amplius aliquando turbaberis. Oxonij.

¶To Augustine Bernher.

*BRother Augustine, I blesse God with all my hart in his maninifolde mercifull gyftes, geuen vnto our deare brethren in Christ, especially to our brother Rogers, whom it pleased to set forth fyrst, no doubt but of his gracious goodnes and fatherly fauour towards hym. And likewise blessed be God in the rest, as Hoper, Saunders, and Taylour, whom it hath pleased the Lord likewise to set in the forefront of the battayle agaynst his aduersaries, and hath endued them all (so farre as I can heare) to stand in the confession of his truth, * and to be content in his cause, and for his Gospels sake to lose their lyfe. And euermore and without ende blessed be euen the same our heauenly father for our deare and entirely beloued brother Bradford, whom nowe the Lorde (I perceiue) calleth for: for I weene he will no longer vouchsafe him to abide among the adulterous and wicked generation of this worlde,. I do not doubt but that he (for those giftes of grace whiche the Lorde hath bestowed on hym plenteously) hath holpen those which are gon before in their iourney, that is, hath animated and encouraged them to keepe the hygh way, & sic currere vti tandem acciperent praemium. The Lord be his comfort, whereof I do not doubt, and I thanke God hartely that euer I was acquainted with him, and that euer I had such a one in my house.* And yet agayne I blesse GOD in our deare brother, and of this tyme Protomartyr Rogers, that he was also one of my calling to be a Prebendary Preacher of London. And now because Grindall is gone (the Lorde I doubt not hath and knoweth wherein he will bestow him) I trust to God it shall please him of his goodnes to strengthen me to make vp the trinitie out of Paules Church, to suffer for Christe, whom God the father hath annoynted, the holy spirite doth beare witnes vnto, Paule & all the Apostles preached. Thus fare you well. I had no paper: I was constrained thus to write.

Besydes these letters of Byshop Ridley, diuers other tractations also were written by hym, partly out of prison, partly in prison: as namely amongst certaine other, there remayneth in my handes, certayne notes answering to the two notable Sermons of D. Watson▪ Bishop of Lincolne. &c.

¶Here beginneth the lyfe, actes, and doynge of maister Hugh Latimer, the famous Preacher and worthy Martyr of Christ and his Gospel.

NOW consequently after the lyfe of B. Ridley,* with other his letters, whiche partly we haue expressed, partly we haue differred to our later appendix, followeth lykewyse the lyfe and doynge of the worthy champion, and olde practised souldiour of Christe M. Hugh Latimer, of whose actes and long trauayles euen from his fyrst yeares and tender age, to beginne here to entreate: fyrst, he was the son of one Hugh Latimer, of Thirkesson in the Countie of Leicester, a housebandman of right good estimation: with whom also he was brought vp vntyll he was of the age of fower yeares or thereabout. At which tyme his Parentes (hauyng hym as then left for their onely sonne, with sixe other daughters) seeyng his ready, prompte, and sharpe witte, purposed to trayne him vp in erudition, and knowledge of good literature: wherein he so profited in his youth,* at the common Scholes of his owne countrey, that at the age of xiiij. yeares, he was sent to the Uniuersitie of Cambridge. Where after some continuaunce of exercises in other thynges,* he gaue hym selfe to the studie of such schole Diuinitie, as y^e ignoraunce of that age did suffer.

Zelous he was then in the Popyshe Religion,* and therewith so scrupulous (as hym selfe confessed) that beyng a Priest, and vsyng to say Masse, he was so seruile an obseruer of the Romishe Decrees, that he had thought he had neuer sufficiently mingled his Massing wine with water: and moreouer, that he shoulde neuer be damned, if he were once a professed Frier, with diuers suche superstitious fantasies. And in this blinde zeale he was a very enemy to the professours of Christes Gospell: as both his Oration made when he proceeded Bachlour of Diuinitie, agaynst Philip Melancthon,* and also his other workes did playnely declare. But especially his Popyshe zeale coulde in no case abyde in those dayes good Maister Stafford, reader of the Diuinitie Lectures in Cambridge, moste spitefully raylyng agaynst hym, and willyng the youth of Cambridge, in no wyse to beleue hym.

Notwithstandyng suche was the goodnesse and mercifull purpose of God, that when he saw his good tyme, by the whiche waye hee thought to haue vtterly defaced the professours of the Gospell and true Church of Christ, he was at lengthe hym selfe by a member of the same, pretily caught in the blessed nette of Gods woorde. For M. Thomas Bilney (whose storye is before described) beyng at that tyme a tryer out of Sathans subtilties, and a secrete ouerthrower of Antichristes kyngdome,* seeyng M. Latimer to haue a zeale in his waies (although without knowledge) was stricken with a brotherly pittie towards hym, & bethought by what meanes he might best winne this zelous ignoraunt brother, to the true knowledge of Christe. Wherefore, after a shorte tyme, he came to M. Latimers study, and desired him to here him make his confession. Which thing he willingly graunted: by hearyng whereof, he was (through the good spirte of God) so touched, that hereuppon he forsooke his former studying of the schole Doctors, and other suche fopperies, and became a earnest student of true Diuinitie, as he hym selfe, aswell in his conference with M. Ridley, as also in his fyrst sermon made vpon the Pater noster, doth confesse. Page 1731 So that whereas before he was an enemy, and almost a persecutor of Christe, he was now a zelous seeker after h•m, chaunging his old maner of cauilling and rayling, into a diligent kind of conferring, both with M. Bilney and others,* & came also to M. Stafford before he dyed, and desired him to forgeue him.

After this his winning to Christ, he was not satisfied with his owne conuersion onely, but like a true Disciple of the blessed Samaritane, pitied the misery of others, and therefore became both a publike Preacher, and also a priuate Instructor to the rest of his brethren within the Uniuersitie, by the space of 3. yeres, spending his tyme partly in the Latin tongue among the learned, & partly amongst the simple people in his naturall and vulgar language. Howbeit,* as Satan neuer slepeth when he seeth his kingdome to begin to decay, so likewyse now seeyng that this worthy member of Christ would be a shreud shaker therof he raued vp his impious impes to molest & trouble him.

Amongest these there was an Augustine Frier, who tooke occasion vpon certaine Sermons that M. Latimer made about Christenmas 152•. aswell in the church of S. Edward,* as also in S. Augustins, within the Uniuersitie in Cambridge, to inuey against him, for that M. Latimer in the sayde Sermons (alludyng to the common vsage of the season) gaue the people certaine cardes out of the 5.6.7. Chapiters of S. Matthewe, whereupon they might, not onely then,* but alwayes els occupy their tyme. For the chiefe triumph in the cardes he limitted the Hart as the principall thing that they shoulde serue God with all: wherby he quite ouerthrew all hypocriticall and externall ceremonies, not tending to the necessarie furtheraunce of Gods holy word and Sacramentes. For the better atteyneng hereof, he wished the Scriptures to be in Englysh, wherby the common people might the better learne their dueties, aswell to God, as their neighbours.

The handling of this matter was so apt for the tyme, and so pleasantly applyed of him, that not only it declared a singuler towardnesse of witte in the Preacher, but also wrought in the hearers much fruite, to the ouerthrowe of Popish superstition, and setting vp of perfect Religion.

This was vpon the Sundaye before Christenmas day, on which day commyng to the Church, and causyng the Bell to be tolled to a Sermon, he entered into y^e Pulpit, takyng for his text the wordes of the Gospell aforesayd, red in the Church that day: Tu quis es. &c. In deliueying the whiche cardes (as is abouesayd) he made the Harte to be triumph, exhortyng and inuityng all men thereby to serue the Lord with inwarde hart and true affection, and not with outward ceremonies: adding moreouer to the prayse of that triumph, that though it were neuer so small, yet it woulde make vp the best cote carde beside in the bunch,* yea though it were y^e kyng of Clubs. &c. meanyng thereby, how the Lorde would be worshipped and serued in simplicitie of the harte and veritie, wherein consisteth true Christian Religion, and not in the outward deedes of the letter onely, or in the glisteryng shewe of mans traditions, or pardons, pilgrimages, ceremonies, vowes, deuotions, voluntarie workes, and workes of supererogation, foundations, oblations, the Popes supremacie. &c. so that all these either were nedeles, where the other is present: or els were of small estimation, in comparison of the other.

The tenour and effect of these his Sermons, so far as they could come to our handes, here foloweth.

¶The tenoure and effecte of certayne Sermons, made by mayster Latimer in Cambridge, about the yere of our Lord. 1529.

TV quis es? which wordes are as much to say in Englyshe, Who art thou? These be the wordes of the Phariseis, which were sent by the Iewes vnto saint Iohn Baptist in wilderness, to haue knowledge of hym, whom he was, which woordes they spake vnto hym of an euill intent, thinkyng that he would haue taken on hym to be Christe, and so they woulde haue had him done with their good willes, because they knewe that he was more carnall, and geuen to their lawes, then Christ in deede should be, as they perceyued by their old prophecies: and also because they maruayled muche of his great doctryne, preachyng, and baptising, they were in doubt whether he was Christ or not: wherefore they sayd vnto him, who art thou? Then answered saint Iohn, and confessed, that he was not Christ. Now here is to be noted, the great, and prudent answere of sainte Iohn Baptist vnto the Phariseis, that when they required of him whom he was, he would not directly answere of himselfe what he was him selfe: but he sayd he was not Christ, by the which saying he thought to put the Iewes and Phariseis out of their false opinion, & beliefe towards him, in that they would haue had him to exercise the office of Christ, and •o declared farther vnto them of Christ, saying: he is in y^e middes of you, and amongst you, whō ye know not, whose •atchet of his shoe I am not worthy to vnlose, or vndoe. By this you may perceiue that saint Iohn spake much in the lande, and prayse of Christ his maister, professing himselfe to be in no wise like vnto him. So likewise it shalbe necessary vnto all men & women of this world, not to ascribe vnto them selues any goodnes of themselues, but all vnto our Lorde God, as shall appeare hereafter, when this question aforesayd, (Who art thou?) shall be moued vnto thē: not as the Phariseis did vnto saint Iohn, of an euill purpose, but of a good and simple minde, as may appeare hereafter.

Now then, according to the preachers mynd, let euery man and woman, of a good & simple mind, contrary to the Phariseis intent, aske this question (Who art thou?) this question must be moued to themselues, what they be of themselues, on this fashion. What art thou of thy only and natural generatiō betwene father, & mother, whē thou camest into this world? What substāce, what vertue, what goodnes art thou of by thy selfe? which question if thou reher•e often times vnto thy selfe, thou shalt well perceiue, & vnderstand, how thou shalt make aunswer vnto it, which must be made on this wayes: I am of my selfe, and by my selfe, cōming from my naturall father & mother, the childe of the ire, & indignation of God, the true inheritour of hel, a lumpe of sinne, & working nothing of my selfe but all towards hell, except I haue better helpe of an other, then I haue of my selfe. Now we may see in what state we enter in to this world, that we be of our selues the true, and iust inheritours of hell, the children of the ire & indignation of Christ, working all towards hell, whereby we deserue of our selues perpetuall dampnation, by y^e ryght iudgement of God, and the true clayme of our selues: which vnthrifty state that we be borne vnto, is come vnto vs for our own desertes, and proueth well this example followyng.

Let it be admitted for the probatiō of this, that it might please the kynges grace now being, to accept into his fauour a meane man, of a simple degre, and byrth, not borne to any possession, whom the kynges grace fauoureth, not because this person hath of himselfe deserued any such fauoure, but that the kyng casteth this fauoure vnto him of his owne mere motion, & fantasy: and for because y^e kings grace will more declare his fauoure vnto him, he geueth vnto his sayd man a thousand poundes in landes, to hym and his heyres, on this condition, that he shall take vpon him to be the chiefe captayne, and defendour of his towne of Calice, and to be trew, and faythfull vnto hym, in the custodie of the same, agaynst the Frenche men specially, aboue all other enemies.

This man taketh on hym this charge, promysing his fidelitie thereunto. It chaunceth in processe of tyme, that by the singuler acquaintaunce, and frequent familiaritie of this Captaine with the French men, these French men geue vnto this sayde Captayne of Calice a great summe of money, so that he will be content, and agreeable, that they may enter into the sayde towne of Calice by force of armes, and so thereby to possesse y^e same vnto the Crowne of Fraunce: vpon this agreement the French men doe inuade the sayde Towne of Calice, alonely by the neglygence of this Captayne.

Now the Kynges grace hearyng of this inuasion, commeth with a great puissaunce to defende this his sayd Towne, and so by good pollicie of warre ouercommeth the sayd French men, and entreth againe into his Towne of Calice. Then he beyng desyrous to knowe how these enemies of his came thither, he maketh profound searche, and enquire, by whom this treason was conspyred: by this searche it was knowen and founde, his owne Captayne to be the very authoure and beginner of the betraying of it. The King seeing the great infidelitie of this person, dischargeth this man of his office, and taketh from him and his heyres, this thousande poundes possessions. Thinke you not but the Kyng doth vse iustice vnto him, and all his posteritie, and heyres? Yes truly: the sayde Capitayne cannot deny hymselfe, but that he hadde true iustice, consydering howe vnfaythfully he behaued hym to his Prince, contrary to his own fidelitie and promyse: so likewyse it was of our fyrst Father, Adam. He had geuen vnto him the spirite of science, & knowledge, to worke all goodnesse therewith: this sayd spirite was not geuen alonely vnto him, but vnto all his heyres and posteritie. He had also deliuered him the Towne of Calice, that is to say, Paradise in earth, the most strong and fayrest Towne in the worlde, to be in his custodie: He neuerthelesse, by the instigation of these Frenche menne, that is to say, the temptation of the Feende, dyd obey vnto their desire, Page 1732 and so brake his promise and fidelitie, the commaundemēt of the euerlasting kyng, his maister, in eatyng of the apple by hym inhibited.

Now then, the kyng seyng this great treason in hys capitayne, deposed hym of the thousand pound of possessions, that is to say, from euerlasting lyfe in glory, and all his heires and posteritie: for likewyse as he had the spirit of science and knowledge, for him and his heires, so in like maner whē he lost the same, his heyres lost it also by him, and in him. So now, this example proueth, that by our father Adam, we had once in hym the very enheritance of euerlasting ioy: and by him, and in him againe we lost the same.

The heires of the captaine of Calice could not by any maner of claime aske of the King the right & •itle of theyr father, in the thousand poundes possessions, by reason the kyng myght aunswer, and say vnto them, that although theyr father deserued not of hymselfe to enioy so great possessions, yet he deserued by hymselfe to loose thē, and greater, committynge so hygh treason as he dyd, agaynst hys Princes commaundementes: whereby he had no wrong to loose his title, but was vnworthy to haue the same, and had therein true iustice: let not you thinke which bee hys heyres, that if hee had iustice to loose his possessions, you haue wrong to loose the same: In the same maner it may be aunswered vnto all men and women now beyng, that if our father Adam had true Iustice to bee excluded from hys possession of euerlastyng glory in Paradise, let not vs thinke the contrary that be his heyres, but that wee haue no wrong in loosing also the same: yea, we haue true Iustice and right. Then in what miserable state be we, that of the right and iust title of our owne deserts, haue lost the euerlasting ioy, and clayme of our selues to be the true inheritours of hell? For hee that committeth deadly sinne, willyngly, byndeth hymselfe to be inheritor of euerlasting payne: and so dyd our forefather Adam willingly eate of the apple forbidden. Wherefore he was cast out of euerlastyng ioy in Paradise, into this corrupt world, amongst all vilenesse, whereby of hymselfe he was not woorthy to do any thyng laudable or pleasaunt to GOD, euermore bound to corrupt affections, and beastly appetites, transfourmed into the most vncleannest and variablest nature that was made vnder heauen, of whose seede and disposition, all the world is lineally discended, in so much that this euill nature is so fused and shedde from one into another, that at this day there is no man nor woman liuyng, that can of themselues wash away this abhominable vilenesse: and so we must needes graunt of our selues to be in lyke displeasure vnto God, as our forefather Adam was: by reason hereof as I sayd, we bee of our selues the very children of the indignation and vengeance of God, the true enheritours of hell, and workyng all towards hell, which is the answer of this question, made to euery man and woman by themselues, Who art thou?

And now the world standyng in this damnable state, commeth in the occasion of the incarnation of Christ: the Father in heauen perceiuyng the frayle nature of man, that he by hymselfe and of hymselfe could doe nothyng for hymselfe by hys prudent wisdom sent downe the second person in Trinitie, hys sonne Iesu Christ, to declare vnto man hys pleasure and commaundement: and so at the fathers wyll Christ tooke on hym humaine nature, beyng willyng to deliuer man out of this miserable way, & was content to suffer cruell passion in shedyng hys blood for all mankynd, and so left behynd for our safegard, lawes and ordinaunces to keepe vs alwayes in the right path, to euerlastyng lyfe, as the Euangelistes, the Sacramentes, the commaundementes, and so forth: which if wee doe keepe and obserue accordyng vnto our profession, wee shall aunswer better vnto this question, (Who art thou?) then we dyd before: for before thou diddest enter into the Sacrament of Baptisme, thou wert but a naturall man, a naturall woman: as I myght say, A man, A woman. But after thou takest on thee Christes Religion, thou hast a longer name: for then thou art a Christian man, a Christian woman. Now then, seeyng thou art a Christian man, what shall be thy aunswer of this question▪ Who art thou?

The aunswer of this question is, when I aske it vnto my selfe, I must say that I am a Christian man, a christian woman, the childe of euerlastyng ioy thorough the merites of the bitter passion of Christ. This is a ioyfull aunswer. Here we may see how much wee bee bounde, and in daunger vnto GOD, that hath reuiued vs from death to lyfe, and saued vs that were damned, which great benefite we cannot well consider, vnlesse we doe remember what we were of our selues before wee medled wyth hym or hys lawes: and the more we know our feeble nature, and set lesse by it, the more wee shall conc•iue and know in our heartes what God hath done for vs: and the more that we know what God hath done for vs, the lesse wee shall set by our selues▪ the more wee shall loue and please God, so that in no condition wee shall eyther know our selues or God, except wee doe vtterly conf•sse our selues to bee meere vilenesse and corruption. Well, now it is come vnto this poynt, that we bee Ch•istian men, Christian women, I pray you what doth Christ require of a Christian man, or of a Christian woman? Christ requireth nothyng els of a Christian man or a woma•, but that they will obserue hys rule. For likewyse as hee is a good Augustine Frier that keepeth well Saint Augustines rule, so is he a good Christian man that keepeth well Christes rule.

Now then, what is Christes rule? Christes rule consisteth in many thyngs, as in the commaundements, and the workes of mercy and so forth. And for because I can not declare Christs rule vnto you at one tyme, as it ought to be done, I will applye my selfe accordyng to your custome this tyme of Christenmasse, I wyll as I sayde, declare vnto you Christes rule, but that shall bee in Christes cardes. And where you are woont to celeb•ate Christenmasse in playing at cardes, I intend with gods grace to deale vnto you Christes cardes, wherein you shall p•rceyue Christes rule. The Game that we will p•ay at, shal be called the Triumph, which if it bee well played at, bee that dealeth shall winne: the Players shall lykewyse winne, and the standers and lookers vppon, shall doe the same, in so much that there is no man that is willyng to play at this Triumph with these cardes, but they shall be all winners, and no losers.

Let therefore euery Christian man and woman playe at these cardes, that they may haue and obtayne the Triumph: you must marke also that the Triumph must apply to fetch home vnto hym all the other cardes, what so euer suite they bee of. Now then take ye this first carde, which must appeare and be shewed vnto you as followeth. You haue heard what was spoken to the men of the olde Lawe. Thou shalt not kyll, whosoever shall kyll, shall be in daunger of iudgement. But I say vnto you of the new Lawe (sayeth Christ) that who so euer is angry with hys neighbour, shall bee in dau•ger of iudgement, and whosoever shall say vnto hys neighbour Racha, that is to say, braynesse, or any other lyke worde of rebuking, shall be in daunger of counsayle: and whosoever shall say vnto his neighbour, Foole, shall be in daunger of hell fire. This carde was made and spoken by Christ, as appereth in the first chapter of S. Mathew.

Now it must bee noted, that who so euer shall playe with this carde, must first before they play with it, knowe the strength and vertue of the same: wherefore you must well note and marke tearmes how they be spoken, and to what purpose: Let vs therfore read it once or twise, that we may be the better acquainted with it.

Now behold and see, This card is deuided into foure partes: The first part is one of the Commaundementes that was geuen vnto Moses in the olde lawe, before the comyng of Christ, which commaundement wee of the new Lawe be bounde to obserue and keepe, and is one of our commaundementes. The other three partes spoken by Christ, bee nothyng els but expositions vnto the first part of this commaundement: for in very effect all th•se foure partes be but one commaundement, that is to say, Thou shalt not kill: yet neuerthelesse, the three last parts doth shew vnto thee how many wayes tho• mayest kyll thy neighbour contrary to this Commaundement: Yet for all Christes exposition, in the last three partes of thys carde, the termes bee not open enough to th•e that doest read and heare them spoken: no doubte the Iewes vnderstoode Christ well enough when he spake to them these three last sentences, for he spake vnto them in theyr owne naturall termes and tongue: wherefore s•yng that these termes were naturall termes of the Iewes, it shall be necessary to expounde them, and compare them vnto some lyke termes of our naturall speach, that we in lyke manner may vnderstand Christ, as well as the Iewes dyd: we wyll begin first with the first parte of this carde, and then after with the other three partes: you must therfore vnderstand that the Iewes and the Pharises of the olde lawe, to whome this first parte, this Commaundement, Thou shalt not kyll, was spoken, thought it sufficient and enough for their discharge not to kyll with any maner weapon of materiall weapon, as sworde, dagger, or with any such weapon, and they thought i• no great fault whatsoeuer they sayd or dyd by their neighbour, so that they did not harme or meddle with their corporall bodies, which was a false opinion in them, as p•ooueth well the Page 1733 three last other sentences followyng the first part of this carde.

Now as touchyng the three other sentences, you must note and take heede what difference is betweene these thre maner of offences, To bee angrie with your neighbour, To call your neighbour braynelesse, or any such worde of disdayne, Or to call your neighbour foole: whether these three maner of offences be of themselues more griuous one then other, it is to bee opened vnto you: Truely as they be of themselues diuers offences, so they kill diuersly more one then the other, as you shall perceyue by the first of these three, and so foorth: A man which conceyueth agaynst hys neighbour or brother, Ire, or wrath in hys mynde, by some maner of occasion geuen vnto hym, although he be angry in hys mynde agaynst his sayd neighbour, he will not peradventure expresse hys ire by no maner of signe, eyther in worde or deede: yet neuertheles he offendeth agaynst God, and breaketh this commaundement in killyng hys owne soule, and is therefore in daunger of iudgement.

Now to the second part of these three: That man that is mooued with ire agaynst his neighbour, and in hys ire calleth hys neighbour braynelesse, or some other lyke word of displeasure, As a man might say in a fury, I shall handle thee well enough, which wordes and countenaunces doth more represent and declare Ire to be in this man, thē in hym that was but angry, and spake no maner of word, ne shewed no countenance to declare hys Ire: wherefore he that so declareth hys Ire eyther by worde or countenance, offendeth more agaynst God: so he both killeth hys owne soule, and doth that in hym is, to kyl his neighbours soule in moouyng hym vnto ire, wherein he is faultie hymselfe, and so this man is in danger of counsaile.

Now to the third offence, and last of these three. That man that calleth hys neighbour foole, doth more declare hys angry mynde toward hym, then hee that called hys neighbour but braynelesse, or any such wordes moouyng Ire: for to call a man foole, that worde representeth more enuy in a man, then braynelesse doth. Wherefore hee doth most offende, because hee doth most earnestly with such wordes expresse hys Ire, and so he is in daunger of hell fire: wherefore you may vnderstand now these thre parts: Of thys carde be three offences, and that one is more greuous to God then the other, and that one killeth more the soule of man then the other.

Now peradventure there be some that wyll meruaile that Christ dyd not declare this commaundement by some greater faultes of Ire, then by these which seeme but smal faultes, as to bee angry and speake nothyng of it, to declare it, and to call a man braynelesse, and to call his neighbour foole: truely these be smallest, and the lest faults that longeth to ire, or to killyng in ire. Therefore beware how you offend in any kynd of Ire, seeyng that the smallest be damnable to offend in: see that you offend not in the greatest. For Christ thought, if he myght bryng you from the smallest maner of faultes, and geue you warnyng to auoid the least, he reckoned you would not offend in the greatest and worst, as to call your Neighbour thiefe, whoreson, whore, drab, and so forth, into more blasphemous names, which offences must needes haue punishment in hel, consideryng how that Christ hath appointed these three small faultes, to haue three degrees of punishment in hel, as appeareth by these three termes, iudgement, counsaile, and hell fire: these three termes doe signifie nothyng els but three diuers punishments in hell, accordyng to the offences, iudgement is lesser in degree then counsaile, therefore it signifieth a lesser payne in hell, and it is ordeined for him that is angry in his mynde with his neighbour, and doth not expresse hys malice neyther by worde ne countenance: counsaile is a lesse degree in hel, then hel fire, and is a more degree in hell then iudgement: and it is ordeyned for him that calleth hys neighbour braynelesse, or any such worde, that declareth his Ire and malice: wherefore it is more payne then iudgement, hel fire is more payne in hell, then counsaile or iudgement, and it is ordeined for hym that calleth hys neighbour foole, by reason that in callyng his neighbour foole, he declareth more hys malice, in that it is an earnest worde of Ire. Wherefore hell fire is appoynted for it, that is, the most payne of the three punishments.

Now you haue heard that to these diuers offences of Ire and killyng, be appoynted punishments according to their degrees: for looke as the offence is, so shall the paine be, if the offence be great, the payne shall be accordyng: if it be lesse, there shall be lesse paine for it. I would not now that you should thinke because that here is but three degrees of punishmentes spoken of, that there bee no more in hell: no doubt Christ spake of no more here but of these three degrees of punishmentes, thinkyng they were sufficient enough for example, wherby we myght vnderstand, that there be as diuers and many paynes as there bee o^offenses: and so by these three offences, and these three punishmentes, all other offences and punishments may bee compared with an other: yet I would satisfy your mynds further in these three termes of iudgement, counsaile, and hell fire. Where you might say, what was the cause that Christ declared more the paynes of hell by these termes, then by any other termes? I tolde you afore that he knew well to whome he spake them: these termes were naturall and well known amongst the Iewes and Phariseies. Wherefore Christ taught them with their owne termes, to the intent they might vnderstand the better his doctrine: and these termes may bee likened vnto three termes which we haue common and vsuall amongst vs, that is to say, the sessions of enquirance, the sessions of deliuerance, and the execution day: Sessions of enquirance is lyke vnto iudgement: for when sessions of enquiry is, then the Iudges causeth xij. men to geue verdite of the felons crime, whereby he shall be iudged to be endited: sessions of deliuerance is much lyke counsaile: for at sessions of deliuerance, the Iudges go amongst themselues to counsaile, to determine sentence agaynst the fellow. Execution day is to be compared vnto hel fire: for the Iews had amongst themselues a place of execution named hell fire: and surely when a man goeth to hys death, it is the greatest payne in this world: wherefore you may see that there are degrees in these our termes, as there is in those termes, these euill disposed affections and sensualities in vs, are alwayes contrary to the rule of our saluation. What shall we doe now or imagine to thrust downe these Turkes, and to subdue them? It is a great ignominy and shame for a Christian man to be bond and subiect vnto a Turke: Nay it shall not bee so, wee will first cast a Trumpe in their way, and play with them at cardes who shall haue the better, let vs play therefore on this fashion with this carde. Whensoever it shall happen these fowle passions and Turkes to ryse in our stomackes agaynst our brother, or neighbour, eyther for vnkynd wordes, iniuries or wrongs, which they haue done vnto vs, contrary vnto our mynd, straight wayes let vs call vnto our remembraunce, and speake this question vnto our selues. Who art thou? The answer is, I am a christian man.* Thē further we must say to our selues, What requireth Christ of a christian man? Now turne vp your trump, your hart, (hartes is trumpe as I sayd before) and cast your trumpe your heart on this carde, and vppon this carde you shall learne what Christ requireth of a Christian man, not to be angry, ne mooued to Ire agaynst hys Neighbour, in mynde, countenaunce, nor other wayes, by word or deed. Then take vp this carde with your hart, and lay them together: that done, you haue won the game of the Turke, wherby you haue defaced and ouercome by true and lawfull play: but alas for pitie, the Rhodes are wonne and ouercome by these false Turkes, the strong Castle Fayth is decayed, so that I feare it is almost impossible to winne it agayne.

The great occasion of the losse of this Rhodes is by reason that Christian men doth so daily kill their own nation, that the very true number of Christianitie is decayed, which murther and killyng one of another, is encreased, specially two wayes, to the vtter vndoing of Christendome, that is to say, by example and silence. By example as thus: When the Father, the Mother, the Lord, the Lady, the Maister, the Dame,* be themselues ouercome with these Turkes, they be continuall swearers, adulterers, disposers to malice, neuer in patience, and so forth in all other vices. Thinke you not when the Father, the mother, the Maister, the Dame bee disposed vnto vice or impatience, but that their children and seruants shall encline and be disposed to the same? No doubt, as the chylde shall take disposition naturall of their father and mother, so shal the seruaunts apply vnto the vices of their Maisters and Dames: if the heads be false in theyr faculties and crafts, it is no meruayle if the children seruaunts, and apprentices do enioy therein. This is a great and shameful maner of killyng Christian men, that the Fathers, the Mothers, the Maisters and the Dames shall not alonely kyll themselues, but all theyrs, and all that longeth vnto them, and so this way is a great number of christian linage murthered and spoiled. The second maner of killyng is silence. By silence also is a great number of christen men slayne, which is on this fashion: although that the father & mother, maister & dame of themselues be wel disposed to liue according to the law of God, yet they may kil their childrē and seruants in suffryng them to do euill before their own faces, and do not vse due correction accordyng vnto theyr offences: the maister seeth his seruaunt or apprentice take Page 1734 more of his neighbour then the Kings lawes or the other of hys facultie doth admit hym, or that hee suffereth hym to take more of hys neighbour then he hymselfe would be content to pay if he were in lyke condition: thus doynge, I say such men kill willyngly their children and seruants and shall goe to hell for so doynge: but also their fathers and mothers, maisters and dames, shall beare them company for so sufferyng them. Wherefore I exhort all true Christian men and women, to geue good example vnto your children and seruauntes, and suffer not them by silence to offend: euery man must bee in hys owne house, accordyng to Saint Augustines mynde, a Bishop, not all onely geuyng good ensample, but teach accordyng to it, rebuke and punish vice, not sufferyng your children & seruauntes to forget the lawes of GOD: you ought to see them haue their Beliefe, to know the Commaundements of God, to keepe their holy dayes, not to loose theyr tyme in idlenesse: if they doe so, you shall all suffer payne for it, if God be true of hys saying, as there is no doubt thereof: and so you may perceyue that there be many one that breaketh this carde, Thou shalt not kill, and playeth therwith oftentimes at the blynde trompe, whereby they bee no winners but great losers: but who bee those now a dayes that can cleare themselues of this manifest murthers vsed to their children and seruaunts? I thinke not the contrary, but that many hath these two wayes slayne their owne children vnto their damnations, vnlesse the great mercy of God were not ready to helpe them when they repent therefore.

Wherefore, considering that we be so prone and ready to continue in sinne, let vs cast downe our selues wyth Mary Magdalene, and the more wee •ow downe wyth her toward Christes feete, the more we shall be afrayd to ryse agayne in sinne, and the more we knowe and submit our selues, the more we shall bee forgeuen: and the lesse we knowe and submit our selues, the lesse we shall be forgeuen, as appeareth by this example followyng.

Christ when he was in this world amongst the Iews and Phariseys, there was a great Pharisey whose name was Simon: this Pharisey desired Christ on a tyme to dyne with hym, thinkyng in hymselfe that hee was able and worthy to geue Christ a diner. Christ refused not hys dinner, but came vnto hym. In tyme of their dinner, it chaunced there came into the house a great and a common sinner named Mary Magdalene: As soone as she perceiued Christ, she cast her selfe downe, and called vnto her remembraunce what she was of her selfe, and how greatly she had offended God, whereby she conceyued in Christ great loue, and so came neere vnto hym, and washed hys feete with bitter teares, and shed vpon hys head precious oyntment, thinkyng that by hym she should be deliuered from her sinnes: this great and proude Pharisey seeyng that Christ did accept her oblation in the best part, had great indignation agaynst this woman, and sayd to hymselfe: if this man Christ were a holy Prophet, as he is taken for, he would not suffer this sinner come so nigh hym: Christ vnderstandyng the naughty mynd of this Pharisey, sayd vnto hym: Simon, I haue somewhat to say vnto thee: say what you please (quod the Pharisey.) Then sayd Christ, I pray thee tell me this: If there be a man to whome is owyng xx. pound by one, and fourtie by an other, this man to whom this money is owyng perceyueth these two men bee not able to pay hym, he forgeueth them both. Which of these two debtors ought to loue this man most? The Pharisey sayd: That man ought to loue him best, that had most forgeuen hym: Likewyse sayd Christ, it is by this woman, She hath loued me most, therefore most is forgeuen her, she hath knowen her sinnes most, whereby she hath most loued mee: and thou hast least loued me, because thou hast least knowen thy sinnes: therefore, because thou hast lest knowne thine offenses, thou art least forgeuen. So this proud Pharisey had an aunswere to delay hys pryde: and thinke you not, but that there be amongst vs a great number of these proude Phariseys, which thinke themselues woorthy to bidde Christ to dinner, which wyll perke and presume to sitte by Christ in the Church, and haue disdayne of this poore womā Magdalene, theyr poore neyghbour, with a hygh disdaynous and solemne countenance: and beyng alwayes desirous to clymbe highest in the Church, reckonyng theyr selues more woorthy to sit there then an other, I feare me poore Magdalene vnder the boord, and in the belfrey, hath more forgeuen of Christ then they haue: for it is lyke that those Phariseys doe lesse knowe themselues and their offences, whereby they lesse loue GOD, and so they bee lesse forgeuen.

I would to God we would followe this example, and be lyke vnto Magdalen. I doubt not but we be all Magdalens in fallyng into sinne, and in offendyng: but we be not agayne Magdalens in knowyng our selues, and in rising from sinne. If we bee the true Magdalens, wee should be as willyng to forsake our sinne, and ryse from sinne, as we were willyng to commit sinne, and to continue in it, and we then should know our selues best, and make a more perfect aunswer, then euer we did vnto this question, Who art thou? To the which we might answer, that we be true Christian men and women: and then I say you should vnderstand, and knowe how you ought to playe at this carde, Thou shalt not kyll, without any interruption of your deadly enemies the Turkes: and so triumph at the last, by winnyng euerlastyng lyfe in glory. Amen.

It would aske a long discourse to declare what a stirre there was in Cambridge, vpon this preachyng of maister Latymer. Belike Sathan began to feele hymselfe and hys kyngdome to bee touched too neare, and therefore thought it tyme to looke about hym, and to make out hys men of armes.

First, came out the Priour of the Blacke Friers called Buckneham, otherwyse surnamed Domine labia,* who thinking to make a great hand agaynst Maister Latimer, about the same tyme of Christenmas, when Maister Latymer brought foorth hys cardes to deface belyke the doynge of the other, brought out hys Christenmasse Dice, castyng there to hys audience cinque and quater: meaning by the cinque fiue places in the New Testament, and the foure Doctors by the quater, by which his cinque quater, he would prooue, that it was not expedient the Scripture to be in English, least the ignoraunt and vulgar sort thorough the occasion thereof, myght happily be brought in daunger to leaue their vocation, or els to runne into some inconuenience: as for example.

The Plowman when he heareth this in the Gospell:† No man that layeth hys hand on the Plough, and looketh backe, is meete for the kyngdome of God, might peraduenture hearyng this, cease from his plough. Likewyse the Baker when he heareth that a little Leauen corrupteth a whole lumpe of dowe, may percase leaue our bread vnleuened, and so our bodies shall be vnseasoned. Also the simple man when he heareth in the Gospell: If thine eye offend thee, pluck it out, and cast it from thee, may make him selfe blynd, and so fill the world ful of beggers. These with other mo, this clarkely Frier brought out to the number of fiue, to prooue his purpose.

Maister Latymer hearyng this Frierly Sermon of Doctour Bucknham, commeth agayne the after noone, or shortly after to the Church, to aunswer the Frier, where resorted to hym a great multitude, as well of the Uniuersitie, as of the Towne, both Doctours and other Graduates, with great expectation to heare what he could say: among whom also, directly in the face of Latymer vnderneath the pulpit, sate Bucknham the foresayd Frier Prior of the blacke Friers, with his blacke Friers coule aboute hys shoulders.

Then M. Latymer first repeatyng the Frierly reasons of Doctour Bucknham, whereby hee would prooue it a daungerous thyng for the vulgare people,* to haue the Scripture in the vulgar tongue, so refuted the Fryer, so aunswered to hys obiections, so dallied with hys balde reasons of the Ploughman lookyng backe, and of the Baker leauyng hys bread vnleuened, that the vanitie of the Frier myght to all men appeare, well proouyng and declaryng to the people, howe there was no such feare nor daunger for the Scriptures to be in English as the Frier pretended: at lest this requiryng, that the scripture might be so long in English tongue, tyll English men were so madde, that neyther the Ploughman durst looke back, nor the Baker would leaue hys breade vnleuened. And procedyng moreouer in hys Sermon, he began to discourse of the mysticall speaches, and figuratiue phrases of the Scripture: which phrases he sayd were not so diffuse and difficult, as they were common in the Scripture, and in the Hebrue tongue most commonlye vsed and knowen, and not onelye in the Hebrue tongue: But also euerye speach (sayeth he) hath hys Metaphors and lyke figuratiue significations, so common and vulgar to all men, that the very Painters do paynt them on walles and in houses.

As for example (sayeth he, lookyng toward the Frier that sate ouer agaynst hym) when they paynt a foxe preachyng out of a Friers coule, none is so madde to take this to be a Foxe that preacheth, but knowe well enough the meanyng of the matter, which is to paynte out vnto vs, Page 1735 what hypocrisie, craft and subtile dissimulation lyeth hid many tymes in these Friers coules, willyng vs thereby to beware of them. In fine, Frier Bucknham wyth this Sermon was so dashed, that neuer after hee durst peepe out of the pulpit agaynst M. Latymer.

*Besides this Bucknham there was also another rayling Frier, not of the same coate, but of the same note and faction, a gray Frier and a Doctor, an outlandishman called D. Uenetus, who likewyse in his brawling sermons, rayled and raged agaynst M. Latymer, calling him a mad and braynelesse man, and willyng the people not to beleue hym, &c. To whome M. Latymer aunsweryng agayne, taketh for hys ground the wordes of our Sauour Christ, Math. 5. *Thou shalt not kyll, &c. but I say vnto you, who so euer is angry with hys neighbour shall bee in daunger of iudgement: and who so euer shall say vnto hys Neighbour Racha (or any other lyke wordes of rebukyng, as braynelesse) shall be in danger of counsaile: And who so euer shall say to his neighbour foole, shall be in daunger of hell fire. &c.

In discussing of which place, first hee deuideth the offence of killyng into three branches. *One to be with hand, an other with hart, the third with word. With hand when we vse any weapon drawn, to spill the lyfe of our neighbor. With hart, when we be angry with hym. With word, when in word or countenance we disdainfully rebuke our neighbour, or despitefully reuile hym. Wordes of rebukyng are when we speake any opprobrious and vnseemly thyng, whereby the pacience of our neighbour is mooued, as when we call hym mad (sayd he) or braynelesse, or such lyke, which are guiltie of Counsaile. Wordes of spite or reuilyng, are, whē we call hym foole: which Christ saith is guilty of hell fire, &c.

Thus M. Latimer in handlyng and trimmyng this matter, after that with the weight of Christes words, and the explainyng of the same, hee had sufficiently borne the Frier cleane downe, then he turned to the v. chapter of the booke of Wisdome. Out of the which chap. hee declared to the audience, *how the true seruantes and Preachers of God in this world commonly are scorned and reuiled of the proud enemies of Gods word, which count them here as mad men, fooles, brainelesse, and *drunken: so did they (sayed he) in the Scripture call them which most purely preached, and set foorth the glory of Gods word. But (said he) what will be the ende of these iolly fellowes, or what will they say in the ende? Nos insensati, nos insensati, &c. We mad men, we mad fooles, We, we, our selues, &c. And that will be their end, except they repent. And thus endyng his Sermon, he so confounded the poore Frier, that hee droue hym not onely out of countenance, but also cleane out of the Uniuersitie.

But what should I here stand deciphryng the names of his aduersaries, when whole swarmes of Friers & doctours flockt against hym on euery side almost through the whole Uniuersitie, preachyng likewyse & barking against hym. Amongest whome was Doct. Watson Maister of Christes Colledge, whose scholer Latimer had bene afore. D. Notaries, Maister of Clarehall. D. Philo Maister of Michael house, D. Metecalfe Maister of Saint Iohns, D. Blithe of the Kyngs hall. D. Bullocke Maister of the Queenes Colledge, D. Cliffe of Clement house, Doctor Donnes of Iesus Colledge, Doctor Palmes Maister of S. Nicholas Hostle, Bain, Rud, and Greenwood Bachelor of Diuinitie, all three of Saint Iohns Colledge. Also Brikenden Bachelor of Diuinitie of the same house, and Scholer sometyme to the sayd Latimer. Briefly, almost as many as were heds there of houses, so many impugnors did this worthy Standerd bearer of Christes gospel sustayne.

Then came at last D. West B. of Ely, who preachyng agaynst M. Latimer at Barwell Abbey,^{*} forbade him with in the Churches of that Uniuersitie to preach any more. Notwithstandyng, so the Lord prouided, that D. Barnes Prior of the Augustine Friers, did licence Maister Latymer to preach in hys Church of the Augustines, & he himselfe preached at the church by called S. Edwards church, which was the first Sermon of the Gospell which doctor Barnes preached, beyng vpon Christenmas euen vpon a Sunday. Wherupon certayne Articles were gathered out of his Sermon, and were commenced against hym by M. Tirell fellow of the Kyngs hall, and so by the Uice chancellor presented to the Cardinal, as in his story before hath bene declared.

This M. Latimer (as you haue heard) beyng bayted by the Friers, Doctors, and maisters of that Uniuersitie, about the yeare aforesaid, 1529. notwithstandyng the maugre and malice of these malignant aduersaries, continued yet in Cambridge, preaching the space of 3. yeres together▪ with such sauour and applause of the godly, also with such admiration of hys enemies that heard hym, that the Bishop himselfe commyng in, and hearyng his gilt, wysshed hymselfe to haue the lyke, and was compelled to commend hym vpon the same.

So M. Latymer with M. Bilney, after this continued yet in Cambridge a certayne space,^{*} where he with the sayde Bilney vsed much to conferre and companie together, in so muche that the place where they most vsed to walke in the fieldes, was called long after, the Heretikes hill.

The societie of these two, as it was much noted of many in that Uniuersitie: so it was full of many good examples, to all such as would follow their doyngs, both in visityng the prisoners, in relieuyng the needy, in feeding the hungry, whereof somewhat is before mentioned in the history of M. Bilney. In a place of hys Sermons, M. Latymer maketh mention of a certaine history which happened about this tyme in Cambridge betweene them two, and a certayne woman then prisoner in the Castle or tower of Cambridge, which I thought here not vnworthy to be remembred. The historie is this: It so chaunced that after Maister Latymer had bene acquaynted with the fore sayd Maister Bilney, he went with hym to visite the prisoners in the Tower in Cambridge, and beyng there among other prysoners, there was a woman which was accused that she had killed her owne chylde, which acte she playnly and stedfastly denied. Whereby it gaue them occasion to searche for the matter, and at length they founde that her husbände loued her not, and therefore soughte all meanes he coulde to make her away. The matter was thus.

A child of hers had bene sicke a whole yere, & at length died in haruest tyme, as it were in a consumption.^{} Which when it was gone, shee went to haue her neighboures to helpe her to the buriall, but all were in Haruest abroad: whereby she was enforced with heauinesse of heart, alone to prepare the chylde to the buriall. Her husband comming home, and not louyng her, accused her of murtheryng the child. This was the cause of her trouble, and M. Latimer by earnest inquisition, of conscience thought the woman not guilty. Thē immediatly after, was he called to preach before king Henry the 8. at Windsore: where after his sermon the kyngs maiestie sent for hym, and talked with him familiarly. At which tyme M. Latimer finding oportunitie, kneeled downe, opened hys whole matter to the kyng, and begged her pardon, which the kyng most graciously granted, and gaue it hym at his return homeward. In the meane tyme the woman was deliuered of a chylde in the prison, whose Godfather was M. Latymer, and maistres Cheeke Godmother. But all that whyle he would not tel her of the pardone, but laboured to haue her confesse the truth of the matter. At length tyme came when she looked to suffer,* and Maister Latymer came as he was woont to instruct her: vnto whome shee made great lamentation and moue, to be purified before her suffring, for she thoght to be damned if she should suffer without purification. Then M. Bilney beyng with maister Latimer, both told her that that law was made to the Iewes, and not to vs, and howe women bee as well in the fauour of GOD before they be purified, as after: and rather it was appointed for a ciuill and politike lawe, for naturall honestye sake, then that they should any thyng the more be purified from sinne thereby, &c. So thus they trauayled wyth this woman, till they had brought her to a good trade, and then at length shewed her the Kyngs pardon, and let her goe.

This good act among many other at this tyme happened in Cambridge, by M. Latimer, and Maister Bilney. But this was not alone, for many mo lyke matters were wrought by them if all were known, wherof partly some are touched before, such especially as concerne M. Bilney, mention whereof is aboue expressed. But as it is commonly seene in the naturall course of thynges, that as the fire beginneth more to kyndle, so the more smoke aryseth withall, in much lyke sort it happened with Maister Latymer, whose towardnesse the more it beganne to spryng, hys vertues to be seene, and hys doynge to bee knowen, the more hys aduersaries began to spurne and kindle against hym. Concernyng these aduersaries, and such as did molest him, partly their names bee aboue expressed. Among the rest of this number was Doct. Redman, of whome mention is made before in the raigne of king Edward, a man sauouring at that tyme somewhat more of superstition, then of true religion, after the zeale of the Phariseis, yet not so malignant or harmfull, but of Page 1736 a ciuill and quiet disposition, and also so liberall in well doynge, that few poore Scholers were in that vniuersitie, which fared not better by his purse. This Doct. Redman beyng of no little authoritie in Cambridge, perceiuyng & vnderstandyng the bold enterprise of M. Latymer, in setting abroad the word and doctrine of the Gospell at thys tyme,* or much about the same, writeth to hym, seeking by perswasion to reuoke the sayd Latimer from that kynde & maner of teachyng: to whom M. Latimer maketh aunswer agayne in few words. The summe and effect of both their letters translated out of Latine, here followe to bee seene.

¶The summe of the Epistle written by Doctor Redman, to M. Latymer.

*GRace be vnto you, and true peace in Christ Iesu. I beseeche you hartily, and require most earnestly, euen for charities sake, that you wyll not stand in your owne conceite with a mind so indurate, nor preferre your owne singular iudgement in matters of religion and controuersies before so many learned men, and that more is, before the whole Catholike Church, especially consideryng that you neither haue any thyng at all in the word of God to make for you, nor yet the testimony of any autenticall wryter. Nay, nay: I beseech you rather consider that you are a man, and that lying and vanitie maye quickly bleare your eye, which doth sometyme transforme it selfe into an Aungell of lyght.

Judge not so rashly of vs, as that wicked spirite hath tickled you in the eare. Witte you well that we are carefull for you, and that we wish you to be saued, and that wee are carefull also for our owne saluation. Lay downe your stomacke I pray you, and humble your spirite, and suffer not the Church to take offence with the hardnes of your hart, nor that her vnitie and Christes coate without seame (as much as lyeth in you) should be torne a sunder. Consider what the sayeng of the wyseman is, and be obedient thereunto: Trust not in your owne wisdom. The Lord Iesus Christ, &c.

¶The summe of M. Latymers aunswer to Doct. Redman.

*REuerend M. Redman, it is euen enough for me, that Christes sheepe heare no mans voyce but Christ: and as for you, you haue no voyce of Christ agaynst me, whereas for my part, I haue a heart that is ready to harken to any voyce of Christ that you can bring me. Thus fare you well, and trouble me no more from the talkyng with the Lord my God.

*After Maister Latymer had thus trauailed in preachyng and teachyng in the Uniuersitie of Cambridge, about the space of three yeares, at length he was called vp to the Cardinall for heresie, by the procurement of certain of the sayd Uniuersitie, where he was content to subscribe and graunt to such Articles, as then they propounded vnto hym, &c.

*After that, he returned to the Uniuersitie again, where shortly after, by the meanes of D. Buttes the kyngs Phisition, a singuler good man, and a special fauourer of good procedyngs, he was in the number of them which laboured in the cause of the kyngs supremacie. Then went he to the Court, where he remayned a certaine tyme in the sayd D. Buttes chamber, preachyng then in London very often. At last beyng weary of the Court, hauyng a benefice offred by the kyng, at the sute of the L. Crumwell and D. Buttes, was glad thereof, seekyng by that meanes to bee rid out of the Court, wherewith in no case he could agree, and so hauyng a grant of the benefice, cōtrary to the mind of D. Buttes, he would needes depart, and be resident at the same.

This benefice was in Wilshire, vnder the Diocesse of Sarum,* the name of which towne was called West Kington, where this good preacher did exercise hymselfe wyth much diligence of teaching to instruct hys flocke: and not onely to them his diligence extended, but also to all the countrey about. In fine, his diligence was so great, hys preachyng so mighty, the maner of his teaching so zelous, that there in lyke sort hee could not escape without enemies. So true it is that Saint Paul foretelleth vs: Who so euer will lyue godly in Christ, shall suffer persecution. It so chanced,* that where as he preachyng vpon the blessed virgine Christes mother (whome we call our Lady) had thereupon declared his mynd, referring and reducing all honour onely to Christ our onely Sauior, certaine popish priests beyng therewith offended, sought & wrought much trouble against hym, drawyng out Articles and impositions which they vntruly, vniustly, falsly, and vncharitably imputed vnto hym: first that hee should preach against our Lady, for that he reprooued in a sermon the superstitious rudenesse of certaine blynd Priestes,* which so held altogether vpon that blessed Uirgin, as though shee neuer had any sinne, nor were saued by Christ the onely Sauour of the whole world.

Item, that he should say, that Saintes were not to be worshipped.

Item, that Aue Maria was a salutation onely,* and no prayer.

Item, that there was no materiall fire in hell.

Item, that there was no purgatorie, in saying, that he had leuer be in Purgatory, then in Lollards tower.

Touchyng the whole discourse of whiche Articles, with hys reply and aunswer to the same, hereafter shall follow (by the Lordes assistaunce) when we come to his letters.

The chiefe impugners and molesters of hym, besides these countrey priests, were D. Powell of Salisbury,* D. Wilson sometyme of Cambridge, M. Hubberdin, and D. Sherwood. Of whom some preached agaynst hym, some also did write against hym: in so much that by their procurement he was cited vp, and called to appeare before W. Warrham Archbishop of Canterbury, & Ioh. Stokesley Bish. of London, ann. 1531. Ian. 29. the copy of which citation, here ensueth.

¶The copy of the Citation sent to the sayd M. Latimer by the Chancellor of Sarum, at the intercession of the Bish. of London.

Against this citation,*although M. Latimer did appeale to his owne Ordinary, requiring by hym to bee ordered, yet all that notwithstanding, he was had vp to Lōdon before Warrham the Archbishop of Canterbury and the Bish. of London, where he was greatly molested, and deteined a long space from his cure at home. There he beyng called thrise euery weeke before the sayd Bishops, to make aunswer for his preachyng,*had certaine articles or propositions drawen out and sayed to hym, whereunto they required hym to subscribe. At length he not only perceiuyng their practical procedyngs, but also much grieued with their troublesome vnquietnes, which neither would preach themselues, nor yet suffer him to preach & to do his dutie, writeth to the foresayd Archbish. partly excusing his infirmitie, whereby he could not appeare at their cōmandement, partly expostulatyng with them for so troubllyng and deteinyng hym from his duetie doying, and that for no iust cause, but onelye for preachyng the truth agaynst certayne vayne abuses crept into religion, much needfull to be spoken agaynst. Which all may appeare by his Epistle sent to a certaine bishop or Archbishop, whose name is not expressed, the cōpye of which Epistle in Latine is this.

NON licet reuerendissime praesul per superuenientem aegrotationem ad tuum palatium venire,* non nouam quidem illam, sed inueteratam, & si nouis occasionibus nuper exasperatam. Page 1737 Certe quantum videre videor, & quantum coniecturis ducor, hodie non licebit, citra meum (inquam) magnum malum non licebit. Et ne meum expectaret aduentum diutius tua dominatio frustra: en hanc qualem cun{que} schedulam mea manu oblitam ad tuam amplitudinem mitto, velut excusationis nostrae certissimum indicem. In qua vtinam vel per temporis importunitatem, vel per capitis gra edinem, iustam aliquam expostulationem liceret tecum facere, qui me, curam animarum habenrem ab earundem curatione debita tam diu detines inuitum, & hac quidem tempestate detines, qua pastores cum gregibus adesse oportet vel maxime. Quid ni enim expostulem, si modo tam vili mancipio cum tanto patre expostulare sit licitum. Nam si Petrus arbitr•batur iustum esse ratione officij sui, quamdiu in hoc foret tabernaculo, vt populum admonere & docere neutiquam cessaret, & quo propius morti hoc instantius, ergo non potest non videre iniustum si qui hodie ne{que} docent ipsi (vt iam nihil mirer si non ante docuerunt) ne{que} cupiētes docere permittunt, nisi quos habuerunt votis per omnia & in omnibus obsequundantes. Primum liberum erat me ipsum amplitudini vestrae praesentare & offerre, sed inde me ipsum eripere & extricare, parum nunc quidem videtur mihi liberum esse. Et dum aliud in principio praetenditur, aliud in progressu tam longo temporis tractu agitur, nostri negotij quis aut qualis sit futurus exitus, nō immerito dubitatur: sed veritas tandem liberabit vti spero. Dominus qui custodit veritatem in seculum liberabit, super quo quid scribit Hieronymus vtinam nunquam e memoria excideret. Non poterat me molestare quicquid essem pro veritate passurus: sed viuut deus, & ipsi cura est de nobis. Tum modo ad Lond. missus sum, caeterum coram Cant. interdum multis formidandis patribus stipato geruntur omnia. Res velut cancellos quosdam & limites habet, ab eo qui me misit praestitutos: verum sic tractatur causa, & ambagibus ducitur, quasi in infinitum abitura, nullo tādē claudenda termino, dum sine modo & fine, alia post alia ad me, siue pertinentia, siue impertinentia, nunc ab hoc, nunc ab illo interrogantur, si non egomet modo, & si forte inciuiliter, ac non imprudenter tamen (ni fallor) modum imponere, veritus ne inter multa,* dum multis respondet vnus, vnum aliquod (vt fit) ex inconsulto erumperet, quod causam laederet, alioqui iustissimam: & me malum ostendat oportet nemini volētem male moliri, si quid in conscientia est erroris: & meminisse omnino illud oportet, nempe ad gehennam edificare, contra conscientiam facere, hijs sat fuerit sua profiteri▪ sua asserere, sua defensare: mihi vero assertiones alienae obtruduntur, nescio quo iure asserendae. Sine exemplo, opinor hoc fit mihi, qui tamen intractabilis, fere videor, dum nihil aliud quam iniquis efflagitationibus (quod ego iudico) acquiescere detrecto. Aduersus praedicationes meas si quis quid in tentare conabitur, tanquam vel obscuriores, vel parum caute pronunciatas, paratus sum praedicationes praedicationibus illustrare, qui nihil aduersus veritatem, nihil aduersus decreta patrum, nil non catholice (quod sciam) praedicaui vnquam Id quod per aduersariorum & obloquentium testimonia commonstrare poteram esse verum.* Optaui & opto iudiciū vulgi reparari. Optaui & opto discrimen rerum deprehendi, & sua dignitate suo loco, & tempore, suo gradu & ordine, vnamquam{que} rem pollere, gaudere, vt ingenue sciant omnes, permultum interesse inter ea quae praeparauit deus, vt in eis ambulemus, quisque vocationis opera sedulo facturi,* postquam quae omnibus sunt communia, pari sedulitate sunt facta, & inter ea quae spontanea sunt, vt in quibus non nisi nostropote Marte obambulamus. Imaginibus vti licet, peregrinari licet, sanctos inuocare licet, animarum in purgatorio residentium memores esse licet: sed sic temperanda sunt, quae voluntaria sunt, vt praecepta dei factu necessaria (quae facientibus vitam aeternam, non facientibus aeternam mortem afferunt) iusta estimatione non priuentur, ne praepostere diligentes deum stulte deuoti, deum contra experiamur non redamantem nos, sed odio potius prosequentem, cum hoc est deum vere diligere, nimirum praecepta dei diligenter seruare, iuxta illud Christi: qui habet praecepta mea & facit ea, hic est qui diligit me, ne quis tam vilia reputet praecepta Dei vocationem concernentia, in suis potius adinventionibus aberraturus, cum in fine ante tribunal Christi secundum illa, non secundum has, omnes ad vnum iudicabimur, iuxta illud Christi: sermo quem locutus sum, ipse iudicabit in nouissimo die. Et quis potest vnum praeceptum dei vllis additijs inuentis quamlibet aut multis aut spetiosis compensare. O si essemus ad ea quae Dei sunt peragenda tam propensi, quam sumus ad nostra excogitamenta exercenda seduli & deuoti. Multa sunt quae simplici fide facta non improbat deus, sed probat vtcunque, saltem quorundam infirmitati indulgens, quae tamen antequam fierent interrogatus, nec praeciperet, nec consuleret fieri, vtpote quae iustius toleranda sunt, dum sic fiant, quam praedicanda vt fiant: ne occasione praedicationis (vt fit) omittantur, quae periculo damnationis fieri debeant. Et quid magis indecorum, quam ad id praedicationem conuertere,* quod deus ipse, nec praeciperet, nec consuleret fieri, saltem quam diu negligenter fiunt quae praecipiantur facienda. Proinde ego ex parte mandatorum dei sto hactenus immobilis, sic non meum, sed Christi lucrum, non meam sed dei gloriā quaerens, & donec respirare licebit, stare nō desinam, sic germanos verbi precones, quotquot hactenus fuere imitaturus. Intollerabiles sane sunt, & diu fuere quarundam rerum abusus,* vt nemo Christianae gloriae studiosus potest, nisi abusus rerum multo etiam magis improbatis res ipsas e suggestu probare, quae si rari⁹ fierent (vt ne dicam nunquam) modo hac occasione quae mādantur a deo fieri, fierent officiosius, quid quaeso pateretur acturae religio christiana? nisi forte sic caecutimus miseri, vt illa turpi questu nostro, non cultu dei vero putentur consistere am non potest (opinor) fieri, vt damnabilis eiusmodi rerum abusus iuste reprobetur, nisi protinus infrequentior earundem vsus sequatur. Quanquam praestiterit quaedam nunquam fieri quam tam fiducialiter fieri, vt minus curentur quae oportuit fieri, cum alia oportet facere, alia oportet non omittere, alia nec oportet facere, & omittere licet. Et quis manifestum multarum rerum abusus non videt? quis vidit, & non vehementer dolet? quis dolet denique & non laborat amouere? & quando amouebitur, si vsus praedicatione celebrabitur, tacebitur abusus? Imo non potest non regnare & dominari abusus. Aliud est, res quae possunt in loco fieri, tolerare, aliud easdem pro rebus quae debent fieri, aut passim praedicare, aut legibus praedicanda constituere. Euntes docete (inquit) omnia. Quenam omnia? omnia quae ego praecipi vobis (inquit) non dicit omnia quae vobis ipsis videntur praedicanda. Agite igitur per immortalem deum.* Sic neruos intendamus nostros, vt quae dei sunt, praedicemus ad vnum omnes, ne adulteri & caupones praedicationis verius, quam viri praedicatores euadamus: maxime dum homines ad diuina sunt pigerrimi, ad sua velocissimi, vt nihil sit opus calcaribus: iniusta rerum aestimatione, & innata superstitione, certe ab ineunte aetate a maioribus contracta miserabiliter decepti, quibus rebus mederi vix vllis praedicationibus quamlibet frequentibus, quamlibet vehementibus, quamlibet sinceris & puris quimus. Quare prohibeat deus, ne in hac dierum malitia, qui debent ipsi potius praedicare (praecipit enim nobis, inquit Petrus, praedicare) vel volentes & potentes praedicare praepediant, contra illud, noli prohibere eum benefacere qui potest, vel cauponantes praedicare compellant, sic miseram plebeculam in superstitione & fallaci fiducia damnabiliter detinētes. Quin deus potius misereatur nostri, vt cognoscamus in terra viam tuam, ne videamur in quos illud quadret digne, nō cogitationes meae, cogitationes vestrae, neque viae meae, viae vestrae, dicit dominus. Hinc ego nudis sententijs subscribere non audeo, domine cum primis obseruande, quia popularis superstitionis diutius duraturae quoad possum, authorculus esse nolo, ne mei ipsius damnationis simul sim author. Quod si dignus essem, qui tibi cōsiliū darem, colendissime pater, sed cohibeo me, quā sit prauum & intollerabile hominis cor detur vel coniectare. Neque sane quisquam nouit quae sunt hominis nisi spiritus hominis qui est in eo. Non me superbia detinet vlla, ab illa subscriptione toties a tua dominatione cum maxima mei animi molestia rogata. Non potest non esse impium patribus & proceribus ecclesiae non obtemperare, sed videndum interim illis & quid & quibus imperent cum in loco, deo quam hominib{us} obedire oportet magis. Sic dolet mihi caput, & reliquum corpus languet, vt nec venire, nec haec rescribere licet, & emendare. Sed tua dominatio si non iudicium meum, certe studium spero probabit. Valeat dominatio tua.

In this foresayd Epistle as ye heare, he maketh mention of certayne articles or propositions, whereunto hee was required by the Bishops to subscribe. The copy and effect of those articles or nude propositions (as hee calleth them) be these.

¶Articles deuised by the Bishops, for M. Latymer to subscribe vnto.

I Beleeue that there is a purgatory to purge the soules of the dead after this lyfe.

That the soules in Purgatorie are holpen wyth the Masses, prayers, and almes of the liuyng.*

That the Saints do pray as Mediatours now for vs in heauen.

That they are to be honoured of vs in heauen.

That it is profitable for Christians to call vppon the Saintes, that they may pray as Mediatours for vs vnto God.

That pilgrimages and oblations done to the Sepulchres, and Reliques of Saints, are meritorious.

That they which haue vowed perpetual chastitie, may not marry, nor breake their vow, without the dispensation of the Pope.

That the keyes of bindyng & loosing deliuered to Peter, do still remaine with the bishops of Rome, his successors, although they lyue wickedly, and are by no meanes, nor at any tyme committed to lay men.

That men may merite and deserue at Gods hand by fasting, prayer, and other good works of pitie.

That they which are forbidden of the Bishoppe to preach, as suspect persons, ought to cease vntill they haue Page 1738 purged themselues before the sayde Bishops, or theyr Superiors, and be restored agayne.

That the fast whiche is vsed in Lent, and other fastes prescribed by the Canons, and by custome receiued of the Christians (except necessity otherwise require) and to be obserued and kept.

That God in euery one of the seuen Sacramentes geueth grace to a man, rightly receiuing the same.

That consecrations, sanctifynges and blessinges by vse and custome receiued in the Church, are laudable and profitable.

That it is laudable and profitable, that the venerable Images of the Crucifix and other Sayntes, should be had in the Church as a remembraunce, and to the honour and worship of Iesus Christ and his Sayntes.

That it is laudable and profitable, to decke & to clothe those Images, and to set vp burning lightes before them, to the honor of the sayd Sayntes.

To these Articles whether he did subscribe or no, it is vncertayne.* It appeareth by his Epistle aboue written to the Byshoppe, that he durst not consent vnto them, where he writeth in these wordes: His ego nudis sententijs subscribere non audeo, quia popularis superstitionis diutius duraturae, quoad possum, autorculus esse nolo. &c. But yet whether he was compelled afterwarde to agree, through the cruell handling of the Byshoppes, it is in doubt. By the wordes and the Title in Tonstalles Register prefixed before the Articles, it may seeme that he subscribed. The wordes of the Register bee these: Hugo Latimerus in sacra Theologia Bacch. in vniuersitate Cantab. coram Cant. Archiepiscopo, Iohan. Lond. Episcopo, reliquaque concione apud Westmonst. vocatus, confessus est & recognouit fidem suam, sic sentiendo vt sequitur, in his artic. xxi. die Martij. Anno. 1531. If these wordes be true, it may bee so thought that he subscribed. And whether he so did, no great matter nor maruell, the iniquitye of the time being such, that either he must nedes so do, or els abide the Bishoppes blessing, that is, cruell sentence of death,* which he at that time (as himselfe confessed preachinge at Stamforde) was lothe to susteine for such matters as these were vnlesse it were for Articles necessary of his beliefe, by whiche his wordes I coniecture rather that he did subscribe at length, albeit it was longe before he coulde be brought so to do. Yet this by the waye is to be noted, concerning the crafty and deceitfull handling of these Bishoppes in his examinations, what subtle deuises they vsed the same time to entrappe him in theyr s•ares. The trueth of the story he sheweth forth hymselfe in a certayne Sermon preached at Stamforde. ann. 1550. October 9. his wordes be these. I was once (sayeth he) in examinatio before fiue or sixe Bishops,* where I had much turmoyling, euery weeke thrise: I came to examinations, and many snares and traps were layde to get something. Now God knoweth I was ignoraunt of the Lawe, but that God gaue me answere and wisdom what I should speake: it was God in deed, for els I had neuer escaped them. At the last I was brought forth to be examined into a chamber hanged with arras, where I was wont to be examined: but nowe at this time the chamber was somewhat altered. For where as before there was wonte euer to be a fire in the chimney, now the fire was taken away, and an arras hanged ouer the chimney and the table stood nere the chimneis end.

There was amongst these Bishoppes that examined me, one with whom I haue bene very familier, and tooke him for my great frend, an aged man, and he sate nexte the table end.

Then amongst all other questions he put forth one, a very subtle and crafty one, and such a one in deed, as I could not thinke so great daunger in. And when I should make aunswere, I pray you M. Latimer sayd one, speake out, I am very thicke of hearing, and here be many that fitte farre of. I maruelled at this, that I was biddē speak out, and began to misdeme, and gaue an eare to the chimney: and syr, there I heard a penne walking in the chimney behinde the cloth. They had appoynted one there to write all mine answeres: for they made sure, that I should not starte from them: there was no startinge from them, God was my good Lord, and gaue me aunswere, I could neuer elles haue scaped it. The question to him there and then obiected, was this: whether he thoughte in his conscience, that he hath bene suspected of heresye. This was a captious question.* There was no holding of peace would serue, for that was to graunt himselfe faulty. To answeere, it was euery way full of daunger. But GOD which alwaye geueth in neede what to aunswere, helped him, or elles (as he confesseth himselfe) he had neuer escaped theyr bloody handes. Albeit what was his answeere, he doth not there expresse. And thus hitherto you haue heard declared the manifold troubles of this godly preacher in the time not onely of his being in the Uniuersitye, but especially at his benefice, as partly by his owne wordes aboue mentioned, and partly by his owne letters hereafter folowing may better appeare.

In these so harde and daungerous straites, and suche snares of the bishops, hard it had bene for him and impossible to haue escaped and continued so long, had not the almighty helping hand of the highest, as he styrred him vp, so haue preserued him through the fauoure and power of his Prince: who with muche fauour embraced him,* and with his mere power sometime rescued and deliuered him out of the crooked clawes of his enemies. Moreouer, at length also, through the procurement, partly of Doctour Buttes, partly of good Cromwell, (whose story ye had before) he aduanced him to the degree and dignity of a Bishop, making him the bishop of Worcester,* which so cōtinued a fewe yeares, instructing his Dioces, according to the duty of a diligent and vigilant Pastor with wholesome doctrine and example▪ of perfecte conuersation duly agreeing to the same. It were a long matter to stand particularly vpon such things as might here be brought to the commendation of his paynes, as study, readines and continuall carefulnes in teaching, preaching, exhorting, visiting,* correcting and reforming, either as his ability could serue, or els the time woulde beare. But the dayes then were so daungerous and variable, that he could not in all thinges do that he would? yet what he might doe, that he perfourmed to the vttermost of his strength, so that althoughe hee could not vtterly extinguish al the sparkling relicks of old superstition, yet he so wrought,* that though they could not be taken away, yet they should be vsed with as little hurt, & with as much profite as might be. As (for exāple) in this thing, as in diuers other it did appeare, that whē it coulde not be auoyded, but holy water & holy bread must nedes be receiued, yet he so prepared and instructed them of hys Dioces, with such informations and lessons, that in receiuing therof superstition shoulde be excluded, and some remembrance taken thereby, teaching and charging the Ministers of his Dioces, in deliuering the holy bread and holy water, to say these wordes folowing.

¶ Wordes spoken to the people in geuing them holy water.

Remember your promise in Baptisme,

Christ his mercy and bloudshedding,*

By whose most holy sprinkeling,

Of all your sinnes you haue free pardoning.

¶ What to say in geuing holy bread.

Of Christes body this is a token,

Which on the crosse for our sinnes was broken,*

Wherefore of your sinnes you must be forsakers,

If of Christes death ye will be partakers.

By this it may be considered what the diligent care of this Bishop was in doying the duety of a faythfull Pastor among his flocke.* And moreouer it is to be thoughte that he would haue brought more thinges elles to passe, if the time then had aunswered to his desire: for he was not ignorant, how the institution of holy water and holy bread, not onely had no ground in scripture, but also how full of prophane exorcismes and coniurations they were, contrary to the rule and learning of the Gospell. Thus this good man behaued hymselfe in his Dioces, but, as before, both in the Uniuersity, and at his benefice he was tost and turmoyled by wicked and euill disposed persons,* so in hys Bishopricke also he was not all cleare and voyde of some that sought his trouble. As among many other euill willers, one especially there was, and that no small person, which accused him then to the king for his sermons. The story because he sheweth himselfe in a Sermon of his before K. Edward, I thought therfore to vse his owne wordes which be these.

In the kinges dayes that dead is, a great many of vs were called together before him,* to say our mindes in tertayne matters. In the end, one kneeleth downe and accuseth me of sedition and that I had preached sedititious doctrine. A heauy salutatiō, and a hard poynt of such a mans doing, as if I should name, ye would not thinke it.* The king turned to me and sayd: What say you to that syr?

Then I kneled downe, and turned me first to my accuser, and required him: Sir what forme of preaching would you appoynt me? in preaching before a king woulde you haue mee preache nothing as concerning a Kinge in the kinges Sermon? haue you any commission to appoint me Page 1739 what I shal preach? besides this I asked him diuers other questions, and he would make me none aunswere to any of them all: he had nothing to say.

Then I turned me to the king, and submitted my selfe to his grace,* and sayd: I neuer thought my selfe worthye, nor I neuer sued to be a Preacher before your grace, but I was called to it, and would be willing (if you mislike me) to geue place to my betters: for I graunt there be a greate many, more worthye of the roome then I am. And if it be your graces pleasure so to allowe them for Preachers, I coulde be content to beare theyr bookes after them. But if your grace allow me for a Preacher, I woulde desire your grace to geue me leaue to discharge my conscience, geue me leaue to frame my doctrine according to my audience. I had bene a very dolte to haue preached so at the borders of your realme, as I preach before your grace.

*And I thanke almighty GOD (which hath alwayes bene my remedy) that my sayinges were well accepted of the king, for like a gracious Lord he turned into an other communication. It is euen as the Scripture sayth: Cor Regis in manu Domini. i. The Lord directed the kinges hart. Certayne of my frendes came to me with teares in theyr eyes, and told me they looked I shoulde haue bene in the Tower the same night.

Besides this diuers other conflictes and combats this godly Bishop susteined in his owne country and Dioces, in taking the cause of right and equitye agaynste oppressiō and wrong. As for an other example, there was at that time not far from the dioces of Worcester a certayn Iustice of peace, whom here I will not name, being a good man afterward, and now deceased. This Iustice in purchasinge of certayne land for his brother,* or for himselfe, wēt about to wrong or damnify a poore man, who made his cōplaynt to M. Latimer. He first hearing, then tendering his rightfull cause, wrote his letter to the Gentleman: exhorting him to remember himselfe, to consider the cause and to absteine from iniury. The Iustice of peace not content withall (as the fashion of men is when they are tolde of theyr fault) sendeth word agayne, in greate displeasure, that hee would not so take it at his handes, with suche threatnyng wordes. &c. M. Latimer hearing this, aunswered agayne by writing to a certain gentleman: the copy wherof amōg his letters hereafter foloweth in the sequele of this story to be sene.

It were a large & long processe to story out all the doinges, trauels & writings of this christian Bishop neither yet haue we expressed all that came to our handes: but this I thought sufficient for this present. Thus he continued in this laborious function of a Bishop the space of certayne yeares, till the comming in of the 6. Articles.* Then beyng distressed through the straightnesse of time, so that either he must lose the quiet of a good conscience, or els must forsake his Bishopricke, he did of his owne free accord resigne his pastorship. At which time Shaxton then bishop of Salisbry resigned likewise with hym his bishopricke. And so these two remayned a great space vnbishopped, keping silence till the time of king Edward of blessed memory.* At what time he first put of his Rochet in his chamber amōg his frendes, sodenly he gaue askip in y^e floore for ioy, feling his shoulders so light, and being discharged (as he sayd) of such an heauy burden. Howbeit neither was he so lightened,* but that troubles & labors folowed him wheresoeuer he went. For a litle after he had renounced his bishoprick, first he was almost slayne, but sore brused with the fall off a tree. Then comming vp to London for remedye, he was molested & troubled of the bishops, wherby he was again in no little daunger, & at length was cast into the Tower where he cōtinually remayned Prisoner, till the time that blessed K. Edward entred his crown, by meanes wherof the goldē mouth of this preacher, long shut vp before, was now opened agayne. And so he beginning a freshe to sette forth his plough agayne, continued, all the time of the said king▪ labouring in the Lordes haruest most fruitfully, discharging his talent, as well in diuers other places of this realme, as in Stamford, and before the Duches of Suffolk (whose sermons be extant and set forth in print) as also at London in the conuocation house: and especially before the king at the Court, in the same place of the inward garden which was before applied to lasciuious & courtly pastimes there he dispensed the fruitfull word of the glorious Gospell of Iesus Christ,* preaching there before the king & hys whole Court, to the edification of many.

A description of M. Latimer, preaching before K. Edward the 6. in the preaching place at Westminster.

IN this his paynefull trauell he occupied himselfe all K. Edwardes dayes,* preaching for the most part euery sonday twise, to no small shame of all other loytering and vnpreaching Prelates, which occupy great roomes and do litle good: and that so much more to theyr shame, because he being a sore brused man by the fall of the Tree, mentioned a little before, and aboue lxxvij. yeares of age tooke so little case, and care of sparing himselfe, to doe the people good Now to speake here of his indefatigable trauell and diligence in his owne priuate studies, who notwithstanding both hys yeares, and other paynes in preaching,* euerye mornyng ordinarily, Wynter and Sommer, about two of the clocke in the morninge was at his booke most diligently. Howe carefull his hart was of the preseruacion of the Church and the good successe of the Gospell, hys Letters canne testify, wherewith he continuallye admonished Page 1740 such as then were in authority, of theyr duty, and assisted them with his godly counsell.

As the diligence of this man of God neuer ceased all the time of king Edward, to profite the Church both publickely and priuately, so among other doings in him to be noted,* this is not lightly to be ouerpassed, but worthye to be obserued, that God not onely gaue vnto him his spirite plenteously and comfortably to preache his word vnto hys Church, but also by the same spirite hee did so euidentlye foreshew and prophecye of all those kindes of plagues before, which afterward ensued, that if England euer had a Prophet he might seeme to be one. And as touching hymselfe, he euer affirmed that the preachinge of the Gospell would cost him his life, to the which he no lesse chearefully prepared himselfe, then certaynely was perswaded that Winchester was kept in the Tower for the same purpose,* as the euent did to truelye prooue the same. For after the death of the sayde blessed King Edward, not long after Queene Marye was proclaymed, a Pursuant was sente downe (by the meanes no doubt of Winchester) into the countrey, to call him vp, of whose comming although M. Latimer lacked no forewarning being premonished about sixe houres before by one Iohn Careles (whose story here after foloweth) yet so farre of was it that he thought to escape, that he prepared himselfe towards his iorney before the sayd Pursuant came to his house.

At the which thing when the Pursuant maruelled, seing him so prepared towards his iourney, he sayde vnto him:* My frend, you be a welcome Messenger to me. And be it knowne vnto you, and to the whole world, that I go as willingly to Londō at this present, being called by my Prince to render a reckoning of my doctrine, as euer I was at any place in the worlde. And I doubt not but that God, as he hath made me worthy to preache his word before two excellent Princes, so he wil able me to witnes the same vnto the thyrd, either to her comfort or discomfort eternally. &c. At the which time the Pursuant, whē he had deliuered his letters, departed, affirming that he had commaundement not to tary for him. By whose sodein departure it was manifest that they would not haue him appere but rather to haue fled out of the realme. They knewe that his constancy should deface them in theyr Popery, and cōfirme the godly in the truth.

Thus Mayster Latimer being sent for, and comming vp to London through Smithfield (where merely he sayd that Smithfielde had long groaned for him) was brought before the Counsell,* where hee patientlye bearing all the mockes and tauntes geuen him by the scorneful Papistes, was cast agayne into the Tower, where he being assisted with the heauenly grace of Christ,* susteined most pacient imprisonment a long time, notwithstanding the cruel and vnmercifull handlinge of the Lordlye Papistes, whyche thought then theyr kingdome would neuer fall: yet he shewed hymselfe not onely pacient, but also chearefull in and aboue all that which they could or woulde worke agaynst him:* yea such a valiaunt spirit the Lord gaue him, that he was able not onely to despise the terriblesse of prisons & tormentes, but also to deride and laugh to scorne the doinges of his enemies. As it is not vnknowne to the eares of many, what he aunswered to the Lieutenaunt beyng then in the Tower. For when the Lieutenauntes man vpon a time came to him, the aged Father kept without fire in the frosty winter,* and well•ye starued for colde, merely bad the man tell his Mayster, that if he did not looke y^e better to him, perchaunce he would deceiue him.

The Lieutenaunt hearing this, he thought hymselfe of these wordes, and fearing least that in deede he thought to make some escape, beganne to looke more straightly to his Prisoner, and so comming to him, beginneth to charge him with his wordes, reciting the same vnto him whiche his man had told him before: how that if he were not better looked vnto, perchaunce he would deceiue them. &c. Yea Mayster Lieutenaunt, so I sayd (quoth he) for you looke I thinke that I shoulde burne:* but except you let me haue some fire, I am like to deceiue your expectation, for I am like here to starue for cold.

Many such like answeres and reasons, mery, but sauery, comming not from a vayne minde, but from a constant and quiet reasō, proceded from that man, declaring a firme and stable hart, litle passing for all this great blustering of theyr terrible threatens, but rather deriding the same.

Thus Mayster Latimer passing a long time in the tower,* with as much pacience as a manne in his case coulde do, from thence was transported to Oxforde, with Doctor Cranmer Archbishop of Caunterbury, and Mayster Ridley Byshop of London, there to dispute vpon Articles sent downe from Gardiner Bishop at Winchester as is before touched, the maner and order of whiche disputations betwene them and the Uniuersitye Doctours is also before sufficiently expressed. Where also is declared, how and by whome the sayd Latimer with his otherfellow Prisoners, were condemned after the disputations, and so committed agayne to the Prison, and there they con•umed from the Moneth of Aprill aboue mentioned, to this present Moneth of October: where they were most godly occupied,* either with brotherly conference, or with feruent prayer, or with fruitfull writing.

Albeit M. Latimer by reasō of the feblenes of his age, wrote least of them all in this latter time of his imprisonment: yet in prayer he was feruently occupied, wherin oftentimes so long he continued kneeling, that hee was not able to rise without helpe: and amongst other things, these were three principall matters he prayed for.

First, that as God had appoynted him to be a preacher of his worde,* so also he woulde geue him grace to stand to his doctrine vntill his death, that he might geue his harte bloud for the same.

Secōdly, that God of his mercy would restore his gospell to Englande once agayne, and these wordes once agayne, once agayne, he did so inculcate & beat into y^e eares of the Lord God, as though he had sene God before hym,* and spoken to him face to face.

The third matter was, to pray for the preseruacion of the Queenes Maiesty, that now is,* whome in his prayer he was wont accustomedly to name, and euen with teares desired God to make her a comfort to his comfortles realme of England. These were the matters he prayed for so earnestlye. Neither were these thinges of him desired in vayne, as the good successe thereof after following did declare: for the Lord most graciously did graunt all those his requestes.

First concerning his constancy, euen in the most extremity the Lord graciously assisted him.* For when he stode at the stake without Bocardo gate at Oxford, and the tormentors about to sette the fire to him, and to the learned and Godly Byshop Mayster Ridley, he lifted vp his eyes towardes heauen with an amiable and comfortable countenaunce, saying these wordes: Fidelis est Deus qui non sinit nos tentari supra id quod possumus: God is faythfull, whiche doth not suffer vs to be tempted aboue our strength: and so afterwarde by and by shedde his bloude in the cause of Christ, the whiche bloud ranne of his hart in suche aboundaunce that all those that were present, being godly, dyd maruell to see the most part of the bloud in his body to bee gathered to hys hart, and with such violence to gush out, his body being opened by the force of the fire: by the whiche thing God most graciously graunted his request, whiche was that he might shed his hart bloud in the defence of the Gospell.

How mercifully the Lord heard his second request, in restoring his Gospell once agayne into this Realme,* these present dayes can beare record. And what then shall England say now for her defence, whiche being so mercifullye visited and refreshed with the word of God, so slenderlye and vnthankfully considereth either her own misery past, or the great benefite of God now present? The Lorde be mercifull vnto vs. Amen.

Agayne, concerning his third request, it seemeth likewise most effectuously graūted, to the great praise of God, the furtherance of his Gospell, and to the vnspeakable cōfort of this Realme. For whether at the request of his praiyr, or of other Gods holy Sayntes, or whether God was moued with the cry of his whole Church, the truth is, that when all was deplorate and in a desperate case, and so desperate that the enemies mightily florished and triumphed, Gods word was banished, Spanierdes receiued,* no place left for Christes seruauntes to couer theyr heades: sodenly the Lord called to remembraunce his mercye, and forgetting our former iniquity, made an end of al these miseries, and wroughte a maruellous chaunge of thinges, at the chaunge whereof the said Queene Elizabeth was appointed and annoynted,* for whome this graye headed father so earnestly prayd in his imprisonment: through whose true, naturall, and imperiall Crowne, the brightnesse of Gods word was set vp agayne to confound the darcke and false visoured kingdome of Antichrist, the true temple of Christ reedified, the Captiuitie of sorowfull Christians released, which so long was wished for in the prayers of so manye good men, specially of this faythfull and true seruaunt of the Lord, M. Latimer.

The same God which at the requestes of his holy and faythfull Sayntes hath poured vpon vs such benefites of his mercy, peace and tranquility,* assiste our most vertuous and Christian Princesse: and her Subiectes, that wee may euery one in his state and calling to serue hys glory, & walke in our vocation, that we lose not that which they Page 1741 haue obtained, but may proceed in all faythfulnes, to build and keepe vp the house and temple of the Lorde, to the aduansing of his glory, and our euerlasting comfort in hym. And thus much concerning the doings and laborious trauelles of M. Latimer. Now after these thinges thus finished, and discoursed pertaining to the story of his lyfe, lette vs come to his letters which he wrote at diuers and sundry tymes from the first beginning of his preachinge, all which here to comprehend whiche he wrote both in English and Latine, lacke of space and place at this present will not permitte, neuertheles certayne we will take, and fyrst concerning the articles aboue mentioned, for the which he was troubled by the Priestes of the country about his benefice at West Kington: whiche hee writeth thereof to M. Morice, the copy thereof here foloweth.

Letters of M. Latimer.

¶A Letter of M. Latimer to Mayster Morice, concerning the Articles written, which were falsely and vntruely layed agaynst him.

Right worshipfull, and mine owne good mayster Morice, salutem in Christo Iesu. And I thanke you for all hartly kindnesse, not onely heretofore shewed vnto me, but also that now of late, you would vouchsafe to write vnto me so poore a wretch, to my great comforte among all these my troubles. I trust and doubte nothing in it, but GOD will reward you for me, and supplye aboundantly mine vnabilitie. &c. Mayster Morice you woulde wonder to know how I haue bene intreated at Bristow. I meane of some of the Priestes, which first desired me, welcommed me, made me chea•e, hearde what I sayde, allowed my saying in all thinges whiles I was with them: when I was gone home to my Benefice, perceiuing that the people fauoured me so greatlye, and that the Maior had appoynted me to preache at Easter, priuilye they procured an inhibition for all them that had not the Bishoppes licence,* which they knew well enough I had not, & so craftely defeated mayster Maiors appoyntment, pretending that they were sory for it, procuring also certayne Preachers to blatter against me, as Hubberdin and Powell, with other moe: whom when I had brought before the Maior and the wise Counsaile of the Towne, to know what they coude lay to my charge, wherefore they so declaymed agaynst me, they sayde they spake of information: howbeit no man could be brought forth that would abide by any thing: So that they had place and time to belye me shamefully, but they had no place nor time to laye to my charge, when I was present and ready to make them answeere. God amēd them, and swage their malice that they haue agaynst the truth & me. &c.

Our Lady was a Sinner.

So they did belye me to haue sayd, when I had sayd nothing so, but to reprove certayne both Priestes and beneficed menne, whiche doe geue so muche to our Ladye,* as though she had not bene saued by Christe, a whole Sauour both of her, and of all that be and shall be saued: I did reason after this maner, that either she was a sinner, or no sinner: if a sinner, then she was deliuered from sinne by Christ:* so that he saued her, either by deliuering or by preseruing her from sinne, so that without hym neyther she, nor none other, neither be, nor could be saued. And to auoyde all offence, I shewed howe it might bee aunswered, both to certayne Scriptures which maketh all generally sinners, and how it might be aunswered vnto Chrysostome and Theophilact, which maketh her namely and specially a sinner. But all woulde not serue, theyr malice is so great: notwithstanding that fiue hundred honest men can and will beare recorde.* When they cannot reprove that thing that I do say, then they will belye mee to say that thing that they can not reprove, for they will needes appeare to be agaynst me.

Sayntes are not to be worshipped.

So they lyed when I had shewed diuers significations of thys word (Sayntes) among the vulgare people. First Images of Sayntes are called Sayntes,* and so they are not to be worshipped: take worshipping of them for praying to them: for they are neither Mediators by way of redemption, nor yet by way of intercession. And yet they may be well vsed, when they be applied to that vse that they were ordeined for, to be lay mens bookes for remēbraunce of heauenly thinges. &c.

Take Sayntes for inhabitours of heauen, and worshippinge of them, for praying to them, I neuer denied, but that they might be worshipped, and be our Mediatours, though not by way of redemption (for so Christ alonely is a whole Mediatour,* both for them and for vs) yet by the way of intercession. &c.

Pilgrimage.

And I neuer denied Pilgrimage. And yet I haue sayed that much scurffe must be pared away ere euer it can be wel done, superstition, idolatry, false fayth, and trust in the Image,* vniust estimation of the thing, setting aside Gods ordinaunce for doynge of the thing: debtes must be payd restitutions made, wife & children prouided for, duetye to our poore neighbours discharged. And when it is at the best, before it be vowed, it neede not to be done, for it is neither vnder the bidding of GOD nor of manne to be done. And Wiues muste counsell with Husbandes, and Husbandes and Wiues with Curates, before it be vowed to bee done. &c.

Aue Maria.

As for the Aue Maria, who can thinke that I would deny it? I sayd it was an heauenly greting or saluting of our blessed Lady,* wherein the Aungell Gabriell sent from the Father of heauen, did annunciate and shewe vnto her the good will of God towards her, what he would with her and to what he had chosen her But I sayd, it was not properly a prayer, as the Pater noster,* whyche our Sauior Christ himselfe made for a proper prayer, and bade vs say it for a Prayer, not adding that we shoulde say 10. or 20. Aue Maries, withall: and I denyed not but that we may well saye the Aue Maria also, but not so that we shall thinke that the Pater noster is not good, a whole and a perfitt prayer, nor can not be well sayd without Aue Maria: so that I did not speake agaynst wel saying of it, but agaynst superstitious saying of it, and of the Pater noster to: and yet I put a difference betwixte that, & that whiche Christ made to be sayd for a prayer. &c.

No fire in hell.

Who euer could say or thinke so? Howbeit good Authors do put a difference betwixt a suffering in the fire with bodyes,* and without bodyes. The soule without the body is a spirituall substaunce, which they say can not receiue a corporall quality, and some maketh it a spirituall fire: and some a corporall fire. And as it is called a fire, so is it called a Worme, and it is thought of some not to be a materiall Worme that is a liuing beast, but it is a metaphor, but that is neither to nor fro. For a fire it is, a worme it is, a payne it is, a torment it is, an anguise it is, a griefe, a misery, a sorow, a heauinesse inexplicable, intolerable, whose nature and condition in euery poynt who can tell, but he that is of Gods priuy counsell▪ sayth S. Austen? God geue vs grace rather to be diligent to keepe vs out of it, then to be curious to discusse the property of it: for certayne we be, that there is litle ease, yea none at all, but weeping, wayling, and gnashing of teeth, whiche be two effectes of extreme payne, rather certayne tokens what payne there is, then what maner payne there is.

No Purgatory.

He that sheweth the state and condition of it, doth not denye it. But I had leauer be in it, then in Lollers tower the Bishoppes prison, for diuers skils and causes.*

First, in this I might dye bodily for lacke of meat and drinke: in that I could not.

Item, in this I might dye ghostly for feare of payne, or lack of good counsell: there I could not.

Item, in this I might be in extreme necessity: In that I coulde not, if it be perill of perishing.

Item, in this I might lacke charity: There I could not.

Item, in this I might lose my pacience: In that I could not.

Item, in this I might be in perill and daüger of death, in that I could not.

Item, in this I might be without surety of Saluation, in that I could not.

Item, in this I might dishonor God: In that I could not.

Item, in this I might murmur & grudge agaynst God: In that I could not.

Item, in this I might displease God: In that I could not.

Item, in this I might be displeased with God: In that I coulde not.

Item, in this I might bee iudged to perpetuall prison as they call it: in that I could not.

Item, in this I might be craftily handled: In that I could not.

Item, in this I might be brought to beare a fagotte: In that I could not.

Item, in this I might be discontented with GOD: In that I could not.

Item, in this I might be separated and disseuered from Christ: In that I could not.

Item, in this I mighte bee a member of the Deuill: In that I could not.

Itē, in this I might be an inheritor of hell: In that I could not.

Item, in this I might pray out of charity, and in vayne▪ in that I could not.

Page 1742Item, in this my Lord and his Chapleines might manacle me by night: In that they could not.

Item, in this they might strangle me, and say that I had hanged my selfe: In that they could not.

*Item, in this they might haue me to the Consistory and iudge me after theyr fashion. From thence they could not.

Ergo I had leuer to be there then here. For though the fire be called neuer so hoat, yet and if the bishops two fingers can shake away a piece, a friers cowle an other part, and scala coeli altogether, I wil neuer found Abbay, Colledge nor Chauntrey for that purpose.

For seing there is no payne that can break my charity, break my pacience, cause me to dishonour God, to displease God, to be displeased with God, cause me not to ioy in God, nor that canne bring me to daunger of death, or to daunger of desperation, or from surety of saluation, that canne separate me from Christ, or Christ from me,* I care the lesse for it. Iohn Chrisostom sayth, that the greatest payne that damned soules haue, is to be separate and cut of from Christ for euer: which payne he sayth is greater then many helles: which paynes the soules in Purgatory neither haue nor can haue.

Consider M. Morice, whether prouision for Purgatorye hath not brought thousandes to hell. Debts haue not bene payd: restitution of euill gotten landes & goods hath not bene made: christen people (whose necessities we see, to whō whatsoeuer we do, Christ reputeth done to himselfe, to whom we are bounden vnder payne of damnation to doe for, as we would be done for our selfe) are neglecte and suffered to perish: last wils vnfulfilled and broken: Gods ordinaunce set aside: and also for Purgatory, foūdations haue bene taken for sufficient satisfaction: so we haue trifled away the ordinaunce of God, and restitutions. Thus we haue gone to hell, with Masses, Diriges, and ringing of manye a bell. And who can pull Pilgrimages from Idolatrye, and purge Purgatorye from Robbery, but hee shall bee in perill to come in suspition of Heresy with them? so that they may pill with Pilgrimage, and spoyle with Purgatory. And verely the abuse of them cannot be taken away, but great luker and vauntage shall fall away from them, whiche had leuer haue profite with abuse, then lacke the same with vse: and that is the waspe that doth sting them,* and maketh them to swell. And if Purgatory were purged of all that it hath gotten, by setting aside restitution, and robbing of Christe, it woulde be but a poore Purgatorye: So poore that it should not be able to feed so fatte, and tricke vp so many idle and slothfull lubbers.

I take God to witnes I would hurt no man, but it greeueth me to see such abuse continue without remedy. I cannot vnderstand what they meane by the Popes pardoning of Purgatorye,* but by way of suffrage: and as for suffrage, vnlesse he do his duety, and seeke not his owne, but Christes glory, I had leauer haue the suffrage of iacke of the skultery which in his calling doth exercise both fayth and charitye: but for his Masse. And that is as good of an other simple Priest as of him. For as for authoritye of keyes, is to loose from guiltinesse of sinne and eternall payne, due to the same, according to Christes word, and not to his own priuate will. And as for Pilgrimage, you woulde wonder what iuggling there is to gette money withall. I dwell within a halfe mile, of the Fosseway, and you woulde wonder to see how they come by flockes out of the West cuntry to many Images, but chiefly to the bloud of Hailes. And they beleue verely that it is the verye bloud that was in Christes bodye, shedde vppon the Mount of Caluerye for our saluation, and that the sighte of it with theyr bodily eye, doth certify them and putteth them out of doubte, that they bee in cleane life, and in state of saluation without spot of sinne, which doeth bolden then to many thinges. For you would wonder if you shoulde common with them both comming and going, what faythes they haue. For as for forgeuing theyr enemies, and reconciling theyr Christian brethren, they can not away withall: for the sight of that bloud doth quite them for the time.

I read in Scripture of two certifications: one to the Romanes: Iustificati ex fide pacem habemus. i. We being iustified by fayth haue peace with God.

If I see the bloud of Christe with the eye of my soule, that is true fayth that his bloud was shed for me. &c.

An other in the Epistle of Iohn: Nos scimus quod translati sumus de morte ad vitam, quoniam diligimus fratres. i. We know that we are translated from death to life, because we loue the brethren. But I read not that I haue peace with GOD, or that I am translated from death to life, because I see with my bodelye eye the bloud of Hailes. It is verye probable that all the bloud that was in the body of Christ,* was vnited and knitte to his Diuinity, and then no part thereof shall returne to his corruption. And I maruell that Christ shall haue two resurrections. And if it were, that they that did violently and iniuriouslye plucke it out of hys body when they scourged him and nayled him to the Crosse, did see it with theyr bodily eye, yet they were not in cleane life. And we see the selfe same bloud in forme of wine, when we haue consecrate, and may both see it, feele it, and receiue it to our damnation as touching bodily receiuing. And many do see it at Hailes without confession, as they say God knoweth all, and the Deuill in our time is not dead.

Christ hath left a doctrine behinde him, wherin we be taught how to beleue, and what to beleue: he doth suffer the Deuill to vse his craftye fashion for our triall and probation. It were little thanke worthy to beleue well & rightly, if nothing should moue vs to false fayth & to beleue superstitiously. It was not in vayne that Christ when hee had taught truely, by and by badde, beware of false Prophettes, whiche woulde bring in errour slielye. But we be secure and vncarefull,* as though false Prophets could not meddle with vs, and as though the warning of Christ were no more earnest and effectuell, then is the warning of Mothers when they trifle with theyr children, and bid them beware the bugge. &c.

Loe Syr▪ how I runne at ryot beyond measure. When I began, I was minded to haue written but halfe a dosen lynes: but thus I forget my selfe euer when I write to a trusty frende, which wyll take in worth my folly, and keepe it from mine enemy. &c.

As for Doctour Wilson, I wotte not what I should say: * but I pray God endue him with charity. Neyther he, nor none of his countrey men did euer loue me since I did inuey agaynst theyr factions, and partialitye in Cambridge. Before that, who was more fauoured of him then I? That is the byle that may not be touched. &c.

A certayne frend shewed mee, that Doctour Wilson is gone nowe into his countrey about Beuerley in Holdernes, and from thence he will go a progresse through Yorkeshire, Lancashyre, Cheshyre, and so from thence to Bristow. What he entendeth by this progresse God knoweth, and not I. If he come to Bristowe I shall here tell. &c.

As for Hubberdin (no doubt) he is a manne of no great learning, nor yet of stable witte. He is here seruus hominum: * for he will preach whatsoever the Byshops will bidde him preach. Verely in my minde they are more to be blamed then he. He doeth magnifye the Pope more then enough. As for our Sauior Christ and Christian kynges are little beholding to hym. No doubte hee did misse the cushion in many thinges. Howbeit they that did sende him (men thinke) will defend him: I pray GOD amend him, and them both. They woulde fayne make matter agaynst mee, entendyng so eyther to deliuer him by me, or els to ridde vs both together, and so they woulde thinke hym well bestowed. &c.

As touching Doctour Powell, * howe highly he tooke vpon him in Bristow; and how little hee regarded the sword which representeth the kinges person, many can tell you. I thinke there is neuer an Earle in this Realme that knoweth his obedience by Christes cōmaūdemēt to his Prince, & wotteth what the sword doth signify, that would haue taken vpon hym so stoutly. Howbeit Mayster Maior, as he is a profound wise man, did twicke him pretily: it were to long to write all. Our pilgrimages are not a little beholding to him. For to occasion the people to them, he alledged this text.

Omnis qui relinquit patrem, domos, * vxorem. i. Whosoeuer leaueth father, house, wife. &c. By that you maye perceiue hys hoate zeale and crooked iudgement. &c. Because I am so belyed, I could wish that it would please the kinges grace to commaunde me to preach before his highnesse a whole yeare together euerye Sondag, that he himselfe might perceiue how they belye me, saying, that I haue neither learning, nor vtterance worthy thereunto. &c. I pray you pardon me, I cannot make an end.

A briefe digression touching the rayling of Hubberdin agaynst M. Latimer.

FORasmuch as mention hath bene made in this letter of Hubberdin, an olde Diuine of Oxford, * a right paynted Pharisey, and a great strayer abroad in all quarters of the realme to deface and impeach the springing of Gods holy Gospell, something woulde be added more touchinge that man, whose doinges and pageantes if they might be described at large, it were as good as any Enterlude for the Reader to beholde. Who in all his life and in all his actions (in one word to describe him) seemeth nothing elles but a right Image or counterfayt, * setting out vnto vs in liuely colours the paterne of perfecte hypocrisie. But because the man is now gone, to spare therefore the dead (although he little deserued to be spared, which neuer spared to worke what vilany he could agaynst the true seruantes of the Lord) this shall be enough for example sake, for all Christian men necessarily to obserue, howe the sayd Hubberdin after his long rayling in all places against Luther, Melancthon, Zuinglius, Iohn Frith, Tindale, Latimer, and all other like Professours,* after his hypocriticall opē almes geuen out of other mens purses, his long prayers, pretended deuotions, deuoute fastinges, hys wolwarde goyng, and other his prodigious demeanor, riding in his long Gowne downe to the Horse heeles like Page 1743 a Pharisey, or rather like a slouen, dyrted vp to the Horse bellye, after his forged Tales and Fables, Dialogues, dreames, dauncinges, hoppinges and leapinges, with other like histrionicall toyes and gestures vsed in the Pulpit, and all agaynst heretickes: at last riding by a Church side where the youth of the Parishe were dauncing in the Churchyarde, sodeinly this Silenus lighting from his horse, by occasion of their dauncing came into the Church, and there causing the bell to tolle in the people, thought in stead of a fitte of myrth, to geue them a Sermon of dauncing. In the whiche Sermon after he had patched vp certayne common textes out of Scriptures, and then comming to the Doctors, first to Augustine, then to Ambrose, so to Hierome, and Gregory, Chrisostome, and other Doctors, had made them euery one (after his Dialogue maner) by name to aunswere to his call, and to sing after hys tune for the probation of the sacramēt of the aulter against Iohn Frith,* Zuinglius, Oecolampadius, Luther, Tyndale, Latymer, and other Heretickes (as he called them) at last to shew a perfect Hermonye of all these Doctours together, as he had made thē before to sing after his tune, so now to make them daunce also after his Pye, fyrste he calleth out Christ and his Apostles, then the Doctors and auncient Seniours of the Church, as in a round ring all to daunce together: with Pye vppe Hubberdin. Nowe daunce Christ, now daunce Peter, Paul, now daunce Austen, Ambrose, Hierome, and thus olde Hubberdin as hee was dauncing with his Doctours lustely in the Pulpit, agaynst the Heretickes,* howe hee stampd and tooke on I cannot tell, but crashe quoth the Pulpit, downe commeth the dauncer, and there lay Hubberdyn not dauncing, but sprawling in the midst of his audiēce: where altogether he brake not his necke, yet he so brake his legge the same tyme and brused hys olde boanes, that hee neuer came in Pulpit more, and dyed not long after the same. Whereupon when the Church Wardens were called and charged for the Pulpit being no stronger,* they made aunswere agayne, excusing themselues that they had made theyr Pulpit for preaching, and not for dauncing. &c. But to spende no more paper about this idle matter, nowe to our purpose agayne.

Amongest many other impugnors and Aduersaries, whereof there was no small sort which did infest this good man in Sermons: some also there were, whych attempted the penne agaynst him. In the number of whom was one Doctour Sherwoode, whom vpon the same occasion of preaching of the Uirgine Marye (or as they thought,* agaynst the Uirgine) did inuade him with his pen, writing agaynst him in Latine, whose long Epistle, with M. Latimers aunswere also in Latine to the same, hereunder foloweth.

✠Epistola Gulielmi Sherwodi aduersus Dominum Latymerum expostulatoria.

¶Gulielmus Sherwodus praesbyter, D. Latymero Kyngtoniae, Rectori, gratiam & pacem à Deo patre nostro & domino Iesu Christo.

Nihil molestè feres sat scio, vir egregiè, ab homine Christiano christiané admoneri, quae res vna (est Deus testis) nos hoc tempore animauit liberius tecum per literas (quando corā fandi copia negatur) confabulari supernonnullis, quae parum christiané in concione illa tua (sit modo concio & non verius multo Satyra quaedam insana dicenda) Magnesfeldiae effudisse mihi videbare. Ac primum quidem prouerbio illo de fure & pastore (quanquam prouerbij vocem parabola vice mihi vsurpasse videtur Euangelista) carpsit, vt recte & vere aiebas, Christus Scribarum & pharisaeorum (vtpote deus,* eo{que} 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉) vesaniam obduratam{que} incredulitatem, sed clam, sed tecté, sed in genere. Non aiebat, scribae & pharisei ad vnum fures sunt & latrones. Sed quid? Amen dico vobis qui non intrat per ostium in stabulum ouium, sed ascendit aliunde, ille fur est & latro. Tu contra homo patentium intuior non mentium rimator. Episcopi omnes, papae omnes, Rectores ecclesiarum omnes (te vno paucis{que} alijs, quos nescio tuae fa•inae hominibus, id enim sensisse videris, exceptis) vicarij omnes fures sunt, & latrones, quibus furibus, quibus latronibus suffocandis ne Angliae totius quidem canapū sufficere predicabas, aut verius dementabas, hyperbole forsā, vt semper vsus, sed temeraria, sed audaci supra modum, sed truci, sed impia. Non est mi frater, non est sic temeré, si diuo credimus Paulo, ante tempus iudicandum, quod veniat Dominus qui & illuminabit abscondita tenebrarum, & manifestabit consilia cordium, Christus quo{que} ipse, iudex viuorum & mortuorum, à deo patre constitutus temerariam eiusmodi proximi condemnationem apud Matthaeum, Christiano homini mihi sustulisse videtur, quum inquit: Nolite condemnare, ne condemnemini, nec tanti flagitij subticens poenam. Quo enim (inquit) iudicio iudicatis eo iudicabitur de vobis, & qua mensura metimini, ea metientur vobis & alij. Volo hominum vitia taxari, volo sua scelera populo praedicari, annunciari, reuelari, & si fieri possit, ob oculos poni, no debacchari in homines, eosque absentes, non poni lucem tenebras, & tenebras lucem, nō dici bonum malum, & malum bonum, dulce amarum, & amarum dulce. Quod si fit, verendum ne dum alius alium mordemus & deuoramus, vicissim alius ab alio consumemur. An ista partius, imo modestius viris obijcienda, ipse videto. Nouimus, & qui te transversa tuentibus hirqis, & quo: sed faciles nymphae risere sacello. Heu, heu, Latimere, quae te dementia caepit, vt mentireris, dixissem praedicares plures longe in Christi ecclesia fures esse, quam pastores, plures haedos quam oues? Non sic Cyprianus ille, non sic. Sed quid? Est, inquit, Deus verax, omnis autem homo mendax Stat confessorum, hoc est (vt ipse intelligit) pie Christianorum, pars maior & melior in fidei suae robore, & in legis ac disciplina dominicae veritate, nec ab ecclesiae pace descedunt, qui se in ecclesia gratiam consequutos de Dei dignatione meminerunt. Atque hoc ipse ampliorem consequuntur fidei suae laudem, quod ab eorum perfidia segregati, qui iuncti confessionis consortio fuerint, à contagionis crimine recesserunt. Vero illuminati euangelij lumine, pura & candida domini luce radiati, tam sunt in conseruanda Christi pace laudabiles, quam fuerunt in Diaboli congressione victores. Quae sanctissimi hominis sanctissima verba, ausim, te etiam reclamante de ea ipsa, quae nunc ecclesia, praedicare, vereque affirmare, quam vbi ex confessoribus Christi filij Dei viui depinxisses, statim vbi esset gentium te nescire praedicabas. Dicebas enim, Quisquis cum Petro Christum Dei viuentis filium fatetur, Petrus est, & de ecclesia, seu, vti ipse interpretabaris, congregatione, (subdola nimirum vsus arte, ac caeco potius praestigio) ac si hoc loci magis nihil ad Petrum, Christi in terris summum vicarium attineret, quam ex Christianis alium quemlibet. Esto, simus nos, vt Origenis vtar verbis, aliquo modo Petrus, si dixerimus quod dixit Petrus. Tu es Christus, filius Dei viui, non carne & sanguine nobis reuelante, sed patre qui est in coelis mentem nostram illuminante, non alio dicendi genere dicemus haec nobis Petri competere verba, quam ipsi Petro? Absit procul, absit. Nam secundum Christi nomen omnes qui sunt illius, Christi dicuntur, dicente propheta: Vt saluos faciat Christos suos. Item, Nolite tangere Christos meos, & tum alio longe modo hic, alio illi vnctionis vocabulo insigniuntur. Sanius certe Roterodamus cuius imitatore, & sequacem strenuum in nonnullis video. Is (tu es Petrus & mox quae sequuntur) in primis in Romanū Pontificem, vt in christianae fidei principē competere ait, omnium semoto dubio, Annotatione in 16. Math caput: quanquam plus aequo Origenianae sententiae inniti ibidem mihi videtur. Quod si dixerimus te authore aequaliter, & indiscriminatim haec de Petro, & omnibus christianis intelligi, incidemus in illam Lutheranam sententiam. Omnes Christianos esse sacerdotes, & Ordinatum nullam potestatem accipere, quam antea non habebat, sed deputari tantum ad licite utendum potestate, prius habita: quae sententia iam olim est ab ecclesia damnata.

Ad haec aiebas Christum, quum minima vocaret praecepta, Scribarum & pharisaeorum alluisse impietate, qui ut sua eueherent, & amplificarent, minima dicebant diuina. Multum hic discors es ab Origine, scripturarum interprete, saneque vigilantissimo, qui Homilia in Matthaeum quinta adeo non negat reuera quaedam Dei praecepta dici, & esse minima, ut ex solutione, & obseruatione eorum minimum & magnum dici in regno coelorum nihil obscure praedicet. Simul pugnat quod tum Christus ipse seorsum à plebe & populo cum pauculis discipulis, suae celestis, tum solis doctrinae capacibus in monte versabatur, nihil interim cum Scribis, nihil cum Phariseis tractans, ut diuina illa cōcione sua prorsus indignis.

Subiunxisti christiane parum ut mihi videbatur, hominem christianum carnis acquiescentem desiderijs, non magis christianum esse, quam sit Iudeus, quam sit Turcus. Hoc mihi non christianum, sed Oecolampadianum

*Desunt nonnulla, quae coniecturis forsitan vtcunque suppleri possunt ex sequente Latimeri responsione.

Sit opus, quàm ad beneficam Petri confessionem germanis fructibus referendam. Quid tu hic tibi velis nescio. Si est aliquis Petri primatus, is certe Catholico cuilibet pro viribus defendendus est. Est aliquis Petri primatus: alioqui Christi verbum inefficax est, (tibi dabo clauēs regni coelorum. &c.) Si nihil est opus ut defensetur Petri primatus, nihil est opus ut defensetur veritas. Et ob veritatem ad necem vsque mortali cuilibet certandum. Non puto quenquam germanis fructibus referre posse beneficam Petri confessionem, negando Petri primatum benefica Petri confessio, an non est Iesum esse Christum filium Dei viuentis? Dei filius est veritas. At non Christus, si nullus est Petri primatus. Hic foedè lapsus mihi videre. Nihil enim alienum esse puto à benefica Christi confessione, si quis pro viri sedem tueatur, & defenset apostolicam.

Apertissimum mendacium esse clamitas, Christum cum pauculis discipulis in monte seorsum a turba versum fuisse. Apertissime tum mecum mentitus est Origenes, scripturarum interpres vigilantissimus, qui Homilia in Matthaeum 5. inquit: Descendete Page 1744 Iesu de monte, sequutae sunt eum turbae multae, Docente vero domino in monte, discipuli erant cum ipso, quibus datum erat coelestis doctrinae nosse secreta, per quae salutis scientia brutorum corda salirent, coecorumque oculis per mundanae delectationis tenebras caligantibus, lucem patifacerent veritatis. Vnde & dominus ad eos: Vos estis (inquit) sal terrae, vos estis & lumina mundi. Nunc vero descendente eo de monte, tubae secutae sunt eum. In montem scilicet ascendere nequaquam poterant, quia quos delictorum sarcinae deprimunt, ad mysteriorum sublimia, nisi abiecto onere scandere minime valent. Audis nostram, non tuam ab Origene probari sententiam.

Notas praeterea, quos nescio, tibi tum notissimos, alij nulli pseudopraedicatores, qui populo suadent christiano sat esse, si credit quemadmodum credit ecclesia, & nescire interim quid, aut quomodo credat, ita miserum vulgus ab ampliore dei agnitione querenda dehortando. Iniqua, & praeceps satis censura in verbi Dei ministros. Tales siqui sunt, debemus Lutheranae & haereticorum ecclesiae: in nostra esse nequeunt, quum pollicitus sit spūs ad consummationem vsque seculi se non deserturum sponsam suam ecclesiam. Quae dicis reliqua, quum sint mera conuitia, transeo.

Quod satis declarat, quod postremo penè dicis argutè philosophatum me de iustificatione fidei, interim mea nihil conuellens. An hoc est argutè philosophari de iustificatione fidei, dicere fidem iustificare, sed non solam, imo & opera suam habere iustitiam, sed in fide, sed in charitate? Hoc ego arguebam quod opera diceres non iustificare. Si hoc est philosophari, ego sum philosophatus, & non ego tantum, sed & Iacobus apostolus. Fides est, fateor, vt recte dixit Augustinus Fundamentum▪ & radix iustae vitae, qua consequimur bonorum operum voluntatem, ac ita iustitiam. Tantum ne putet quis iusticiam sola animi existimatione finiri omni bono & pio excluso opere. Caetera, quum nō agnoscis ego sepelio. Vnum id adiiciens, si bene feceris, bene recipies: sin autem male, ecce in foribus aderit peccatum tuum. Alias nacto otio abundantius. Interim vale. Derhamia.

Salutem plurimam.

NON EQVIDEM sum ego vel adeo ferox, quod sciam, vir item exemiè,* vt ab homine Christiano christianè admoneri moleste feram, vel adeo in sensatus, & à communi sensu alienus (ni fallor) vt me prius suggillatum fuisse abs te & inter pocula, neque semel suggillatum quam admonitum, imo nec admonitum tandem sed acerrimè potius redargutum, sed conuitijs & mandatijs male habitum potius, sed calumnijs inique affectum potius, sed falso condemnatum potius, constanter probem. Quod si tuis hisce literis pro illarum iure & mei animi ductu ego iam responderem. Sed cohibeo me, ne dum conor tuo morbo mederi, bilem tibi moue am homini vel citra stimulum (vt prę se ferunt literae) plus{quam} oportet bilioso. Imo det vtrique Deus, quod ipse vtrique norit commode fore, & mihi videlicet vel in medijs calumnijs patientiam christiano homine dignam, & tibi iuditiū aliquando tam rectum {quam} nunc habes zelum tu opte marte bene feruidum. Conducibilis, opinor, fuerit sic orare, {quam} eiusmodi criminationi apologiam parare, quum & ego iam negotiosior sum pro concione mihi perendie dicenda, {quam} vt commode possim respondere: & mēdatoria sint tua omnia, quam vt iure debeam ea confutare. Sed vt paucis tamen multis, si fieri possit, satisfaciam, primū operepraetium fuerit in mediū statuere, & quid ego dixi, & quid tu ex dictis collegisti. Collegisti quidem multa, veluti sanguinem è silice colligendo ex cussurus. Sed sic est affect{us} vti video, erga me tuus, quem ob rabiem eiusdem aegrè nosti dissimulare. Esto dixerim ego omnes papas, omnes episcopos, vicarios rectores que omnes, per ostium non intrantes, sed ascēdentes aliunde fures & latrones esse. Dum sic dixi, ex introitu & ascensu, non ex personis & titulos cum Christo sum rem metit{us}. Hinc tu tua minerua colligis omnes papas, omnes episcopos, vicarios rectoresque omnes, simpliciter fures esse, saltem sic me dixisse. Num iusta hic (mi frater) collectio? An non iuste in te quadret illud Pauli ad Romanos? sic aiunt nos dicere, sic male loquuntur de nobis, sed quorum damnatio iusta est (inquit:) & tamen iustius videri possunt ex Paulo collegisse aduersarij, quam tu ex me. Iam si idem dei verbum nunc quod prius, neque minus deo gratum acceptumque, quisquis interim minister verbi fuerit nonne & eadem damnatio calumniatores ministri nunc manet quae olim? Longe interest dicas omnes per ostium non intrantes fures esse, & omnes simpliciter fures esse. Sed vnde (quaeso) dum ego dico omnes per ostium non intrantes fures esse videor tibi dicere omnes simpliciter fures esse? nisi forte plaerique omnes videntur tibi aliunde ascendere, & non per ostium intrare? Quod si senseris, at nolito dicere, si sapis (sapis autem plurimum) quod sentis▪ Cum quanto enim id dixeris tuo periculo, ipsi videris. Et nisi id senseris, cur per Deum immortalem ego non possum dicere omnes esse fures, qui per ostium non intrantes ascendunt aliunde, quibuscunque interim titulis splendant, nisi videar tibi dicere statim omnes ad vnum fures esse: & tum quae te potius caepit dementia, dum sic colligis, vt plures fures {quam} pastores colligendo esse feceris. Nam velis nolis verum est quod ego dixi nempe quotquot per ostium non intrant, sed aliunde ascendunt fures & latrones esse, seu papae seu episcopi fuerint. Quare dum sic in ipso exorbitas limine, quorsum attinet, reliqua examinare? Sed age, hoc tibi aridet plurimum, quòd Pharisaei sunt tam tectè à Christo repraehensi, & non palam, quomodo tum non displicebit è regione tibi acerbissima illa, simul & apertissima criminatio, in os & coram turba illis obiecta, (Vae vobis Scribae & Pharisaei hypocritae) vbi nominati taxantur? Sed Christus, inquis, deus erat peruicaciam cordis conspicatus. Tu vero homo, patentium intuior, no mentium rimator. Sum sane homo (vti dicis) id quod citra tuam operā iam olim habeo exploratum: homo (inquam) sum, non labem in alieno corde delitescens, sed vitam omnibus patentem & expositam intuitus, adeoque ex fructibus cognoscens, quos Christus admonuit ex fructibus cognoscendos, ipsum quorundam viuendi genus libenter damnans denique, quod in sacris literis sacrisque interpretibus damnatum toties comperio, nihil id quidem moratus, quaecunque ipsum amplectuntur personae: quod dum ego facio, neque cordium latebras vltius penetro, nonne immerito abs te reprehendor? qui non homo mecum sed plusquam homo es, dum mei animi emphasim melius nostri per arrogantiam, quam egomet noui, vtpote qui non sat habes quae dico nouisse, sed quae sentio nondum dicta noueris abditissima cordis mei penitissime rimatus, ne non cite in teipsum competeret, quod in me torquere molitus es: nimirum noli ante tempus iudicare, noli condemnare, vt discas quam oportet mendacem non esse immemorem, ne proprio forsan gladio iuguletur, & in foueam incidat ipse, quam struxerat alteri. Nam dum ego pronuncio fures esse, quotquot per ostium non intrantes ascendunt aliunde, tibi non verba solum audienti sed & corculum meum contemplāti omnes ad vnum fures esse pronuntio, excepto meipso videlicet & alijs meae farinae hominibus, nescio, (inquis) quos. Sed quis illam fecit exceptionem, nisi tu qui cognoscens occulta cordium, sic inquis, sensisse Videris? Sed tibi sic sensisse videor, cui & dixisse videor quod (vt liquidissime constat) neutiquam dixi. Sed tibi peculiare est alios à cordis intuitu prohibere, vt vpse intuearis solus, quicquid est in corde, acie videlicet tam perspicaci, vt videas in corde, quod in corde nondum est natum: id quod ibi facis quo{que}, dum quod ego de ecclesia recte dixi, tu tuo more calumniaris iniqué, quasi ego, quod ad vsum clauium attinet, aequassem omnes cum Petro, cum ne vnum quidem verbum de clauium potestate sit dictum. Imo ne cogitatum quidem, ne{que} Petri primatui derogatum, vt cuius nulla sit facta mentio. Sed tu pro tuo candore sic colligis, dum ego nil aliud {quam} admonui auditores ecclesiam Christi super petram non super arenam fundatam, ne mortua fide plus satis haereant tum perituri & portis inferorum foedissime cessuri, sed fidem opetibus ostendant, tum demum vitam aeternam habituri. Quid ego minus quam omnes christianos, vt ego sum, sacerdotes dixerim esse? Sed ocul•tissimi sunt inuidi ad colligendum quod venantur. Nonne hic optimo iure cogor nonnihil christianae charitatis in tuo pectore desiderare? qui dum nescis confutare quod dico, miris modis mihi impingis quod possis cōfutare. Tu vero optime nosti quid sentit Lutherus de Ecclesia. Et ego non grauabor subscribere, quid sentit post multos alios Lyranus super .xvi. Mathaei. Ex quo patet inquit, quod Ecclesia non consistit in hominibus, ratione potestatis vel dignitatis ecclesiae, seu secularis, quia multi principes & summi pontifices, inquit, inuenti sunt apostatasse à fide, propter quod ecclesia consistit, inquit, in illis personis, in quibus est notitia vera & confessio fidei & veritatis. Hic consensit & cum Hieronymo Chrisostomus Sic enim dicunt: (nescio an applaudant tibi quod dicunt, quippe qui in illis te prodixisse esse:) Qui promptiores sunt ad primatum Petri defensandum, etiam cum nihil sit opus, quam ad beatificam Petri confessionem germanis fructibus referendam. Sed tu mittis me ad Augustinum, bene liberalis consultor. Ego optem te eundem legere si libeat in epist. Ioannis tractatu tertio. Videris enim in Augustinianis operibus non adeo exercitatus, cum de fidei iustificatione tam argute philosopharis. Quocirca cuperem te in collectaneis Bedae exertitationem fore, cum tua ipsius collectanea Augustinum non spirent, vt iam non pluribus neque illius, neque aliorum authorum locis querendis te grauem, Sed illud non omittam tamen, etsi aliò etiam me euocent negotia, non alluisse videlicet Christum pharisaeorum impietati, cum praecepta vocaret minima. Sic enim tu audes dicere, quia aliam in Origine interpretationem legisti. Pulchre admodum obiectum quasi vnus & idem scripturae locus non sit ab alijs aliter feré expositus: Origines de illusionem nō meminit, igitur nemo, qualis consecutio? Sed nihil, inquis, ibi Christo cum Phariseis: & id quoque non minus pulchre abs te dictum, quasi non statim post subderet Christus de Scribis & Phariseis mentionem, populum ab illorum iustitia humanis. i. suis ipsorum traditionibus stabilita reuocans. Nisi abundauerit iustitia vestra inquiens plus {quam} scribarum. &c. At versabitur tum, inquis, Christus cum pauculis discipulis seorsum à turba: imo hoc apertissimum mendatium est id quod verba Mathaei caput 7. claudencia luce clarius commōstrant, vt tolerabiliora sint mihi de me mēdatia tua, qui audes de Page 1745 ipso Christo & eius sermone mentiri. Et factum est, inquit, vt cū finijisset Iesus sermones hos, obstupuerunt super doctrina eius. Ecce autem, si Christus seorsim à turba sit locutus, quomodo obstupuerunt super doctrina, quam per te non audierunt? Sed lucas Euangelista, siue de eodem, siue de consimili Christi sermone locutus, testatur turbam audijisse, capite. 7. Cum consummasset Iesus sermones hos (inquit) audienti populo, En quò prolabitur praeceptum iuditium tuum inuidia male deformatum? Scilicet tu ipse hīc non toto erras coelo? dignius videlicet qui aliorū errores expisceris & notes, & ad pallinodiam reuoces: Tu tuo sensui hic non fidis? Medice cura te ipsum, & disce quid sit illud: Hypocrita, cur vides festucam. &c. Disce ex suis trabibus alienis festucis parcere. Ego nihil dixi, testor Deum, non mentior, quod vel Oecolampadio, vel Luthero, vel Melanthoni acceptum referre debeam: & tamen tu, quae est tua charitas, non vereris id meo assuere capiti. Ego si feci istud, decidam merito ab inimicis meis inanis. Sed nescis tu quidem opinor cuius spiritus sis, dum mauis ministrumverbi impudentissimis mendatijs lacessere, quam testimoniū veritati perhibere, quod quantūsit piaculū in cōspectu dei, tu abs{que} doctore non ignoras, in cumulum damnationis tuae nisi respiscas. Iam vero num ego vitupero, vt quis credat quemadmodum ecclesia credit? Non sane vitupero, nisi quod maleuo lentia erga me tua tam surdas reddidit aures tuas, vt ne audiens quidem audias quae dicuntur. Sed hoc vitupero, vt quis cui christianorum suadeat, quemadmodum suadere solent pseudopraedicatores non pauci, sat per omnia esse, credere quemadmodum ecclesia credit, & nescire interim quid aut quomodo credit ecclesia, & sic miserum populum ab ampliori dei agnitione quaerēda dehortari? Quod postremo mihi obtrudis, mendatium est & illud, plus quam dici possit inhumanum, ne{que} eo mea verba sensu accipis, sensu quo sint à me dicta, ideoque Hieronimo super 26. Neque enim templum dei erant qui carnales erant: quanquam nec me latet ecclesiam i. multitudinem profitentium Christum, partim ex bonis, partim ex malis conflata esse, nempe rete euangelicum ex omni genere congregari. Quid hoc aduersum ea quae ego dixi qui conabor omnes bonos non malos efficere, & ideo laborabā vt auditores mei non putarent magnum esse si in malis ecclesiastici inuenirentur: sed non visum est tibi piam praedicationem piē interpretari, dum existimas ad pietatem pertinere, si pie dicta impie reuocarentur. Besides these latine letters aboue expressed other letters also he wrote in English as well to others, as namely Syr Edward Baynton Knight, which letters because they do containe much fruitfull matter worthy to be read and knowne, I thought here presently to insert, which albeit may seeme somewhat prolix in reading: yet the fruite thereof I trust shall recompense the length of them.

¶The copy of a letter sent by mayster Latimer, person of Westekington, in the countie of Weltes. to Syr Edward Baynton Knight. Salutem in Christo.

Right worshipfull Syr, I recommend me vnto youre maystership, with harty thanks for your so frendly, so Page 1746 charitable, and so mindefull remembraunce of me so poore a wretch. Wheras of late I receaued your letters by M. Bonnam, perceiuing therein both who be greeued w^t me, wherfore, & what behoueth me to do, in case I must needs come vp, whiche your goodnes towards me w^t all other such like to recompense, where as I my selfe am not able, I shall not cease to pray my Lorde God, which both is able and also doth in deede reward all them that fauour the fauourers of his truth for his sake, for the truth is a common thinge, pertayning to euery man, for the which euery man shall aunswere an other daye. And I desire fauour neither of your maystership, neither of any man els, but in trueth, and for the trueth, I take God to witnesse whiche knoweth all. In verye deede maister Chauncellour dyd shew me that my Lord byshop of London had sent letters to him for me: and I made aunswere that he was myne Ordinary, and that both he might & shuld reforme me as farre as I needed reformation, as wel and as soone as my Lord of London. And I woulde be very loth (nowe thys deepe winter) being so weake and so feeble (not onely exercised with my disease in my head and side, but also wyth new, both the colike and the stone) to take suche a iourney: and though he might so do, yet he needed not, for he was not bound so to do: notwithstanding I sayd, if he to do my Lord of London pleasure to my great displeasure, woulde needes commaund me to go, I would obey his commandement: yea, though it shuld be neuer so great a greuance and paynefull to me: with the which answere he was content, saying he would certifie my Lord of London thereof, trusting his Lordship to be content with the same: but as yet I heare nothing from him. M. Chauncellour also said that my Lord of Londō maketh as though he wer greatly displeased with me, for y^t I did contēpne his authoritie, at my last being in London. Forsooth I preached in Abbe-church, not certayne then (as I remember) whether in his Dioces or no, intending nothing lesse then to contemne his authoritie, and this I did not of myne owne suinge, or by mine owne procuracion, but at the request of honest merchaunt men (as they seemed to me) whose names I do not knowe, for they were not of myne acquayntaunce before: & I am glad therof for their sakes, least if I knew thē I shoulde be compelled to vtter them so, and theyr godlye desire to heare godly preaching shuld return to their trouble: for they required me very instantly, and to say y^e truth euen importunately. Whether they were of that parish or no, I was not certayn: But they shewed not onely themselues but also many other to be very desirous to hear me, pretending, great hunger, and thyrst of the word of God & ghostly doctrine. And vpon consideration, and to auoyd al inconueniences, I put them of, and refused them twise or thrise, till at the last they brought me word that the Parson and Curate were not onely content, but also desired me, notwithstanding that they certified him both of my name playnly, and also that I had not the bish. seale to shew for me, but onely a licence of y^e Uniuersitie, which Curate dyd receiue me, welcommed me, and when I shuld go into the pulpite gaue me the common benediction: so that I hadde not ben, alonely vncharitable, but also churlishly vncharitable if I would haue sayd nay. Nowe al this supposed to be trueth (as it is) I maruell greatly howe my Lorde of London can alledge any contempt, of him in me.

First, he did neuer inhibite me in my life, and if hee did inhibite his Curate to receaue me, what pertaineth that to me, which neither did know thereof, nor yet made any sute to the curate deceitfully, nor it did not appeare to me very likely that the Curate would so litle haue regarded my Lords inhibitiō, which he mayntayneth so vigilantly, not knowing my Lords minde before. Therefore I coniected with my self that eyther the Curate was of such acquayntaunce with my Lord, that he might admitte whome hee would, or els (and rather) that it was a trayne and a trap layde before me, to the intent that my Lorde himselfe, or other pertayning to hym was appoynted to haue bene there, and to haue taken me if they coude in my sermon, which coniecture both occasioned me somewhat to suspect those men which desired me, though they speake neuer so fayre and frendly, and also rather to go. For I preach nothing, but if it might be so, I woulde my Lorde him selfe might heare me euery sermon I preache. So certayne I am that it is trueth, that I take in hand to preache. If I had w^t power of my frendes (the Curate gaynesaying and withstanding) presumed to haue gone into the pulpitte, there had bene something wherefore to pretend a contēpt. I preached in Kent also, at the instaunt request of a Curate: yet here I not that his Ordinary layeth any contēpt to my charge, or yet doth trouble the curate. I maruel not a little, how my Lord Bysh. of London, hauing so brode, wyde, and large Dioces committed vnto hys cure, and so peopled as it is, can haue leysure for preaching and teaching the word of God, oportune importune, tempestiue, intempestiue, priuatim, publice to his owne flocke, i•stando, arguendo, exhortando, monendo, c•m omni lenitate & doctrina, haue leysure (I say) eyther to trouble me, or to trouble him selfe w^t me, so poore a wretch, a stranger to him & nothing pertayning to his cure, but as euery man pertayneth to euery mans cure, so intermixing & interm•ling himselfe with an other mans cure, as though he had nothing to doe in his owne. If I would do as some men seyn my Lorde dothe, gather vp my •oyle, as wee call it, waresly and narrowly, and yet neyther preache for it in mine owne cure, nor yet other where, peraduenture he woulde nothing deny me. In very deede I did monish Iudges and Ordynaryes to vse charitable equitie in their iudgementes towardes suche as been accused, namely of suche accusers, which beene as like to heare and bewray, as other bene to say amisse, and to take mens words in the meaning therof, and not to wrast them in an other sense, then they were spoken in: for all suche accusers and witnesses be false before God, as saint Hierome saith vpon the xxvi. chapter of Mathew. Nor yet I do not accompt those Iudges wel aduised, which wittingly will geue sentēce after such witnesses, much lesse those whiche procure suche witnesses agaynst any man: nor I thinke not iudges now a dayes so deeply confirmed in grace or so impeccable, but that it may behoue and become preachers to admonish thē to do well as wel as other kindes of men, both great and small. And this I did, occasioned of the epistle whiche I declared. Rom. vi. wherein is this sentence, non istes sub lege, sed sub gratia, ye christen men y^t beleue in Christ, are not vnder the law. What a saying is this (quod I) if it be not rightly vnderstande, that is as saynct Paule did vnderstand it? for the wordes sound as though he would goe about to occasion Christen men to breake lawe, seeing they be not vnder the law: and what tht pseudapostles, aduersaryes to saint Paule would so haue taken them, and accused saint Paule of the same to my Lord of London? if my sayd Lord would haue heard saint Paule declare hys owne mynde, of his owne wordes, then he shoulde haue escaped, and the false Apostles put to rebuke: if he would haue rigorously followed vtennque allegata & probata, and haue geuen sētence after relation of the accusers, then good S. Paule must haue borne a fagot at Paules crosse, my Lord of Lōdon being hys iudge. Oh, it had ben a goodly sight to haue seene saynct Paule with a fagot on his backe, euē at paules crosse, my Lord of London Byshop of the same, sitting vnder the crosse. Nay verily I dare say, my Lord shoulde sooner haue burned him, for saynct Paule did not meane that christen men might breake law, and doe what soeuer they would, because they were not vnder the law: but hee did meane that Christen men might keepe the law & fulfill the lawe, if they woulde, because they were not vnder the law, but vnder Christ, by whome they were deuided from the tyranny of the law, and aboue the law, that is to saye, able to fulfill the lawe to the pleasure of him that made the law, which they could neuer do of their own strength, and without Christ: so that to be vnder the law, after Saynct Paules meaning, is to be weake to satisfie the lawe: and what could saynt Paule doe withall, though his aduersaries would not so take it? But my Lord would say peradventure that men will not take the preachers woordes otherwise then they meane therein, bona verba, as though S. Paules woordes were not otherwise taken, as it appeareth in the thyrd chapter to the Romaines, where hee sayth, quod iniustitia nostra dei iustitiam commendat, that is to say, our vnrighteousnes commēdeth and maketh more excellent the righteousnes of God, which soundeth to many as though they should be euill, that good shoulde come of it, and by vnrighteousnes, to make the righteousnes of God more excellent. So saynct Paule was reported to meane: yet he did meane nothing so, but shewed the inestimable wisdomes of God, which can vse our naughtines to the manifestation of his vnspeakable goodnes: not that we shuld do noughtily to that end and purpose. Now my Lord will not thinke (I dare saye) that S. Paule was to blame that he spake no more circumspectly, more warely, or more playnely, to auoyd euill offense of the people: but rather he will blame the people, for that they took no better heede, and attendaunce to Paules speaking, to the vnderstanding of the same: yea, he will rather pittie the people, whiche had bene so long nozeled in the doctrine of the Phariseis, and wallowed so long in darcknes of mans traditions, superstitions, and trade of liuinge, that they were vnapt to receaue the bright lightnes of the truthe, and wholesome doctrine of God, vttered by Saynt Paule. Nor I thinke not that my Lord wil require more circumspection, or more conuenience to auoyd offense of errorrs Page 1747 in me, then was in saint Paule when hee did not escape maleuolous corrections, & sclaunderous reportes of them that were of peruerse iudgementes, whiche reported hym to say, what soeuer he appeared to thē to say, or what so euer seemed to them to follow of his saying: but what followeth sic aiunt nos dicere, sic male loquuntur de nobis so they report vs to say, sayth saint Paule. So they speake euill of vs: sed quorum damnatio iusta est, but such, whose damnation is iust sayth he: and I thinke the damnation of al such that euill reporten preachers nowe a dayes, likewise iust: for it is vntruth nowe and then. Yea Christ himselfe was misreported, & falsely accused, both as touching his words and also as concerning the meaning of his wordes. First he sayd: destruite, that is to say, destroy you: they made it possum destruere,* that is to say, I can destroy: he sayd templum hoc, this temple, they added manu factum, that is to say made with hand, to bring it to a contrary sense. So they both inuerted his wordes, and also added vnto hys wordes, to alter his sentence: for he did meane of the temple of his bodye, and they wrast it to Salomons temple. Now I reporte me whether it be a iust fame raysed vpp, and dispersed after this manner.* Nay verely, for there be three maner of persons which can make no credible information. First, aduersaries, enemies: Second, ignoraunt & without iudgement: Thirdly, susurrone, that is to saye, whisperers, and blowers in mennes eares, whiche wyll spew out in hudder mudder, more then they dare auow openly. The first will not, the second cannot, the third dare not: therefore relation of such is not credible, and therefore can make no fame lawfull, nor occasion anye indifferent Iudge to make processe agaynst anye man, nor it maketh no litle matter what they be themselues that report of any man, neyther well or euill, for it is a great commendation to be euill spoken of, of them that be naughty themselues, and to be commended of the same, is many tymes no lytle reproche. God send vs once all grace to wish one to an other, and to speake well one vpon an other. Me semes it were comely, for my Lord (if it were comely for me to say so) to be a preacher himselfe, hauing so great a cure as he hath, then to be a disquieter and a troubler of Preachers, and to preache nothing at all himselfe. If it woulde please his Lordship to take so great laboure and payne at anye tyme,* as to come preache in my little Byshoppricke at Westkington, whether I were present or absent my selfe, I would thank his Lordship hartily, and thinke my selfe greatly bounden to hym, that hee of his charitable goodnes would go so farre to helpe to discharge me in my cure or els I were more ••naturall then a beast vnreasonable nor yet I would dispute, contende or demaunde by what authoritie or where he had authoritye so to do, as long as his predication were fruitfull, & to y^e edification of my parishioners. As for my lord may do as it pleaseth his lordship I pray God he do alwayes as wel as I would wishe him euer to do: but I am sure S. Paule y^e true minister of god, & faythfull dispensour of Gods miste & ries, right exemplar of all true and very byshoppes, saith in the first chapter to the Philippians, that in hys tyme some preached Christ for enuy of hym, thinking therby so to greeue hym withall, and as it were to obscure him, and to brynge hys authoritie into contempt, some of good wil and loue, thinking thereby to comfort him: notwithstanding (sayth hee) by all manner of wayes, and after all fashions, whether it be of occasion or of truth, as ye would say for truthe sake so that Christ be preached and shewed, I ioy and will ioy, so much he regarded more the glory of Christ, and promotion of Christes doctrine, to the edification of christē soules then the mayntenaunce of hys own authoritie, reputation and dignitie, considering right well, as he sayd, that what authoritie so euer he had, it was to edification and not to destruction. Now I thinke it were no reproch to my lord but very commendable, rather to ioy with saynt Paule, & be glad that Christ be preached quouismodo, yea thoughte it were for em•y, that is to say in disdayne, despite and contempt of his Lordship (Which thing no man well aduised will enterprise or attempte) then when the preachyng can not be reproued iustly, to demaunde of the preacher austerely as the Phariseis did of Christ, quia autoritate haec facis, aut quis dedit tibi istam auctoritatem? as my authoritie is good enough, and as good as my Lorde can geue me any, yet I would be glad to haue hys also, if it wold please his Lordship to be so good Lorde vnto me. For the vniuersitie of Cambridge hath authoritie Apostolicke,* to admitte. 12. yearly, of the which I am one, and the kynges highnes. God saue his grace, did decree that all admitted of Uniuersities, should preache throughout all hys realm as lōg as they preached well, without distreine of any mā, my Lorde of Caunterbury, my Lorde of Duresme, wyth such other not a fewe standing by, and hearyng the decree nothing again saying it, but consenting to the same. Now to contemne my Lord of Londons authoritie were no litle fault in me: so no lesse fault might appeare in my Lorde of London to contemne the kinges authoritie and decree, yea so Godlye, so fruitfull, so commendable a decree pertayning both to the edification of christen soules, and also to the regard and defence of the popish grace and authoritie Apostolique. To haue a booke of the kinges not inhibited, is to obey the kyng, and to inhibite a preacher of the king admitted, is it not to disobey the kinge? is it not one king that doth inhibite and admitte, and hath hee not as great authoritie to admitte as to inhibite? He that resisteth the power, whether admitting, or inhibiting, doth he not resist the ordinaunce of God? we low subiectes are bound to obey powers, and their ordinaunces: and are not the highest subiectes also, who ought to geue vs ensample of such obedience? As for my preaching it selfe, I trust in God my Lorde of London cannot rightfully belacke it, nor iustly reprove it, if it be taken with the circum'stance thereof, and as I spake it, or els it is not my preaching, but hys that falsely reporteth it, as the Poet Martiall sayd to one that deprauid hys booke: quem recitas meus est, o Fidentie, libellus: sed male cum recitas, incipit esse tuus. But now I heare say that my Lorde of London is informed, and vpon the sayd information hath informed the king, that I go about to defend Bilney, and his cause, agaynst his ordinaryes and iudges, whiche I ensure you is not so: for I had nothing to do with Bilney, nor yet with hys Iudges, except his Iudges did him wrong: for I did nothing els but monishe all Iudges indifferently to doe right, nor I am not altogether so foolish as to defende the thing which I knewe not. It might haue become a preacher to say as I sayd, though Bilney had neuer bene born I haue known Bilney a great while, I thinke much better then euer did my Lord of London: for I haue bene his ghostly father many a time: and to tell you the truth,* what I haue thought alwayes in him, I haue knowne hetherto few such so prompt, and ready to doe euery man good, after hys power, both frends and foe, noysome wittingly to no man, and toward hys enemy so charitable: so seking to reconcile them, as he did, I haue knowne yet not many, and to be shorte in a summe a very simple good soule, nothing fitte nor meete for thys wretched worlde, whose blinde fashion and miserable state (yea farre from Christes doctrine) he could as euill beare, and would sorow, lamēt and bewayle it as much as any man that euer I knew: as for his singular learning, as well in holy scripture, as in all other good letters, I will not speake of it. Notwythstanding if he eyther now of late, or at any tyme attempted any thing contrary to the obedience whiche a christian man doth owe, eyther to hys prince or to hys byshoppe, I neyther do nor will allowe and approue that, neyther in hym nor yet in any other man: we be all men, and readye to fall: wherfore he that standeth, let hym beware hee fall not. Now he ordered or misordered hymself in iudgemeēt, I cannot tell, nor I will not meddle wythall: God knoweth, whose iudgementes I will not iudge. But I cannot but wonder, if a man liuyng so mercifully, so charitably, so paciently, so continently, so studiously, and vertuously, and killyng hys old Adam, that is to say, mortifie his euill affections, & blynde motions of hys hart, so dilligently should dye an euill death, there is no more but let hym y^e standeth beware that he fall not: for if such as he shall dye euill, what shall become of me such a wretch as I am? but let this goe, a little to the purpose, and come to the poynt we must rest vpon. Eyther my Lord of London wil iudge my outward man onely, as it is sayde, Omnes vident quae foris sunt, or els he will be my God, & iudge mine inwarde manne, as it sayd Deus autem intuetur cor: if he will haue to do onely with mine outward man, and meddle with mine outward conuersation, how that I haue ordered my selfe toward my christen brethren the kynges liege people, I trust I shall please and content both my Lorde God, and also my Lorde of London: for I haue preached and taught but accordyng to holy scripture, holy fathers, and ancient interpretours of the same, with the whiche I thinke, my Lord of London will be pacified: for I haue done nothing els in my preaching, but with all diligence moued my auditours to fayth and charitie to do theyr duety, and that that is necessary to be done. As for thinges of priuate deuotion, meane thynges, and voluntary thinges, I haue reprobued the abuse, the superstition of them, without condemnation of the thinges themselues, as it becommeth Preachers to do, which thyng if my Lord of London will do himselfe (as I would to God he would doe) he shoulde be reported (no doubt) to condempne the vse of such thynges, of couetous men which chaue dammage, and finde lesse in theyr boxes by condemnation of the abuse, whiche Page 1748 abuse they sayd rather should continue stil, then your profite should not continue, (so thorny be theyr hartes:) if my Lord wyll needes coste and inuade my inward man, will I nill I, an• breake violently into my hart, I feare me I shall either displease my Lord of London, which I would be very lothe, or els my Lord GOD, which I will be more lothe: not for anye infidelitie, but for ignoraunce, for I beleue as a christen man ought to beleue: but peraduenture my Lord knoweth and wyll know many thyngs certaynely, which (perchaunce) I am ignoraunt in, wyth the which ignoraunce though my Lorde of London may if hee will, 〈◇〉 discontent, yet I trust my Lorde God will pardon it as long as I hurt no man withall, and saye to hym with dilligent study, and dayly prayer paratum cor meum Deus, paratum cor meum, so studying, preaching, and taryng the pleasure and leisure of God. And in the meane season. Actes. viij. as Apollo did, when hee knew nothing of Christ, but Baptismum Iohannis, teach and preache myne euen christen that, and no farther then I know to be true. There be three Creedes, one in my masse, an other in my mattyns, the thyrd common to them that neyther sayeth masse nor mattyns, nor yet knoweth what they say when they say the Creede: and I beleue all three wyth all y^e God hath left in holy writte, for me and all other to beleue: yet I am ignoraunt in thynges whiche I truste hereafter to know, 〈◇〉 I do now know thinges, in which I haue bene ignorau^t at heretofore: euer learne and euer to be learned, to profit[•] w^t learning, with ignorance not to noy. I haue thought in times past, that the Pope Christes Uicar, had bene Lord of all the world as Christ is, so that if he should haue depryued the kyng of hys Crowne, or you of y^e Lordshyp of Bromeham, it had bene enough: for he could do no wrong. Now I might be hyred to thyncke otherwyse: not withstanding I haue both seene and heard scripture drawen to that purpose, I haue thought in tymes past, that the Popes dispensations of pluralities of benefices,^{*} and absence from the same, had discharged consciences before God: forasmuche as I had heard ecce vobiscum sum, & qui vos a[•]dit, me audit, bended to corroborate the same. Nowe I might be easely entreated to thinke otherwise &c.

I haue thought in times past y^t the P. could haue spoy^led purgatory at his pleasure w^t a word of his mouth: now learnyng might perswade me otherwise, or els I woulde maruayle why he would suffer so muche money to be bestowed that way, whiche so needefull is to be bestowed otherwise, and to depriue vs of so many patrones in heauē as he might deliuer out of purgatorye. &c. I haue thought in tymes past, that and if I hadde bene a Fryer and in a cowle, I could not haue bene dāpned, nor afeard of death and by occasion of the same I haue bene minded manye tymes to haue bene a Fryer, namely whē I was sore sick and diseased. Now I abhorre my superstitious foolishenes. &c. I haue thought in tymes past, that diuers Images of sayntes could haue holpen me, and done me much good, and deliuered me of my diseases: now I know that one can helpe, as much as an other. And it pittiyeth myne hart that my Lord and such as my Lord is, can suffer the people to be so craftely deceiued, it were to long to tell you what blindnes I haue bene in, and howe long it were or I coulde forsake such folly, it was so corporate in me: but by cōtinual prayer cōtinual study of scripture, & oft cōmuning w^t men of more right iudgemēt, God hath deliuered me &c. Yea, mē thinketh y^t my lord himself hath thought in tymes past that by Gods lawe a man might marrye hys brothers wyfe, which nowe both dare thinke and say contrarye: and yet this his boldnes might haue chaunced in Pope Iulius dayes, to stand hym eyther in a fire, or els in a fagot. Whiche thing deeply considered, and pondered of my Lord, might something stirre hym to charitable equity and to be something remissable toward men, which labor to do good as theyr power serueth wyth knowledge, and doth hurt to no man with theyr ignorauncye, for there is no greater distaunce, then betweene Gods lawe and not gods law: nor it is not so, or so, because any man thinketh it so, or so: but because it is so or so in deede, therefore wee muste thynke it so, or so when God shal geue vs knowledge thereof, for if it be in deede eyther so or not: it is so or not so, though all the world hadde thought otherwyse these thousand yeares &c. And finally as ye saye, the matter is weightye and ought substantially to bee looked vpon, euen as weighty as my lyfe is worth: but howe to looke substantially vpon it, otherwyse know not I, then to pray my Lord God day and nyght, that as he hath bolded me to preache hys truthe, so hee will strengthen me to suffer for it, to the edification of them which haue taken by the workyng of hym, fruite thereby, and euen so I desire you, and all other that fauour me for hys sake, lykewise to pray: for it is not I, (wythout his mighty helping hand) that can abide that brute, but I haue trust that God will helpe me in tyme of neede, whiche if I had not, the Ocean sea, I thinke should haue deuided my Lord of Lōdon and me by thys day. For it is a rare thing for a Preacher to haue fauour at hys hand which is no preacher him selfe, and yet ought to be: I pray God that both he and I may both discharge our selues, he in hys great cure, and I in my little, to Gods pleasure and safety of our soules. Amen. I pray you pardon me that I write no more dystinctly, more truely: for my head is so out of frame, that it should be to paynefull for me to write it agayne, and if I be not preuented, shortly I intend to make mery with my Parishioners thys Christmas, for all the sorrowe, least perchaunce I neuer returne to them agayne: and I haue heard say, that a Doe is as good in wyn•er, as a Bucke in sommer.

A letter of Syr Edward Baynton Knight, aunsweryng to the letter of M. Latymer sent to him before.

MAyster Latimer, after hartye recommendations,* I haue cōmunicated the effect of youre letters to diuers of my frendes, such as for Christen charity (as they say) rather desire in you a reformation, eyther in youre opinion) if it swerue frō the truth) or at the least in your maner and behaiour, in as much as it geueth occasion of sclaunder and trouble in let of your good purposes, then anye other inconuenience to youre person or good name.* And for asmuch as your sayd letter misliked them in some parte, and that I haue such confidence in your Christen breste, as in my iudgement ye wil conformably and gladly, both heare that may be reformed in you, and also (as it is worthy) so knowledge and confesse the same: I haue therefore desired them to take the payne to note theyr mindes in this letter whiche I send to you, as agregate of theyr sayinges, & sent from me your assured frend and fauourer, in that that is the very truth of Gods word, wherein neuerthelesse, as I trust ye your selfe will temper your owne iudgement, and in a sobernes affirme no truth of your selfe,* whiche shoulde deuide the vnitie of the Congregation in Chryst, and the receiued truth agreed vpon by holy fathers of the Church, consonaunt to the scripture of GOD, euen so what soeuer ye will do therein (as I thinke ye will not otherwise then ye should do) I beyng vnlearned, and not of the knowledge to geue sentence in this altera•ion and contention,* must rather of good congruence shew my selfe in that you disagree with thē, readyer to follow theyr doctrine in truth, then yours, vnlesse it may please almighty God to inspire and confirm the heartes of suche people to testify the same in some honest number as ought to induce me to geue credence vnto them.*

Onely God knoweth the certayne trueth, whiche is communicate vnto vs, as our capacitie may comprehend it by fayth, but that it is per speculum in enigmatē. And there haue bene qui zelum Dei habuerunt, sed non secundum scientiam. Among whiche I repute not you,* but to this purpose I write it, that to cal this or that truth it requireth a deep and profound knowledge, consideryng that to me vnlearned, that I take for truth may be otherwyse, not hauyng sensus exercitatos, as saynct Paule sayth, ad discernendum bonum & malum, and it is shewed me, that an opinion or maner of teachyng, which causeth dissension in a Christian congregation, is not of God, by the doctrine of S. Iohn in his Epistle, where he sayth: Omnis qui confitetur Christū in carne. &c. ex Deo est. And like as y^e word of God hath alwayes caused dissension among men vnchristened,* wherevpon hath ensued and followed Martyrdome to the preacher, so in Christes congregation amonge them that professe Christes name, In vno Domino, vno Baptismate & vna fide, they that preache and stirre rather contention, then charitie, though they can defēd their saying, yet theyr teachyng is not to be taken as of God, in that it breaketh the chayne of Christen charitie, and maketh diuision in the people,* congregate and called by GOD into an vnitie of fayth and Baptisme. But for thys poynt I would pray to God, that not onely in the truth may be agreement, but also suche sobernes and vniforme behaiour vsed in teachyng and preaching,* as men may wholly expresse (as they may) the charitie of God tendyng onely to the vnion in loue of vs all, to the profite and saluation of our soules.

¶The aunswere of M. Latimer to the letter of Syr Edward Baynton aboue prefixed.

Right worshypfull sir, and my singular good mayster,* salutem in Christe Iesu, with due commendation and also thanks for your great goodnes towards me &c. And whereas you haue Page 1749 communicate my last letters to certayne of your frendes, whiche rather desire this or that in me &c. what I thinke therein I wyll not now say, not for that there could be any perill or daunger in the sayd letters (well taken) as farre as I can iudge, but for that they were rashely and vndeuisedly scribled, as yee might well know both by my excuse, and by themselues also, though none excuse had bene made. And besides that, ye know right wel, that wheras the Bee gathereth honey,* euen there the spinner gathereth venome, not for any diuersity of the flower, but for dyuers natures in them that sucketh the flower: As in times past, and in the beginning, the very truth: and one thinge in it selfe was to some,* offence, to some foolishnes, to other otherwise disposed, the wisdom of God. Such diuersitie was in the redresse of hearers therof.

But this notwithstandinge, there is no more but eyther my wryting is good, or bad, if it be good, the communicatyng thereof to your friendes cannot be hurtfull to me? if it be otherwise, why shoulde you not communicate it to them, whiche both could and would instruct you in the truth, and reforme my errour.* Let this passe, I will not contend: had I wyst commeth euer out of season. Truly I were not well aduised if I would not eyther be glad of your instruction, or yet refuse myne owne reformation, but yet it is good for a man to looke or hee leapeth, and God forbid that ye should be addict and sworne to me so wretched a foole, that you should not rather followe the doctrine of your frendes in truth, so great learned men as they appeare to be then the opinions of me, hauing neuer so christen a brest.

Wherefore doe as you will: for as I woulde not if I coulde so I cannot if I woulde, be noysome vnto you, but yet I saye I would my letters had bene vnwrytten, if for none other cause, at least way, in asmuche as they cause me to more wrytynge, an occupation nothyng meete for my mad head: and as touching poyntes whiche in my foresayde letters mislike your friendes, I haue now little leysure to make an answeere thereto for the great busines that I haue in my little cure, I knowe not what other men haue in their great cure seeyng that I am alone without anye Prieste to serue my cure without my scholer too read vnto me,* wythout any booke necessary to be looked vpon, without learned men to come and counsell withall All whiche thynges other haue at hand abundantly, but some thing must be done,* how soeuer it be. I pray you take it in good worth, as long as I temper myne owne iudgement, affirming nothing with preiudice of better. First yee mislike, that I saye I am sure that I preache the truthe, saying in reproofe of the same, that god knoweth certayne truthe.* In deede alonely God knoweth al certayne truth, and alonely God knoweth it as of himself, and none knoweth certayne truth but God, and those which be taught of God, as saith S. Paule: Deus enim illis patescit: And Christ himselfe: erunt omnes docti a Deo: And your friendes deny not but that certayne truth is communicate to vs, as our capacitie may comprehend it by fayth, whiche if it be trueth as it is, then there ought no more to be required of any man, but according to his capacitie: nowe certayne it is that euery man hath not like capacitie. &c.

But as to my presumption and arrogancye: eyther I am certayne or vncertayne that it is trueth that I preache, If it bee truth, why may not I say so, to courage my hearers to receaue the same more ardently, and ensue it more studiously? If I be vncertaine, why dare I be so bold to preache it? And if your friends in whom ye trust so greatly, be preachers themselues, after their sermon I pray you aske them whether they be certayne and sure that they taught you the truth or no, and sende me worde what they say, that I may learne to speake after them. If they say they be sure, ye know what followeth: If they say they be vnsure, whē shall you be sure that hath so doubtful teachers and vnsure? And you your selues, whether are you certayne or vncertayne, that Christ is your sauour, and so foorth of other articles that yee be bounden to beleue,* or whether be ye sure or vnsure, that ciuile ordinaunces be the good workes of God, and that you doe God seruice in doyng of them, if ye do them for good intent: if ye be vncertayne, take heede hee be your sure friend that heareth you say so, and then, with what conscience do you doubt: Cum quicquid non est ex fide, peccatum sit? But contrary say you, alonely God knoweth certayne truth, and ye haue it but per speculum in enigmat:* and there haue bene, qui zelum Dei habuerunt, sed non secundum scientiam: and to call thys or that truth, it requireth a deepe knowledge, considering that to you vnlearned, that you take for truth may be otherwise, not hauing sensus exercitatos (as Paule sayth) ad discernendum bonum & malum, as yee reason agaynst me, and so you do best to knowe surely nothyng for truth at all,* but to wander meekely hether and thether, omni vento doctrinae. &c. Our knowledge here, you say, is but per spe|culum in enigmat? What then? Ergo it is not certayn and sure?

I deny your argument by your leaue: yea if it be by fayth, as ye say, it is muche sure, quia certitudo fidei est maxima certitudo as Duns and other schole Doctours saye: that there is a great discrepance betweene certayne knowledge,* and cleare knowledge: for that may be of thinges absent that appeare not, this requireth the presence of the obiect,* I meane of the thinge knowne so that I certainly and surely know the thinge whiche I perfectly beleue, though I doe not clearely and euidently knowe it. I know your schole subtleties, as well as you, whiche 〈◇〉 as though enigmaticall knowledge, that is to saye, darcke and obscure knowledge might not be certayn and sure knowledge because it is not cleare, manifest and euident knowledge: and yet there hath bene (they say) qui zelum Dei habuerunt, sed non secundum scientiam, which haue had a zeale, but not after know|ledge. Truth it is, there hath bene suche, and yet be to manye to the great hinderaunce of Christes glorye, whiche nothing dothe more obscure, then an hote zeale accompanied with great authoritie without right iudgement. There haue bene also, Qui scientiam habuerunt absque zelo Dei, qui viuitatem Dei in iniustitia detinentes plagis vapulabunt multis, dum voluntatem Domini cognoscentes, nihil minus quàm, faciunt, I meane not among Turkes and Saracens that bee vnchristened, but of them that be christined▪ and there haue bene also that haue lost scientiam Dei, id est, spiritualem diuini verbi sensum, quam prius habuerunt. i. The spirituall knowledge of Gods word whiche they had before, because they haue not ensued after it, nor promoted the same, but rather with theyr mother wits haue impugned the wisdom of the father, and hindered the knowledge thereof, whiche therefore hath bene taken away from them, vt iustificetur Christus in sermonibus suis, & vincat cum iudicatur, threatning Math. 13. Ei vero, qui non habet, etiam quod habet, id est, quod videtur habere, auferetur ab eo, cum abuti habito, vel non bene vti, sit non habere, nec non sit verum illud quoque, non habitaturam, videlicet sapientiam in corpore peccatis subdito, qui adhuc & si carnaliter sapiant plus satis, at stat, sententia, nem••e carnalem & Philosophicam scripturarum intelligentiam, non esse sapientiam Dei, quae à sapientibus absconditur, paruulis reuelatur. And if to call this or that truth, requireth a deepe and profound knowledge, then eyther euery man hath a deepe and profound knowledge, or els no man can call this or that truth: & it behoueth euery Preacher to haue so deepe and profound knowledge, that he may call this or that truth, which this or that hee taketh in hand to preache for the truth, and yet hee may be ignoraunt and vncertayne in many thinges, both this and that, as Apollo was: but which thinges, whether this or that, he will not attempt to preach for the truth. And as for my self, I trust in God, I maye haue sensus exercitatos well enough ad discernendum bonum & malum. Sensus exercised to discerne good and euill in those thinges which wythout deep and profound knowledge in many thinges I preache not, yea there be manye thinges in scripture in whiche I cannot certaynely discerne bonum & malum, I meane verum & falsum, not with al the exercise that I haue in scripture, nor yet with helpe of all interpreters that I haue, to content my selfe and other in all scrupulosity, that may arise: but in such I am wont to wade no farther into the streame, then that I may eyther go ouer, or els returne backe agayne, hauing euer respect, not to the ostentation of my little wit, but to the edification of them that heare me, as far forth as I can, neyther passing myne owne nor yet theyr capacitie.

And such manner of argumentes might well serue the Deuill contra pusillanimes, to occasion them to wander and wauer in the faythe, and to be vncertayne in thinges in whiche they ought to be certayne: or els it may appeare to make and serue agaynst such preachers which wil define great subtleties & high matters in the Pulpit, whiche no man can be certayne and sure of by Gods worde to be truth, ne sensus quidem habens ad discernendum bonum & malum exercitatissimos: as whether, if Adam had not sinned we should haue had Stockefishe out of Iseland: howe many Larkes for a peny if euery Starre in the element were a flickering Hobby: how many yeres a man shall lye in Purgatory for one sinne if he buy not plenty of the oile that runneth ouer our lampes to slake the sinne withall, and so forget hel whiche cannot be slaked, to prouide for Purgatory.

Such argumentation (I say) might appeare to make well agaynst such Preachers, not agaynst me, which simply and playnly vtter true fayth and fruites of the same, whiche bee the good woorkes of God, quae preparauit deus vt in eis ambularemus. i. which he hath prepared for vs to walke in, euery man to do the thing that pertaineth to his office and duety in his degree and cal'ling, as the word of God appointeth, which thing a man may do with sobernesse, hauing sensus ad discernendum bonum & malum, vel mediocriter exercitatos. For it is but foolishe humilitey, willingly to continue alwayes infantulus in Christo & in infirmitate. i. an infant still in Christ, and in infirmity: in reproofe of which it was sayd 〈◇〉 estis opus habentes lacte non solido cibo. For S. Paule sayth not: Estote humiles, vt non capiatis. For though he would not that wee shoulde thinke arrogantly of our selfe, and aboue that that it becommeth vs to thinke of our selfe, but so to think of our selfe, vt simus sobrij ac modesti, yet he biddeth vs so to think of our selfe, vt cuique Deus partitus est mensuram fidei. i. as God hath distributed to euery one the measure of fayth. For he that may not with meekenesse thinke in himselfe what God hath done for him, and of himselfe as God hath done Page 1750 for him, how shall he, or when shall he geue due thanks to God for his giftes? And if your frendes will not allow the same, I pray you enquire of them whether they may cum sobrietate & modestia be sure they preach to you the truth, and whether we may, cum sobrietate & modestia folowe S. Paules bidding, where hee sayth vnto vs all: Nolite fieri pueri sensibus, sed malitia infantes estote. i. Be not children in vnderstanding, but in malitiousnesse be infantes.* God geue vs all grace to keepe the meane, & to think of our selfe neither to high nor to low, but so that we may restore vnto him, qui peraeagre profectus est, his giftes agayne cum vsura, that is to say, with good vse of the same, so that aedificemus inuicem with the same, ad gloriam Dei. Amen.

For my life I trust in god that I neither haue, neither (by gods grace) shall I, neither in sobernesse, nor yet in drunkennesse affirme any trueth of my selfe, therewith entending to diuide that vnity of the Congregation of Christ, and the receiued trueth agreed vpon by the holy Fathers of the Church consonant to the Scripture of God, though it be shewed you neuer so often, that an opinion or maner of teaching, whiche causeth dissention in a Christian Congregation, is not of God, by the doctrine of Saynt Iohn in his Epistle where he sayth: Omnis qui confitetur Iesum Christum in carne, ex Deo est. i. Euery one that confesseth Christ in the flesh,* is of God. First not euery thing whereupon foloweth dissention, causeth dissention, as I woulde they that shewed you that, would also shew you, whether this opinion, that a man may not mary his brothers wife, be of God or of men, if it be of men, then as Gamaliell sayd, dissoluatur: if it bee of God, as I thinke it is, and perchaunce your frendes also, quis potest dissoluere nisi qui videbitur Deo repugnare? i. Who can dissolve it but shal seme to repugne against God▪ And yet there be many not heathennes, but in Christendome, that dissenteth from the same, which could beare full euill to heare sayd vnto them: vos ex patre diabolo estis. So that such an opinion might seme to some to make a dissention in a Christian Congregation, sauing that they may saye perchaunce with more liberty then other, that an occasion is sometime taken and not geuen, which with theyr fauor I might abuse for my defence, sauing that, non omnibus licet in hac temporum iniquitate.

The Galathians hauing for preachers and teachers the false Apostles, by whose teaching they were degenerate frō the sweet liberty of the Gospell into the sowre bond of ceremonies, thoght themselves peraduenture a Christian Congregation when Saint Paule did write his Epistle vnto them, and were in a quiet trade vnder the dominion of maysterly Curates, so that the false Apostles might haue objected to S. Paule that this Apostleshippe was not of God, for as muche as there was dissention in a Christian Congregation by occasion therof, while some would renue their opinions by occasion of the Epistle some would opinari, as they were wont to do, and folow theyr great Lordes and maysters the false Apostles, whiche were not heathen and vnchristened, but Christened, and hie Prelates of the professors of Christ. For your frendes I know right well what Erasmus hath sayde in an Epistle set before the Paraphrases of the first Epistle to the Corinthians,* which Erasmus hath caused no small dissention with his pen in a Christian Congregation, in as much as many haue dissented frō him, not alonely in Cloysters, (men more then christened men) of high perfection, but also at Paules Crosse, and S. Mary Spittle: besides many that with no small zeale haue written agaynst him, but not without aunswere.

And I woulde fayne learne of your frendes, whether that S. Hieromes writing were of God, which caused dissention in a chri|stian Congregation, as it appeareth by his owne wordes in the prologue before the Canonical Epistles, which be these: Et tu virgo Christi Eustochium, dum à me impensius Scripturae viritatē inquiris,* meam quodam modo senectutem inuidorum dentibus vel morsibus corrodendam apponis, qui me falsarium corruptoremque Scripturarum pronunciant: sed ego in tali opere nec illorum inuidentiam pertimesco, nec Scripturae veritatem poscentibus denegabo. I pray you what were they that called S Hierom falsarium and corrupter of Scripture, and for enuye would haue bitten him with theyr teeth? vnchristen, or christen? what had the vnchristen to doe with christen doctrine? They were worshipfull fathers of a Christian Congregation, men of much more hotter stomackes then right iudgemente, of a greater authoritye then good charity: but Saynt Hierome would not cease to do good for the euill, speaking of them that were nought, geuing in that an ensample to vs of the same: and if this dissention were in Saynt Hieromes time, what may be in our time? de malo in peius scilicet.

And I pray you what meaneth your frendes by a Christian Congregation? All those (trow ye) that haue bene christened? But many of those bene in worse condition and shal haue greater dānation, then many vnchristened. For it is not enough to a christian Congregation that is of God, to haue bene Christened: but it is to be considered what we promise when we be christened, to renounce Sathan, his woorkes, his pompes: Whiche thing if we busye not our selfe to doe, let vs not crake that wee professe Christes name in a Christian Congregation, in vno baptismo. i. in one baptisme.

And where they adde in vno Domino. i. in one Lorde, I reade in Math. 17. non omnis qui dicit Domine, Domine. &c. •. Not euery one that sayth Lord, Lord. &c. And in Luke the Lord himself complayneth and rebuketh such professors and confessours,* saying to them: Cur dicitis domine, domine, & non facitis quae dico? i. Why call you me Lord, Lord, and doe not that I bid you? euen as though it were enough to a Christian man, or to a Christian Congregation to say euery day, Domine Dominus noster, and to salute Christe with a double Domine. But I woulde your frendes would take the paynes to read ouer Chrysostome super Mathaeum,* hom. 49. cap. 24. to learne to knowe a Christian Congregation, if it will please them to learne at him. And where they adde, in vna fide. i. in one fayth, S. Iames sayth boldly: ostende mihi fidem ex operibus. i. shew me thy fayth by thy workes. And S. Hierome: Si tamen credimus, inquit, opere veritatem ostēdimus.* And Scripture sayeth, qui credit Deo, attendit mandatis: And the deuils beleue to theyr litle comfort, I praye God to saue you and your frendes from that beleuing Congregation, and from that faythfull company.

Therefore all this toucheth not them that be vnchristened, but them that be christened and aunswere not vnto theyr Christendome. For Saynt Hierom sheweth how true Preachers should order themselues, when euil Priestes and false Preachers and populus ab his deceptus. i. The people be by them deceiued, should be angry with them for preaching the truth. Tom. 5. in Hieremiam Capi. 26. exhorting them to suffer death for the same of the euill priestes and false Preachers and the people deceiued of thē, which euill Priestes and false Preachers with the people deceyued, be Christened as well as other: and I feare me that Saynt Hierome might appeare to some Christian Cōgregation, as they will be called, to write seditiously, to deuide the vnity of a great honest number, confessing Christ in vno baptismo, vno Domino, vna fide, saying: populus qui ante sub magistris consopitus erat, ibit ad montes, non illos quidem qui vel leuiter tacti fumigant, sed montes veteris & noui testamenti, Prophetas, Apostolos, & Euangelistas, & cum eiusmodi montium lectione versatus, si non inuenerit doctores (messis enim multa operarij autem pauci) tunc & populi studium comprobabitur, quo fugerit and montes, & magistrorum desidia coa•guetur. To. 6. in Naū. cap. 30.

I do maruell why our Christian Congregation be so greatlye greeued that lay people would read scripture, seying that Saynt Hierom alloweth and approueth the same, which compareth not here the vnchristened to the christened, but the lay people christened to theyr Curates christened, vnder the which they haue bene rocked and locked a sleepe in a subtile trade a greate while full soundly, though nowe of late they haue beene waked, but to theyr payne, at the least way, to the payne of them that haue weakened them with the word of God: and it is properly sayd of S. Hierome to call them Maysters and not seruautes, meaning that seruautes teacheth not their owne doctrine, but the doctrine of theyr Mayster Christ, to his glory. Maysters teacheth not Christes doctrine, but theyr owne, to theyr owne glory: which Maysterly Curates cannot bee quiet till they haue broughte the people a sleepe agayne: but Christ the very true Mayster sayth: vigilate, & orate, ne intretis in tentationem. Non cogitationes meae cogitationes vestrae, neque viae meae viae vestrae, dicit dominus: & there haue bene, qui cogitauerunt concilia, quae non potuerunt stabilire. i. which haue gone about counsels, which they could not establish. I pray God geue our people grace so to wake, vt studium illorum comprobetur, and our maysters so to sleepe, vt non desidia illorum coarguatur. For who •s so blinde that he seeth not howe farre our Christian Congregation doth gaynesay S. Hierome, and speaketh after an other fashion. God amend that is amisse: for wee be something wide, ywis.

But nowe your frendes haue learned of S. Iohn, that omnis qui confitetur Iesum Christum in carne, ex Deo est. i. Euery one that confesseth Iesus Christ in flesh, is of God. And I haue learned of Saynt Paule, that there haue bene, not among the heathē, but among the Christen, qui ore confitentur, factis autem negant i. which confesse Christ with theyr mouth, and deny him with their actes: So that Saynt Paule shoulde appeare to expounde S. Iohn sauing that I will not affirme any thing as of my selfe, but leaue it to your frendes to shew your vtrum qui factis negant Christum & vita, sint ex deo necne per solam oris confessionem: for your frendes knoweth well enough by the same. Saynt Iohn, qui ex Deo est, non peccat: and there both haue bene and be nowe too many, qui ore tenus confitentur Christum venisse in carne, whiche will not effectually heare the word of God by consenting to the same, notwithstanding that S. Iohn sayth, qui ex deo est, verbū Dei audit, vos non auditis quia ex deo nō estis: & many shal heare nunquam noui vos. i. I neuer knew you, which shall not alonelye be christened, but also shall prophettare, and do puissaunt thinges in nomine Christi: and Saynt Paule sayde there should come Lupi graues qui non percerent gregi. i. rauening Wolues which wyll not spare the flocke,* meaninge it of them that shoulde confite•i Christum in carne in theyr lips, and yet vsurpe by succession the Page 1751 office, which Christ calleth pseudopphetas. i. false prophetes, & biddeth vs beware of them, saying they shal come in vestimentis ouium, id est, in sheepes cloathing, and yet they may weare both satten, silke, and veluet, called afterwarde serui ne quam, nō pascentes sed percutientes conseruos, edentes & bibentes cum ebrijs,* habituri tandem portionem cum hypocritis. They are called serui, seruauntes I trowe, quod ore confitentur Christum in carne: nequam vero, quia factis negant eundem, non dantes cibum in tempore, dominum exercentes in gregem: And yet your frendes reason as though there coulde none barcke and bite at true Preachers, but they that be vnchristened, notwithstanding that S. Austen vpon the same Epistle of Iohn calleth such confessours of Christ, qui•ore confitentur, & factis negant, Antichristos: a straunge n•me for a Christian Congregation: and though S. Augusten coulde defende his saying, yet his saying might appeare not to bee of God, to some mens iudgement, in that it breaketh the chayne of Christes charity, so to cause men to hate Antichristianismum, Antichristes, according to the doctrine of S. Paule: sitis odio persequentes quod malum est. i. Hate that is euill: and so making diuision, not betwene christened and vnchristened, but betwene Christians and Antichristians, when neither penne nor tounge can deuide the Antichristians from theyr blind folly. And I would you would cause your frends to read ouer S. Austen, vpon the Epistle of S. Iohn, and tell you the meaning thereof, if they thinke it expedient for you to know it, as I remember it is tractatu. 3. but I am not sure nor certaine of that, because I did not see it since I was at Cambridge: and here haue I not S. Austins workes to looke for it: but well I wot, that there he teacheth vs to know the Christians frō the Antichristians, which both be christened, and both confesse Iesum esse Christum,* if they be asked the question: and yet the one part denyeth it in very deed: but to knowe whether, non linguam sed facta attendamus, & viuendi genus, nū studeamus officia vocationis praestare an non studeamus, immo persuasi forte sumus non necesse esse vt praestemus, sed omnia in primitiuam ecclesiam & tempora praeterita. &c. quasi nobis sat sit dominari, & secula•ibus negotijs nos totos voluere, ac voluptatibus & pompae inhiare: and yet we will appeare, vel soli ex Deo esse: sed longe aliter Christum confitentur, qui confitēdo ex Deo esse comprobantur.

And yet as long as they minister the word of God or his Sacramentes or any thing that God hath ordeined to the saluation of mankinde, wherewith GOD hath promised to be present, to worke with the ministration of the same to the end of the world, they be to be heard, to be obeyed, to bee honoured for Gods ordinaunce sake, which is effectuall and fruitefull, whatsoeuer the minister be, though he bee a Deuill, and neyther Church, nor member of the same, as Origene saith, and Chrisostome, so that it is not all one to honour them, and trust in them, Saynt Hierome sayth: but there is required a iudgement, to discerne when they minister Gods woorde and ordinaunce of the same, and theyr owne, least peraduenture we take chalke for cheese, whiche wyll edge our teethe, and hinder digestion. For as it is commonlye sayd, the blinde eateth many a flye, as they did which were perswaded à principibus sacerdotum vt peterent Barrabam, Iesum autem crucifige•ent. i. Of the high Priestes, to aske Barrabas and to crucify Iesus: and ye know that to followe blinde guides is to come into the pit with the same. And will you know, sayth Saynt Augustine, how apertly they resist Christ, when men beginne to blame them for they• misliuing, and intollerable secularity, & negligence? they dare not for shame blaspheme Christ himselfe, but they will blaspheme the ministers and preachers of whome they be blamed.

Therefore, whereas yee will pray for agreement both in the truth, and in vttering of the trueth, when shall that be as long as we will not heare the trueth▪ but disquiet with crafty conueiance the Preachers of the trueth, because they reprooue our euilnesse with the truth, And to say trueth better it were to haue a deformity in preaching, so that some would preach the truth of God, and that which is to be preached, without cauponation and adulteration of the word (as Lyranus sayth in his time few did, what they do now a dayes I report me to them that can iudge) then to haue such an vniformity, that the sely people should be thereby occasioned to continue still in theyr lamentably ignorance, corrupt iudgement, superstition and Idolatry, and esteeme things as they doe all, preposterously, doying that, that they neede not for to doe, leauing vndone that they ought to doe, for lacke or want of knowing what is to be done, and so shewe theyr loue to God, not as God biddeth (which sayth: Si diligitis me, praecepta mea seruate.* And agayne: Qui habet praecepta mea & facit ea, hic est qui diligit me) but as they bid qui quaerunt quae sua sunt, non quae Iesu Christi. i. Which seeke theyr owne thinges: not Christes as though to tythe mynt were more, then iudgement, fayth, and mercy.

And what is to liue in state of Curates, but that hee taughte which sayd: Petre amas me? pasce, pasce, pasce: Peter louest thou feede, feede, feede: which is now set aside, as though to loue were to doe nothing els, but to weare ringes: miters, and rochets. &c. And when they erre in right liuing, how can the people but erre in louing, and all of the new fashion,* to his dishonor that suffered his passion, and taught the true kinde of louing, whiche is now turned into piping, playing, and curious singing, which will not be reformed (I trow) nisi per manū Dei validam. And I haue both S. Austen, and S. Thomas, with diuers other, that lex is taken, not alonely for Ceremonies, but also for Mo•als, where it is sayd: N• estis sub lege: though your frendes reproue the same. But they can make no diuision in a christian congregation. And whereas both you and they would haue a sobernes in our preaching, I pray god send it vnto vs, whatsoeuer ye meane by it. For I see well, whosoeuer will be happy, and busye with vae vobis,* he shall shortly after come coram nobis.

And where your frendes thinke that I made a lye, when I said that I haue thought in times past that the Pope had bene Lord of the world, though your frendes bee much better learned then I, yet am I sure that they knowe not what eyther I thinke, or haue thought, better then I, iuxta illud nemo nouit quae sunt hominis. &c. as though better men then I haue not thought so, as Bonifacius (as I remember) Octauus,* the great learned manne Iohn of the burnt Tower: presbiter Cardinalis in his book where he proueth the Pope to be aboue the counsell Generall and Speciall, where he sayth that the Pope is Rex •egum,* & Dominus dominantium. i. The King of Kinges and Lord of Lordes, and that he is verus Dominus totius orbis, iure, licet non facto. i. the true Lord of the whole worlde by good right, albeit in fact he be not so: and that Constantinus didde but restore his owne vnto him, when he gaue vnto him Rome, so that in propria venit, as S. Iohn sayth Christ did, & sui eum non receperunt: and yet I heare not that any of our Christian congregation hath reclaimed agaynste him, vntill now of late, dissention began.* Who be your frendes I cannot tell: but I would you woulde desire them to be my good maysters, and if they will doe me no good, at the least way do me no harme: and though they can do you no more good then I, yet I am sure I would be as loth to hurt you as they, either with mine opinions, maner of preaching or writing.

And as for the Popes high dominion ouer al, there is one Raphaell Maruphus in London, an Italian,* and in times past a Marchaunt of dispensations, which I suppose woulde dye in the quarell, as Gods true Knight, and true Martyr. As touching Purgatory, and worshipping of Sayntes, I shewed to you my minde before my Ordinary: and yet I maruelled something, that after priuate communication had with him, ye would (as it were) adiure mee to open my minde before him, not geuing mee warning before, sauing I cannot interpret euill your doinges towardes me: & yet neither mine Ordinary, nor you disallowed the thing that I sayd, and I looked not to escape better then Doctor Crome: •ut whē I haue opened my mind neuer so much, yet I shall be reported to denye my preaching, of them that haue belyed my preaching, as he was.* Sed opus est magna patientia ad sustinendas calumnias malignantis Ecclesiae.

Syr, I haue had more busines in my little cure since I spake with you, what with sicke folkes, and what with matrimonies, thē I haue had since I came to it, or then I would haue thought a man should haue in a great cure. I wonder how men can go quietly to bed which haue great cures and many, and yet peradventure are in none of them all. But I pray you tell none of your frendes that I sayd so foolishly, least I make a dissention in a Christian Congregation, and deuide a sweete and a restfull vnion, or tot quot, with haec requies mea in seculum seculi. Syr I had made an end of this scribbling, and was beginning •o write it agayne more truely and more distinctly, and to correcte it, but there came a man of my Lorde of Farleys, with a Citation to appeare before my Lord of London in haste, to be punished for suche excesses as I committed at my last being there, so that I coulde not perfourme my purpose: I doubt whether ye can read it, as it is. If ye can, well be it: if not, I pray you sende it me agayne, and that you so doe, whether you can reade it or not. Iesu mercy, what Worlde is this, that I shall be put to so greate laboure and paynes, besides great costes, aboue my power for preacheinge of a poore simple Sermon? But I trow, our Sauour Christ sayd true: Oportet pati,* & sic intrare: tam periculosum est in Christo pie viuere velle: yea in a christian Congregation. God make vs all Christian, after the right fashion. Amen.

Here foloweth an other letter of M. Latimer writtten to K. Henry the 8. vpon this occasion. Ye heard before of two sondry Proclamations set out by the Byshops in the time of K. Henry, the one in the yeare 1531. and the other set out an. 1546. In the which proclamatiōs b•ing authorised by the kinges name, were inhibited all english books either conteining or tending to any matter of the scripture. Where also wee haue expre•ed at large the whole Catalogue of all theyr errors & heresies, which the sayd Bishops falsely haue excerpted, and maliciously imputed to Godlye writers, with theyr places and quotations, aboue assigned in the page aforesayd. Now M. Latimer growing in some fauor with the king, and seing the great decay of Christes religion by reason of these Proclamations, and touched Page 1752 therfore with the zeale of cōscience, directeth vnto K. Hēry this letter hereunder ensuing, therby entēding by all meanes possible to perswade the kinges mind to set opē again the freedome of Gods holy word amongst his subiectes. The copy and tenor of his letter here foloweth.

¶The Letter of Mayster Latimer written to King Henry, for the restoring agayne the free liberty of reading the holy Scriptures.

☛To the most mighty Prince King of England Henrye the eight, Grace, mercy, and peace from God the Father by our Lord Iesus Christ.

The holy Doctour Saynt Austine in an Epistle whiche he wrote to Casulanus sayth that he whiche for feare of any power hideth the trueth, prouoketh the wrath of God to come vpon him: for he feareth men more then God. And according to the same, the holy man Saynt Iohn Chrisostome sayth: that he is not alonely a traytour to the truth, which opēly for truth teacheth a lie, but he also which doth not freely pronounce and shewe the trueth that he knoweth. These sentences (moste redoubted Kyng) when I read nowe of late, and marked them earnestlye in the inward partes of mine hart, they made me sore afrayd, troubled and vexed me grievously in my conscience, and at the last droue me to this strait, that either I must shewe forth such thinges as I haue read and learned in Scripture, or elles to be of the sort that prouoke the wrath of GOD vpon them, and be traitors vnto the trueth: the which thing rather then it shoulde happen, I had rather suffer extreme punishment.

For what other thing is it to bee a Traytour vnto the trueth, then to be a Traytour and a Iudas vnto Christe, which is the very truth and cause of all trueth?* the whiche sayth that whosoever denyeth him here before men, he wil deny him before his father in heauen. The which denying ought more to be feared and dread, then the losse of al temporall goodes, honour, promotion, fame, prison, sclaunder, hurtes, banishmentes, and all manner of tormentes, and crueltyes, yea, and death it selfe, bee it neuer so shamefull and paynefull. But alas, how litle do mē regard those sharpe sayinges of these two holy men? and how litle doe they feare the terrible iudgemente of almighty God? and specially they which boast themselues to be guides and capitaynes vnto other, and chalenging vnto themselues the knowledge of holy Scripture, yet will neither shewe the trueth themselues (as they be bounde) neither suffer them that would: So that vnto thē may be sayd that which our sauior Christ said to y^e Phariseis, Math. 23. Wo be vnto you Scribes and Phariseis, which shut vp the kingdome of heauen before men,and neither will you enter in your selues, neither suffer them that would, to enter in. And they will as much as in them lyeth, debarre, not onely the word of God, whyche Dauid calleth a light to direct and shew euery man how to order his affections and lustes, according to the Commaundementes of God: but also by theyr subtle wylinesse they instruct, moue, and prouoke, in a maner, all Kinges in christendome to ayde, succour, and helpe them in thys theyr mischiefe: and especially in this your Realme, they haue sore blynded your Liege people and Subiectes wyth their Lawes, Customes, Ceremonyes, and Banbery Glofes, and punished them wyth Cursynges, Excommunications, and other corruptions (corrections I woulde say) and now, at the last when they see that they cannot preuayle agaynst the open trueth (which the more is persecuted, the more it increaseth by their tyranny) they haue made it Treason to your noble Grace to haue the Scripture in English.

Here I beseech your Grace to pardon me a while and paciently to heare me a worde or two: yea and thoughe it be so that as concerning your high Maiesty and regall power, whereunto almighty God hath called your Grace, there is as great difference betweene you and mee, as betweene God and man. For you be here to me and to al your subiectes, in Gods sted, to defend, ayde, and succour vs in our right,* and so I should tremble and quake to speake to your grace. But agayne, as concerning that you be a mortall man, in daunger of sinne, hauing in you the corrupte nature of Adam, in the which al we be both conceiued and borne, so haue you no lesse need of the merites of Christes passion for your saluation, then I and other of your subiectes haue, whiche be all members of the mysticall bodye of christ. And though you be an higher member, yet you must not disdayne the lesser. For as Saynt Paule sayth: those members that be taken most vilest and had in least reputation, be as necessary as the other, for the preseruacion and keeping of the body. This, most gracious king, when I considered, and also your fauorable and gētle nature, I was bold to write this rude, homely, and simple letter vnto your grace, trusting that you will accepte my true and faythfull minde euen as it is.

First and before all thinges I will exhort your grace to marke the life and processe of our Sauour Christe and his Apostles in preaching and setting forth of the Gospell,* and to note also the wordes of our Mayster Christ, whiche he had to his Disciples when he sent them forth to preache his Gospell, and to these haue euer in your minde the golden rule of our mayster Christ: The tree is knowne by the fruit. For by the diligent marking of these, your grace shal clearely know and perceiue who bee the true folowers of Christ and teachers of his Gospell, and who be not.* And concerning the first, all Scripture sheweth playnelye that our sauour Iesus Christes life was very poore.

Begin at his byrth, and I beseech you,* who euer heard of a poorer or so poore as he was? It were to long to wryte how poore Ioseph and the blessed Uirgin Mary took theyr iourney from Nazareth toward Bethlem, in the cold and frosty winter, hauing no body to wayte vpon them, but he both Mayster and man, and she both Mistres and mayde▪ How vilely thinkes your grace, they were intreated in the Innes and lodgings by the way? and in how vile and abiect place was this poore mayd, the mother of our Sauour Iesus Christ, brought to bed in, without company, lighte or any other thing necessary for a woman in that plight? Was not here a poore beginning, as cōcerning the world? Yes truly. And according to this beginning was the processe and end of his life in this worlde, and yet he might by his godly power haue had all the goodes and treasures of this world at his pleasure, when and where he would.

But this he did to shew vs that his folowers and Uicars should not regard nor set by the riches and treasures of this worlde,* but after the saying of Dauid we oughte to take them, which sayth thus: If riches, promotions, and dignity happen to a man, let him not set his affiaunce, pleasure, trust, & hart vpon them. So that it is not agaynst the pouertye in spirite which Christ prayseth in the Gospel of Saynt Mathew, chapter 5. to be rich, to be in dignity, and in honour, so that they hartes be not fixed and set vpō them so much, that they neither care for GOD nor good man. But they be enemies to this pouertye in spirite, haue they neuer so litle, that haue greedy and desirous mindes to the goodes of this worlde, onely because they woulde liue after theyr owne pleasure and lustes. And they also be priuy enemies (and so much the worse) which haue professed (as they say) wilfull pouerty, and will not be called worldly men. And they haue Lordes Landes, and kinges riches, yea rather then they would lose one iot of that whiche they haue, they will set debate betwene king and king,* Realme and Realme, yea betwene the king and his Subiectes, and cause rebellion agaynst the Temporall power, to the whiche our Sauour Christ himselfe obeyed and payed tribute, as the Gospell declareth: vnto whom the holy Apostle S. Paul teacheth euery Christen manne to obey. Yea and beside al this, they will curse and ban, as much as in them lyeth, euen into the deepe pit of hell, all that gayne say theyr appetite, wherby they thinke theyr goodes, promotions, or dignities should decay.

Your grace may see what meanes and craft the Spirituality (as they will be called) imagine to breake and withstand the Actes which were made in your graces last Parliamēt against theyr superfluities. Wherefore they that thus do, your Grace may knowe them not to be true folowers of Christ.* And although I named the spirituality to be corrupt with this vnthrifty ambition: yet I meane not all to be faulty therein, for there be some good of them. Neyther will I that your Grace should take away the goodes due to the Church, but take away such euil persons from the goodes, and set better in theyr stead.

I name nor appoynte no person nor persons, but remit your Grace to the rule of our Sauour Christe, as in Mathew the seuēth Chapiter: *By theyr fruites ye shall know them. As touching the woordes that our Sauour Christe spake to his Disciples when hee sente them to preache hys Gospell, they be readde in Mathew the fiftenth Chapiter, where he sheweth,*that here they shall bee hated and despised of all men worldly, and broughte before the Kinges and Rulers, and that all euill shoulde be sayde by them,for theyr preaching sake, but he exhorteth them to take paciently such persecution by his owne example, saying: It becommeth not the seruauant to be aboue the Mayster. And seing they called me Belz•bub, what maruayle is it, if they call you Deuillishe persons and heretickes? Reade the fourteenth Chapiter of Saynt Mathewes Gospell, & there your Grace shall see that he promised to the true Preachers no worldlye promotions or Page 1753 dignity, but persecution and al kindes of punishment, and that they should be betrayed euen by theyr owne brethren and children. In Iohn also he sayeth: In the worlde ye shall haue oppression, and the worlde shall hate you: but in mee you shall haue peace.* And in the 10. Chapiter of S. Mathewes Gospell sayth our Sauour Christ also: Loe I send you forth as sheepe among Wolues. So that the true Preachers go like sheepe harmelesse, and be persecuted, and yet they reuenge not theyr wronge,* but remit all to God: so farre it is of that they will persecute any other but with the worde of God onely, whiche is theyr weapon. And so this is the most euidēt tokē that our sauour Iesus Christ would that his Gospell and the Preachers of it should be knowne by, and that it shoulde be despised among those worldly wyse men, and that they should repute it but foolishnes and deceiuable doctrine, and the true Preachers should be persecuted and hated, and driuen from towne to towne, yea and at the last lose both goodes and life.

And yet they that did this persecution, shoulde thinke that they did wel, and a great pleasure to God. And the Apostles remembring this lesson of our Sauioure Christ,* were content to suffer such persecutions, as you may read in the Actes of the Apostles and the Epistles. But we neuer read that they euer persecuted any man. The holy apostle S. Paule sayth, that euery man that wil liue godly in christ Iesu, should suffer persecution. And also he sayth further in the Epistle written to the Philippians in the first chapter: that it is not onely geuen you to beleue in the Lord,*but also to suffer persecution for his sake.

Wherefore, take this for a sure conclusion, that there, where the word of God is truely preached, there is persecution,* aswell of the hearers as of the teachers: and where as is quietnesse and rest in worldye pleasure, there is not the trueth. For the world loueth all that are of the world, & hateth al thinges that is contrary to it. And to be short, S. Paule calleth the Gospell the word of the crosse,* the word of punishment. And the holy Scripture doth promise nothing to the fauourers and followers of it in this worlde, but trouble, vexation, and persecution, which these worldly men cannot suffer, nor away withall.

Therefore, pleaseth it your good Grace, to returne to this golden rule of our Mayster & Sauiour Iesus Christ, which is this: by theyr fruites ye shall know them. For where you set persecution, there is the Gospell, and there is the trueth: and they that doe persecute, be voyde and wythout all trueth: not caryng for the cleare light, which as our Sauior Iesus Christ sayth in the third Chapter of Saynt Iohns Gospell) is come into the worlde, and which shall vtter and shewe forth euery mans workes.* And they, whose workes be nought, dare not come to this light, but goe aboute to stop it and hinder it, letting as muche as they may, that the holy scripture should not be read in our mother toūg,* saying that it would cause heresy and insurrection, and so they perswade, at the least way they would faine perswade your Grace to keepe it back. But here marke their shamelesse boldnesse, which be not ashamed, contrary to Christes doctrine, to gather figges of Thornes, and grapes of bushes, and to cal light darcknesse, and darcknesse light, sweete sower, and sower sweete, good euill, and euill good, and to say that that, whiche teacheth all obedience, shoulde cause dissension and strife,* but suche is theyr bellye wysedome: therewith they iudge and measure euery thing, to holde and keepe still this wicked Mammon, the goods of this worlde, which is theyr GOD, and hath so blinded the eyes of theyr hartes, that they canne not see the cleare light of the Sacred Scripture, though they bable neuer so much of it.

But as concerning this matter, other men haue shewed your Grace theyr mindes, howe necessarye it is to haue the Scripture in Englishe. The whiche thing also your Grace hath promised by your last Proclamation: the whiche promise I pray God that your gracious highnesse may shortly perfourme, euen to day before to morrow. Nor let not the wickednesse of these worldly men deceiue you from your Godly purpose and promise.* Remember the subtle worldly wise Counsellours of Hammon the sonne of Naas, king of the Ammonites, which, when Dauid had sent his Seruauntes to comfort the young King for the death of his Father, by craftye imaginations counselled Hammon, not alonely not to receiue them gentlye, but to entreate them moste shamefully and cruelly saying: that they came not to comfort him,but to espye and searche his lande so that afterward they bringing Dauid word how euery thing stood Dauid mighte come and conquere it. And so they caused the young king to sheare theyr heades, and cut theyr coates by the poyntes, and sent thē away like fooles: whom he ought rather to haue made much of, and to haue entreated them gently, and haue geuen them great thankses and rewards. O wretched Councillers. But see what followed of thys carnall and worldly wisdom. Truly nothing but destruction of all the whole Realme, and also of all them whiche tooke theyr partes.

Therefore good king, seeyng that the right Daud, that is to say, our Sauour Christ hath sent his Seruautes, that is to say, true preachers, and his owne worde also to comfort our weake and sicke soules, let not these worldye menne make your Grace beleue that they wil cause insurrections and heresies, and such mischiefes as they imagine of theyr owne madde braynes,* least that he be auenged vpon you and your Realme, as was Daud vpon the Ammonites, and as he hath euer beene auenged vpon them which haue obstinately withstand and gainsayd his word. But peradventure they will lay this agaynst me, and saye that experience doth shew, how that such men as call them selues folowers of the Gospell, regardeth not your Graces commaundement, neither set by your Proclamation, and that was well prooued by these persons which of late were punished in London for keeping of suche bookes as your grace had prohibited by proclamation: and so like as they regarded not this, so they will not regard or esteme other your Graces lawes, statutes and ordinaunces. But this is but a craftye perswasion. For your grace knoweth that there is no manne liuing, specially that loueth worldly promotion, that is so foolish to set forth, promote, or enhaunce his enemy, wherby he should be let of his worldly pleasures and fleshly desires: but rather he will seek all the wayes possible that he can, vtterly to confoūd, destroy and put him out of the way. And so as cōcerning your last proclamation, prohibiting such books, the very true cause of it, and chiefe Counsellors (as men saye, and of likelyhoode it should be) were they whose euill liuing and cloked hypocrisy these bookes vttered and disclosed. And howbeit that there were 3. or 4. that would haue had the Scripture to go forth in Englishe, yet it happened there, as it is euermore sene, that the most parte ouercommeth the better, and so it might be that these men did not take this proclamation as yours, but as theyrs set foorth in your name, as they haue done many times moe, which hath put this your Realme in great hinderance and trouble, and brought it to great penury,* and more would haue done if God had not mercifully prouided to bring your Grace to knowledge of the falsehoode and priuy treason, which theyr head and Captayne was about: and be you sure not without adherents, if the matter be duely searched. For what maruel is it, that they being so nigh of your Councell, and so familiar wyth your Lordes, shoulde prouoke both your Grace and them to prohibite these bookes, which before by theyr owne authority haue forbidden the new Testament, vnder payn of euerlasting damnation: for such is theyr maner, to sende a thousand men to hel, ere they send one to God, and yet the new Testament (and so I thinke by y^e other) was me•kely offered to euery man that would and could, to amend it, if there were any fault.

Moreouer, I will aske them the causes of all insurrections, whiche hath beene in this Realme heretofore. And whence is it that there be so many Extortioners, bribers, murtherers, and theeues which dayly do not breake onely your graces lawes, ordinaunces, and statutes, but also the lawes and commaundementes of almighty God? I think they will not say these bookes, but rather theyr Pardons which causeth many a man to sinne in trust of them. For as for those malefactours which I nowe rehearsed, you shall not finde one amongst a hundreth, but that he wil cry out both of these bookes, and also of them that haue them, yea & will be glad to spend the good whiche he hath wrongfullye gotten, vpon Fagots to burne both the bookes and them that haue them.

And as touching these men that were latelye punished for these bookes, there is no man (I heare say) that can lay any word or deede agaynst them that shoulde sound to the breaking of any of your graces lawes (this onely except) if it be yours, and not rather theyrs.* And be it so that there be some that haue these bookes, that bee euill, vnruely, and selfe willed persons, not regarding Gods lawes nor mās, yet these bookes be not the cause therof, no more then was the bodily presence of Christ and his wordes the cause that Iudas fell, but theyr owne froward mind and carnal wit, which shoulde be amended by the vertuous example of lyuing of their Curates, & by the true expositiō of the scripture. If the lay people had suche Curates that would thus doe theyr office,* these bookes nor the Deuill himselfe coulde not hurte them, nor make them to goe out of frame, so that the lacke of good Curates is the destruction and cause of al mischief. Neyther doe I write these thinges because that I will either excuse these menne lately punished or to affirme al to be true writtē in these books, which I haue not Page 1754 all read, but to shew that there can not such inconuenience folow of them, and specially of the scripture as they would make men beleue should folow.

And though it bee so that your Grace maye by other bookes, and namely by the Scripture it selfe know & perceiue the hipocrite Wolues clad in sheepes clothing, yet I thinke my selfe bounde in conscience to vtter vnto your grace such thinges as God put in mind to write.* And this I do (God so iudge me) not for hate of any person or persons liuing, nor for that that I thinke the word of GOD should go forth without persecution, if your Grace hadde commaunded that euery man within your Realme should haue it in his mothers tongue. For the Gospell must needes haue persecution vnto the time that it bee preached throughout all the world, which is the last signe y^t Christe shewed to his Disciples that should come before the daye of iudgement: so that if your grace had once commaunded that the scripture shoulde be put forth, the deuill would set forth some wyle or other to persecute the trueth. But my purpose is, for the loue that I haue to God principally, & the glory of his name, which is only known by his word, and for the true allegiaunce that I owe vnto your Grace, and not to hide in the gronde of my hart the talent geuen me of God, but to chaffer it forth to other, that it may encrease to the pleasure of God, to exhort your grace to auoid and beware of these mischieuous flatterers and their abhominable wayes and counsels.

And take heed whose counsels your grace doth take in this matter: for there be some that for feare of losing of their worldly worship and honor, will not leaue theyr opinion, which rashly, and that to please menne withall by whome they had great promotion, they tooke vpon them to defend by writing, so that now they thinke that all theyr felicity which they put in this life, should be mard, and their wisdom not so greatlye regarded, if that whiche they haue so slaunderously oppressed, should be now put forth and allowed. But alas, let these men remember S. Paul, how feruent he was agaynst the truth (and that of a good zeale) before he was called: he thought no shame to suffer punishment & great persecutions for that which he before despised & called heresy. And I am sure that theyr liuing is not more perfect then S. Paules was, as concerning the outward workes of the law, before he was conuerted.

Also the king and Prophete Dauid was not ashamed to forsake his good intent in building of the Temple,* after that the Prophet Nathan had shewed him that it was not the pleasure of god that he should build any house for him: and notwithstanding that Nathan had before allowed & praysed the purpose of Dauid, yet he was not ashamed to reuoke and eat his words againe when he knew that they were not according to Gods will and pleasure.

Wherefore they be sore drowned in worldly wisdom that thinke it agaynst theyr worship to knowledge theyr ignoraunce: whom I pray to God that your grace may es•ye, and take heede of theyr worldly wisdom, whiche is foolishnes before God, that you may do that that God cōmaundeth, and not that seemeth good in your owne sighte without the word of God, that your grace may be founde acceptable in his sight and one of the mēbers of his church and according to the office that he hath called your Grace vnto, you may be found a faythfull minister of his giftes, and not a defender of his fayth, for hee will not haue it defended by man or mans power, but by his wordes onely, by the whiche he hath euermore defended it, and that by a way farre aboue mans power or reason, as all the stories of the Bible maketh mention.

Wherefore gracious king remember your selfe, haue pity vpon your soule, and thinke that the daye is euen at hand when you shall geue accountes of your office and of the bloud that hath bene shedde with your sworde. In the which day that your grace may stand stedfastly and be not ashamed, but to be cleare and readye in your reckoning & to haue (as they say) your Quites est, sealed with the bloude of our Sauour Christ whiche onely serueth at that day, is my dayly prayer to him that suffered death for our sinnes, which also prayeth to his father for grace for vs continually. To whom be all honour and prayse for euer. Amē. The spirit of God preserue your Grace. Anno Domini 1530. 1. die Decembris.

In this Letter of Mayster Latimer to the king aboue prefixed, many thinges we haue to consider: First his good conscience to God,* his good will to the king, the duety of a right Pastour vnto trueth, his tender care to the common wealth, and especially to the Church of Christ. Further we haue to consider the abuse of Princes courtes, how kinges many times be abused with flatterers and wicked coūsellors aboute them, and especially wee maye note the subtile practises of prelates, in abusing the name and authority of kinges to set forth theyr owne malignaunt proceedings. We may see moreouer, and rather maruell at in the sayde letter, the great boldnes and diuine stoutnes in this man, who as yet being no Bishop,* so freely and playnely without all feare of death aduentring his owne life to discharge his cōscience, durst so boldly, to so mighty a Prince, in such a daungerous case agaynst the kinges law and proc•amation set out, in such a terrible time, take vpon him to write, and to admonish that, which no coūseller durst once speak vnto him, in defence of Christes Gospell. Whose example if the Bishops and Prelates of this Realme, for theyr partes likewise in like cases of necessity would followe (as in deed they should) so many thinges peradventure would not be so out of frame as they be, and all for lacke that the officers of Gods word do not theyr duty.

Finally, this moreouer in the sayd letter is to be noted, how blessedly almighty God wrought with his faythfull seruaunt, whose bolde aduenture, and wholesome counsel, though it did not preuayl through the iniquity of the time:* yet notwithstanding GOD so wrought with his seruāt in doynge his duetye, that no daunger, nor yet displeasure rose to him thereby, but rather thanks and good will of the Prince: for not long after the same he was aduaunced by the king to the Bishopricke of Worcester, as is aboue declared.

Seing M. Latimer was so bolde and playne with the king (as is afore specified) no greate maruell if he did vse like freedome and playnes toward other meaner persons in admonishing them of theyr disorder, especially if anye such occasion were geuen, where trueth and equity requyred his defence agaynst iniurye and oppression. For example whereof we haue an other Letter of his, written to a certayne Iustice of peace in Warwickshyre, who as he is long since departed, so he shall be here vnnamed. The letter although it may seme somewhat long and tedious: yet I thought here not to ouerpasse the same for diuers & sondry respectes: first that the vertue and faythfull conscience of this good Pastor may appeare more at large: also for that all other Bishops and pastors by this example may learn with like zeale and stomacke to discharge theyr duety and conscience in reforming thinges amisse and in pouderyng with the salt of Gods word the sores of the people.* Whiche thing if euery Bishop for his part within his Dioces had done in king Edwardes dayes, in redressing such corruption of that time with like diligence as this man did, verely I suppose that the persecution of queene Mary had not so plagued the Realme as it did: but where as neuer man almost liueth in due order, and yet neuer a Bishoppe will styrr to seeke redresse, what can become of the Realme? Item,* an other respecte is because of the Iustices and all other placed in roome and office, which may take heed hereby, not to abuse theyr authority to tread downe trueth and beare downe poore men with open wrong through extortion or partiality: and finally that all iniurious oppressors whatsoeuer, by the sayd letter may take some fruit of whol|some admonition. What the argument and occasion was of this letter, I shewed before. The tenour and purporte thereof, as it was written to the Gentleman, is this as foloweth.

¶A fruitfull letter of M. Latimer, written to a certayne Gentleman.

Right worshipfull, salutem in Domino. And now Syr I vnderstand, that you be in greate admirations at me,* and take very greeuouslye my maner of writing to you, adding thereunto that you will not beare it at my hande, no not and I were the best Byshop in England. &c.

Ah Syr? I see well I may say as the common saying is: Well haue I fished and caught a Frog: brought litle to passe with much ado. You will not beare it with me, you say. Why syr, what wil ye do with me? You will not fight with me, I trow. It may seeme vnseemely for a Iustice of peace to be a breaker of peace. I am glad the dotyng tyme of my foolishe youth is gone and paste? What will you then doe with me, in that you say you will not beare it at my hand? What hath my hand offended you? Perchaunce you will conuent mee before some Iudge,* and call mee into some court. Deus bene vertat. Equidem non recuso iudicium vllum, Accusemus inuicem, vt emendemus alius alium in nomine Domini. Fiat iustitia in iudicio. And then and there, doe best haue best, for club halfe peny. Or peraduenture ye will set penne to paper, and all to rattle me in a letter, wherein confuting mee you will defend your selfe and your brother agaynst mee. Nowe that woulde I see, quoth long Roben, vt dicitur vulgariter. Non potero sane non vehementer probare eiusmodi industriam: For so should both your integrityes and innocencyes best appeare, if you be able to defend both your owne procedinges, & your brothers Page 1755 doinges in this matter to be vpriht. Et ego tum iustis rationibus victus, libenter cedam, culpam humiliter confessurus. But I thinke it will not be. But now first of all let me know what it is that ye will not beare at my hande? What haue I done wyth my hande? What hath my hand trespassed you? Forsoothe, that canne I tell, no man better: For I haue charitably monished you in a secret letter, of your slipper dealing, and such like misbehauour. O quam graue piaculum? i. What a sore matter is this? And will ye not beare so much with me? Will ye not take suche a shew of my good will towardses you, and towarde the sauing of your soule at my hand? Oh Lord God, who would haue thought that Mayster N. had bene so impudent, that he would not beare a godly monition for the wealth of his soule? I haue in vse to commit suche trespasses manye times in a yeare with your betters by two ot three degrees, both Lordes and Ladyes, of the best in the Realme, and yet hitherto I haue not heard that any of them haue sayd in theyr displeasure, that they will not beare it at my hand. Are you yet to be taught,* what is the office, liberty, & priuiledge of a Preacher? What is it els, but euen arguere mundum de peccato, without respect of persons, quod quidem ipsum est ipsius spiritus sancti peculiare in ecclesia munus & officium,* sed non nisi per Praedicatores legitimos exequendum. You could but ill beare (belike) to heare your fault openlye reproued in the Pulpit, which can not beare the same in a secret sealed vppe letter, written both frendly, charitably, and truely, nisi forte acriter reprehendere peccata, sit iam omni charitate, amicitia, veritate carere. But Mayster N. if you will geue me leaue to be playne with you, I feare me you be so plunged in worldly purchasings, and so drowned in the manifolde dregges of this deceiueable worlde, that I weene you haue forgotten your Catechisme. Reade therefore agayne the opening of the firste commaundement, and then tell me whether you of me, or I of you haue iust cause to complayne. &c.

Item Syr, you sayd further that I am wonderfully abused by my neighbour. &c. How so, good Mayster N? Wherein? Or how will you proue it to be true, and when? So you sayd that he had abused you, and geuen you wrong information, but the contrary is found true by good testimony of Mayster Chamber, whiche heard aswell as you, what my neighbour sayd, and hath testified the same, both to you, and agaynst you, full like himselfe. Maister N. to forge and feine (which argueth an ill cause) that is one thing: but to proue what a man doth say, that is an other thyng. As though you were priuiledged to outface poore men & beare them in hand what you list, as may seeme to make some mayntenaunce for your naughty cause. Trust me Mayster N. I was but a very litle acquaynted with my neighbor when this matter begā: but now I haue found him so conformable to honesty, vpright in his dealinges, and so true in his talke, that I esteeme him better, then I do some other whom I haue perceiued and founde otherwayes.* For I will flatter no man, nor yet claw his backe in hys folly, but esteeme all menne as I finde them, allowing what is good, and disallowing what is bad, In omnibus hominibus siue amicis siue inimicis,* iuxta praeceptum Paulinum, à filiis huius seculi in precio non habitum: Sitis odio, inquit, prosequentes quod malum est, adhaerentes autem ei quod bonum est: Neque bonum malum, nec malum bonum in gratiam hominum affirmemus vnquam, id quod filij huius seculi vulgo faciunt, vt est videre vbique. And nowe what maner of man doe you make me Mayster N. when you note me to bee so muche abused by so ignoraunt a man, so simple, so playne, and so farre without all wrinkles? Haue I liued so long in this tottering worlde, and haue I bene so many wayes turmoyled and tossed vp and downe, and so muche, as it were seasoned with the powder of so many experiences to and fro, to bee nowe so farre bewitched and alienated from my wyttes, as though I coulde not discern cheese from chalke, trueth from falsehoode, but that euery sely soule, and base witted man might easely abuse me to what enterprise he listed at his pleasure? Well, I say not nay, but I may bee abused. But why doe you not tell we howe your brother abused me, promising before me and many moe, that he woulde stand to your awardship, and nowe doth denye it? Why do you not tell me, how those two false faythlesse wretches abused me, promising also to abide your awarde, and doth it not? Yea, why do you not tell me, how you your selfe haue abused me, promising me to redresse the iniury and wrong that your brother hath done to my neighbour, and haue not fulfilled your promise? These notable abuses bee nothing with you, but onely you muste needes burthen me with my neighbours abusing me, whiche is none at all, as farreforth as euer I coulde perceiue, so GOD helpe mee in my need. For if he had abused me as you and other haue done, I should be soone at a point with him, for any thing further doing for him. &c.

Item Syr, you sayde further, that I shall neuer bee able to proue that either your brother, or the two tenauntes agreed to stand to your award. &c. No Syr? Mayster N. you say belike as you would haue it to be,* or as your brother with his adherentes haue persuaded you to think it to be, so inducing you to do their request to your owne shame and rebuke, if you perseuer in the same, beside the perill of your soule, for consenting at least wa•, to the mainteinance by falshood of your brothers iniquity.* For in that you would your awardship should take none effect, you shew your selfe nothing inclinable to the redresse of your brothers vnright dealing with an honest poore man, which hath bene readye at your request to doe you pleasure with his thinges, or els hee had neuer come into this wrangle for his owne goodes with your brother.

Ah Mayster N. what maner of man do you shew your selfe to be? or what maner of conscience do you shew your selfe to haue? For first, as touching your brother, you know right well, that Sir Thomas Cokin with a Letter of his owne hand writing, hath witnessed vnto your brothers agreement, which letter he sent to me vnsealed, and I shewed the same to my neighbour and other mo ere I sealed it, and perchaunce haue a cotype of the same yet to shewe. With what conscience then can you say that I shall neuer be able to prooue it? Shall not three men vpon theyr othes make a sufficient prooffe trow you? vel ipso dicente Domino:* in ore duorum vel trium. &c. Yea, you thinke it true I dare saye, in your conscience, if you haue any conscience, though I were in my graue, and so vnable to proue any thing. And as for the two tenauntes, they bee as they be, and I trust to see them handled according as they be: for there be three men yet aliue that dare sweare vpon a booke, that they both did agree. But what should we looke for at such mens handes, when you your selfe play the part you do? Verum viuuit adhuc Deus, qui videt omnia & iudicat iustè. &c.

Item Syr, you sayd yet further, that the Iustices of peace in the countrey thinke you verye vnnaturall, in taking part with me before your brother. &c. Ah Mayster N. what a sentence is this to come out of your mouth? For partaking is one thing? and ministring of iustice is an other thing: and a worthy minister of iustice will bee no Partaker, but one indifferent betweene party and partye. And did I require you to take my parte, I praye you? No, I required you to minister iustice betweene your brother and mine neighbour without anye partaking with either other. But what maner of Iustices bee they I praye you, whiche would so fayne haue you to take parte naturally with your Brother, when you ought and shoulde reforme and amende your brother? as you your selfe know, no man better. What? Iustices? no Iugglers you might more worthely call such as they be, then Iustices. Be they those Iustices whiche call you vnnaturall,* for that you will not take your brothers part agaynst all right & conscience, whom you had picked out & appoynted to haue the final hearing and determining of my neighbours cause after your substantiall and fine award making? Verely I thinke no lesse. Forsooth he is much beholding to you, & I also for his sake. Is that the wholesome counsell that you haue to geue your poore neighbours in theyr need? In deed you shew your selfe a worthy Iuggler: Oh, I would haue sayd a Iusticier, among other of your iuggling and partaking Iustices. Deum bonum, what is this worlde?* Mary Syr my neighbour had sponne a fayre thred, if your partaking Iustices through your good counsell had had his matter in ordering and finishing. I pray God saue mee and all my frendes, with all Gods flocke, from the whole felowship of your so naturall and partaking Iustices. Amen.

Lord God, who would haue thought that there had beene so many partaking Iustices, that is to say, vniust Iustices in Warwickshire, if Maister N. himselfe one of the same order (but altogether out of order) and therefore knoweth it best, had not told vs the tale? but these call you (you saye) verye vnnaturall. &c. And why not rather (I pray you) to much naturall? For we reade de natura duplici, integra & corrupta. Illa erat iusticiae plena: * haec nisi reparata semper manet iniusta, iniusticiae fructus alios post alios paritura: so that he that will not helpe his brother hauing a iust cause in his neede, may be iustly called vnnaturall, as not doing iuxta instinctu naturae, siue integre, siue reparate. i. According to the instinct of nature either as it was at the beginning, or as it was restored. But hee that will take his brothers parte agaynst right, as to ratifie his brothers wrong deceiuing, he is too muche naturall, tanquam sequens ingenium siue inclinationem naturae corruptae, contra voluntatem Dei. i. As one folowing the disposition and inclination of corrupt nature agaynst the wil of God: and so to be naturall maye seeme to bee cater cosin or cosin germane with, to be diabolicall.

I feare me we haue to many Iustices that be to much naturall to theyr owne perishment both body and soule. For worthy Iustices, hauing euer the feare and dread of God before their eies (quales sunt pauciores apud nos, quàm vellem) will haue no respect at all in theyr iudgementes and proceedinges, ad propinquitatem sanguinis, but altogether ad dignitatem & aequitatem causae, vt quod iustum est semper iudicent intuitu Dei, non quod iniustum est intuitu hominum: of whiche number I pray God make you one. Amen. Iustus est (sayth Iohn) qui facit iusticiam. At, qui facit peccatum (id quod facit, quisquis iniuste facit in gratiam & fauorem vllius hominis) ex diabolo est. i. He is iust that doth iustice. But he that sinneth (as they all do whiche doe vniustly for fauour and pleasure of men) is of the deuill Page 1756 (saith he) which once all our pataking and vnnatural iustices be with all their partialitie and naturalitie. Quare dignum & iustum est, that as many as be such Iustices, iuste priuentur munere, & amplius quoque plectantur pro sui quisque facinoris quantitate, * vt vel sic tandem abscindantur, tanquam nati in incommodum reipub. nostrae, qui nos conturbant cum adiuuare debeant, Amen.

Quare seponite iustitiam, & sequimini naturam, as your naturals and diabolicales would haue you to doe, that is, euen as iust as Germaines lippes, which came not together by nine mile, Vt Vulgo dicunt &c.

Item Sir, finally and last of all you added these wordes following? Well (quod you) let maister Latimer take heede howe hee medleth with my brother, for he is like to finde as crabbed and as froward a peece of him, as euer he found in his life. &c. Ah sir? and is your brother such a one as you speake of in deede? mercyfull GOD, what a commendation is this for one brother to geue an other? Est ne eiusmodi gloriatio tua mi amice? And were it not possible, trowe you to make hym better? It is written: Vexatio dat intellectum. And againe, Bonum mihi Domine quòd humiliasti me. At least waye I may pray to God for hym as Dauid did for such like, ad hunc modum: Chamo & freno maxillas eorum constringe qui non approximant at te. In the mean season I would I had neuer knowne neither of you both: for so shoulde I haue bene without this inward sorrow of my heart, to see suche vntowardnes of you both to godlinesse: for I can not be but heauy harted, to see such men so wickedly minded. Well, let vs ponder a little better your woordes, where you saye, I shall finde him as crabbed and as frowarde a peece &c. Marke well your owne wordes. For by the tenour of the same it plainly appeareth, that you confesse your brothers cause wherein he so stiffely standeth, to be vniust and verye nought. For hee that standeth so stiffly in a good quarrell and a iuste cause, as manye good men haue done, is called a fast man, a constaunt a trustye man. But he that is so obstable and vntractable in wickednesse and wronge doing, is commonly called a crabbed and froward peece, as you name your brother to be.

Wherefore knowing so well youre brothers cause to bee so naughtie, why haue you not endeouored youre selfe, as a worthy Iustice, to reforme him accordingly, as I required you, and you promised me to do, now almost twelue monthes agoe, if not altogether? Summa Summarum, Maister N. if you will not come of shortly, and apply your selfe thereunto more effectually hereafter then you haue done heretofore, be you well assured therof, I shall detecte you to all the friendes that I haue in Englande, both hye and lowe, as well his crabbednes and frowardnes, as your colourable supportation of the same, that I trust I shalbe able therby, either to bring you both to some goodnes, or at least waye, I shall so warne my friendes and all honest heartes to beware of your ilnes, that they shall take either no hurte at all, or at least waye, least harme by you through mine aduertisemente, in that,* knowing you perfectly, they may the better auoide and shunne youre companie. You shall not staye me maister N. no though you would geue me all the landes and goodes you haue as riche as you are noted to bee. Ego nolo tam iustam causam derelinquere, ego nolo peccatis alienis in hac parte communicare. For whether it be per detestabilem, superbiam, whether per abominabilem auaritiam, or by both two linked to gether, it is no small iniquitie to keep any one poore mā so long frō his right and duetie so stiffe neckedly and obstinately, or whether yee will crabbedly and frowardly. And what is it then anye manner of wayes to consent to the same? You know I trowe, Mayster N. furtum quid sit: nempe quouis modo auferre vel retinere alienam •em inuito Domino, vt quidam definiunt. Si fur sit qui sic palam facit, quis erit qui facientem probat, tutatur, propugnat, vel quibuscunque ambagibus suffulcit? id est. What thefte is, that is, to take or deteyne by any maner of way,* an other mans good against his will that is the owner, as some define it. If he be a theef that so doth openly, what shall he be that approueth hym whiche is the doer, defendeth, mayntayneth, and supporteth him by any maner of colour? Consider with your selfe good maister N quid sit opprimere & fraudare in negotio fratrem, and what followeth thereof. It is truely sayde, non tollitur peccatum, nisi restituatur obl•tum. No restitution, no saluation▪ which is as well to bee vnderstand, de rebus per fraudes, technas, & dolos, as de rebus per manifestum furtum & latrocinium partis. Wherefore let not your brother mayster N. by cauillation continue in the Deuils possession. I will doe the best I can, and wrestle with the Deuill omnib {us} viribus, to deliuer you both frō him. I will leaue no one stone vnmoued, to haue both you and your brother saued. There is neither Archbishoppe nor Byshoppe, nor yet any learned man either in Vniuersities or elsewhere, that I am acquaynted withal that shall not write vnto you, and in theyr writing by their learning confute you. There is no Godly man of Lawe in this realme that I am acquaynted withall, but they shall write vnto you, and confute you by the law. There is neither Lord nor Lady, nor yet anye noble personage in this Realme, that I am acquaynted withall, but they shall write vnto you, and Godlye threaten you with their authoritie.

I will doe all this: yea,* and kneele vppon both my knees before the kinges maiestie, and all his honourable Counsaile, with most humble petition for youre reformation, rather then the Deuill shall possesse you still, to you •inall damnation. So that I doe not dispayre, but verely trust, one way or other, to plucke bothe you, and also your crabbed brother, as crabbed as you saye hee is, out of the Deuilles clawes, maugre the Deuilles heart.

These premisses well considered, looke vppon it, good maister N. that wee haue no farther adoe: Gods plague is presentlye vppon vs: therefore let vs now dilligently looke about vs, and in no wise defend, but willingly reknowlege, and amend what soeuer hath bene amisse. These were the capitall poyntes of youre talke (as I was informed) after you had perused that my nipping and vnpleasaunt letter: and I thought good to make you some aunswere to them, if perchaunce I might so moue you, the rather to call your selfe to some better remembrance, and so more earnestly apply your selfe, to accomplish and performe what you haue begunne and promised to doe, namely the thing it selfe being of suche sorte, as apparantly tendeth both to your worship, and also to Gods high pleasure.

Thus loe with a madde head, but yet a good will, after longe scribbling, I wotte not well what (but I knowe you can reade it, and comprehende it well enough) I bid you most hartily to fare in the Lord, with good health, and long life to Gods pleasure, Amen. From Baxsterley the xv of Iuly.

During the time that the said M. Latimer was prisoner in Oxford, we read not of much that he did wryte, besides his conference with Doctor Ridley, and his protesta^tion at the time of hys disputation. Otherwise of letters, we finde very fewe or none, that he did write to his friendes abroad, saue onely these few lynes, whiche hee wrote to one maistres Wilkinson of Londō, a godly matron, and an exile afterwarde for the Gospels sake. Who so long as she remayned in England, was a singular patronesse to the good saynctes of God, and learned Byshoppes, as to mayster Hooper, to the Byshop of Hereford, to Mayster Couerdale, M. Latimer, Doctor Cramner with many other. The copy and effect of which hys letter to Maystres Wilkinson here followeth.

¶A letter sent to maystres Wilkinson of London widowe, from mayster Hugh Latimer out of Bocardo in Oxford.

IF the gifte of a pot of a cold water, shall not bee in obliuion with God, how can God forget your manifolde & bountifull giftes, when he shall say to you: I was in pryson and you visited me. God graunt vs all to do and suffer while we be here, as may be to hys will and pleasure. Amen.

Yours in Bocardo Hugh Latimer.

Touching the memorable actes and doynges of thys worthy man, among many other this is not to bee neglected, what a bold enterprise he attempted, in sendyng to kyng Henry a present, the maner whereof is this. There was then, and yet remayneth still, an old custome receaued from the old Romaines, that vpon Newyeres day being the first day of Ianuary, euery Bishoppe with some handsome Newyeres gifte, shoulde gratify the king: * and so they did, some with golde, some with siluer, some with a purse full of money, and some one thing, some an other: but maister Latimer being bishoppe of Worcester then, among the rest presented a new Testament, for his Newyeres gifte: with a napkyn hauing this posie aboute it: Fornicadores & adulteros iudicabit Dominus.

And thus hast thou gentle reader, the whole life, both of maister Ridley, & of mayster Latimer, two worthy doers in the church of Christ, seuerally and by themselues sette foorth, and descrybed with all theyr doynges, writings, disputations, sufferinges, their paynefull trauayles, faythfull preachinges, * studyous seruice in Christes Church, their patiente imprisonmente, and constaunt fortitude in that whiche they had taught, with all other their proceedinges from time to time, synce theyr first springinge yeares, to thys present tyme and Moneth of Queene Mary,* beyng the Moneth of October. Anno. 1555. In the whiche Moneth they were bothe brought foorth together, to theyr finall examination and execution. Wherefore, as we haue heretofore declared, both theyr liues seuerallye, and distinctlye one from the other, so nowe ioynntly to couple them bothe Page 1757 together, as they were together both ioyned in one society of cause and Martyrdome, we will by the grace of Chryst prosecute the rest that remayneth, concerning their latter examination, disgrading, and constant suffering, with the order and maner, also of the Commissioners, which were Mayster White Byshop of Lincolne,* Mayster Brookes Bishop of Glocester, with others: and what were theyr wordes, theyr obiections, theyr Orations there vsed, and what againe were the aunsweres of these men to the same as in the processe here followeth to be seene.

The order and maner of the examination of Doctour Ridley, and mayster Latimer, had the xxx. day of September. 1555.

First, after the appearyng of Thomas Cranmer Archbyshop of Caunterbury, before the Popes Delegate, and the Queenes Commissioners in S. Maryes Church at Oxforde,* about the xii. day of September, whereof more shalbe sayde (by the Lordes grace) when wee come to the death of the sayd Archbyshoppe: shortly after vpon the 28. day of the sayd month of September, was sent downe to Oxforde an other Commission from Cardinall Poole Legate a latere, to Iohn White, Byshoppe of Lincolne, to Doctour Brokes Byshop of Glocester, and to Doctour Holiman, Byshoppe of Bristowe. The contentes and vertue of which Commission was, that the sayd Iohn of Lincoln, Iames of Glocester, and Iohn of Bristow, they or two of them,* shoulde haue full power and authoritye, to ascite, examine, and iudge mayster Hugh Latimer and M. Doctour Ridley, pretended Byshoppes of Worcester, and London, for dyuers and sundrye erroneous opinyons, whiche the sayde Hugh Latimer, and Nicholas Ridley, dyd holde and mayntayne in open disputations had in Oxforde, in the Monethes of Maye, Iune, and Iuly, in the yeare of our Lorde 1554. as longe before in the tyme of perdition and sithen. The whyche opynions if the named persons woulde now recant, geuyng and yealdyng themselues to the determination of the vnyuersall and Catholicke Churche, planted by Peter in the blessed Sea of Rome, that then the deputed Iudges, by the sayd authority of theyr Commission, should haue power to receaue the sayde penitente persons, and forthwith minister to them, the reconciliation of the holye Father the Pope, but if the sayd Hugh Latimer, and Nicholas Ridley woulde stoughtly and stubburnely defend, and mayntaine these theyr erroneous and assertions, that then the sayd Lordes by theyr Commission, should proceede in forme of Iudgement, accordyng to the lawe of Hereticks that is degradyng them from theyr promotion, and dignitie of byshops, priests, & al other Ecclesiastical orders, shoulde pronounce them as Heretickes, and therefore cleane to cut them off from the Churche, and so to yealde them to receaue punishementes, due to all such heresy and schisme.

Wherefore, the last of September, the sayde two persones Nicholas Ridley,* and Hugh Latimer, were ascited to appeare before the sayd Lordes, in the diuinitie schoole at Oxforde, at viij. of the clocke. At what time thether repayed the Lords, placyng themselues in high seat, made for publicke lectures and disputations, accordyng to the vsage of that schoole, beyng then fayre set, and trymmed with clothe of Tissue, and cushynges of Ueluet: and after the sayde Lordes were placed and set, the sayd Latimer & Ridley were sent for, and first appeared mayster Doctour

Ridley, and anone mayster Latymer. But because it seemed good seuerally to examine them, M. Latymer was kept backe, vntill Doctour Ridley was throughly examined. Therefore soone after the comming of Doctour Ridley into the schoole: the Commission was published by an appoynted Notary, and openly read. But Doctour Ridley standing bare headed, humblye expectinge the cause of that hys appearaunce, eftsoones as he had heard the Cardinall named, and the Popes holines, put on hys cappe. Wherefore after the commission was published, in forme and sense aboue specified, the Bishop of Lincolne spake in sense followyng.

Lincolne.

M. Ridley, although neyther I, neyther my Lordes here,* in respecte of our owne persones, doe looke for cappe or knee, yet because we beare & represent, such persones as we doe, that is my Lorde Cardinalles grace, Legate a latere to the popes holinesse, as well in that he is of a noble parentage, and therwith mayster Ridley mooued hys cappe with lowly obeysaunce descendyng from y^e regall bloud, as in that he is a man worthy to be reuerenced with all humility, for hys great knowledge and learning, noble vertues, and godly lyfe, and especially in that he is here in Englande deputye to the popes holynesse, it should haue becommed you at his name, to haue discouered your head. Wherefore excepte you will of youre owne selfe, take the paynes to put your hand to your heade, and at the nomination, as well of the sayde Cardinall, as of y^e Popes holines vncover the same, least that this your contumacy exhibited how before vs, should be preiudiciall to the sayd mo^{••}e reuerende persones (whiche thing we may in no case suffer) you shall cause vs to take the payne, to cause some manne to plucke off youre cappe from you. To whome mayster Ridley makege his petition for lycence, aunswered.

Ridley.

As touching that you sayd (my Lord) that you of your owne persones desire no cappe nor knee,* but only require the same, in consideration that you represent the Cardinalles graces persone, I doe you to wit, and thervpon make my protestation, that I did put on my cappe at the naming of the Cardinalles grace, neither for any contumacye that I beare towards your own persones, neither for any derogation of honour towarde the Lorde Cardinalles grace. For I know him to be a man worthy of all humilitie, reuerence, and honour, in that he came of the most regall bloud,* & in that he is a man indued wyth manifolde graces of learning and vertue, and as touching these vertues and poynts, I with all humilitie (therwith he put of his cap, and bowed his knee) and obeysance that I may, will reuerence, and honour his grace: but in that he is Legate to the Byshop of Rome (and therewith put on his cap) whose vsurped supremacy, and abused authoritie, I vtterly refuse and renoūce, I may in no wise geue any obeysaunce, or honour vnto him, least that my so doing and behaiour, might be preiudiciall to mine othe, & derogation to the veritie of Gods word, and therefore that I might not onely by confession, professe the veritye in not reuerencing the renounced authoritie, contrarye to Gods worde, but also in gesture, in behaioure,* and all my doinges expresse the same, I haue put on my cappe, and for this consideration onely, and not for any contumacye to your Lorshipp, neither contempt of this worshipfull audience, neither derogation of any honour due to the Cardinall his grace, both for his noble parentage, and also his excellent quallities, I haue kept on my cappe.

Lincolne.

M. Ridley, you excuse your selfe of that,* with the whiche we pressed you not, in that you proteste you keepe on your cappe, neither for anye contumacie towardes vs (which looke for no such honour of you) neyther for anye contempt of this audiēce: which although iustly they may (yet as I suppose) in this case do not require any suche obeysaunce of you: neither in derogation of any honor but to my Lord Cardinales grace, for his regall discent (at which worde M. Ridley moued his cap) & excellent quallities: for although in all the premisses honour be due, yet in these respects, we require none of you, but onely in that my Lorde Cardinals grace is here in England, deputy of the Popes holinesse (at whiche worde the Lordes and others put of their caps,* and mayster Ridley put on hys) and therefore we say vnto you the second time, that except you take the paynes your selfe, to put your hande to your head, and put of your cap, you shall put vs to the payne, to cause some man to take it from you, except you alledge some infirmitie and sickenes, or other more reasonable cause, vpon the consideration whereof, we may doe as 〈◇〉 thinke good.

Ridley.

The premisses I sayd onely for this end, that it might as wel appeare to your Lordships,* as to this worshipfull audience, why and for what consideration, I vsed such kinde of behaiour, in not humbling my selfe to youre Lordships with cap and knee: and as for my sickenes, I thanke my Lord GOD, that I am as well at •ase, as I was this long season:* and therfore I doe not pretend that which is not, but onely this, that it might appeare by this my behaiour, that I acknowledge in no poynt that vsurped supremacy of Rome and therefore contemne and vtterly despise, al authoritie comming from him. In taking of my cap, do as it shal please your Lordships, and I shal be content.

Then the Bishop of Lincolne, after the thyrd admonion, commaunded one of the Bedles (that is an officer of y^e vniuersitie) to plucke his cappe from his head. M. Ridley bowing his head to the Officer, gently permitted him to take away his cap.

After this, the Bishop of Lincolne in a long Oration exhorted M. Ridley, to recant and submitte himselfe to the vniuersall fayth of Christ, in this maner.

Lincol.

M. Ridley, I am sure you haue sufficiently •ōdered with your selfe, the effecte of this our commission with good aduisement, considering both poyntes thereof, how that authoritie is geuen to vs, if you shall receaue the Page 1758 true doctrine of the Church, which first was founded by * Peter at Rome immediately after the deathe of Christe, and from him by lineall succession hath bene broughte to this our time, if you will be content to renounce your former errores, recant your hereticall and seditious opinions, content to yelde your selfe to the vndoubted fayth, & truthe of the Gospell, receaued and alwayes taught of the catholicke, and Apostolicke Church, the which the king and Queene, all the Nobles of this Realme, and commons of y^e same, al Christen people haue & do confesse, you onely standing alone by your selfe. You vnderstande and perceaue, I am sure, that authoritie is geuen vs to receiue you, to reconcile you, and vpon due penance to adioyne and associate you agayne into the number of the Catholickes and Christes Church, from the whiche you haue so long strayed, without the which no man can be saued, the which thing I and my Lords here, yea and al, as wel Nobles and commons of this realme most hartily desire, and I for my part (wherwith he put of his cap) most earnestly exhort you to doe.

*Remember mayster Ridley, it is no straunge country whether I exhorte you to retourne. You were once one of vs you haue taken degrees in the schoole. You were made Prieste, and became a Preacher, setting foorth the same doctryne, which we doe nowe. You were made Byshoppe accordinge to our lawes: and to be short, it is not so longe agone, sithe you seperated your selfe from vs, and in the time of Heresy, became a setter foorth of that Deuillishe and seditious doctrine, whiche in these la•ter dayes was preached amongst vs. For at what tyme the newe doctrine of *onely faythe began to spryng the counsaile willyng to winne my Lord Chauncellour sent you to him• (I then being in my Lordes house vnknowne as I suppose to you) and after you had talked w^t my Lorde secretly, and were departed immediately my Lord declared certayne poyntes of your talke, & meanes of your perswasion, and amōgst other this was one, that you should say, *tush my Lorde this matter of iustification is but a trifle, let vs not sticke to condescende herein to them: but for Gods loue my Lord, stand stoutly in the veritie of the Sacrament: for I see they will assault that also. If this be true (as my Lorde is a man credible enough in suche a matter) hereby it is declared of what minde you were then, as touching the trueth of the moste blessed sacrament.

Also in a sermon of youres at Paules Crosse, you as effectually and as Catholickely spake of that blessed sacramēt, as any mā mighte haue done, wherby it appeareth that it is no straunge thing, nor vnknowne place wherevnto I exhort you. I wishe you to retourne thether from whence you came:That is, together with vs to acknowledge the truth, to acknowledge y^e church of God, wherin no man may erre, to acknowledge the supremacye, of our moste reuerende father in God the Popes holynesse (whiche as I sayde) lineally taketh his dissent from Peter, vpon whome Christ promised before his deathe to builde his church the whiche supremacy or prerogatiue, the moste auncient fathers in all ages, in all tymes dyd acknowledge: and here hee broughte a place or two out of the Doctours, but especially stayed vpon a saying of Sainct Augustine, whiche wryteth in this manner: Totus orbis christianus intransmarinis,& longe remotis terris Ro'manae Ecclesiae subiectus est. That is: All the christian cuntryes beyonde the sea, are subiecte to the Church of Rome. Here you see M. Ridley, that all Christendome is subiect to the church of Rome. What should stay you therfore to confesse the same with saynt Austen, and the other Fathers.

Then M. Ridley desired his pacience, to suffer him to speake somewhat of the premisses, least the multitude of thinges might confound his memory, and hauing graunt thereunto, sayd in this maner:

Ridley.

*My Lord, I most hartily thanke your Lordshyp, as well for your gentlenes, as also for youre sobrietye in talke, and for your good and fauourable zeale in this learned exhortation, in the whiche I haue marked especialye three poyntes, whiche you vsed to perswade mee to leaue my doctrine, and Religiō which, which I perfectly know & am throughly perswaded to be grouded not vpon mans imagination and decrees, but vpon the infallible truth of Christes Gospell, and not to looke backe, and to returne to the Romish sea, contrary to mine othe, contrarye to the prerogatiue and crowne of this Realme, and especiall ye whiche moueth me most) contrary to the expressed worde of God.

*The first poynt is this, that the sea of Rome takynge hys begynninge from Peter, vpon whom you say Chryst hath builded hys Church, hath in all ages lineally from Bishop to Bishop bene brought to this time.

Secondly, * that euen the holye Fathers from time to time, haue in their writinges confessed the same.

Thirdly, that in that I was once of the same opinion and together with you I did acknowledge the same.

First, as touching the saying of Christ, from whence your Lordship gathereth the foundation of the Church vpon Peter, * truly the place is not so to bee vnderstande as you take it, as the circumstance of the place wil declare. For after that Christe had asked his Discyples whome men iudged him to be, and they had aunswered, that some had sayd he was a Prophet, some Helias, some one thing, some an other, then he said, whome say ye that I am? Thē Peter said: I say that thou art Christ the sonne of God. To whome Christ answered: I saye Tu es Petrus, & super hanc Petram aedificabo Ecclesiam meam. i. Thou art Peter, * and vpon this stone I wil builde my Church: that is to say, vpon this stone not meaning Peter himselfe, as though hee would haue constitute a mortall man, so frayle and brickle a foundation of his stable and vnfallible Church: But vpon this Rock stone, that is this confession of thine, * that I am the sonne of GOD, I wil build my Church. For this is the foundation and beginning of all Christianitie, with worde, heart and minde, to confesse that Christ is the sonne of God. Whosoeuer beleueth not this, Chryst is not in hym: and hee cannot haue the marke of Chryste printed in his forehead, * whiche confesseth not that Chryst is the sonne of God.

Therefore Christ sayd vnto Peter, that vpon this rock that is vpon this his confession, that he was Christe the sonne of God, he would builde hys Church, to declare that without this fayth, no man can come to Christe: * so that this beliefe, that Christ is the sonne of God, is y^e foundation of our christianitie, and the foundation of y^e church. Here you see vpon what foundation Christes Church is built, not vpon the frailtie of man, but vpon the stable and infallible word of God.

Now as touching the lineall discent of the Bishoppes in the Sea of Rome true it is that y^e Patriarkes of Rome in the Apostles time, * and long after was a great maintayner, and a setter forth of Christes glory, in the which aboue all other cuntryes and regyons there especiall ye was preached the true Gospell, the sacraments wer most duely ministred, and as before Christes comming, it was a Cittie so valiaunt in prowesse, and marshall affayres, that all the worlde was in a manner subiect to it, and after Christes passion, and diuers of the Apostles there suffered persecution for the Gospelles sake: so after that the Emperours, theyr hartes being illuminated, receiued the gospell, and became Christians, the Gospell there, as wel for the great power and dominion, as for the fame of y^e place flourished most, * whereby the Byshops of y^e place wer had in more reuerence and honour, most esteemed in all counsayles and assemblies, not because they acknowledged them to be their head, but because the place was moste reuerenced and spoken of,

for the great power and strength of the same. As now here in England, the Bishop of Lincolne in Sessions and sittings, hath the preheminance of the other Byshoppes, not that he is the head and ruler of them: but for the dignitie of the Byshoppricke (and therwith the people smiled.) Wherefore the Doctours in theyr writings, haue spoken moste reuerently of this Sea of Rome and in their writings preferred it: and this is the prerogatiue, which your Lordshippe did rehearse, the ancient Doctours to geue to the sea of Rome.

Semblably, I cannot nor dare not but commend, reuerence, and honour the sea of Rome,* as longe as it continued in the promotion, and setting forth of Gods glory and in due preaching of the Gospell, as it did many yeres after Christ. But after that the Byshoppes of that Sea, seeking their owne pride, and not Gods honour, began to set them selues aboue kings and Emperours, challenging to them the title of Goddes Uicars,* the Domynion and Supremacye ouer all the worlde, I cannot but with saynct Gregory a Byshoppe of Rome also, confesse that the Byshoppe of that place is the very true Antichrist, whereof saynct Iohn speaketh by the name of the whore of Babilon, and say with the sayd saint Gregory: he that maketh himselfe a Byshop ouer all the worlde, is worse then Antichrist.*

Now, where as you say that saynct Augustine should seeme, not onely to geue such a prerogatiue, but also a supremacye to the sea of Rome, in that he sayth, all y^e chrystian world is subiect to the Churche of Rome, and there, fore shoulde geue to that Sea a certayne kinde of subiection: I am sure that your Lordship knoweth that in saynt Page 1759 Austines time, there were foure Patriarckes, of Alexandria, Constantinople, Antioche and Rome, whiche Patriarckes had vnder them certayn Countryes, as in England the Archbyshop of Caunterbury hath vnder him diuers Byshopprickes in Englande and Wales, to whome he may be sayde to be theyr Patriarcke.* Also youre Lordship knoweth right well, that at what time saint Austine wrote this booke, he was then Bishop in Africa. Farther you are not ignoraunt, that betweene Europe and Africa lyeth the sea called Mare mediterraneum, so that al the countryes in Europe to him which is in Africa, may be called transmarine, countryes beyond the sea. Here of S. Austen sayth: Totus orbis Christianus in transmarinis & longe remotis terris ecclesiae Romanae subiectus est. That is all the Chrystian Countryes beyonde the seas and farre Regions, are subiect to the sea of Rome. If I shoulde saye all Countryes beyonde the sea, I doe except Englande, whiche to me nowe beyng in Englande, is not beyonde the sea. In this sense saynct Austine sayth,* all the Countryes beyond the sea are subiecte to the sea of Rome, declarynge thereby that Rome was one of the seas of the foure Patriarckes, and vnder it Europe, by what subiection I praye you? onely for a preeminence, as we here in England say, that all the Byshopprickes in England, are subiect to the archbishopricke of Caunterbury and Yorke.*

For this preeminence also the other Doctours (as you recited) saye, that Rome is the mother of Churches, as the Bishopricke of Lincolne, is mother to the Bishoprick of Oxforde, because the Bishopricke of Oxford came from the Byshopricke of Lincolne, and they were bothe once one, and so is the Archbyshopricke of Canterbury, mother to the other Byshoppricks, which are in her prouince. In like sorte the Archbishopricke of Yorke, is mother to the Northbishoprickes: and yet no mā will say, that Lincolne, Caunterburye, or Yorke, is supreme head to other Byshopprickes: neyther then ought wee to confesse the sea of Rome to be supreme head, because y^e Doctours in their writings, confesse the sea of Rome to be mother of Churches.

Nowe where you say, I was once of the same Religion, whiche you are of, the trueth is, I cannot but confesse the same. Yet so was saynct Paule a persecutoure of Christe. But in that you saye, that I was one of you not long ago, in that I doyng my message to my Lorde of Winchester, shoulde desire him to stande stought▪ in that grosse opinion of the Supper of the Lorde, in very deed I was sent (as your Lordship sayd) from the Counsaile, to my Lord of Winchester, to exhort hym to receyue also the true confession of Iustification, and because hee was very refractorious, I sayde to hym, why my Lord, what make you so great a matter herein? You see many Anabaptists rise agaynst the sacrament of the aultar: I praye you my Lorde be dilligent in confounding them, for at that tyme my Lord of Winchester and I had to do, wyth two Anabaptistes of Kente. In this sense I willed my Lorde to be stiffe in the defence of the sacrament, agaynst the detestable erroures of Anabaptistes, and not in the confirmation of that grosse and carnall opinion nowe mayntayned.

In like sorte, as touching the sermon, whiche I made at Paules Crosse, you shall vnderstande that there were at Paules, and dyuers other places, fixed rayling billes agaynst the sacramente, termynge it lacke of the boxe, the sacramente of the halter, round Robin, with like vnseemely termes: for the whiche causes I to rebuke the vnreuerent behaiour of certayne euill disposed persones, preached as reuerently of that matter as I mighte, declaring what estimation and reuerence, ought to be geuen to it, what daunger ensued the mishandling therof, affirming in that sacramente to be truely and verely the bodye and bloude of Christe, effectuously by grace and spirite: whiche wordes the vnlearned vnderstanding not, supposed that I had ment of the grosse and carnall being, which the Romishe decrees set forth, that a body hauing lyfe and motion, shoulde be in deede vnder the shapes of breade and wyne.

With that the Bishoppe of Lincolne, somewhat interrupting him, sayde.

Lincol.
